Assam & Nagaland High Court

AIR 1972 ASSAM & NAGALAND 1
(V 59, C 1)

P. K. GOSWAMI, C. J. AND
M. C. PATHAK, J.

Second Appeal No. 177 of 1966, D/- 4-6-1971, from order of Sub. J., Cachar, at Silchar, D/- 25-5-1966.

(A) Tenancy Laws — Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (1 of 1886), Sec. 3 and 34 Proviso (c) — Land accreted to plaintiff's periodic patta land by recession of river contiguous to such land held automatically became part of plaintiff's land not being khas land could not be allotted to any other person on ground that plaintiff had land in excess of ceiling fixed by Assam Act 1 of 1957 — AIR 1958 Assam 34, followed — (X-Ref: Tenancy Laws — Assam Fixation of Ceiling on Land Holdings Act (1 of 1957), Sections 20 and 4).

Entitlement to land being by operation of law, the provisions of the Ceiling Act did not apply. (Paras 6 and 7)

(B) Tenancy Laws — Assam Fixation of Ceiling on Land Holdings Act (1 of 1957) Section 32 — Suit to set aside settlement of land made in favour of defendant on mistaken assumption that it was khas land of the plaintiff and on ground that plaintiff already owned land in excess of ceiling was not barred — (X-Ref: Tenancy Laws — Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (1 of 1886) Section 34.

The reason was that the impugned settlement made by the Deputy Commissioner was one in the usual course under the provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation and not in exercise

Cases Referred: Chronological Paras (1958) AIR 1958 Assam 34 (V 45) Boroji Manipurini v. State of Assam 6

S. K. Ghose, Advocate General, Nagaland and B. K. Das, for Appellants; K. P. Bhattacharjee, for Respondents.

GOSWAMI, C. J.:— This second appeal is by the plaintiffs against the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge, Silchar reversing that earlier decision of the learned Munsiff.

2. One Surendra Chandra Das Gupta, the original plaintiff in the suit, was the owner and possessor of the land in Dag No. 180 appertaining to second R. S. Patta No. 71 of village Saidpur Part II, Pargana Leverputa, District-Cachar. The river Surma was originally flowing contiguous West of the land. The river gradually and imperceptibly receded towards west and the Schedule land gradually and imperceptibly accreted to the aforesaid dag, of which the plaintiff was admittedly the owner in possession. Both the plaintiff and the defendant No. 2 applied for settlement of the schedule land and the Collector settled the land in Settlement case No. 177 of 1957-58 in favour of the defendant No. 2 on 8th October, 1958. The plaintiff thus brought this suit for declaration that the accreted schedule land forms part and parcel of his land in Dag No. 180 and that he is the settlement holder of the accreted land. He also prayed for a decree for confirmation of possession and in case he is out of possession, for khas possession of the land. He also prayed for a direction to the defendant No. 1 for assessing revenue of the suit land.

3. The State of Assam (defendant No. 1) resisted the plaintiff's claim. It averred in the written statement that the disputed land was lying khas from a very long time and cannot be considered as part and parcel of Dag No. 180. It further stated that both the plaintiff and the defendant No. 2 applied for settlement and "as the plaintiff was found to hold land measuring more than 150 bighas his prayer was rejected and the settlement of the land in question i. e. dag 833 was granted in favour of Shri Manindra Kumar Pal by the Deputy Commissioner's order dated 3-5-1958 in Settlement Case No. 177 of 1957-58". (Paragraph 12 (2) of the written statement). The State also denied that the land was gained by alluvion. The defendant No. 2 also similarly denied the plaintiff's claim.

4. The trial court held that the "suit land is an accreted land that has been thrown up within 4/5 years by the gradual recession of river Surma according to Government patwari." It also found that the land of the plaintiff is contiguous east of the disputed land. The court therefore held that under Section 34 (b) of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation the plaintiff is entitled to the settlement of the land. The trial court rejected the plea of the State that the plaintiff was owner of more than 150 bighas of land in absence of any evidence to that effect. Besides, the Government Patwari (D. W. 2) did not state in his evidence that the settlement was refused on the ground of the plaintiff owning more than 150 bighas of land. The trial court also rejected the contention of the defendants that the suit was barred under Section 154 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation. The learned Munsiff, therefore, decreed the suit.

5. The learned Subordinate Judge held the land to be accreted land and also contiguous east of the plaintiff's periodic patta land covered by Dag No. 180. He also found that the defendant No. 2 has no land contiguous to the disputed land. He therefore agreed with the learned Munsiff that "the suit land must have been settled with the plaintiff and the State is entitled to assessment of revenue for the suit land if otherwise not barred." The learned Judge, however, on the admission of P. W. 1 (son of the original plaintiff) that the Collector refused to settle the suit land as he had more than 150 bighas of land, held that the settlement was rightly refused under the provisions of the Assam Fixation of Ceiling on Land Holdings Act, 1956 (hereinafter referred to as the Ceiling Act') as specifically averred in the written statement of the defendant No. 1.

He found that the plaintiff had more than 150 bighas of land and since under Section 4 of the Ceiling Act no person shall be entitled to hold as owner or tenant lands which exceed the limit of 150 bighas in aggregate. He held that the Collector was justified in refusing settlement of the land in favour of the plaintiff. He also held that as the Collector refused settlement of the suit land under the provisions of the Ceiling Act, the plaintiff could not challenge the order of the Collector in a Civil Court under Section 32 read with section 20 of the Ceiling Act. He held that the civil Court's jurisdiction was barred. As a result, the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit. Hence, this second Appeal.

"So though under the law of alluvion read with Section 34, proviso (b) and the Explanation to clause (b) of Section 3 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, the plaintiff was entitled to the suit land as accreted land, plaintiff's acquisition of the suit land was barred under Section 20 of the Assam Fixation of Ceiling on Land Holdings Act, 1956, and so the learned Collector was justified in refusing settlement of suit land to the plaintiff." Section 20 may be read:

"(1) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in any law, usage, contract or agreement, from and after the commencement of this Act, no person as owner or tenant shall acquire or possess by transfer, exchange, lease agreement or settlement any land which with or without the lands already held by him or any member of his family, shall in the aggregate exceed the limit fixed under Section 4 of this Act.

From the finding of the learned Judge, it is clear that the land accreted to the periodic patta of the plaintiff. If that is so although the Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation, 1825 (Bengal Regulation 11 of 1825) is admittedly not applicable in the Cachar district, the principles of justice, equity and good conscience will be easily invoked and under those principles even in absence of a provision like Section 4 of the Bengal Regulation, the principle of that Section will apply.

We may, therefore, read Section 4:

"When land may be gained by gradual accession, whether from the recess of a river or of the sea, it shall be considered an increment to the tenure of the person to whose land or estate it is thus annexed, whether such land or estate be held immediately from the Government by a zamindar or other superior land-holder, or as a subordinate tenure, by any description of under-tenant whatever"

Explanation to Section 3 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation is directly applicable to this case. That Explanation reads:

"Any land gained by alluvion or by dereliction of a river to any estate as here defined, which under the laws in force is considered an increment to the tenure to which the land has accreted, shall be deemed to be part of that estate."

This Explanation clearly shows that any land gained by alluvion, as in this case, shall be deemed to be part of the main estate to which it has accreted, provided under the laws in force such alluvion is considered an increment to the tenure to which the land has accreted.

In this context, reference to Section 34 of the Regulation may be apposite. By that sec. "when a settlement has been accepted, the revenue fixed thereby and no more shall be payable from such date and for such term, as the State Government may fix in this behalf:

"Provided that—

(a) x x x x

(b) x x x x

(c) in the case of gain by alluvion or by dereliction of a river, or loss by deluvion, during the currency of the settlement, increment shall be assessed and reductions granted by the Deputy Commissioner according to such limitations as to the extent of gain or loss and such other conditions as may be prescribed....."

Proviso (c) to Section 34 of the Regulation, therefore, clearly indicates that by operation of this provision of law, the accreted land becomes a part of the tenure to which it is annexed and the main estate with this addition will be liable to increased assessment of land revenue.

The Explanation set out above may, therefore, be referable to the provision under Section 34, proviso (c) of the Regulation, in addition to the principles of justice, equity and good conscience. The result is that the accreted land having already formed part of the periodic patta land of the plaintiff, viz., dag No. 180 to which it is immediately contiguous, is not available for settlement in favour of the defendant No. 2 on the erroneous assumption that it is a khas land. There is no evidence on record that this land is khas as claimed by the defendants. There is no finding of the court below to the effect that the disputed land is khas land of the Government. The settlement in favour of the defendant No. 2 is therefore invalid as the land, under the Regulation, formed part of Dag No. 180 which automatically became the estate of the plaintiff unless the plaintiff refused to accept the same.

The plaintiff in this case applied to the Government for settlement of the accreted land although such an application was not necessary as he was entitled to it under the law. We are, therefore, clearly of opinion that settlement in favour of the defendant No. 2 is unauthorised and invalid and the plaintiff is entitled to the settlement of the disputed land and also to khas possession of the same. The view we have taken receives support from a Division Bench decision of this Court in AIR 1958 Assam 34 (Boroji Manipurini v. State of Assam).

7. From the above conclusion, we will presently show that Section 20 of the Ceiling Act is not at all attracted in the present case. It is not a case where the plaintiff has acquired or possessed this land by transfer, exchange, lease, agreement or settlement. He is entitled to this land by operation of the law as shown above and he should get an opportunity under the provisions of the Ceiling Act to either retain it or to surrender the same in accordance with law and the procedure laid down therein.

8. The learned Judge also relied upon Section 32 of the Ceiling Act as a bar to jurisdiction of a civil court in entertaining such a suit. That section may be quoted:

"Except as otherwise expressly provided in this Act, no decision or order made in exercise of any power conferred by or under this Act shall be called in question in any Court."

It is enough to state that this section is not in the way of the plaintiff. The plaintiff in this suit has not challenged any decision or order of any authority made in exercise of the powers under the Ceiling Act. The Deputy Commissioner settled the land in favour of the defendant No. 2, as we have found above, on the mistaken assumption that it was khas land available for settlement under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation. It is true that he settled the land in favour of the defendant No. 2 in preference to the plaintiff who has more than 150 bighas of land. Even so, the order of settlement in favour of the defendant No. 2 is not an order made in exercise of the powers under the Ceiling Act. It is an order in the usual course under the provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation. That being the legal position, Section 32 of the Ceiling Act is no bar to the institution of the suit.

9. In the result, the appeal is allowed. The judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge are set aside and the decree of the learned Munisiff is restored. We will, however, make no order as to costs here as well as in the trial court.

M. C. PATHAK, J.:— 10. I agree.
Appeal allowed.

Associated Industries (Assam) Ltd.
Petitioner v. Sub-Divisional Officer
(Sadar), Gauhati and others, Respondents.

Civil Rule No. 309 of 1968, D/- 16-6-1971.

Tenancy Laws — Assam Fixation of Ceiling on Land Holdings Act (1 of 1957), Section 7 (2) — Service of draft statement.— Person whose name has been mutated in respect of the disputed land and against whom the proceedings are directed is "person concerned". Even if he is not the recorded pattadar service of draft statement on him is mandatory and failure is fatal to further proceeding — (X-Ref:— Tenancy Laws — Assam Fixation of Ceiling on Land Holdings Rules (1957), Rule 6 (2)).

(Paras 10 and 11)

K. Lahiri and M. Sarma, for Petitioner; A. M. Mazumdar, Jr. Govt. Advocate, J. P. Bhattacharji and D. K. Hazarika, for Respondents.

GOSWAMI, C. J.:— The petitioner's case is that it is a company incorporated under the Indian Companies Act, having its place of business in Assam. its authorised capital is Rs. 1,00,00,000/- and the paid-up capital stands at present at Rs. 59,74,000/-. The Government of Assam has Rs. 15,00,000 Preferential Shares and Rs. 8,19,500/- Equity Shares in the Company and the Secretary to the Government of Assam for the Department of Industries is a permanent Director of the Board of Directors of the Company. All the share-holders and the Directors of the Company, except two who are of British and Greek nationality, are Indian citizens. The Company was formed for production of various things, mainly Oxygen, Petro-Chemicals, Sulphuric Acid, Liquid Sulphur Dioxide, Fertilizers and Alum. Out of these, the Company has already started two sections and has decided to start others one after another. Its main section is Chemical Unit which produces fertilizers, essential for improvement of agriculture.

The Company impleaded the Sub-Divisional Officer, Gauhati, Secretary to the Government of Assam, Revenue Department and the State of Assam as Respondents 1, 2 and 3 respectively and added the Industrial Finance Corporation of India, New Delhi as the respondent No. 4, by an order of the Court dated 3rd August 1970 on its application as the entire land of the company including the subject-matter of the present Civil Rule was mortgaged to the Corporation in December 1961.

By a registered sale deed executed on 21st November, 1959 the petitioner purchased from the recorded pattadar, Radhikananda Chowdhury, the three grants, namely Chandrapore Satpukuri Fee Simple Grant 24/3 with an area of 2285 B. 2K, 15L. Chandrapore Tantee-mara Grant Fee Simple grant No. 35/8 with an area of 311 B. O. K. 13L. and Ahorigog Fee Simple Grant 16/12 with area of 863B. 3K. 13½L, totalling 3460B. 2K. 1½L. The consideration for the sale deed was Rs. 1,25,000/-. Although it is claimed that the Company's name was mutated in the grants on 6th October 1961, records appear not to have been corrected even till 1963. It also appears that the Company as well as the recorded pattadar wrote to the Government in the Revenue Department for permission for the transfer of the land, as the Assam Fixation of Ceiling on Land Holdings Act, 1956, hereinafter called 'the Ceiling Act' had already been brought into force on 15th February 1958. The petitioner produced an order of the Government communicated by the Revenue Secretary on 20th November, 1959 (Annexure 10 to the petition), which is relied upon by the petitioner as exempting the three grants from operation of the Ceiling Act. This order of the Government appears to have been cancelled by an order of 22nd October, 1965, which, however, is not produced before us.

2. A Land Ceiling Case, being Case No. 205/63 was started by the Collector on 25th May 1963 and it is stated therein inter alia:

D. S. (meaning Draft Statement) was prepared and signed and serve copies as per Rule."

It appears, originally Radhikananda Choudhury was served with the draft statement in his Calcutta address and on 14th August 1963 he returned the draft statement with an application stating that he had already sold his land to the petitioner-company and some other persons in 1959 and that he had no interest in the land. Then, it appears from the ordersheet that the office made enquiries about the transfers and the Collector passed the following order on 2nd January, 1964:

"Seen A. S.O's report. Issue a notice on Associated Industries and the other recorded pattadars that the lands are going to be acquired under the Ceiling Act, Fixing 30-1-64."

It appears that notices were not issued and the same were issued on 25th April 1964 to the petitioner and others by registered post with acknowledgment due. A notice dated 30th January 1964 was issued to the Manager of the petitioner company at Shillong to appear before the Collector on 22nd February 1964 in regard to the Ceiling Case No. 205/63 of Sri R. Choudhury. This notice was repeated on 28th April 1964 adding a further direction in the following terms:

"You are hereby directed to appear before the Collector, Gauhati on 25-5-64 at 10 A. M. in regards (sic) to the Ceiling Case No. 205/63 of Radhikananda Choudhury of Panbazar, Gauhati with all connected records regarding purchase of the land in question." (Annexure 1.).

3. In answer to this notice, the petitioner submitted an application on 4th July 1964 particularly referring to the Government letter of 20th November 1959 (not 28th November 1959), a copy of which was enclosed with the application. On receipt of this representation, the following order was passed by the Collector in the order-sheet of the case:

"Seen objection petition filed by M. C. Burman for Associated Industries on 4th July 1964.

Request Government to send us a copy of the Government letter, a copy of which has been filed by the objector. In the meantime, request A. S. O. to enquire and report as to how the area has at present been utilised and what area has been actually used for industrial purpose. Fix 3-8-64."

Although it appears enquiry could not be held for quite a length of time and a report from the Assistant Settlement Officer, Gauhati has received on 7th May 1965, the Collector heard the learned advocate for the petitioner on 28th July 1965 and passed his order on 23rd August 1965 in the following terms:

"The report submitted by A. S. O. do not (sic) clearly show

1) the area and days in which industries have been established including industrial buildings and other buildings in connection with the industries including roads, public places like bazars, playgrounds staff quarters etc.

2) The day nos. in areas under possession of tenants with khatian and without khatian with or without permission of land owners.

3) The land on which the company has started construction but not completed.

Call for a report on these points from the A. S. O. urgently. Fix 9-9-65." Nothing substantial has happened between 23rd August 1965 and 18th May, 1966 on which date it appears from the order-sheet that the petitioner's counsel submitted that according to Section 2 Clause (c) (iv) introduced by the Amendment Act of 1962, the provisions of the Ceiling Act do not apply to the petitioner's land. The Collector, therefore, called for a report from the A. S. O. on the points raised by the petitioner. The next order of importance is dated 31st October 1966 which may be quoted:

"Party present. Heard argument. In order to appreciate the future and also ancillary requirements of the factory it is necessary to know the actual present position regarding utilisation of lands and persons employed as well as scheme of future expansion. The applicant is therefore directed to submit any information in this regard by 30-11-1966. Party informed in office."

It appears on 30th December 1966 some documents were filed and arguments were heard. An enquiry was also made in the meantime regarding acquisition of some portion of the grant land for the purpose of the Assam State Electricity Board, and the same was admittedly exempted from the operation of the Act. (Paragraph 11 of the counter-affidavit). It is also necessary to refer to an intermediate order dated 30th June 1966 in the order-sheet which has taken note of a petition submitted by the petitioner on 10th June 1966, where amongst other objections, the following were mentioned in paragraphs 2 and 3 of the petition:

"That perhaps under mistaken notion that Radhikananda Choudhury still owns the land this Ceiling case was started. Shri Radhikananda Choudhury owns more than this land and it is possible that the Ceiling Act is applicable to his case. The Ceiling case was not started against the petitioner. The petitioner's name has been recorded afterwards and how it was recorded it is not known to the petitioner. They were never asked to submit returns and no return need be submitted by the petitioner as Land Ceiling Act is not applicable to them." (Para. 2)

"That the petitioner wants the land for the purpose of extension of the industries and other ancillary purposes as envisaged in the amending Act namely Act No. 20 of 1962 which excludes "Land held by Mill, Factory or Workshop as may be required for the purpose of extension of the Mill, factory, workshop or for ancillary purposes of the Mill, factory or workshop such as school, dispensary or roads." (Para 3)

At paragraph 4 of this petition, the petitioner gave a detailed list of his requirements claiming 588 acres for various purposes mentioned therein. It was also mentioned that:

"So far Chandrapur (Tatimara) Grant is concerned that has been reserved for future colony, schools and hospitals. Ahorigog 285 acres are necessary for further expansion of the factory.

The aforesaid order dated 30th June 1966, on perusal of the petition dated 10th June 1966, notes as follows:

"As regards the principle of determining the excess land a reference has already been made in Ceiling Case No. 79 of 1960 (Assam Hard Board Ltd.). We may await reply to that reference as the principle will be the same."

Finally, the impugned order dated 3rd July 1967 was passed by the Collector. The petitioner appealed to the Government under Section 7 (3) of the Ceiling Act without success.

4. We have ourselves gone through the original records in the Land Ceiling Case to find out the above position in order to ascertain how the matter was dealt with by the Collector under the provisions of the Ceiling Act.

5. The Deputy Secretary, Revenue, submitted the counter-affidavit on behalf of the first three respondents. He states that "the land in question is ideal for the purpose of Horticulture and hence comes within the purview of the Assam Fixation of Ceiling on Land Holdings Act, 1956" (Para 4). It is further stated that the "company, not being a recorded pattadar in respect of the land in question, no draft statement was required to be served on them" (Para. 6). It has also been shown that the Sub Divisional Officer was duly empowered to deal with the matter and this point is not questioned before us by the petitioner. Paragraphs 33 and 34 of the petition challenging the constitutional validity of Sections 5, 6, 7 (1) and 7 (2) of the Ceiling Act are denied in this counter-affidavit.

6. Since the above sections were sought to be declared as ultra vires and void by the petitioner, the Court issued notice to the Advocate-General, Assam, at the time of the issuing of the Rule on 9th September 1968, after hearing Dr. J. C. Medhi for the petitioner under Order XXVII-A Rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and although notice was received by him on 9th October, 1968, neither the Advocate General nor any one on his behalf is appearing before us. Besides the learned counsel for the petitioner, we have however, heard the learned Junior Government Advocate on behalf of the respondents 1 to 3 and Mr. J. P. Bhattacharjee on behalf of the respondent No. 4.

7. During the hearing, no arguments were addressed regarding the constitutional invalidity of any of the sections of the Act. We are, therefore, not required to consider the same.

8. It is strenuously contended that no draft statement was served on the petitioner as required under Sec. 7 (2) of the Act. Section 7 (2) may be read:-

"The draft statement shall be published in the office of the Deputy Commissioner, the Sub-Divisional Officer, the Circle Sub-Deputy Collector and the Mouzadar, and a copy thereof shall be served on the person or persons concerned in the manner prescribed. Any objection received within 30 days of the service shall be duly considered by the Collector and after giving the objector an opportunity for hearing order shall be passed on these objections."

Rule 6 of the Assam Fixation of Ceiling on Land Holdings Rules, 1957 shows the manner of service of the draft statement under sub-section (2) of Section 7 and the rule so far as material for our purpose may be quoted:

"(1) The draft statement prepared by the Collector under sub-section (1) of Section 7 shall, as far as practicable, be in Form A.

(2) The Collector shall serve the draft statement on the person holding the excess land by tendering and delivering a copy thereof to him or to his duly authorised agent, x x x x x."

It is found as admitted in paragraph 5 of the counter-affidavit of the Deputy Secretary that the Land Ceiling Case was started in the name of the original grant-holder Radhikananda Choudhury. We have also found that the said landholder on being served with a draft statement, returned the same disclaiming any connection with the land in these three grants sold to the petitioner on 21st November, 1959. This was accepted by the Collector by his order of 2nd January 1964 set out above and notice was given to the petitioner, and it appears the petitioner's company was added in the Land Ceiling Case and the proceeding thereafter was directed against it. Even so, we find the Collector did not serve a copy of the draft statement on the petitioner although one which had been sent to the recorded pattadar had been returned to him.

This is therefore a case where the Collector has accepted the petitioner as the owner of the three grants after the purchase and it cannot be now argued that the petitioner is not a person concerned in the proceeding, as has been sought to be made. The petitioner also produced a photostat copy of the order of the Settlement Officer dated 6th October 1961 allowing mutation in respect of the land in favour of the petitioner (Para. 1 of his petition dated 10th June 1966 before the Collector). The petitioner, therefore, is definitely concerned in the land as well as in the proceedings before the Collector and the Collector has violated the provisions of Section 7 (2) of the Act read with Rule 6 (2) of the Rules in not serving on the petitioner a copy of the draft statement. It is true that it was possible for the petitioner to know what was happening in the proceeding and indeed presented its version of the case before the Collector. But we find that the petitioner was originally notified by the Collector to appear before him as if only "regarding purchase of the land in question." Be that as it may, service of a copy of the draft statement on the petitioner was mandatory legal requirement under Section 7 (2) of the Ceiling Act.

9. The scheme of ceiling under the Act and acquisition of land as appearing in Chapter II, which opens with Section 4, may briefly be noticed. While Section 4 fixes the limit of the ceiling, Section 5 requires any person who holds land as owner or tenant in excess of the limit fixed under Section 4, within the prescribed period, to submit a return to the Collector. By Section 6 if such a person fails to submit the return, the Collector may himself obtain the necessary information required to be shown in the return through the prescribed agency. By Section 7 (1), on the basis of the return which has to be verified through an appropriate agency or when no such return is given, on the information obtained by the Collector under Section 6, he has to prepare a draft statement in form A. By Section 7 (2), service of the notice is essential as the person concerned is given a right to lodge objection within 30 days of the service of the notice before the Collector and a hearing has to take place on the objections. Any order by the Collector is appealable under Section 7 (3) to the State Government within 30 days of that order.

By Section 7 (4), the State Government may of its own motion call for any record relating to the draft statement and after giving the persons concerned an opportunity for hearing may pass such orders as it deems fit. There is also a period of limitation under this sub-section. By Section 7 (5), any order of the State Government under sub-section (3) or (4) of the Collector under sub-section (2), when no appeal is preferred under sub-section (3) or a revision is made under sub-section (4), shall be final. It is only after all this process is gone through that under Section 7 (6) the draft statement "shall then be made final" and has to be republished and thereupon "no person shall then be entitled to question it in any court of law." By Section 8 the State Government shall then acquire such excess lands by publishing an appropriate notification to the effect and such publication shall be conclusive evidence of notice of acquisition to the person or persons holding such lands. By Section 9, on publication of this notification all rights, title and interest of such person or persons in such excess land shall stand transferred to the State Government with effect from the date of the publication of the notification free from encumbrances created by it or them.

10. From the above scheme which is disclosed in the summary of the provisions already set out, it is clear that the procedure for preparation of the draft statement and its service on the person or persons concerned is not an idle formality and must be carried out strictly in accordance with the provisions of the Act and the Rules. We are not required in this case to consider whether such service can be waived by a person concerned, as that plea has not been taken by the State as, according to it, no statement was required to be served on the petitioner under law.

11. We are clearly of opinion that the petitioner in this case is a person concerned within the meaning of Section 7 (2) of the Act and non-service of the draft statement under that sub-section is fatal to the proceeding. Besides, we found that the petitioner had raised several legal objections before the Collector which he pressed later before the appellate authority. From a perusal of the impugned orders, we are not satisfied that these objections have been properly considered in accordance with the law. There appears to be (no?) application of the mind of the Collector as well as of the appellate authority to give an appropriate decision in the merits of the legal objections.

12. We are, therefore, constrained to quash the impugned orders, namely the order of the Collector dated 3rd July 1967 and also the appellate order dated 2nd July 1968. It will be open to the Collector to serve a copy of the draft statement on the petitioner and dispose of the matter after considering any objections which may be made before him in accordance with law.

13. In the result, the application is allowed. The impugned orders are quashed. We will, however, make no order as to costs. We have refrained from expressing any opinion on the merits of the legal objections.

JUDGMENT:— This appeal by the defendant is from the judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge, Cachar at Silchar. The plaintiff filed that suit for specific performance of an agreement dated 10-3-1962. The plaintiff sold the jote right of the suit land by a registered sale deed on 10-3-1962 to the defendant and delivered possession thereof. On the same date there was an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant to the effect that within three years the defendant would reconvey the suit land in favour of the plaintiff on receiving the sale price and accordingly the defendant executed a registered Ekranama on 10-3-1962. Notwithstanding repeated demands the defendant failed to reconvey the suit land. The plaintiff tendered the consideration but the defendant did not accept the same. Hence the plaintiff filed the suit for specific performance.

2. The defendant contested the suit on grounds inter-alia that the plaintiff never approached the defendant and made no demand for reconveyance of the suit land and that the plaintiff never tendered the consideration to the defendant, but he deposited the amount in court only after the expiry of the time of the contract. Hence according to the defendant, the plaintiff was not entitled to any decree for specific performance.

3. Several issues were framed on the pleadings of the parties and the learned trial court dismissed the suit holding that the plaintiff made no tender of the consideration within time and his deposit in court was not valid in law.

4. An appeal was preferred before Munsiff. The learned Subordinate Judge allowed the appeal, reversed the judgment and decree of the learned trial court and decreed the plaintiff's suit. Hence this appeal by the defendant.

5. Mr. K. P. Bhattacharjee, the learned counsel appearing for the appellant submits that in the instant case time was of the essence of the contract and since the plaintiff failed to pay the consideration to the defendant or to deposit the same within the stipulated period, the contract ceased and there could be no decree for specific performance of the contract. Mr. M. H. Choudhury, the learned counsel appearing for the plaintiff respondent submits on the other hand that on a proper construction of the agreement Ext. 1 time was not of the essence of the contract and that the plaintiff was ever ready to make the payment but the defendant did not accept the same and therefore he had to deposit the consideration money in court in terms of the agreement itself. But as the challan was not passed by the court on the date of filing the suit but it was passed by the court on 15-3-1965, the plaintiff could make the required deposit in treasury on 16-3-1965 and therefore the deposit was within time.

6. The first point that arises for consideration in this case is whether time was of the essence of the contract in the instant case. In Gomathinayagam Pillai v. Palaniswami Nadar, AIR 1967 SC 868 Shah J. delivering the majority judgment observed as follows:

"Section 55 of the Contract Act which deals with the consequences of failure to perform an executory contract on or before the stipulated time provides by the first paragraph:

"When a party to a contract promises to do a certain thing at or before a specified time, or certain things at or before specified times, and fails to do any such thing at or before the specified time, the contract, or so much of it as has not been performed, becomes voidable at the option of the promisee if the intention of the parties was that time should be of the essence of the contract."

It is not merely because of specification of time at or before which the thing to be done under the contract is promised to be done and default in compliance therewith, that the other party may avoid the contract. Such an option arises only if it is intended by the parties that time is of the essence of the contract. Intention to make time of the essence, if expressed in writing, must be in language which is unmistakable; it may also be inferred from the nature of the property agreed to be sold, conduct of the parties and the surrounding circumstances at or before the contract. Specific performance of a contract will ordinarily be granted, notwithstanding default in carrying out the contract within the specified period, if having regard to the express stipulations of the parties, nature of the property and the surrounding circumstances, if it is not inequitable to grant the relief. If the contract relates to sale of immovable property, it would normally be presumed that time was not of the essence of the contract. Mere incorporation in the written agreement of a clause imposing penalty in case of default does not by itself evidence an intention to make time of the essence. In Jamshed Kodaram Irami v. Burjori Dhunjibhai, ILR 40 Bom 289 = AIR 1915 PC 83 the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council observed that the principle underlying Section 55 of the Contract Act did not differ from those which obtained under the law of England as regards contracts for sale of land. The Judicial Committee observed:

'Under that law equity, which governs the rights of the parties in cases of specific performance of contracts to sell real estate, looks not at the letter but at the substance of the agreement in order to ascertain whether the parties, notwithstanding that they named a specific time within which completion was to take place, really and in substance intended more than that it should take place within a reasonable time. Their Lordships are of opinion that this is the doctrine which the section of the Indian Statute adopts and embodies in reference to sales of land. It may be stated concisely in the language used by Lord Cairns in Tilley v. Thomas (1867) 3 Ch A 61:—

'The construction is, and must be in equity the same as in a court of law. A Court of equity will indeed relieve against and enforce, specific performance, notwithstanding a failure to keep the dates assigned by the contract, either for completion, or for the steps towards completion, if it can do justice between the parties, and if (as Lord Justice Turner said in Roberts v. Berry, (1853) 3 De G. M. and G 284) there is nothing in the 'express stipulations between the parties, the nature of the property, or the surrounding circumstances', which would make it inequitable to interfere with and modify the legal right. This is what is meant, and all that is meant, when it is said that in equity time is not of the essence of the contract. Of the three grounds, mentioned by Lord Justice Turner 'express stipulations' requires no comment. The 'nature of the property' is illustrated by the case of reversions, mines, or trades. The 'surrounding circumstances' must depend on the facts of each particular case.'

Their Lordships will add to the statement just quoted these observations. The special jurisdiction of equity to disregard the letter of the contract in ascertaining what the parties to the contract are to be taken as having really and in substance intended as regards the time of its performance may be excluded by any plainly expressed stipulation. But to have this effect the language of the stipulation must show that the intention was to make the rights of parties depend on the observation of, the time limits prescribed in a fashion which is unmistakable. The language will have this effect if it plainly excludes the motion that these time limits were of merely secondary importance in the bargain, and that to disregard them would be to disregard nothing that lay as its foundation. Prima facie, equity treats the importance of such time limits as being subordinate to the main purpose of the parties, and it will enjoin specific performance notwithstanding that from the point of view of a Court of Law the contract has not been literally performed by the plaintiff as regards the limit specified.'

7. Fixation of the period within which the contract is to be performed does not make the stipulation as to time of the essence, of the contract Intention to make time of the essence of the contract may be evidenced by either express stipulations or by circumstances which are sufficiently strong to displace the ordinary presumption that in a contract of sale of land stipulations as to time are not of the essence. In the present case there is no express stipulation, and the circumstances are not such as to indicate that it was the intention of the parties that time was intended to be of the essence of the contract. It is true that even if time was not originally of the essence, the appellants could by notice served upon the respondent call upon him to take the conveyance within the time fixed and intimate that in default of compliance with the requisition the contract will be treated as cancelled. As observed in Stickney v. Keeble, 1915 A. C. 386 "where in a contract for the sale of land the time fixed for completion is not made of the essence of the contract but the vendor has been guilty of unnecessary delay, the purchaser may serve upon the vendor a notice limiting a time at the expiration of which he will treat the contract as at an end..... The respondent must in a suit for specific performance of an agreement plead and prove that he was ready and willing to perform his part of the contract continuously between the date of the contract and the date of hearing of the suit."

In his dissentient judgment Bachawat J. also held that having regard to the decision in 43 Ind App 26 = AIR 1915 PC 83 the High Court rightly held that time was not of the essence of the contract.

8. In Ext. 1 the Ekarnama in the instant case the following stipulations are found:—

"By executing this agreement I promise that if you pay me the entire consideration money in one instalment within three years, after harvesting the standing crops, from today, I will execute a sale deed in your favour and get it registered and deliver possession of the lands described in the schedule. If within the stipulated period the consideration money is offered to me and I refuse to accept the same you will be able to get the sale deed executed through court after depositing the consideration money in court. If you cannot give me the entire amount at a time, you will be able to get the first schedule land by paying half the amount and you will be able to get the second schedule land again within the stipulated period. If within the stipulated period you do not take back the land by paying the consideration money, you will have no claim at all in the lands described in the schedule after the end of the said stipulated period."

The contract in this case relates to sale of immovable property and therefore following the observations made by the Supreme Court in AIR 1967 SC 868 (supra) it may be normally presumed that time was not of the essence of the contract. Mere incorporation in the written agreement of a clause imposing penalty in case of default does not by itself evidence an intention to take time of the essence of the contract. Since the agreement is for sale of land and more particularly in view of the stipulations regarding time of executing the contract as found in Ext. 1 and quoted above, I am clearly of the opinion that in the instant case time was not of the essence of the contract. I therefore hold that the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge to the effect that time was of the essence of the contract in the instant case is erroneous.

9. Even though time was not originally of the essence of the contract, the defendant appellant could by notice served upon the plaintiff respondent call upon him to take the conveyance within the time fixed and intimate that in default of compliance with the requisition, the contract would be treated as cancelled. No such notice was issued by the defendant to the plaintiff.

10. The next point that falls for consideration is whether the consideration money was offered or paid by the plaintiff to the defendant within the stipulated period. The plaintiff in paragraph 3 of the plaint alleged that the defendant was not accepting the consideration money and was not executing the sale deed, though he was assuring from time to time that he would accept the money and execute the sale deed. The learned Subordinate Judge found that it was proved at least that the plaintiff expressed his willingness prior to the suit to pay the consideration to the defendant but there was no corroborative evidence to show that the plaintiff made actual tender of the amount. He also found that on the date of the filing of the suit, that is, on 10-3-1965, the plaintiff carried some money but he took it back as the challan was not passed by the court on 10-3-1965 and the learned Subordinate Judge found that on the date of filing of the suit even, the plaintiff was ready to deposit the required amount but he could not do so, as the challan was passed only after five days. It appears from the record that a challan for depositing a sum of Rs. 700/- in Karimganj Sub-Treasury was filed in the court on 10-3-1965 along with the filing of the plaint. On 10-3-1965 the court ordered that on the recital in the plaint the plaintiff might deposit Rs. 700/- in court at his own risk. The challan was passed by the court on 15-3-1965 and the amount was actually deposited to the Sub-Treasury on 16-3-1965. Hence the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the plaintiff was ready to deposit the required amount on the date of filing the suit is correct and the plaintiff's allegation was that the defendant was not accepting the consideration money but deferring the same on some pleas. The stipulation in the agreement Ext. 1 also was to the effect that if the defendant refused to accept the money, the plaintiff might deposit the same in the court and get the sale deed executed through court. When the plaintiff filed the suit on 10-3-1965, he filed the challan also and had the challan been passed on the same date, the plaintiff could have deposited the amount on the same date.

11. On the facts alleged and found proved I hold that in the instant suit for specific performance of the agreement the plaintiff pleaded and proved that he was ready and willing to perform his part of the contract between the date of the contract and the date of the hearing of the suit.

12. In the result I hold that the learned Subordinate Judge was correct in decreeing the plaintiff's suit. The decree of the learned Subordinate Judge is therefore affirmed and the appeal is dismissed. In the facts and circumstances of the case I make no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Bandhana Goala, Petitioner v. Assam Board of Revenue and others, Respondents.

Civil Rule No. 277 of 1968, D/- 4-6-1971

Tenancy Laws — Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (1886), Section 12 — Settlement Rules under, Rule 18 — Summary eviction of encroachers — Rule is ultra vires Art. 14 of the Constitution — (X-Ref: Constitution of India, Art. 14). AIR 1967 SC 1581 and Civil Reference Nos. 11 (M) to 27 (M) of 1968, D - 21-9-1970 (Assam and Nagaland) (SB), followed.

(Para 11)

The remedy of eviction through civil court is not barred either by the Rules or the Regulation. Therefore two alternative remedies become available to the Government without any guidance as to when each of them is to be followed. Some among the same class of encroachers may be evicted summarily under the rule while the others may be ejected through the civil court where they can have a wide opportunity of defence. Thus the rule is discriminatory.

It cannot be said that the Government has no choice of remedy since the authority under the Rule alone can exercise the power thereunder and the suit can be filed only by the Government. Rule 1 (1) of Settlement Rules (as Inserted in 1967) is against such a position and that authority also is only an agent of the Government and can institute a civil suit only in the State name.

GOSWAMI, C. J.:— This application under Article 226 of the Constitution of India is directed against an order in appeal of the Assam Board of Revenue whereby it affirmed the order of eviction of 19th November, 1965 passed by the Additional Deputy Commissioner Tezpur, under Rule 18 (3) of the Settlement Rules made under Section 12 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886, hereinafter called 'the Regulation'.

2. The petitioner has been in possession of 12 bighas of land held originally by Buroi Tea Company under thirty years N. L. R. grant. The said company relinquished about 1690 bighas of land including the petitioner's land in 1959 and the land vested in the State Government. The petitioner along with other occupants numbering about 225 persons applied to the Deputy Commissioner for settlement of the land in their favour in terms of their occupation. The petitioner applied for settlement of the 12 bighas of land in his occupation. While the application for settlement was pending, the Additional Deputy Commissioner started an Eviction Case No. 253 of 1965-66 and passed an order on 19th November 1965 for eviction of the petitioner as well as other occupants of the relinquished grant land. The petitioner moved the Deputy Commissioner for staying eviction which was at first granted to be thereafter vacated on 28th December 1965. The petitioner appealed to the Assam Board of Revenue without success and hence this writ application.

3. The petitioner submits that Rule 18 of the Settlement Rules is ultra vires Article 14 of the Constitution of India as it contains the germ of discrimination amongst trespassers inter se. Since the vires of the rule was challenged, we issued notice to the learned Advocate General, Assam, who has made his submission contesting the plea.

4. It is not contended that rule 18 is ultra vires Section 12 of the Regulation which empowers the State Government to make rules to provide for the ejectment of any person who has entered into unauthorised occupation of land over which no person has the rights of a proprietor, land-holder or settlement-holder under the Regulation. It is only contended that the rule is violative of Article 14 violating the principle of equality before the law or the equal protection of the law. This submission is sought to be established by relying upon the decision of the Supreme Court in AIR 1967 SC 1581 (Northern India Caterers (Private) Ltd. v. State of Punjab), wherein by a majority decision (Hidayatullah, J. as he then was, and Bachawat J. contra) the Court struck down Section 5 of the Punjab Public Premises and Land (Eviction and Rent Recovery) Act, 1959, as the same was held to be discriminatory and violative of Article 14 of the Constitution.

5. Before we deal with the submission, we may read rule 18:

"(1) Subject as hereinafter provided, the Deputy Commissioner may eject any person from land over which no person has acquired the rights of a proprietor, land-holder, or settlement holder.

(2) When such person has entered into possession of land that has previously been reserved for roads or road-side lands or for the grazing of village cattle or for other public purposes, or has entered into possession of land from which he has been excluded by general or special orders and when, further, there is no bona fide claim of right involved, he may be ejected or ordered to vacate the land forthwith, and the Deputy Commissioner may sell, confiscate or destroy any crop raised, or any building or other construction erected, without authority on the land.

3 (a) In all other cases ejectment shall be preceded by publication of a notice in the manner prescribed below requiring the occupant generally to vacate the land specified in the notice within 15 days of the date of publication of the notice on the land concerned or in a prominent place in the vicinity thereof, and to remove any buildings, houses, fences, or crops etc., which may have been raised on such land, provided that the Deputy Commissioner may give time to any particular occupant to harvest the crops, if any, growing on such land. Any buildings, houses, fences, crops, etc., which have not been removed in accordance with such notice shall be confiscated to the Government.

3 (b) The notice referred to in clause (a) sub-r. (3) above shall be published by affixing a copy thereof in the Notice Board of the office of the Deputy Commissioner or the Sub-divisional Officer, as the case may be, and also in the Notice Board of the office of the Sub-Deputy Collector within whose jurisdiction the land is situated. A notice shall also be published by affixing a copy thereof on the land concerned or in a prominent place in the vicinity thereof.

(4) Any person or persons required by notice to vacate under the last preceding sub-rule the land which the person or persons occupy, shall comply with the requisition within the time prescribed in the notice, running from the date of its service.

(5) Any person or persons intentionally disobeying an order or requisition to vacate under sub-rule (2) or (3) shall be liable to a penalty which may extend to two hundred rupees, and, in case such disobedience is continued to a further penalty which may extend to fifty rupees for each day during which such breach continues.

5 (a) Any person who having been once evicted under sub-rule (2) or sub-rule (3) from any land encroaches on any land over which no person has acquired the right of a proprietor, land-holder, or settlement-holder, shall on conviction before a Magistrate, be liable to imprisonment which may extend to six months or fine which may extend to one thousand rupees or both.

This rule deals with eviction of encroachers on Government land in a summary manner. The Government's right to evict trespassers by recourse to civil court is not barred under the rule, nor under any other provisions in the Regulation. That being the position, there are two alternative remedies open and available to the Government to deal with trespassers, the first one under rule 18, and secondly, when Government so chooses to do, by filing a suit in the Civil Court. There is no guidance in the rule nor under the provisions of the Regulation as to under what circumstances the first remedy will be invoked and the second remedy will not be. That being the position, two remedies are open to the Government and the Government may pick and choose either without any fetter under the law. The provision of eviction under rule 18 is therefore clearly discriminatory as falling under the same class of encroachers upon Government land, some may be evicted summarily while others may be evicted by following the ordinary course of law in the civil court where the defendants will have ample opportunity to defend their claims whatever they may be.

6. In the N. I. Caterers' Case. AIR 1967 SC 1581 (supra), the Supreme Court was required to consider an identical provision of evicting unauthorised occupants from public premises, and the Supreme Court held as follows:

"Assuming that persons in occupation of Government properties and premises form a class by themselves as against tenants and occupiers of private owned properties and that such classification is justified on the ground that they require a differential treatment in public interest, those who fall under that classification are entitled to equal treatment among themselves. If the ordinary law of the land and the special law provide two different and alternative procedures, one more prejudicial than the other, discrimination must result if it is left to the will of the authority to exercise the more prejudicial against some and not against the rest. A person who is proceeded against under the more drastic procedure is bound to complain as to why the drastic procedure is exercised against him and not against the others even though those others are similarly circumstanced. The procedure under Section 5 is obviously more drastic and prejudicial than the one under the Civil Procedure Code where the litigant can get the benefit of a trial by an ordinary court dealing with the ordinary law of the land with the right of appeal, revision, etc., as against the person who is proceeded against under Section 5 of the Act as his case would be disposed of by an executive officer of the Government, whose decision rests on his mere satisfaction, subject no doubt to an appeal but before another executive officer, viz., the Commissioner. There can be no doubt that Section 5 confers an additional remedy over and above the remedy by way of suit and that by providing two alternative remedies to the Government and in leaving it to the unguided discretion of the Collector to resort to one or the other and to pick and choose some of those in occupation of public properties and premises for the application of the more drastic procedure under Section 5, that section has lent itself open to the charge of discrimination and as being violative of Article 14. In this view Section 5, must be declared to be void." (Paragraph 12).

It appears that in the Supreme Court, an argument was advanced to the effect that the Government in practice is not likely to institute a suit in a case where it can seek quick relief under the Act. This argument prevailed with the minority but was not accepted by the majority. Bachawat, J. speaking for the minority observed:

"The argument based upon the option of the Government to file a suit is unreal, because in practice the Government is not likely to institute a suit in a case where it can seek relief under the Act."

The Supreme Court held that since there is no express bar under the law for the Government to institute suit for eviction in the civil court, the provision was discriminatory. The ratio decidendi of the above decision governs the present case. While no express bar under the law could be pointed out by the learned Advocate General prohibiting the Government from filing a suit for eviction of encroachers, we drew his attention to sections 165 and 167 of the Regulation under Chapter X thereof. By Section 165 (1) in the case of unsettled land any person who without valid authority has encroached upon or occupied it shall be liable to ejectment forthwith and by Section 167 no civil court shall exercise jurisdiction in any of the matters covered by this Chapter. It is admitted by the learned Advocate General that this chapter deals with backward classes of people and the areas notified by the State Government under Sections 160 (2) and 161 of the Regulation respectively. The bar under Section 167, therefore, it is rightly conceded, is not a general bar.

From the above provision, introducing a bar to the civil court exercising jurisdiction in an eviction matter under this chapter, Government is expressly debarred from invoking the remedy of instituting a civil suit for eviction in such a case covered by the Chapter. The Legislature, therefore, takes note of the availability of the two remedies to the Government in effecting eviction of encroachers. That being the legal position, we have an additional reason to hold that rule 18 is discriminatory and void as the Legislature has not put any bar in the way of the Government in the case of general eviction of encroachers under rule 18 to take recourse to ordinary civil court for eviction. The evil element of picking and choosing remains with the Government in absence of a clear bar.

7. The learned Advocate General strenuously contended that Government has no twin remedies in this case. The Deputy Commissioner has the sole power to evict under rule 18 and Government cannot interfere with the power of the Deputy Commissioner. Besides, the Government has only one remedy to seek eviction by suit. The Deputy Commissioner has no such remedy. It is thus contended that each authority, the Deputy Commissioner or the Government, has only one remedy at a time and therefore no question of picking and choosing arises to attract Article 14 of the Constitution. It is difficult to appreciate the argument since the Deputy Commissioner is an agent of the Government and in no case the Deputy Commissioner could file a suit in his own name. The suit has to be instituted in the name of the State. Besides, rule 1 (1) of the Settlement Rules goes counter to the argument as that rule, inserted on 18th May 1967, reads:

"All powers of the Deputy Commissioner under these rules shall be exercised subject to any general or special orders issued from time to time by the State Government."

Rule 1 occurs in the same section relating to "General Provisions" under Chapter I of Settlement Rules, where rule 18 also appears. Even in the N. I. Caterers' case, AIR 1967

SC 1581 supra, dealing with an identical provision, the Supreme Court was taking note of the two alternative remedies to Government, although the discretion was given to the Collector to take action under S. 5 of the Punjab Act. Even the minority judgment did accept the position that the Government had the option of proceeding against the unauthorised occupier either by a suit or under the Act (Paragraph 27). The argument of the learned Advocate General is, therefore, without substance.

8. No other argument was advanced by the learned Advocate General.

9. An identical question was raised before a Special Bench of this court in Civil Ref Nos. 11 (M) to 27 (M) of 1968 disposed of on 21-9-1970 (Assam and Nagaland), Section 5 of the Public Premises (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act, 1958 (Central Act XXXII of 1958) was challenged before the Special Bench as being violative of Article 14 of the Constitution. The provisions of Sections 4 and 5 of the Punjab Act are substantially similar to those of Secs. 4 and 5 of Central Act except for the fact that 'Collector' in the Punjab Act was substituted by the 'Estate Officer' and an appeal in the Act lies to a judicial officer whereas under the Punjab Act it lay to the Commissioner of Division, an executive officer. The Special Bench following the decision of the Supreme Court in N. I. Caterers' case, AIR 1967 SC 1581 supra, held that Section 5 of the Central Act is discriminatory and violative of Article 14 of the Constitution.

10. We should however observe that after the decision of the Supreme Court in N. I. Caterers' case, AIR 1967 SC 1581 a new Section 10E was inserted in the Central Act whereby the civil court's jurisdiction to entertain suit or proceeding in respect of eviction of any person, who is in unauthorised occupation of public premises, was expressly barred.

11. In the result, the application is allowed with costs. Advocate's Fee, Rs. 100/-. The impugned orders are quashed. We hold that Rule 18 of the Settlement Rules is discriminatory and void being violative of Article 14 of the Constitution. A mandamus shall issue to the Deputy Commissioner not to enforce the provisions of Rule 18 of the Settlement Rules for evicting the petitioner.

Civil Rule No. 386 of 1968, D/- 12-5-1971.

Tenancy Laws — Assam Fixation of Ceiling on Land Holdings Act (1 of 1957). S. 7 (1) — Acquisition under — Act aims at only agricultural land — Fishery and stone quarry lands are not "land" under S. 3 (f). Therefore they cannot be acquired. (X-Ref: S. 3 (f)). (Para 3)

M. S. Rahman, for Petitioner; K. Sarma, for Respondents.

GOSWAMI, C. J.: This application under Article 226 of the Constitution of India is directed against a notification publishing a draft statement under Section 7 (1) of the Assam Fixation of Ceiling on Land Holdings Act, 1956, hereinafter referred to as 'the Act'.

2. The draft statement is dated 28-9-65 and was issued by the Sub-divisional Officer, Hailakandi. The land is held by petitioner who is the proprietor of Kachila Tea Estate in Cachar District. The land of this grant measures 1629 Bighas 14 Kathas 13 Chataks, which the petitioner "holds for special cultivation of tea and/or purposes ancillary thereto" (Para 2 of the petition). The petitioner preferred an objection to the draft statement under Section 7 of the Act on 7-2-66 to the Sub-divisional Officer who rejected his objection by order dated 12-6-67. The petitioner thereafter preferred an appeal to the State Government under Section 7 (3) of the Act but without success, and hence this application challenging the draft statement and the successive adverse orders passed in the proceedings under the Act. The petitioner has given a break-up of the entire area under this grant at para 4 of his petition. We may quote the same:

"These lands are classified under the following heads:—

(i) Under Tea cultivation	243 B. 6 K. 8 Ch.
(ii) Fallow land	41 B. 17K. 12 Ch.
(iii) Jungles	103 B. 14K. 10 Ch.
(iv) Fishery	289 B. 3K. 3 Ch.
(v) Stone quarry	610 B. 12K. 2 Ch.
(vi) Khet land viz., Bouri & Bungalow	341 B. Ok. 11 Ch.

Total
area. 1629 B. 14K. 13 Ch.

3. Mr. Rahman, the learned Counsel for the petitioner, submits that the petitioner holds the entire area for special cultivation or for purposes ancillary thereto. He submits that under Section 2 (c) of the Act this type of land is exempted and, therefore, it could not be the subject-matter of acquisition under the Act. The authorities below did not accept the contention and, it appears, the petitioner also did not give any evidence before the authorities with regard to his objections on that score. We are, therefore, not inclined to interfere with a conclusion arrived at by the authorities below that these lands which are going to be acquired were, on the evidence as produced then before the authorities, not for purposes ancillary to special cultivation. Faced with this position, the learned counsel submits that the lands of the type as the petitioner has shown in his break-up at paragraph 4 quoted above, cannot be a subject-matter of acquisition under the Act. We may, therefore, examine the definition of 'land' given in Section 3 (f) of the Act. That clause reads as follows:

"3 (f).— 'land' means land which is or may be utilised for agricultural purposes or purposes subservient thereto, and includes the sites of buildings appurtenant to such land".

The petitioner has clearly shown in his affidavit that at least 899 Bighas 15 Kathas 5 Chataks of land (Fishery 289B. 3K. 3 Ch. + stone quarry 610 B. 12K. 2Ch.) was covered by fishery and stone quarry. There is no denial to the statements made in paragraph 4 of the petition. We will, therefore, assume that an area of 899B. 15K. 5Ch. is covered by fishery and stone quarry, as alleged by the petitioner. That being the position, where there is a fishery or a stone quarry would not come within the definition of land under Section 3(f). This area of land clearly cannot be acquired under the provisions of this Act. The view we have taken receives support from the objects and purposes and the entire scheme of the Act. One of the objects is to acquire excess land either from landlord or from the tenant in excess of the ceiling fixed by the Act with a view to distribute the same equitably amongst people who deserve and are entitled to settlement under the provisions of the Act.

It is, therefore, understandable that only agricultural land is aimed at. Stone quarries and fisheries cannot, therefore, be intended to be handed over to the landless people for the purpose of cultivation. It is because of that reason that land has been defined as had been done under Section 3 (f) of the Act. If, therefore, out of 1629 B. 14K. 13 Ch., an area of 899B. 15K. 5 Ch. cannot be touched under the provisions of the Act, there remains only an area of 729 B 19K. 8Ch. The petitioner states that an area of 243 B. 6K. 8Ch. is under tea, that is to say, under special cultivation. We have also perused the original draft statement and the area given in the petition is corroborated by what is mentioned in the draft statement.

The Government concedes, and it is not for us to decide, that double that area will be allowed by the Government to a grantee for special cultivation. The petitioner on that footing is entitled to hold 243B. 6K. 8Ch. + 486B. 13K. 0Ch., totalling an area of 729 B 19K. 8Ch., which even according to the Government's concession the petitioner is entitled to hold. There is, therefore, no jurisdiction of the State Government under the provisions of this Act to set in process the provisions of this Act with regard to the land covered by fishery and stone quarry as shown by the petitioner. The draft notification, therefore, stands quashed.

4. The application is accordingly allowed. We will, however, make no order as to costs.

P. Choudhuri and S. K. Goswami, for Appellants; N. M. Dam and A. R. Kalita, for Respondents.

GOSWAMI, C. J.— This second appeal is directed against the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge, Gauhati, reversing that of the Munsiff, who had dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

2. The plaintiff's case is that the land measuring 8 Bighas 3 Kathas 1 lessa covered by three different dags in three separate periodic pattas mentioned in the schedule to the plaint originally belonged to one Mania, husband of the plaintiff. After Mania's death, the name of his son Lakhiram Nath was mutated in place of his father by inheritance on 18th May, 1934. After Mania's death, the plaintiff took Akoluram Nath as her second husband and he went and lived with the plaintiff as a 'Chapania' (domesticated husband). Akolu was managing the property and it is alleged that without the knowledge of the plaintiff, he procured a registered sale deed on 10th April, 1934 from Lakhiram Nath conveying the land in suit in favour of Akolu and his uterine brother Pararam Nath (since dead), who was the father of the defendants 2, 3 & 4. The plaintiff was not aware of the mutation, nor about the sale. Akolu quarrelled with her and drove her away from the house on 16th January, 1959. Thereafter, on enquiry, she came to know about the alleged sale deed and instituted the present suit on 7th April, 1959. The plaintiff alleges that the sale deed is invalid and is also void for want of consideration. It is also alleged that the deed was procured by taking undue advantage of the minority of Lakhiram and is tainted with fraud. The plaintiff asserts that she was a victim of deception practised by Akolu. She has therefore prayed for declaration of right and title to the suit land and also for khas possession and other reliefs.

3. A joint written statement was filed by the defendants 1, 2, 3, 5 and 6. The defendant No. 4 neither appeared nor submitted any written statement and the suit proceeded ex parte against him. The defendants denied the plaintiff's claim in their written statement dated 17th April, 1960 and averred that the plaintiff's husband died 29 years back (that is to say, about 1931) and after his death, Lakhiram, who had already married during the life-time of his father, conveyed the suit land by a registered sale deed on 10th April, 1934 to defendant No. 1 and late Pararam for valuable consideration the former left for a place called Kalbari at Tamulpur with his wife and his mother, the plaintiff. Lakhiram died at Kalbari leaving no issue and his widow took a domesticated husband. The plaintiff, according to the defendants, is making a false claim in collusion with some of the defendants' enemies. The defendants have since been enjoying the possession of the land peacefully and got their names mutated in the revenue records. Akolu in his written statement denies that he lived with the plaintiff as domesticated husband. He also denies to have driven out the plaintiff from her house. It is asserted that Akolu had no connection with the plaintiff. The plaintiff never resided in her former husband's home. Neither Lakhiram Nath nor the plaintiff had any possession over the disputed land after its sale by Lakhiram Nath. The plaintiff's suit was therefore barred by limitation. The defendant also averred that the suit is bad for non-joinder of parties and particularly the non-joinder of the wife of late Pararam Nath.

4. The trial court framed the following issues:

(1) "Whether the sale deed dated 10-4-1934 executed by Lakhi Nath in favour of Akolu and another is void for want of consideration and proper execution.....?"

(2) Whether the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for declaration of title and for khas possession of the land in suit against the defendants?

(3) Whether the suit is bad for non-joinder of parties as alleged in the written statement?

(4) Whether the suit is barred by limitation?

(5) To what relief?

5. The trial court answered issue No. 1 in favour of the defendants and issue No. 2 also against the plaintiff. It did not answer issue Nos. 3 and 4, as these were not pressed and it accordingly dismissed the suit. The matter had come up in appeal before the Subordinate Judge once earlier and he disagreeing with the court decided both issues 1 and 2 in favour of the plaintiff. He also held that the suit was not bad for non-joinder of parties nor that it was barred by limitation. He therefore decreed the plaintiff's suit. The defendants preferred a second appeal to the High Court (S. A. No. 18 of 1965) against the decree of the Subordinate Judge and the Court set aside the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge and remanded the appeal "for disposal according to law, after considering all the matters which arise for decision in this case." Thereafter, the impugned judgment and decree were passed after remand by the learned Subordinate Judge decreeing the suit.

6. With regard to the first issue, the first appellate court held that the sale deed Ext. A was not duly executed by the vendor Lakhiram since neither there is the signature nor the thumb impression of Lakhiram indicating that he executed the document. The court found that the scribe of the document, D. W. 1 Udit Chandra Das, signed the name of Lakhiram on behalf of the latter, but there was no evidence of authority given by Lakhiram to Udit to sign his name in the sale deed. It therefore held that Udit signed the name of Lakhiram in the deed without any power or authority received from Lakhiram. The court held that the sale deed was void for want of proper execution and passing of consideration. Mr. P. Choudhuri, the learned counsel for the appellants, submits that the learned Subordinate Judge erred in law in holding that the sale deed was not properly executed by Lakhiramnath. He submits that since the document was registered, there is a presumption under the law that the same has been duly registered as well as duly executed. He relies upon section 60 of the Indian Registration Act. It is, however, well-settled that when execution of a document is being challenged the certificate of registration alone will not be sufficient proof of the due execution of the document. Registration does not dispense with the necessity of proof of execution when the same is denied. It is true that a sale deed is not required by law to be attested. Even then, proof of execution of a sale deed, when it is denied, will have to be furnished as in the case of any other document under Sec. 67 of the Evidence Act.

Mr. Choudhuri has drawn our attention to the endorsement of the Sub Registrar that the document was presented by Lakhiram and that Lakhiram had admitted execution of the same. When we examined the endorsements, we find that the document is stated to be presented by Lakhiram, who was not personally known to the Sub Registrar, but was identified by one Jaliram who has not been examined by the defendants. On the other hand, Udit (D. W. 1) in his examination in chief stated that he identified Lakhiram before the Sub Registrar, although when pressed in cross-examination he also stated that Jaliram identified the executant before the Sub Registrar. The learned counsel also relied upon the thumb impression of Lakhiram given before the Sub Registrar. This thumb impression again has been attested by no other person than Udit (Bakalam Udit Chandra Das). It is Udit who has attested even the thumb impression of Jaliram as well as Lakhiram even before the Sub Registrar. It is intriguing why, if Lakhiram could put his thumb impression in front of the Sub Registrar, he was not able to put the same on the deed itself in token of execution and owning up the contents. On the other hand, we find on both pages of the sale deed the name of Lakhiram being put by Udit Chandra Das with a Bakalam.

There is a further disturbing feature on the body of the deed. Although the deed is said to have been written on 10th April, 1934, a date which has been clearly inserted by the writer therein, the Sub Registrar had registered it on 9th April, 1934. Mr. Choudhuri also read the evidence of Udit to us and he was the only witness examined to prove the execution of Ext. A. His evidence is very laconic. He merely stated that he wrote out the sale deed "executed by Lakhiramnath in favour of Akolu and Parar". He signed Lakhiram's name on his behalf. In cross-examination he stated that Lakhiram did not put his thumb impression on the document at the time of his execution. The document was executed in 1934. When Udit was examined in 1961 he gave his age as 45 years. He indeed stated that he was a petitioner for the last 25 years. If that is so, he was only a boy of 18 years of age when the sale deed was written.

Besides, we must bear it in mind that the sale deed was procured by the husband of the plaintiff from her son. We are, therefore, clearly of opinion that the learned Judge rightly appreciated the evidence of Udit and rejected his testimony. Execution of a document is not mere signing of it. It is a solemn act of the executant who must own up the recitals in the instrument and there must be clear evidence that he put his signature in a document after knowing fully its contents. Udit (D. W. 1) in this case even did not state that he had written the sale deed under instructions from Lakhiram, nor did he state that the document was read over to Lakhiram. There is not a little of evidence to show that Udit was authorised by Lakhiram to sign or execute the document on his behalf. That being the position, there is no execution of the sale deed in law. The circumstances, which we have noted above, together with the evidence of Udit clearly displace any prima facie presumption, which may, in absence of denial in an appropriate case, arise under the law. The endorsements of the Sub Registrar and certificate of registration under Section 60 may furnish some evidence. But, that evidence can always be rebutted and is not conclusive evidence, when execution of a document is under challenge. Mr. Choudhuri cited a decision of the Privy Council in (1906) 33 Ind. App. 60 (P. C.) (Gangamoyi Debi v. Troiluckhya Nath Chowdhry) and relied upon the following passage:

"The registration is a solemn act, to be performed in the presence of a competent official appointed to act as registrar, whose duty it is to attend the parties during the registration and see that the proper persons are present and are competent to act, and are identified to his satisfaction; and all things done before him in his official capacity and verified by his signature will be presumed to be done duly and in order."

In the Privy Council case the question of execution of a will by one Brojo Nath Chowdhry was in issue. Brojo Nath signed the will which was attested by several persons including his attending physician, who was examined as a witness in the case. It is also proved in that case that Brojo Nath was taken in a palanquin to the office of the Sub Registrar where he admitted execution of the document. This oral evidence was believed by the court and coupled with the presumption under Section 60 of the Registration Act held that the will was duly executed and properly attested. This decision, therefore, will not help the instant case where the document was not signed by the executant nor was the only witness namely, the writer of the document authorised to sign the name of the executant on the latter's behalf. Ext. A in this case is a document entirely written by Udit and even signed by him. Except the alleged thumb impression of Lakhiram on the reverse of the first page of the document before the Sub Registrar identified by one Jaliram who was not even examined in the case, there is nothing to attribute any act to Lakhiramnath. Neither Lakhiram nor Jaliram was known to the Sub Registrar, as is clear from the endorsements. In a case of this nature, the evidentiary value regarding execution of the document from the fact of such a registration is reduced to almost nil. The Privy Council decision will not at all come to the aid of the defendants in this gravely suspicious case. We are, therefore, clearly of opinion, in agreement with the learned Subordinate Judge, that the sale deed Ext. A has not been duly executed by Lakhiramnath. The first issue therefore, has been rightly decided by the court below.

7. Mr. Choudhuri next contends that at any rate the plaintiff had no title to the land in suit at any point of time. He submits that the plaintiff did not inherit the property of her husband Mania on the latter's death in 1930. She was only entitled to maintenance out of her husband's estate. Since her husband had died in 1930, she could not also inherit the property under Section 3 of the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937. Besides, on her own admission that she has taken a second husband, she lost even her right to maintenance or inheritance under Section 2 of the Hindu Widows' Re-marriage Act, 1856. He further submits that Bagari (D. W. 2) is the widow of Lakhiram. Since Lakhiram had inherited the property of Mania in 1930, on the former's death, Bagari will inherit her husband's property after Lakhiram's death. The defendants, however, in the written statement admitted that Lakhiram had no issue and his wife had taken a domesticated husband. At any rate, the defendants did not even enter any specific plea in their written statement that Bagari was entitled to inherit the land in suit and that the suit was bad for her non-joinder.

We are, therefore, not required to decide in this suit the issue, if any, that may be raised between Bagari and the plaintiff. We will, therefore, assume in this suit in view of the pleadings that Kamaleswari, who is not only the widow of Mania but also the mother of Lakhiram, is the only heir to inherit Lakhiram's estate after the latter's death. In this view of the matter, it is not necessary to consider the prior history of her right or title if any. If therefore Lakhiram had not conveyed the property by a duly executed sale deed, as we have already held above, the defendants cannot have any claim to the property under the sale deed and Kamaleswari alone will be entitled to a decree for declaration of title and khas possession.

8. Being faced with this position, Mr. Choudhuri contends very strenuously that the suit is barred by limitation. He submits that at no point of time the plaintiff was ever in possession of the property. The first appellate court held that the defendant No. 1 Akolu went and lived with the plaintiff as husband and wife. The plaintiff in her plaint stated that she was driven away sometime in January, 1959. In the course of her evidence, she stated that she lived with the defendant No. 1 Akolu for about ten years when she was driven out. She secured a decree for maintenance against Akolu. She further stated that thereafter she was taken back by Akolu. There is no denial of the maintenance decree by Akolu, nor the fact of her being taken back by Akolu after once she had been driven out. It is, therefore, clear that possession of the defendant Akolu will be possession on behalf of the plaintiff, the relationship being that of husband and wife. Besides, we do not find in the written statement any clear statement of adverse possession in order that the wife's title to the property can be extinguished by the husband's adverse possession. Very strict proof of open and hostile possession by the husband from a certain definite point of time will be necessary. No case of adverse possession of that nature was at all pleaded in the written statement and none was established in the evidence produced in the case. We do not also give much importance to Ext. 'C' relied upon by the learned counsel showing the entries of mutations at a time when Akolu as the husband of the plaintiff was, in fact, managing the property, enjoying then her complete confidence. The learned Subordinate Judge was, therefore, clearly justified in holding that the suit was not barred under Article 144 or Article 142 of the Limitation Act. The second and the fourth issues have, therefore, been correctly decided by the learned Subordinate Judge.

9. With regard to Issue No. 3, Mr. Choudhuri has rightly not pressed it even in view of paragraph 7 of the written statement. No case is made out that any necessary party has been left out in this suit.

10. In the result, the appeal fails and is dismissed. We will, however, make no order as to costs.

D. K. SEN, J. :— 11. I agree.
Appeal dismissed.

Banikanta Sarma, Petitioner v. The State of Assam and others, Respondents.

Civil Rule No. 365 of 1970, D/- 27-7-1971.

Panchayats — Assam Panchayat Act (24 of 1959) Section 27(3) Second Proviso — Power of the State Government to suspend a president pending his removal under Section 27(3) — It is not necessary that before the order of suspension is passed, there should exist an order of disqualification of the president.

(Para 6)

At that stage, all that is necessary on which the Government has to arrive at its satisfaction for the purpose of suspending pending removal is that there are grounds on which action could be taken for disqualification. This power reserved to the Government is undoubtedly an extraordinary power and the only limitation is that Governments' satisfaction is to be based on the grounds mentioned in the second proviso. If however Government does decide to suspend a President pending removal and the grounds in subsection (2) exist, the exercise of power by the Government under the second proviso is not open to question.

(Para 6)

K. Lahiri and D. N. Choudhury, for Petitioner; K. Sarma, for Respondents.

GOSWAMI, C. J.:— This application under Article 226 of the Constitution is directed against an order of the Government of 18th April 1970 suspending the petitioner who was the President of Baranaddi Gaon Panchayat at the material time, pending his removal from the office.

2. The petitioner was elected President on 15th of July 1968. When he took over charge one Prafulla Chandra Sarma was the Secretary of the Gaon Panchayat who was appointed temporarily by the Gaon Panchayat on 6th March 1966 and permanently on 23rd August 1967, in place of Ghanashyam Sarma who had taken leave with effect from 22nd November 1965 for more than a year on account of his suffering from tuberculosis. It appears from the records that Ghanashyam also was appointed by the Gaon Panchayat on a temporary basis on 8th March 1960 (Annexure 'I' to the application). It is said that Ghanashyam was cured and he desired to rejoin his post, but was not allowed by the Panchayat to do so. As a matter of fact, an order was passed by the Executive Magistrate, Nalbari on 11th April 1967 asking the President to allow Ghanashyam to join his post. The Sub-divisional Officer, Nalbari also in his letter to the President dated 15th May 1968 directed the President to "discharge the newly appointed Secretary Shri Prafulla Sarma and allow the former Secretary to join in his original post" (Vide Annexures 'E' and 'F' to the counter-affidavit). The President, who was at that time one Rameswar Sarma, on receipt of this Sub-divisional Officer's letter submitted his resignation by his letter dated 3rd June 1968 (Annexure 'F'). As a matter of fact, Rameswar Sarma had already written on 23rd of May 1968 requesting the Sub-divisional Officer to accept his resignation and to relieve him of the responsibilities (Annexure 'G'). It appears that the resignation was accepted, which led ultimately to the election of the petitioner as President on 15th July 1968, as already noticed. It is in this background that the petitioner received the letter dated 27th August, 1968 (Annexure 'H'), by which he was asked by the Sub-divisional Officer "to allow Shri Ghanashyam Sarma to join his duty within 8 days from the date of receipt of this letter. Otherwise you are hereby asked to show cause within 7 days why action will not be taken according to the provision of the Assam Panchayat Act." The petitioner wrote to Ghanashyam Sarma on 27th July 1968 (Annexure 'I') with copy to the Subdivisional Officer informing him that "the Gaon Panchayat has no authority to appoint the G. P. Secretary under Section 13 of Assam Panchayat Act, 1959 as amended in 1964. In obedience to the A. P. Act, you could not be reappointed". The matter was also discussed in the meeting of the Gaon Panchayat held on 29th October, 1968 and the second resolution on the subject may be quoted in extenso: (Annexure 'J').

"Today's meeting opined that the Govt. letter in connection with discharge and appointment of G. P. Secretary was discussed in the proceeding (sic) meeting and the President was authorised verbally to communicate with Govt. in this respect. Now it is learnt that grants to Gaon Panchayat have been stopped for the Secretary affairs. The former Gaon Panchayat legally appointed Shri Prafulla Sarma as Secretary and he is serving continuously and smoothly since 2 years 6 months back and the Gaon Panchayat has granted him increments and the same has been incorporated in annual budget. Today's meeting regret at the direction of the Govt. to discharge the Secretary who is serving for the last 2 years 6 months.

This meeting request the State Government to confirm the appointment of Shri Prafulla Sarma as Secretary of the Gaon Panchayat. Today's meeting authorise the President to make all correspondence in this respect.

"Amongst the members present Shri Khagen Deka and Shri Prasanna Kumar Deka opposed the resolution. By the decision of the majority it was passed." The Subdivisional Officer reacted to this resolution by his letter dated 8th November 1968. (Annexure K) to the President, the relevant portion of which may be quoted:

"With reference to the Resolution No. 2 you are hereby informed that the G. P. has no power to appoint the G. P. Secretary as per provision of the Amended Act. Hence the 2nd resolution of the G. P. meeting held on 29-10-68 has been hereby declared illegal according to the Section 138 (1) of the A. P. Act, as the resolution has been taken in contravention of the Act...."

Then again, on 21st December 1968, the Gaon Panchayat passed another resolution (Annexure L), which may also be quoted in extenso:

"To-day's meeting, after discussing all aspects of income and progress of the G. P. finds that the total annual income of the G. P. does not exceed Rs. 1400.00 from the share of land revenue, local rate and sale proceed of pounds. On the other hand, as per direction of the Govt. from the 1st July of 1967, the Panchayat are to pay Rs. 100.00 per month as pay of the Secretary. Under the circumstances, the Panchayat works have been greatly hampered. Therefore, the meeting of the G. P. today unanimously resolved keeping in mind the financial condition of the G. P., that the Panchayat be run without the Secretary. The President will himself conduct the business of the G. P. under such conditions. The President is empowered to conduct the function of the G. P. by paying allowance according to need. The President is hereby asked to send copy of this resolution to the S. D.

O. Nalbari for necessary action and approved (sic).

The Subdivisional Officer replied to this resolution by his letter dated 4th February 1969 to the President (Annexure M) as follows:

"This action of the G. P. cannot be considered as the proper reply of this office letter dated 8.11.68. As this is merely a resolution of the G. P. the resolution of the Panchayat may be approved provided you act according to our letter mentioned above."

This letter therefore refers back to Annexure 'K' whereby it was pointed out by the Subdivisional officer that the Gaon Panchayat had no power to appoint the Secretary.

3. The above is the background in which the petitioner was asked by the Government on 22nd March 1969 (Annexure VII) to show cause why "you should not be removed from the office of the President under Sub-section (3) of Section 27 of the Assam Panchayat Act, 1959 (Assam Act XXIV of 1959) for wilful negligence in the discharge of your duties on the following charges:

1. You appointed one Shri Prafulla Sarma as Secretary of the Barnadi Gaon Panchayat in violation of Section 13 of the Assam Panchayat Act, 1959 while the existing Secretary of the said Gaon Panchayat was on leave.

2. You did not obey the orders of the Sub Divisional Officer Nalbari issued in this connection under his letter No. (1) DKNPI-1/67/91-94 dated 11-4-67

(2) DKNP. 1-12/68/2534 dated 15.5.68

(3) DKNP. 1-12/68/2748 dated 28.5.68 and

(4) DKNP. 1-12/68/4637 dated 27.8.68.

Thus you have made yourself liable to the charges of wilful neglect in the discharge of your duties within the meaning of Section 27 (2) (ii) of the Assam Panchayat Act, 1959."

The Subdivisional Planning Officer, Nalbari was asked to receive the petitioner's explanation and to hold an enquiry. The petitioner in his explanation to the charge dated 19th April 1969 (Annexure VIII) pointed out that he never wilfully neglected in discharging his duties as President of the Barnadi Gaon Panchayat and that Prafulla Sharma was not appointed as Secretary during his presidentship and was appointed three years earlier during the presidentship of Rameswar Sarma. It was then explained that the charge of violation of Section 13 was not tenable against him. The petitioner also pointed out there that the first three letters referred to in charge no. 2 were prior to his assumption of office as President. With regard to the fourth letter which was received by him, he placed the same before the meeting of the Gaon Panchayat and the Gaon Panchayat passed several resolutions on the subject, to which attention was drawn. The petitioner therefore represented that he was not liable for any of the charges.

4. The enquiry officer communicated his findings to the Government on 23rd May 1969 (Annexure N) with the following conclusion:

"In conclusion it is a fact that the present President has also refused to allow the lawful Secretary Shri Ghanashyam Sarma to resume his duty after his leave and allowed Shri Prafulla Sarma to act as Secretary though there does not occur a vacancy. Hence the President Shri Banikanta Sarma has violated Section 13 of the A. P. Act and he is guilty of misconduct and wilful negligence in the discharge of his duties.

I therefore suggest that Shri Banikanta Sarma President Barnaddi G. P. may be disqualified under Section 27 (2) (i) (ii) (iii) of the A. P. Act, 1959 as amended up to 24th December 1964."

The Government also on 25th September, 1969 (Annexure O) instructed the petitioner "to relieve Sri Prafulla Sarma from duties immediately and allow Shri Ghanashyam Sarma the original incumbent to re-join his duties as Gaon Panchayat Secretary with immediate effect." Ultimately since the President backed by the resolutions of the Gaon Panchayat did not comply with the direction of the State Government, the impugned order dated 18th April 1970 was passed.

5. From the above recitals of the events, the whole episode discloses a showdown between the Subdivisional Officer on the one hand and the Gaon Panchayat on the other. We are unable to find from the records whether Ghanashyam was at any stage permanently appointed by the appropriate authority. He is only shown as a temporary employee whereas Prafulla Sarma was appointed permanently by the Gaon Panchayat. At the material time of his permanent appointment, the State Government was the competent authority to appoint the Secretary. It is, however, pointed out that since the appointment was by a resolution of the Panchayat which was forwarded to the authorities and the appointment was not disapproved and even budgetary provision was made for the appointment, although initially the appointment was made by the resolution of the Gaon Panchayat it can be considered as being ratified by the appropriate authority. We are not required to consider these aspects in this application with regard to the mutual rights of the two appointees.

6. The only questions which are canvassed before us in this proceeding are with regard to the charge which has been framed and the suspension order pending removal. We will take the suspension order first for consideration. The petitioner was suspended pending his removal under the second proviso to sub-section (3) of Section 27. It is submitted by the learned counsel appearing on behalf of the respondents that the charge is also under Section 27 (2) (ii) for wilful neglect in the discharge of his duties. We may read the provision under which the order of suspension has been made:

"27. (3) A President who immediately ceases to hold office according to the provisions of sub-section (1)(a) and (c) or is disqualified by the State Government according to the provisions of Sub-section (2) shall be removed in the manner prescribed:

Provided that no such person as aforesaid shall be removed until he has been given a reasonable opportunity of showing cause against the action proposed to be taken against him.

Provided further that notwithstanding anything contained in this sub-section, the State Government may, at any time, suspend a President pending his removal under this Sub-section if his continuance in office is considered inadvisable by the State Government on any of the grounds for which he may be disqualified under sub-section (2) of this section or on the ground of public interest."

It is contended by Mr. Lahiri on behalf of the petitioner that the order of suspension is beyond the scope of the proviso. He submits that unless the Government had disqualified him earlier, it had no power to suspend under the proviso. He further submits that the words "pending his removal" clearly show that the question of suspension could be taken up only in a removal proceeding after the petitioner had been disqualified by the Government under Section 27 (2). It is admitted by the respondents that the petitioner had not been disqualified by the Government under Section 27(2). It is, however, submitted that the charge is a composite charge covering both the question of disqualification as well as removal of the petitioner for the offence he has committed, namely, wilful neglect in the discharge of his duties. A perusal of the proviso clearly brings to light the power of the State Government to suspend a President pending his removal under Sub-section (3) if his continuance in office is considered by the Government to be inadvisable on any of the grounds on which he may be disqualified under Sub-section (2) of Section 27 or on the ground of public interest. It is, therefore, clear that once the Government is of opinion that the continuance of the President in office is inadvisable on the grounds for which he may be disqualified and, in this case, for the offence of wilful neglect in the discharge of his duties (Section 27 (2) (ii)), it is not necessary that before the order of suspension is passed, there should exist an earlier order of disqualification of the President. At that stage, all that is necessary on which the Government has to arrive at its satisfaction for the purpose of suspending pending removal is that there are grounds on which action could be taken for disqualification. This power reserved to the Government is undoubtedly an extraordinary power and the only limitation is that Governments' satisfaction is to be based on the grounds mentioned in the second proviso. If, however, Government does decide to suspend a President pending removal and the grounds in subsection (2) exist, the exercise of power by the Government under the second proviso is not open to question. The submission of Mr. Lahiri therefore cannot be accepted.

7. This however will not solve the entire problem. It is next to be considered whether there was any jurisdiction of the Government to frame a charge on 22nd March 1969 against the President on the two counts set out above. The first charge cannot at all be levelled against the petitioner who had no occasion to appoint Sri Prafulla Sarma. If at all, the charge can be laid against the Panchayat, who by successive resolutions appointed him. With regard to the second charge, three letters clearly were not addressed to the petitioner and the only letter which he could at all be said to have disobeyed is the one dated 27th August 1968. Even this letter he was duty bound to place before the Panchayat and under Section 14 (11) he has to carry out the resolutions of that body. While therefore he placed the letter dated 27th August 1968 before the Panchayat and communicated the resolution of the Panchayat, as he did, stating the circumstances under which the order could not be complied with, he was only carrying out the duties enjoined upon him by the Act to mention one such under Section 14 (11). The second charge therefore, against the petitioner is on the face of it absolutely untenable under the law. No charge can be levelled against the petitioner by the Government when he was only carrying out the statutory duties imposed upon him under the Act. The impugned charge is therefore invalid and is hereby quashed. Since the suspension order was in pursuance of this charge, the order of suspension shall also cease to be in force and that order vacates itself.

8. In the result, the application is allowed. The impugned orders are quashed. The Rule is made absolute. The petitioner will be entitled to costs. Counsel's Fee: Rs. 100/-.

Motor Vehicles Act (1939), (as amended by Act 100 of 1956), Section 36 — State Government can alter the laden capacity of a vehicle in appropriate cases.

The State Government, with a constant eye to the margin of safety, is not left merely with the manufacturer's estimate of the weight carrying capacity of the vehicle and can raise or lower the figure in appropriate cases. While the manufacturer's certificate may furnish some basis, the power is reserved for the State Government with the approval of the Central Government to specify the safe laden weights once again in the light of technical knowledge, experience and other guide line mentioned in the Act and also to revise the same when necessary. P. Choudhuri, H. M. Goswami and J. K. Barua, for Petitioner; Dr. J. C. Medhi, Advocate General, Assam, and K. Sarma, for Respondents.

GOSWAMI, C. J.:— The petitioner in this Civil Rule is the owner of a 1948-Model Ford V-8 Motor Vehicle bearing Registration No. ASD-1353 and he has been holding a public carrier permit for this truck since 1954. Originally, the Manager, Lukwah Tea Estate was the owner of this vehicle and his registration certificate issued on 5th April 1949 shows unladen weight as 5600 lbs. and registered laden weight as 14,500 lbs. The payload is also shown as the difference between the two figures, namely 8,900 lbs. The petitioner purchased this vehicle from the original owner and the registration certificate with the identical particulars noted above was transferred to his name on 28th August 1953. The petitioner states that the principles to be followed for the purpose of calculating the amount of tax for the vehicle are to be found in the provisions of Assam Motor Vehicles Taxation Act, 1936 and the Rules made thereunder 'on the basis of authorised pay loads in respect of goods vehicles'. (Paragraph 5 of the petition). The Government of Assam published a notification dated 17th February, 1959, with the approval of the Central Government, classifying all transport vehicles other than motor cabs into two broad groups, namely (1) vehicles of 1952 and earlier models of all makes, and (2) vehicles of 1953 and later models of all makes, and specifying the maximum safe laden weights and axle weights at 112½ per cent and 125 per cent respectively of the gross vehicle weights and the maximum axle weights certified by the manufacturers of the vehicles for the aforesaid groups respectively. The notification is marked as Annexure 'AA' to the petition, and this is the impugned notification in the present proceeding.

2. The notification was made under Section 36 of the Motor Vehicles Act, as amended by Act 100 of 1956, which came into force on 15th January 1959. That section may be quoted:

"(1) Having regard to the number, nature and size of the tyres attached to the wheels of a transport vehicle, other than a motor cab, and its make and model and other relevant considerations, a State Government may, with the approval of the Central Government, by notification in the official Gazette, specify in relation to each make and model of a transport vehicle the maximum safe laden weight of such vehicle and the maximum safe axle weight of each axle of such vehicle.

(2) A registering authority, when registering a transport vehicle other than a motor cab, shall enter in the record of registration and shall also enter in the certificate of registration of the vehicle the following particulars, namely:

(a) the unladen weight of the vehicle;

(b) the number, nature and size of the tyres attached to each wheel;

(c) the registered laden weight of the vehicle and the registered axle weights pertaining to the several axles thereof; and

(d) if the vehicle is used or adapted to be used for the carriage of passengers solely or in addition to goods, the number of passengers for whom accommodation is provided;

and the owner of the vehicle shall have the same particulars exhibited in the prescribed manner on the vehicle.

(3) There shall not be entered in the certificate of registration of any such vehicle any laden weight of the vehicle or a registered axle weight of any of its axles different from that specified in the notification under sub-section (1) in relation to the make and model of the vehicle and to the number, nature and size of the tyres attached to its wheels:

Provided that where it appears to a State Government that heavier weights than those specified in the notification under sub-section (1) may be permitted in a particular locality for vehicles of a particular type, the State Government may, by order in the Official Gazette, direct that the provisions of this sub-section shall apply with such modifications as may be specified in the order.

(4) When by reason of any alteration in such vehicle, including an alteration in the number, nature or size of its tyres the registered laden weight of the vehicle or the registered axle weight of any of its axles no longer accords with the provisions of sub-section (3), the provisions of Section 32 shall apply and the registering authority shall enter in the certificate of registration of the vehicle revised registered weights which accord with the said sub-section.

(5) In order that the registered weight entered in the certificate of registration of a vehicle may be revised in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (3), the registering authority may require the owners of transport vehicle in accordance with such procedure as may be prescribed to produce the certificates of registration within such time as may be specified by the registering authority."

Sections 36 and 37 of the original Motor Vehicles Act, 1939 were replaced by this amended section and Section 37 together with VII Schedule were omitted by this amendment. The learned counsel for the petitioner does not dispute that the amended section is applicable in the present case. He, however, strenuously contends that the notification is foreign to Section 36 of the amended Act and has been made in colourable exercise of power under section 36. The learned counsel does not dispute the validity of Section 36. The impugned notification as noted earlier is made in exercise of the powers conferred by sub-section (1) of Section 36 with the approval of the Central Government. It is not denied that the approval of the Central Government was taken by the State Government in making this notification.

3. The only submission which is made by Mr. Choudhuri is that the objects and reasons of the Motor Vehicles Amendment Bill, 1955 show that,

"it is thus possible for a manufacturer to bid up as a "selling point", the certified weights to the limit of capacity of tyres, as somewhat liberally allowed in the Seventh Schedule.....It is therefore, now proposed that State Governments should be empowered to specify the maximum safe laden weight and axle weight in relation to any make or model of transport vehicle and that the registering authorities shall enter in the registration certificates the laden weight, etc. as specified by the State Government The amendments proposed are expected to serve as a check on the growing tendency to certify exaggerated weights, ignoring safety margins, and also to safeguard against the possibility of fixation of maximum permissible weights at an unwarrantable figure by merely fixing tyres of large sizes."

Relying upon these objects and reasons, Mr. Choudhuri strenuously contends that what is really sought to be now done by the impugned notification is to revise the pay-loads by stepping up the maximum safe laden weight and maximum safe axle weight only to enable the State Government to realise higher tax for the vehicles. This, according to the learned counsel, is against the very object and purpose of Section 36. The notification therefore is a fraud on that power.

4. It is true that the objects and reasons showed what Mr. Choudhuri has contended, but the objects and reasons are no safe-guide to construe the provisions of the statute when these are clear. The objects and reasons of a Bill reflect the views of the member introducing the same at the time of initiation of the Bill. In the history and procedure of law-making it is not unknown that an original Bill introduced sometimes assumes a different form after it goes through various stages of discussion and after several amendments may even be accepted by the mover of the Bill. What is crucial is the shape and form in which the Legislature finally accepts the Bill and passes it into law. The objects and reasons, therefore, cannot come to aid in construing the provisions of section 36, about which there is no ambiguity. The following observations of the Supreme Court in AIR 1952 SC 369, (Aswini Kumar v. Arabinda Bosa) at p. 378 are apposite in this context:

"As regards the propriety of the reference to the Statement of Objects and Reasons, it must be remembered that it seeks only to explain what reasons induced the mover to introduce the Bill in the house and what objects he sought to achieve. But those objects and reasons may or may not correspond to the objective which the majority of members had in view when they passed it into law. The Bill may have undergone radical changes during its passage through the House or Houses, and there is no guarantee that the reasons which led to its introduction and the objects thereby sought to be achieved have remained the same throughout till the Bill emerges from the House as an Act of the Legislature, for they do not form part of the Bill and are not voted upon by the members. We therefore, consider that the Statement of objects and reasons appended to the Bill should be ruled out as an aid to the construction of a statute." (Paragraph 32)

It appears from a perusal of the provisions of Section 36 that the focus is on the margin of safety of the vehicle carrying load. While the manufacturer's certificate may furnish some basis, the power is reserved for the State Government with the approval of the Central Government to specify the safe laden weights once again in the light of technical knowledge, experience and other guideline mentioned in the Act and also to revise the same when necessary. The State Government, with a constant eye to the margin of safety, is not left merely with the manufacturer's estimate of the weight carrying capacity of the vehicle and can raise or lower the figure in appropriate cases. There is, therefore, no foundation for the objection that the State Government cannot in a given case raise the laden capacity of a vehicle as has been done in the present case. It is significant to note that in the amended section, the word 'safe' has been introduced in Section 36 (1), qualifying 'laden and axle weight' of a vehicle.

We are, therefore, clearly of opinion that the impugned notification is not open to any legal objection and there is no colourable exercise of power by the State Government in making the same.

We are not concerned in the present case with the Assam Motor Vehicles Taxation Act, 1936 providing for imposition of tax on motor vehicles.

5. Mr. Choudhuri drew our attention to a decision of the Rajasthan High Court in AIR 1965 Raj 175, Ghevarchand v. State of Rajasthan. In that decision, the petitioners sought to restrain the State Government from levying or realising any increase of additional tax under the Rajasthan Motor Vehicles Taxation Act, 1951 in excess of what is properly leviable according to the load carrying capacity as mentioned in the registration certificate and public carrier permits. The decision is therefore of not much assistance to the learned counsel in this case. We may observe that there is no assertion by the petitioner that the vehicle in question is unable to bear the burden of safe laden weight specified in the impugned notification.

6. In the result, the application is dismissed. We will, however, make no order as to costs.

AIR 1972 ASSAM & NAGALAND 25
(V 59 C 9)

P. K. GOSWAMI, C. J. AND M. C. PATHAK, J.

Sunahar Ali and others. Appellants v. On the death of Sarat Chandra Suklobaidya, his heirs Sythendra Suklobaidya and others. Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 5 of 1966, D/- 7-5-1971, from order of S. C. Datta Sub J. No. 2. Cachar at Silchar, D/- 16-7-1965.

Tenancy Laws — Assam Fixation of Ceiling on Land Holdings Act (1 of 1956) S. 23(b)—Suit by landlord possessing less than 10 bighas of land for eviction of tenant possessing more than ten bighas of land — Non-compliance with S. 27 and Rule 25 of the Rules by landlord before institution of suit — Suit is liable to be dismissed, (X-Ref:— Section 27). (X-Ref:— Tenancy Laws — Assam Fixation of Ceiling on Land Holdings Rules, 1957, Rule 25).

The landlord will have to comply with the provisions of Section 27 if he wants to resume any land for his personal cultivation under Section 23. It cannot be said that the provisions under Chapter VI of the Act can be called in aid by tenants only against landlord who has more than 150 bighas of land and whose excess land has been acquired under the provisions of the Act. (Paras 6; 7)

A. M. Mazumdar, for Appellants; N. M. Dam, for Respondents.

GOSWAMI, C. J.:— This second appeal is by the defendants having lost in both the courts below in a suit instituted by the plaintiff on 1st June, 1961 for their eviction from the agricultural lands measuring about 4 B. 16 K. 13 Ch. The plaintiff also got a decree for recovery of rent which is not at all disputed by the defendants.

2. The plaintiff's case is that the defendants held the suit land as his tenants by executing a kabuliat on 11th February, 1953 for a period of three years and thereafter they were holding over. A rent suit was earlier instituted by the plaintiff against the defendants for recovery of rent and that was decreed. The plaintiff wants khas possession of the suit land which is adjacent to his homestead land and he claims that it is necessary for his own use. The defendants admitted the tenancy, but pleaded that they were tenants since long before 1953 for about 30 years in the case of R. S. Patta No. 14 and for about 12 or 13 years in case of R. S. Patta No. 20. Hence they acquired occupancy right over the suit land and are not liable for eviction.

3. The court below held that the notice of eviction was valid and that is not challenged before us. It found that the defendants were tenants since only 11th February 1953 on the strength of the kabuliat. Hence it also held that the defendants did not acquire occupancy right over the suit land. It further held that the plaintiff required the land for his own use. The court also found that the plaintiff had less than 100 bighas of land and the defendants had more than 10 bighas under their own cultivation. On the two last findings of fact the court held that Section 23 of the Assam Fixation of Ceiling on Land Holdings Act, 1956 (Assam Act I of 1957) hereinafter called the 'Ceiling Act', is no bar to the eviction of the defendants from the suit land.

4. The principal point which is canvassed before us by Mr. Mazumdar the learned counsel for the appellants, is that the learned court below erred in passing a decree of eviction in view of the provisions of Section 23(b) of the Ceiling Act. We may therefore turn to the material provisions of the Act :
Section 4 (1) :

"Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in any law, custom or agreement no person shall be entitled to hold as owner or tenant, lands, which exceed the limit of 150 bighas in the aggregate:

x x x x x x

Section 5:

"Any person who, on the date of commencement of this Act holds as owner or tenant lands, which in the aggregate, exceed the limit fixed under Section 4 above, shall within the prescribed period, submit to the Collector a return giving the particulars of all his lands in the prescribed form and stating therein his selection of plot or plots of lands (not exceeding in the aggregate the limit fixed under Section 4 above) which he desires to retain under the provision of this Act." Under Section 6, the Collector can obtain information regarding lands through other agency. Under Section 7, the Collector has to prepare a draft statement and the procedure thereto and thereafter is detailed in the section. Under Section 8, the State Government acquires the excess lands by publishing in the official Gazette, and, under Section 9, on publication of the notification all rights, title and interests of the persons in such excess lands stand transferred to the Government free from encumbrances. Chapter III provides for disposal of excess land, and sections 16 to 18 deal with the manner of disposal of excess land. Chapter IV deals with excess land under annual lease and Chapter V with ceiling on future acquisition of land exceeding the ceiling fixed under the Act. Section 23, which occurs in Chapter VI with the title "Ceiling for resumption of land from tenants for personal cultivation by the landlord", reads as follows:

"Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in any law, usage or agreement, no landlord shall be entitled to terminate the tenancy of any person on the ground for his requiring the land for his personal cultivation except under the following circumstances, namely :—

(a) if the aggregate area of lands in actual occupation of a tenant does not exceed 10 bighas, then he shall not be ejected therefrom, until he has been provided with land of equivalent value in the locality :

(b) if the aggregate area of lands in actual occupation of a tenant exceeds 10 bighas, then the tenant shall not be ejected from a minimum area of 10 bighas as selected by him (tenant), until he has been provided with land of equivalent value in the locality but the landlord shall be entitled to resume for personal cultivation any area in excess of these 10 bighas. In no case, however, the aggregate area of lands so resumed from all his tenants taken together along with any other land already held under personal cultivation by the landlord on the date of resumption shall exceed an overall limit of 100 bighas;

(c) the right of resumption shall be exercisable by only those landlords whose income by cultivation of land is the principal source of income for their maintenance:

Provided that no tenancy of a tenant, who has acquired the right of occupancy under any law for the time being in force shall be terminated except under the provisions of that law:

x x x x'
Section 24 :

"No tenant shall, after the expiry of a period of 5 years from commencement of this Act, be ejected on the ground that the landlord requires the land for his personal cultivation under the provisions of Section 23 above. x x x x."

Section 27:

"(1) A landlord who wants to resume any land for personal cultivation under Section 23 shall give notice to his tenant to that effect and thereupon the tenant shall select the area under his occupation which he is entitled to retain under the provisions of this Act, and shall inform the landlord in writing within 30 days of the service of the notice.

(2) The landlord may then, out of the area not so selected by the tenant, choose the area which he is entitled to resume and may terminate the tenancy thereof after giving the tenant not less than 60 day's notice in writing.

(3) If no information as required under Sub-section (1) above is received by the landlord within 45 days of the service of the notice, the landlord shall be entitled to select in his discretion the land for resumption under Section 23, and to terminate the tenancy thereof after giving the tenant not less than 60 days' notice in writing.

(4) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in any law or contract, no tenant of the land which has not been selected and demarcated for resumption for personal cultivation by the landlord under the Sub-sections above and no tenant of the land which has been selected for resumption by the landlord but proceeding for ejection wherefrom has not been instituted within the period mentioned in Section 24 of this Act shall be ejected except on the grounds mentioned below and after giving at least 30 days' notice in writing—

(a) that he has done any act which is destructive or permanently injurious to the land and failed to repair the damage within 90 days of the service of the notice given by the landlord; or

(b) that he has failed to pay the rent lawfully due to the landlord within 90 days of its becoming due; or

(c) that he has kept the land fallow for two consecutive years without any reasonable ground."

5. The Ceiling Act came into force on 15th February, 1958 and the suit being instituted in 1961 the bar of Section 24 is not attracted. On the finding of the court below, the defendants had more than 10 bighas of cultivable land in their possession and the plaintiff had less than 100 bighas of such land in his possession. The Ceiling Act has been passed to make provision for imposition of limits on the amount of land that may be held by a person, and, after acquisition of the land in excess of the ceiling fixed by the Act, to make equitable distribution of the same under the provisions of the Act. The Act allows the landlord to possess land within the limit of the ceiling fixed. It also protects the tenant from eviction from an area of 10 bighas or less of cultivable land in his possession. Unless such a protection is given to tenants, the entire object behind the provisions of the Ceiling Act will be frustrated. Chapter VI, which opens with Section 23, therefore contains salutary provisions in furtherance of the avowed object underlying this Act for putting a ceiling even for resumption of land from tenants for personal cultivation by the landlord.

6. It is contended on behalf of the respondents that the provisions under Chapter VI of the Act can be called in aid by tenants only against landlord who has more than 150 bighas of land and whose excess land has been acquired under the provisions of this Act. This submission seemed to have been accepted by one of us (Pathak, J.) in an unreported ed decision of this Court in Second Appeal No. 3 of 1965 disposed of on 15th September 1967 but, later on, his Lordship felt some doubt about the matter and referred this appeal to a Division Bench and that is how it has come before us. We have now given our anxious consideration to the entire matter and come to the conclusion that the landlord will have to comply with the provisions of Sec. 27 if he wants to resume any land for his personal cultivation under Section 23. It is difficult to introduce any limitation suggested by the learned counsel for the respondents in the definition clause of landlord in view of the unalloyed definition of 'landlord' in the Act, and also in view of the integrated scheme and objects underlying the entire provisions of the Act. Under Section 27 (1), the tenant shall select the area of 10 bighas or less under his occupation and has to inform the landlord in writing within 30 days of the service of notice of termination of tenancy. Chapter VI lays down certain limitations upon the landlord and also some pre-conditions before he is entitled to eject a tenant from excess land. Under Section 27 (4), however, the tenant can still be ejected after giving at least 30 days' notice in writing if he commits any one of the lapses mentioned in (a) to (c) of that sub-section.

We may also observe that Rule 25 of the Assam Fixation of Ceiling on Land Holdings Rules, 1957 Lays down a procedure for resumption of land from tenant by landlord for personal cultivation under Section 23 of the Act. He has to make an application to the Civil Court having territorial jurisdiction over the land and it will dispose of the application in the manner of a suit for possession of immovable property under the Code of Civil Procedure. The order of ejection shall be carried out in accordance with the provisions of order XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The landlord, therefore, after the passing of the Ceiling Act, has to comply with the provisions of the Act and the Rules, if he wants to evict tenant from agricultural land. Under Section 23(3), the right of resumption by landlord for personal cultivation shall be exercisable by only those landlords whose income by cultivation of land is the principal source of income for their maintenance. Under the proviso to that sub-section, the rights of occupancy acquired under other laws are protected in accordance with the provisions of those laws. The provisions of the Ceiling Act therefore are not in derogation of the rights which have already been conferred upon tenants under other laws, but only supplemental to such provisions. These laws are under a class of welfare legislation and have to be viewed without however straining the language of the provisions, in defence of the rights of the tenants conferred by them.

7. Since, in the instant case, the plaintiff has not complied with the provisions under Chapter VI of the Act and Rule 25 of the Rules mentioned above and since it has not been shown that the provisions of Section 27 of the Act have been complied with by the plaintiff before institution of the suit, the suit is liable to be dismissed for non-compliance of the provisions of the Act and Rule 25.

8. In the result, the judgment and decree of the court below are set aside and the plaintiff's suit stands dismissed. The appeal is allowed. We will, however, make no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

K. Majumdar, for Appellant; S. K. Goswami, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT:— This appeal is from the judgment and decree passed by the Assistant District Judge No. 1 at Gauhati.

2. The plaintiff brought the suit for declaration of his occupancy right and for khas possession of the disputed land by evicting defendant No. 1, the principal defendant. The plaintiff's case briefly is that the lands of the suit patta belonged to Madhab Temple of Hajo and the lands were in occupation of one late Jagyaram as occupancy tenant. Jagyaram died leaving three sons who inherited the lands in equal shares. Thereafter Nidhiram, one of the sons of Jagyaram, sold his share to the plaintiff for Rs. 200/-. A dispute regarding possession arose and there was a proceeding under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code in respect of the suit land and the said proceeding terminated against the plaintiff. Hence the plaintiff brought the suit for declaration of his occupancy right and recovery of Khas possession in respect of $\frac{1}{2}$ share of the land of the suit dag.

3. The principal defendant resisted the suit. He admitted that the land under the suit dag belonged to Madhab Temple of Hajo and his father was an occupancy tenant in respect thereof. His case is that the land under the suit dag was not divided amongst the three sons of Jagyaram as alleged by the plaintiff but the principal defendant got the entire area of 3B, 2K, 7 Lechas of the suit dag in his exclusive share and possession according to family arrangement on partition and therefore his brother Nidhiram had no right to sell the suit land at all. He further alleged that the sale deed in question was fraudulent and that the suit was bad for non-joinder of necessary parties.

4. Several issues were framed by the learned Munsiff on the pleadings of the parties and issue No. 4 was to the following effect:—

"Whether the plaintiff's suit is barred under Article 47 of Schedule I of the Indian Limitation Act of 1908?"

5. On consideration of the evidence on record learned Munsiff found that the suit was barred under Article 47 (Contd. on Col. 2)

"Description of suit.

By any person bound by an order respecting the possession of immoveable property made under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (V of 1898), or the Mamlatdars' Courts Act, 1906 (Bom. II of 1906), or by any one claiming under such person, to recover the property comprised in such order.

9. A suit for recovery of the property comprised in a proceeding under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code by a party who is bound by the order under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, will have to be brought within three years from the date of the final order passed in the proceeding under Sec. 145, Criminal Procedure Code. If the suit is filed beyond three years, it will be hit by this article and barred by limitation. This view is in accordance with the decision in Ambika Prasad Thakur v. Ram Ekbal Rai, AIR 1966 SC 605. In the circumstances I hold that the instant suit of Schedule I of the Limitation Act. Consequently he dismissed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal the learned Assistant District Judge found that the suit was not barred under Article 47. He however found that the suit was bad for non-joinder of necessary parties and since the suit might not be dismissed on that ground he remanded the suit for retrial.

6. Mr. K. Majumdar, the learned counsel appearing for the appellant submits that the learned Assistant District Judge was wrong in his finding that the suit was not barred by Article 47, Schedule I of the Limitation Act. Mr. S. K. Goswami, the learned counsel for the respondents on the other hand submits that the learned Assistant District Judge correctly decided that the suit was not barred by limitation.

7. The admitted position is that there was a proceeding under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code between the plaintiff and the principal defendant in respect of the suit land. The proceeding under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code was initiated at the instance of the plaintiff and the final order in the proceeding under Section 145 was passed on 6-1-58 declaring possession in favour of the principal defendant Mahendra Chandra Malakar. The present suit was filed on 14th July 1961. It is therefore very clear that the suit was filed beyond three years from 6-1-58, the date of final order in the proceeding under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The present suit has been filed for khas possession of the same land which was the subject matter of the proceeding under Section 145, Criminal Procedure Code on declaration of occupancy right.

8. Article 47, Schedule I of the Limitation Act reads as follows:—

Period of limitation	Time from which period begins to run.
Three years.	The date of the final order in the case.

is barred under Article 47, Schedule I to the Limitation Act. The finding of the learned Assistant District Judge regarding issue No. 4 is therefore set aside. That being the position the plaintiff's suit must fail.

10. In the result the judgment and decree of the learned Assistant District Judge are set aside and the plaintiff's suit stands dismissed. The appeal is allowed but in view of the facts and circumstances of the case I make no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

AIR 1972 ASSAM & NAGALAND 29
(V 59 C 11)

P. K. GOSWAMI, C. J. AND D. M. SEN, J.

Sawkat Ali, Plaintiff, Appellant v. The Superintendent of Police, Sibsagar, Defendant, Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 150 of 1967, D/- 12-2-1971, from order of S. C. Datta, Sub. J., U. A. D. Jorhat; D/- 17-3-1967.

Civil P. C. (1908), Section 80 read with Order 7 Rule 11(d) — Plea as to waiver of notice under Section 80 in plaint — Court has no power to reject plaint under Order 7 Rule 11(d) straightway — Court has to try issue of waiver if denied by defendant in written statement.

Though Section 80 is mandatory the right given thereunder being for the benefit of the defendant Government or the public officer concerned can be waived expressly or impliedly by conduct. Since service of notice under S. 80, is a condition precedent for the institution of a suit against the Government or a public officer, the cause of action for the institution of the suit will include even the service of such a notice and the plaint shall state that fact. If there is no mention of the fact of service of a notice and, in fact, no notice has been served and the plaint does not contain a plea of waiver of the notice on the part of the Government or the public officer concerned the plaint in that case may be straightway rejected under O. VII, R. 11(d). But when the plaintiff with the full knowledge of his obligation under Section 80 avers that service of notice has been waived by the defendant, he should have an opportunity to establish this fact if the defendant denies the waiver by filing a written statement. B. Islam, for Appellant; T. N. Singh, for Respondent.

GOSWAMI, C. J.:— This second appeal is directed against the judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge, Jorhat, affirming those earlier of the learned Munsiff dismissing the plaintiff's suit.

2. The plaintiff's case in brief is that he is an Indian citizen. He states that he was born at Akbarpatty, Dibrugarh and lost his parents in his infancy. He was brought up by Yakub Hussain of Dibrugarh and at the age of ten, he migrated to Jorhat town. At first, he served under one Muktinath Bharali for seven years and then he opened his own shop of old motor tyres in 1958 and he was carrying on that business. On 28-1-1965 he was arrested by a police officer of the Jorhat Police Station and after detaining him at the Thana for a night was deported to East Pakistan on the following day on the allegation that he was a foreigner. He returned from Pakistan to Jorhat on 13-5-1965 and he was rearrested the following day and produced before the Additional District Magistrate who however enlarged him on bail till 28-5-1965. The plaintiff apprehends that he will again be deported on or after 28-5-1965 and in that predicament was compelled to institute this suit on 28-5-1965 for declaration that he is an Indian citizen and for permanent injunction, without serving a notice under Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure on the defendant, who in this case is the Superintendent of Police and Registration Officer. He states in paragraph 9 of his plaint as follows:

"That no notice under S. 80 C. P. C. has been issued to the defendant as he by his conduct has waived his right to receive such a notice. The issue of such a notice before the filing of the suit is not possible on the part of the plaintiff with his running the grave risk of being deported again before the notice matures and the suit is filed."

3. No written statement was filed by the defendant, who, however, took a preliminary objection that in absence of a notice under Section 80, C. P. C., the suit should be dismissed on this preliminary ground. After hearing the parties, the learned Munsiff rejected the plaint under Order VII, Rule 11(d), C. P. C. for non-compliance with the provisions of Section 80 C. P. C. In appeal the learned Subordinate Judge affirmed the decision. Hence this second appeal.

4. Mr. Baharul Islam the learned counsel for the plaintiff appellant, submits that both the Courts erred in law in this case in dismissing the suit on the ground of absence of notice under Section 80, C. P. C. According to the learned counsel, the defendant has waived the right to a notice under Section 80, C. P. C. In this case, Section 80 provides that no suit shall be instituted against the Government or a public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been delivered to the public officer or left at his office, stating the cause of action, the name, description and place of residence of the plaintiff and the relief which he claims; and the plaint shall contain a statement that such notice has been so delivered or left. Under the provisions of Order VII, Rule 11(d). C. P. C. relied upon by the trial court, the plaint shall be rejected where the suit appears from the statement in the plaint to be barred by any law. We have, therefore, to consider whether, in this case on the averments in the plaint the suit is liable to be dismissed in the absence of a notice under S. 80, C. P. C.

5. The Privy Council in AIR 1927 P. C. 176 = (54 Ind. App. 338) (Bhagchand v. Secy of State) has held:

"Section 80 is express, explicit and mandatory, and it admits of no implications or exceptions. A suit in which inter alia an injunction is prayed is still "a suit" within the words of the Section and to read any qualification into it is an encroachment on the function of legislation. This decision was noticed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in a later case in AIR 1947 P. C. 197 (Vellayan v. Govt. of Madras Province). There were two issues in the suit out of which the appeal came up for decision before the Privy Council:

"9 — (a) Whether the defendants have waived their right to a proper notice of suit?

9 — (b) Whether defendants are estopped from contending that no proper notice of suit was given to them "

Their Lordships observed in paragraph 12 as follows:

"Upon the first issue the decision of this Board in 54 Ind. App. 338 = (AIR 1927 P. C. 176) appears to be decisive. It was there said that Section 80 is express, explicit and mandatory and admits of no implications or exceptions. The question there was whether a suit, in which an injunction was claimed, was a "suit" within the section. This Board decided for the reason above briefly stated that it was. In the present case the question is whether, a notice having been given on behalf of one plaintiff stating his cause of action, his name, description and place of residence and the relief which he claims a suit can then be instituted by him and another. It is clear to their Lordships that it cannot. The section according to its plain meaning requires that there should be in the language of the High Court of Madras "identity of the person who issues the notice with the person who brings the suit. x x x To hold otherwise would be to admit an implication or exception for which there is no justification."

Dealing with the first question, their Lordships held as follows:

"In 54 Ind. App. 338 = (AIR 1927 PC 176) to which reference has already been made, no question of waiver arose. The observations of Lord Sumner in delivering the opinion of the Board were directed solely to the construction of the section and cannot in their Lordships' opinion be regarded as deciding that it is not competent for the authority, for whose benefit the right to notice is provided, to waive that right. There is no inconsistency between the propositions that the provisions of the section are mandatory and must be enforced by the Court and that they may be waived by the authority for whose benefit they are provided.

On the other hand, there appears to their Lordships to be no reason why the notice required to be given under Section 80, should not be waived if the authority concerned thinks fit to waive it. It is for his protection that notice is required. If in the particular case he does not require that protection and says so, he can lawfully waive his right." (Para 14)

6. It is therefore clear that when waiver is pleaded in the plaint, it is not permissible to reject the plaint relying upon Order VII Rule 11(d). C. P. C. It is true that section 80 is imperative and mandatory, but since it is for the benefit of the Government or the public officer concerned, the latter can, if they choose waive their right which is given to them by this provision. There is no legal bar against waiver of the right under Section 80. Since service of notice under Section 80, C. P. C. is a condition precedent for the institution of a suit against the Government or a public officer, the cause of action for the institution of the suit will include even the service of such a notice and the plaint shall state that fact. Since, however, if there is no mention of the fact of service of a notice and, in fact, no notice has been served and the plaint does not contain a plea of waiver of the notice on the part of the Government or the public officer concerned, the plaint in that case may be straightway rejected under Order VII, Rule 11(d). But, when the plaintiff, with the full knowledge of his obligation under Section 80, avers that service of notice has been waived by the defendant, he should have an opportunity to establish this fact if the defendant denies the waiver by filing a written statement.

7. 'Waiver' is defined in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 14 (Third Edition) at page 637 as follows:

"Waiver is the abandonment of a right, and is either express or implied from conduct.

Although there is no express waiver, the person entitled to the right may so conduct himself that it becomes inequitable to enforce it, and this is sometimes called an implied waiver....." It is, therefore, clear that waiver can be both express as well as implied. At any rate, this is a matter which has to be gone into by the court before which the plea is raised. In this case, the plaintiff has raised the plea of waiver of the notice under Section 80, C. P. C. by the defendant. It is for the defendant to admit or deny this averment when he files his written statement. Then an issue would be raised and the court, after taking evidence of both parties, if produced, and hearing both parties, will determine the issue. All that we say in this case is that mere absence of the service of notice will be sufficient to attract the provisions of Order VII, Rule 11 (d), C. P. C. if no waiver is pleaded by the plaintiff. If waiver is pleaded, the Court will have to give an opportunity to the plaintiff to establish it and if he fails to establish, the plea will be rejected only after the issue is decided against the plaintiff. In this case the courts below rejected the plea on the sole ground that there was no notice served on the defendant under Section 80, C. P. C. In view of the plea of waiver raised by the plaintiff, this order is clearly erroneous without a finding as to whether the plea has been established or not. The court will be free to come to its own independent conclusion in the matter after hearing the parties. Since, however, the suit is a long pending one, we direct the trial court to dispose of all the issues that may arise on the pleadings in the suit after the defendant files his written statement. We must, however, make it absolutely clear that we must not be understood to have expressed any opinion on the merits of the plea of waiver raised by the plaintiff.

8. In the result, we set aside the judgments and decrees of the courts below and remand the suit to the learned Munsiff for disposal in accordance with law and in the light of the observations made hereinabove. The appeal is allowed and the suit remanded accordingly. We, however, make no order as to costs.

D. M. SEN J.:— 9. I agree.
Case remanded.

Civil Rule No. 688 of 1969, D/- 8-9-1971.

(A) Limitation Act (1963), S. 14 (2) — A proceeding before certifying officer under S. 5, Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act (1946), is not a "civil proceeding". nor is the Labour Court exercising the power of appellate authority under S. 6 of that Act a Court" for the purpose of S. 14, Limitation Act — (X-Ref:— Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act (1946), Sections 5, 6 and 11). (Para 4)

The fact that under Section 11 of the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act every certifying officer and the appellate authority have all powers of a Civil Court for certain specified purpose will not convert them to a 'Court'; nor the fact that the matter was later agitated on the writ side of the High Court will make the proceeding before Labour Court "a civil proceeding in a Court." (Para 4)

(B) Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act (1946), S. 10 — Standing Orders are immutable for the first six months from the date on which they come into operation — However, employer or workman may apply to the certifying officer to have the Standing Orders modified after the said period. (Observations). (Para 6)

K. Lahiri and M. Sarma, for Petitioner; A. R. Barthakur, for Respondents.

GOSWAMI, C. J.:— This application under Art. 226 of the Constitution of India is directed against an order of the appellate authority under the Industrial Employment (Standing Orders) Act, 1946, hereinafter called 'the Act'.

2. The petitioner-company, which is an industrial establishment under the Act, submitted its draft Standing Orders to the certifying officer and the same, after certification, was sent to the parties on 2nd December, 1964. Respondent No. 1, representing the Union of the workers, preferred an appeal to the Labour Court, Gauhati, on 22nd December 1964 and the case was duly registered being No. 14 of 1964. After hearing the parties, the appeal was disposed of by the Labour Court on 29th January, 1966 in favour of the Union. The petitioner moved the High Court on 23rd March 1966 under Art. 226 of the Constitution against the order of the Labour Court and the petition was allowed on 21st November 1967 holding that the Labour Court had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal. The High Court observed:

"It is unfortunate that the respondents had misconceived their remedy by filing their appeal in a wrong forum under some mistaken impression."

Thereafter, on 6th December 1967, the respondent No. 1 preferred an appeal to the respondent No. 2, being the appellate authority under the Act, praying at the same time for condonation of the delay. The petitioner raised before the appellate authority a preliminary objection on the ground of limitation. The appeal under Section 6 of the Act is to be filed within thirty days from the date on which the copies of the Standing Orders are sent to the parties. Since, in this case, the certified Standing Orders were sent to the Union on 2nd December 1964, the appeal before the authority was clearly beyond time. It is common ground that if the period wherein the opposite party was successfully prosecuting his appeal before the Labour Court and later on resisting the writ petition before the High Court were excluded under Section 14 of the Limitation Act, the appeal before the appellate authority would be in time. The appellate authority, by excluding this period as a bona fide prosecution before a wrong court, admitted the appeal. Hence this writ application.

3. The point, therefore, that falls for consideration in this application is whether Section 14 of the Limitation Act can be invoked by the appellate authority.

4. Before we look at the provisions of the Act, we may quote Section 14 (2) of the Limitation Act, which is material for the present purpose:

"In computing the period of limitation for any application, the time during which the applicant has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceeding, whether in a court of first instance or of appeal or revision against the same party for the same relief shall be excluded, where such proceeding is prosecuted in good faith in a court which, from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature, is unable to entertain it."

Before we construe Section 14 (2), we have to see the nature of the proceeding, out of which the appeal arose. The appeal is against an order in a proceeding before a certifying officer under Section 5 of the Act. That proceeding is not a civil proceeding inasmuch as an order in such a proceeding does not relate at that stage to any civil rights of the parties as such, or to any infraction of such rights. The Act requires employers to precisely define the conditions of employment and to make the same known to workmen. The conditions are to be certified by a certifying officer under Section 5 (3) after hearing the parties and making appropriate orders, if any, under Section 5 (2) of the Act. The conditions for certification of Standing Orders are that provision has been made therein for every matter set out in the Schedule to the Act as applicable to the industrial establishment, the standing orders are otherwise in conformity with the provisions of the Act and that the provisions of the standing orders are fair or reasonable.

It is true that under Section 11 every certifying officer and appellate authority have all the powers of a civil court for certain specified purposes mentioned therein and shall be deemed to be a civil court for the purposes of Sections 480 and 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. This circumstance, by itself with nothing more, will not convert a certifying officer to a 'Court', nor the proceeding before it to a 'civil proceeding'. If, as we have held, the proceeding before the certifying officer is not a civil proceeding, it will not change its character when taken in appeal before the appellate authority, which, in this particular case, was taken to the Labour Court, and admittedly a wrong forum. Section 14 can be invoked only if the earlier proceeding had been a 'civil proceeding' and had been 'prosecuted in a court'. Section 14 (1) refers in terms to the 'period of limitation for any suit' and 'whether in a court of first instance or of appeal or revision.' These expressions clearly refer to a civil suit prosecuted in a civil court. When we come to Section 14 (2), the reference is to 'any application'. But the expression 'civil proceeding', 'whether in a court of first instance or of appeal or revision', and 'prosecuted in court' are repeated. When these expressions are used in the same section, it is difficult to give a different meaning to the word 'Court' and include a tribunal or a labour court with the trappings of a court within the term. In our opinion, the Labour Court, whether wrongly or rightly, exercising the power of the appellate authority under Section 6 of the Act, is not a 'court' for the purpose of Section 14 of the Limitation Act. If prosecution before the Labour Court was not in a 'civil proceeding', nor in a 'court', the fact that the matter was later agitated on the writ side of the High Court against the order of the Labour Court does not make the earlier proceedings before the Labour Court a civil proceeding in a court.

5. In the result, the appeal was clearly time-barred before the appellate authority and it had no power to admit the same by invoking Section 14 of the Limitation Act. The petition is allowed. The impugned order is quashed. We make no order as to costs.

6. We may, however, observe that under Section 10 of the Act, the standing orders are immutable for the first six months from the date on which these came into operation. But, there is no bar in the way of the employer or workmen in applying to the certifying officer to have the standing orders modified after the said period.

D. M. SEN, J.:— 7. I agree.

Application allowed.

Bombay High Court

AIR 1972 BOMBAY 1 (V 59 C 1)

MODY AND KAMAT, JJ.

Raja Bahadur Motilal (Bombay) Mills Ltd., Applicant v. Life Insurance Corporation of India and others, Respondents.

Appeal No. 155 of 1970, Sult No. 454 of 1949, D/- 5 and 9-3-1971.

(A) High Court Rules and Orders — Bombay High Court (Original Side) Rules (1957), R. 500-A — Deposit of twenty five per cent of purchase money at the time of sale unless "otherwise ordered" — There can be an implied order — (X-Ref:— Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 84).

(Para 15)

If the mortgagee-decree-holder is declared the purchaser and he has been granted liberty to bid and set-off, then even though there be no specific order permitting the set-off against the amount of the deposit of 25 per cent. required to be made under sub-rule (i) of R. 500-A of the Original Side Rules, he is entitled to set-off the amount decreed in his favour by the mortgage decree, to the extent of that decretal amount first against the said deposit of 25 per cent. and thereafter against the balance of his purchase price. AIR 1928 Bom 123, Rel. on.

(Para 26)

The conflicting decided cases on the question whether the provision for deposit of 25 per cent. under O. 21, R. 84 is mandatory referred to. The view taken by the Madras and Rajasthan Courts that the permission granted to a decree-holder in general terms to bid and set-off can be construed, depending on the circumstances of the case, by comparing the amount of the purchase price with the decretal amount due to the decree-holder purchaser, to include a right to set-off even against the deposit of 25 percent and that for the latter purpose there need not necessarily be a specific order permitting set off against the amount of the deposit of 25 per cent. relied upon. AIR 1954 SC 349, Explained; AIR 1959 Madh Pra 115, Distinguished; AIR 1966 Andh Pra 201, Dissented from; AIR 1956 Raj 18 & AIR 1931 Mad 103 & AIR 1935 Mad 893, Rel. on.

(Para 26)

(B) High Court Rules and Orders — Bombay High Court (Original Side) Rules (1957), R. 500-A — Deposit of purchase money — Mortgagee decree-holder allowed to bid and set-off — The practice to allow the amount of "estimated costs" incurred by the mortgagee for realising his mortgage security to be set-off — Not illegal.

The actual order for costs subsequent to the Decree Absolute for Sale is normally made by the Court at the time when the Court makes the order confirming the sale by ordering all proper costs incurred after the date of the Decree absolute for sale till and inclusive of the confirmation of sale to be tacked on to the mortgage claim and to be paid out of the net sale proceeds. But when the mortgagee decree-holder is given liberty to bid and set-off the question of set-off costs against the amount of the balance of 75 per cent. would arise prior to the time when the Court would consider the question of confirming the sale. In absence of any provision in the Original Side Rules providing for recovery of subsequent costs incurred in realising the mortgage security the practice followed by the Commissioner's office is to take a statement of account from the plaintiff-decree-holder, showing the different amounts for principal and interest as well as the estimated costs due under the decree and allow such amount of estimated costs to be set-off. This procedure is followed for the reason that the taxing of costs takes a considerable time after the sale is knocked down. It is quite possible that such estimated costs as are sought to be deducted by the decree-holder may be more or less. In order to safeguard the interest of all concerned, an undertaking is taken from the decree-holder on affidavit stating that if the taxed costs turn out to be less than the estimated costs included in the statement of account filed by him, the difference shall be deposited by him after the costs are taxed. Such a practice is not in any way repugnant to or inconsistent with any provision of law.

The effect of the practice is to determine the amount which is payable under sub-rule (ii) of R. 500-A as and by way of the balance of purchase price and it is only that amount so determined which is payable within thirty days and to the non-payment whereof within that time the provision of re-sale under sub-r. (iv) is attracted. In other words, the quantum or the amount to which sub-rule (ii) applies would by reason of the practice be the balance of the purchase price as otherwise ascertained reduced by the estimated amount of costs. The practice is, therefore, not repugnant to any provision contained in sub-rule (ii) or sub-rule (iv) of R. 500-A. (Para 39)

(C) High Court Rules and Orders — Bombay High Court (Original Side) Rules (1957), R. 500-A (ii) — Extension of time for deposit of balance of purchase money — Even in a proceeding taken out by the mortgagor, the mortgagee can if it is necessary, as and by way of defending against the relief asked for in that proceeding by the mortgagor request the court to extend the time. (Para 41)

(D) High Court Rules and Orders — Bombay High Court (Original Side) Rules (1957), R. 500-A — The discretion to extend time for deposit of balance of the purchase money, which R. 500-A vests in the Chambers Judge, is also available to the Court hearing an appeal against the order of the Chamber Judge. (Para 41)

(E) High Court Rules and Orders — Bombay High Court (Original Side) Rules (1957), R. 500-A — The time for payment of balance of the purchase money can be extended even after the expiry of the prescribed period of thirty days in view of the wide power conferred by R. 310 — (X-Ref:— Rule 310). MODY, J.: (5-3-1971) This is an appeal against the Order dated 2-11-1970 made by Mr. Justice Nain as Chamber Judge dismissing the appellant's Chamber Summons dated 12th October 1970, the reliefs prayed whereby we will set out a little later.

2. The appellant which was the owner of an immoveable property in Bombay, mortgaged that property in favour of the first respondent by an Indenture of Mortgage dated 20th April 1946. The second respondent, who has at all material times been a director of the appellant Mills guaranteed the said mortgage debt. Thereafter, the appellant created a second mortgage on that property in favour of the third respondent. The first respondent thereafter filed a suit, being suit No. 454 of 1950 in this court for realising the debt and the security under the said Mortgage making the appellant and respondents Nos. 2 and 3 as defendants to that suit. On the 9th of August 1949 a Preliminary Mortgage Decree was passed and thereafter on the 28th of June 1950 a Decree absolute for sale was passed. Under the decree absolute for sale liberty was given to the first respondent to bid and set off the purchase money against the debt declared due to it under the Mortgage Decree. Thereafter there followed eighteen infructuous auction sales. The nineteenth auction sale was held on the 11th of September 1970 where the first respondent's bid of Rs. 20,00,000/- was accepted by the Commissioner subject to the sanction of the court. Although the conditions under which the auction sale was held required a deposit being made of 25 per cent. of the purchase price, no deposit was made. The purchase price well exceeded the amount due to the first respondent under the Decree absolute for sale and the first respondent paid the amount of the excess to the Commissioner after retaining out of the said amount a sum of Rs. 75,000/- being its estimated costs of the suit and of the sale. The appellant thereafter took out the said Chamber summons praying that it may be declared that there was no sale in favour of the first respondent which in other words means that the sale was a nullity and that the said sale be set aside. Mr. Justice Nain dismissed that Chamber summons by his said Order dated 2nd November 1970. The appellant has hence appealed against that Order.

3. Before dealing with the rival contentions of the parties, it is necessary to first set out all the necessary facts in greater detail.

4. The Preliminary Mortgage Decree declares that on the date of that Decree there was payable by the appellant to the first respondent an aggregate sum of Rs. 11,44,617.75, grants to the appellant six months' time for redemption, makes a further declaration in respect of further interest till the date fixed for redemption, declares that there shall also be payable "the costs of the suit when taxed as between attorney and client and noted in the margin" thereof and simple interest on such costs at the rate of four per cent per annum from the date of the Decree till payment and then further declares the amount then due and payable to the third respondent under the Second Mortgage. That Decree also contains a decree against the second respondent for the amount mentioned in the Decree as payable under his guarantee to the first respondent.

5. No amount whatever having been paid in respect of the Preliminary Decree, the said Decree Absolute for sale was passed. Under that decree the first respondent was given liberty "to bid at the said sale and that in the event of the plaintiffs becoming the purchasers of the said immoveable property they be at liberty to set-off the amount of the purchase money against the amount due to them under the said consent Preliminary Mortgage Decree and "the costs hereinafter mentioned". The costs mentioned after the above clause were a sum of Rs. 220/- being the costs of the Notice of Motion for obtaining the said Decree absolute for sale. The said several auction sales were held subject to certain terms and conditions of sale. The eighteenth auction sale was held in September 1966 and condition No. 5 in respect of that sale provided as follows:

"The plaintiffs and the third defendants have been given liberty to bid. The purchaser other than the plaintiffs shall at the time of sale pay a deposit of twenty five per cent. of the amount of his purchase-money to the commissioner, otherwise the property shall be again immediately put up and re-sold on account and at the risk of the defaulting purchaser who shall be liable to make good any deficiency thereby caused but shall not be entitled to any excess in price obtained on such resale."

In respect of the next i.e., nineteenth, auction sale the said terms and conditions of sale were adopted but with certain changes made therein. So far as the said condition No. 5 is concerned, the only change was that the words "other than the plaintiffs" were omitted.

6. The said nineteenth auction sale was held on the 11th of September 1970 by the Commissioner of this Court. As is usual the Commissioner has made his Minutes as to what transpired at the said auction sale. The Minutes show that no outsider bidder at all was present at the said auction sale. On behalf of the first respondent a bid was given of Rupees 18,00,000/- but was later raised to Rupees 20,00,000/-. In the absence of any competing bid the fact that the bid of Rs. 18,00,000/-, was raised to Rupees 20,00,000/- shows from common experience that the Commissioner must have refused to accept the bid of Rs. 18,00,000/- as being below the reserve bid fixed for the auction. It may be stated here that in sales by auction by the Commissioner the reserve bid is fixed by the Commissioner, but when it is necessary to be reduced it is reduced by the Chamber Judge and all the reserve bids, whether fixed by the Commissioner or by the Chamber Judge, are never divulged. The Commissioner has recorded in his minutes that he accepted the bid subject to the sanction of the court and thereafter "No deposit is taken from the L. I. C. as the L. I. C. has been permitted by the Court to bid and set-off their claims against the sale price. The plaintiffs are directed to pay the balance of the purchase price after deducting the amount of set-off together with the amount of stamp duty payable on the conveyance to be executed or on the sale Certificate to be issued within 30 days." As recorded in the Minutes, the first respondent has not deposited the sum of Rs. 5,00,000/- being the 25 per cent. of its purchase price of Rs. 20,00,000/-.

7. Thereafter on 30th September 1970 the Attorneys for the first respondent addressed a letter to the Commissioner. The letter states that the amount due to the first respondent, as at the date of the sale for principal and interest was Rs. 16,13,163.21 and that in addition, a further amount would also be due to it for costs. It then states that the suit was of 1949 and considerable costs had been incurred, including the costs of eighteen auction sales, and that taxation of all such costs would take a long time and that therefore the first respondent roughly estimated the costs at Rupees 75,000/-. The letter then requests that the first respondent may be allowed to add the said estimated costs to the aforesaid sum of Rs. 16,13,163.21 making the total sum of Rs. 16,88,163.21. The letter then states that the costs would be got taxed or settled in due course and that if they exceeded the said sum of Rupees 75,000/- the first respondent would recover the excess amount from the commissioner from the amount to be deposited with him but in case the taxed costs were less than the estimated costs, the first respondent would make a further deposit of an additional sum and would give to the Commissioner an undertaking that in case the taxed costs were less than the said sum of Rs. 75,000/- it would pay to the Commissioner the balance. It contains a further statement about the amount of stamp duty which is not relevant to this appeal. The letter contains certain calculations and a statement that the amount payable by the first respondent to the Commissioner would be Rs. 5,00,556.79.

8. The first respondent thereafter filed before the Commissioner an affidavit dated 5th October 1970 of Bodhraj Bhandra, by the fourth paragraph whereof the first respondent gave an undertaking to pay to the Commissioner whatever balance may be found due and payable by it in respect of the said costs in case the said costs were found to be less than Rs. 75,000/- on taxation by the Taxing Master of this Court. Thereafter the first respondent through its Solicitor paid to the Commissioner the said sum of Rs. 5,00,556.79.

9. In support of the appellant's contention that the sale is no sale in law or that the sale should be set aside, Mr. Dhanuka, its learned counsel contended that under the relevant provisions of law, it is a mandatory requirement firstly, that the 25 per cent. of the purchase price must be deposited at the time of the sale and secondly that the whole balance of the purchase price must be paid to the Commissioner within thirty days from the date of the sale. He contended that the first respondent, however, did not make the said deposit of 25 per cent or any part thereof, nor did the first respondent pay the amount of Rs. 75 per cent balance in full, but deposited such amount after retaining the said sum of Rs. 75,000/-.

10. In support of his contention Mr. Dhanuka relied upon Rr. 500-A and 497 of the Rules of this Court applicable on its Original side, which rules are hereinafter referred to as "the Original Side Rules".

11. The said Rule 500-A provides as under:—

"500-A (i):— When immovable property is to be sold unless otherwise ordered or agreed to by the parties, not less than twenty five per cent of the purchase money shall be deposited with the Commissioner at the time of the sale.

(ii) The balance of the purchase-money, or so much thereof as may be payable by reason of any set-off to which the purchaser may be entitled, together with the amount of stamp-duty payable on the conveyance to be executed or on the sale certificate to be issued, shall unless otherwise ordered, be paid by the purchaser to the Commissioner within thirty days from the date of the sale. The Judge sitting in Chambers may for special reasons, extend the time for payment on such conditions as to payment of interest or otherwise as to the Judge may seem fit. If the Judge extends the time the provisions of Cl. (iv) shall not come into operation until the expiry of the extended time. (iii) in default of payment of the deposit mentioned in sub-rule (i) the bid of the person who would otherwise have been declared the purchaser shall be rejected and the property shall forthwith be resold. (iv) In default of payment of the amounts mentioned in sub-rule (ii) within the period prescribed therein, the deposit may, if the Judge thinks fit, after defraying the expenses of the sale, be forfeited to the Government, and the property shall be resold and the defaulting purchaser shall forfeit all claims to the property or to any part of the sum for which it may subsequently be sold. (v) Any deficiency of price which may arise on a resale by reason of the purchaser's default and all costs and expenses occasioned by such resale shall be recoverable from the defaulting purchaser under an order to be obtained from the Judge in Chambers. The Judge may direct the defaulting purchaser to pay interest at such rate from the date of default and on such amount as to the Judge may seem just."

12. The said Rule 497, in so far as it is material, provides that when immovable property is to be sold, the conditions shall be adapted to the state of the title to the said property and that the conditions of sale shall be in Form No. 151 or Form No. 152 as the case may be with variations as the circumstances of each case may require.

13. Mr. Dhanuka contended that under sub-rule (i) of the said Rule 500-A the 25 per cent. deposit must be made on the date of the sale "unless otherwise ordered or agreed to by the parties", but there was no such specific order "otherwise ordering" nor was there anything "otherwise agreed to by the parties." He pointed out that there was such a provision contained in the said old Condition No. 5 applicable to the eighteenth sale, but that in the revised condition No. 5 applicable to the last sale such a provision was omitted from condition No. 5 by deleting the words "other than the plaintiffs." He contended that this is a deliberate departure. Mr. Thakkar, the learned counsel for the first respondent, contended that this omission from the condition No. 5 was due to the fact that between the two dates of the said old and new conditions, the Original Side Rules were revised, certain Rules were deleted and the said New R. 500-A was introduced and that it is because of that reason that it was considered to be unnecessary and redundant to retain the words "other than the plaintiffs" as liberty to bid and set-off given to the first respondent implied that the first respondent could set-off the mortgage debt against the amounts of both the deposit of 25 per cent and the payment of the balance of 75 per cent.

14. Now under Rule 500-A (i) deposit is not to be made if it is otherwise ordered or it is so agreed. Whether the omission from the new Condition No. 5 of the said words "other than the plaintiffs" be a deliberate departure as contended by Mr. Dhanuka or it be due to having been made on the ground that it was considered to be unnecessary and redundant as contended by Mr. Thakkar, it is clear that there is no specific agreement between the parties dispensing with the requirement of the 25 per cent. deposit in case the first respondent became the purchaser. As there is no such agreement between the parties, it has next to be ascertained whether it has been "otherwise ordered."

15. Mr. Thakkar contended that the liberty to set-off granted to the first respondent by the Decree Absolute for sale must be construed as having been "otherwise ordered" by the Court as contemplated in sub-rule (i) of R. 500-A either expressly or, in any event impliedly. In our opinion, it is obvious that there is no such express order made by the Court. Mr. Thakkar also relied upon the said Minutes of the Commissioner dated 11th September 1970 and argued that it was such an order. These Minutes are what they purport to be i.e., a record of what transpired at the meeting before the Commissioner when it says that no deposit was taken from the first respondent. The Minutes merely record a statement of fact and do not amount to an order dispensing with the deposit of 25 per cent. It is a statement of fact and not an order. It is, therefore, unnecessary to decide whether the commissioner has or does not have the power to "otherwise order", i.e., to make an order dispensing with the requirement of sub-rule (i) of Rule 500-A for a deposit of 25 per cent. It must, however, be borne in mind that sub-rule (i) of Rule 500-A does not specifically provide that such "otherwise ordered" must be a specific order. There can, therefore be an implied order. In our opinion, in a sale under a Mortgage Decree when an order is made under the Original Side Rules giving liberty to the mortgagee decreeholder to bid and set-off, the liberty to set-off would imply that to the extent of the amount of the set-off it "otherwise orders" as contemplated by the sub-rule (i) unless, of course, the order contains a contrary or inconsistent provision. These sales are in pursuance of a Mortgage Decree and not a simple money decree. The provision in the said sub-r. (i) for deposit of a substantial part like 25 per cent. of the Purchase price together with the provision for its forfeiture, has been made with the obvious intention of guarding against bids being given by a person who is declared to be a purchaser but who does not intend to complete his purchase or is incapable of completing his purchase or subsequently wants to unjustifiably back out of his purchase. When the purchaser is the holder of the decree and the decree is a mortgage Decree, the Decree in his favour is by itself a security. Moreover even when liberty to set-off has been ordered the court has the power till the sale is confirmed to order the purchaser to bring the purchase money or the necessary part of it into court and the fulfilment of such an order by the Mortgage decreeholder purchaser is secured by his Mortgage Decree itself.

16. Mr. Dhanuka pointed out that the word used in the said sub-rule (i) of Rule 500-A in connection with the deposit is "shall" which means that the requirement of the 25 per cent. deposit is mandatory. Mr. Dhanuka further pointed out that sub-rule (iii) of Rule 500-A provides that in default of payment of the deposit mentioned in sub-rule (i) the bid of the person who would otherwise have been declared the purchaser shall be rejected and the property shall forthwith be resold and that this also shows that the provision about deposit is mandatory. In our opinion, it is not necessary for us to decide whether this provision is or is not mandatory because, even if the provision of sub-r. (i) for making the deposit were to be held to be mandatory as contended by Mr.

Dhanuka, sub-rule (i) itself creates two exceptions, one of which is when it is "otherwise ordered." Such a provision would be an exception to what Mr. Dhanuka contended is a mandatory provision. In our opinion, as sub-rule (i) does not specifically require that an order, in order to hold that it has so "otherwise ordered", must do so expressly, it can be held to be of that nature even if it can be held to so order even by implication. The Decree Absolute for sale in the case before us permits set-off for the full decretal amount. It does not appeal to reason or to commonsense that when the auction purchaser is himself the holder of a Mortgage Decree in his favour and it is the same court which has passed that decree which is selling the property and the decree is a Mortgage Decree with the result that to the extent of the amount of the decree no question of rateable distribution between the attaching creditors of the mortgagor can possibly arise, the set-off should be confined to the payment only of the balance of the purchase price, but should not be extended to the initial deposit of 25 per cent. We are of the opinion that the permitted set-off must extend to the entire purchase price, i.e., to both the initial deposit of 25 per cent and also the subsequent payment of the balance but only to the extent of the amount of the decree and that when the Court made the order permitting such set-off it has impliedly ordered that the mortgagee decree-holder purchaser is not required to make the deposit of 25 per cent. We have reached this conclusion as a matter of interpretation of the order, i.e., the Decree absolute for sale. We are, however, otherwise, satisfied that this conclusion is in accordance with what appears to be the interpretation put on it by the practice of this Court extending over a long period. These sales are effected through the Commissioner of this Court who is a permanent officer of the Court assigned the work of effecting such sales and he is not a Commissioner appointed only for effecting an individual such sale. He would normally ascertain his office practice and follow it. In this case the Commissioner has, as seen earlier, stated that he has not taken the deposit as first respondent has been granted liberty to bid and set-off. In the natural course of his work and in the background of the knowledge which he has acquired the word which he has used is "taken." It suggests that because of the liberty to bid and set-off he did not even ask for the deposit of 25 per cent. of the purchase price being made. One of the cases cited before us but in another connection, was the judgment delivered by Martin, C. J. on behalf of the Division Bench of this High Court in Vrajilal Jivandas v. Venkataswami Lingaya, (1928) ILR 52 Bom 459 = (AIR 1928 Bom 123). It concerns a sale by the Commissioner of this court of an immoveable property under a Mortgage Decree under which the Mortgagee decree-holder was given liberty to bid and set-off and the mortgagee, he being the highest bidder, was declared the purchaser. The portion of the Judgment at page 463 of the Report (ILR Bom) = (at pp. 124-125 of AIR) refers to the certificate issued by the Commissioner in respect of that sale. The commissioner certified that at the sale the plaintiffs in that suit were "the highest bidders for and were, subject to confirmation by this court, declared the purchasers of the said property at the price or sum of Rs. 1,45,000/- and that I have allowed them to set off the said sum of Rupees 1,45,000/- against an equivalent part of the amount due to them under the said preliminary decree." It is obvious from this certificate that the Commissioner allowed the entire amount of the purchase price i.e., both the amount of the deposit of 25 per cent. and the balance amount to be set-off against the amount due under the mortgage decree without taking a deposit of 25 per cent. of the purchase price.

17. Mr. Dhanuka drew our attention to Rules 72, 84 and 85 of Order 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Now it must be remembered that under Section 129 of the Code of Civil Procedure this High Court is entitled to make Rules to regulate its own procedure in the exercise of its Original Civil Jurisdiction as it shall think fit and that this High Court has, as a matter of fact, made the said Original Side Rules. The procedure on the Original side of this High Court is governed by the Original Side Rules and not by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure to the extent that there are provisions in the Original Side Rules. In view of Section 129, Mr. Dhanuka himself stated that the provisions under Order 21 would not apply to sales of immoveable properties by the Commissioner of this Court. He however, stated that he would refer to the Rules in Order 21 which contain similar provisions only for the purpose of comparison of their contents and the interpretation put on them by decided cases. On the topics dealt with by the said three Rules of Order 21 there are specific provisions made in the Original Side Rules, and particularly in the said Rule 500-A. Order 21 applies to sales of properties both moveable and immoveable attached in execution of simple money decrees and also to sales under mortgage decrees. Rule 449 of the Original Side Rules contains the procedure for attachment and sale in execution not only of moveable, but also of immoveable properties, i.e. to sales in execution of simple money decrees and provides that the sale shall be by the sheriff. In the case of mortgage decrees it is R. 491 which applies and it provides that the sale shall be by the Commissioner of this Court and a different set of Rules, including the said Rules 497 and 500-A, apply. Mr. Dhanuka conceded and has, as a matter of fact, argued on the basis, that it is the Original Side Rules which apply and not Order 21. In our opinion, no useful purpose would be served by referring to all the decided cases cited at the Bar relating to the said Rr. 72, 84 and 85 of O. 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for determining whether the requirement in respect of the deposit of 25 per cent. is or is not mandatory because those decisions do not construe the provisions of the relevant Original Side Rules. Nonetheless, we will refer to some of the decided cases cited on either side on the point whether the provision for deposit of 25 per cent. under R. 84 of O. 21 has or has not been held to be mandatory. (9th March 1971).

18. Mr. Dhanuka in this behalf first relied upon a Judgment of the Supreme Court in Manilal Mohanlal v. Sardar Sayed Ahmed, 57 Bom LR 10 = (AIR 1954 SC 349) and particularly upon the following paragraph therefrom appearing at p. 16 (of Bom LR) = (at p. 351 of AIR) which reads:—

"The provision regarding the deposit of 25 per cent. by the purchaser other than the decree-holder is mandatory as the language of the rule suggests. The full amount of the purchase money must be paid within fifteen days from the date of the sale but the decree-holder is entitled to the advantage of a set-off. The provision for payment is however, mandatory (Rule 85). If the payment is not made within the period of fifteen days, the court has the discretion to forfeit the deposit, and there the discretion ends but the obligation of the Court to re-sell the property is imperative. A further consequence of non-payment is that the defaulting purchaser forfeits all claim to the property (Rule 86)."

He contended that this passage shows that the provision regarding the deposit of 25 per cent. under Rule 84 and the payment of the balance of 75 per cent. under Rule 85 is mandatory. Mr. Dhanuka's argument, however, does not take due notice of what the Supreme Court has said, viz., that these observations apply to a purchaser "other than the decree-holder." It is clear that the Supreme Court has not said, nor had it an occasion to say that when the purchaser is a decree-holder the requirement of the deposit of 25 per cent. under Rule 84 is mandatory. In the paragraph immediately preceding the paragraph quoted above, the Supreme Court, after analysing the scheme of Rules 72, 84 and 85 of Order 21 has observed:—

"The scheme of the rules quoted above may be shortly stated. A decree-holder cannot purchase property at the court auction in execution of his own decree without the express permission of the Court, and that when he does so with such permission he is entitled to a set-off but if he does so without such permission then the Court has a discretion to set aside the sale upon the application by the judgment-debtor or any other person whose interests are affected by the sale (Rule 72). As a matter of pure construction this provision is obviously directory and not mandatory: See Radha Krishna v. Bisheshar Sahay, (25 Bom LR 630) = (AIR 1922 PC 336). The moment a person is declared to be the purchaser, he is bound to deposit 25 per cent. of the purchase-money unless he happens to be the decree-holder, in which case the court may not require him to do so. (Rule 84)."

This quotation clearly shows that according to the Supreme Court the provision about the deposit of 25 per cent. when the purchaser is a decree-holder "is obviously directory and not mandatory."

19. Mr. Dhanuka also relied upon a judgment of a single Judge of the Madhya Pradesh High Court in Kishanlal v. Kothari Jothmal, AIR 1959 Madh Pra 115. This judgment is not helpful to determine whether the provision about the deposit of 25 per cent. is mandatory or is only directory. The only point which arose for consideration in that case was as to what was the point of time at which the sale in execution proceedings becomes legally effective and it was held that it becomes effective when the sale is confirmed that the sale becomes absolute and legally effective and that till then the sale does not become complete and legally effective.

20. The third case relied upon by Mr. Dhanuka was also a judgment of a Single Judge of the Andhra Pradesh High Court in Sivraya v. Lingareddi, AIR 1966 Andh Pra 201. Mr. Dhanuka's contention is that this judgment holds that a decree-holder who has been granted liberty to bid and set-off under the provisions of Rule 72 of Order 21, purchases the property, the order granting the set-off does not necessarily imply that he has been given liberty to set-off even against the deposit of 25 per cent., required to be made under Rule 84 of Order 21 and that there should be a specific order granting liberty to set-off for the amount of the deposit of 25 per cent.

21. In our opinion, out of these three judgments relied upon by Mr. Dhanuka it is only the said judgment of the Andhra Pradesh High Court which holds that the requirement of the deposit of 25 per cent. is mandatory even in the case of the purchaser being a decree-holder and that unless there is a specific order to the contrary, he is bound to make that deposit of 25 per cent. in spite of liberty to bid and set-off having been given to him in general words.

22. Mr. Thakkar, in his turn relied upon three judgments, one of the Rajasthan High Court and two of the Madras High Court to which we will presently refer.

23. The Rajasthan High Court judgment is a judgment of Wanchoo, C. J. who delivered the judgment on behalf of a Division Bench in Kanhaiyalal v. Sansmal, AIR 1956 Raj 18. The judgment holds that reading Rules 72 and 84 of Order 21 together it is clear that where a decree-holder is permitted to bid at an auction, there is an implied dispensation also that he need not deposit 25 per cent. of the purchase money unless the sale price is more than the decretal amount, that where the sale price is more than the decretal amounts, the decree-holder must deposit the excess up to 25 per cent. of the purchase money, depending upon the excess of the sale price over the decretal amount and that there is no sense in insisting upon the decree-holder depositing 25 per cent. of the purchase money, when the purchase money is less than or only equal to the decretal amount. This judgment takes a view contrary to that taken in the above Andhra Pradesh High Court judgment and holds that the requirement of the deposit of 25 per cent. can be implied in the circumstances mentioned in the judgment even though the order for set-off is in general words and does not specifically refer to the requirement of the deposit of 25 per cent. The observations in this judgment requiring the deposit of 25 per cent. to be made to the extent mentioned in the judgment when the sale price exceeds the amount of the decree held by the decree-holder purchaser, it should not go unnoticed have been made in the case of the holder of a simple money decree and not a mortgage decree. Unlike as in the case of a mortgage decree in the case of a sale in execution of a simple money decree the complication of rateable distribution can arise and would require consideration. The second point which would also have to be borne in mind is, firstly, that the sale in execution following an attachment may be made by a Court other than Court which passed the money decree and secondly that the money decree may or may not if the sale falls through be recoverable and is in that sense unsecured unlike as in the case of a mortgage decree where the amount is, at least to the extent of the mortgage security, secured.

24. The second judgment relied upon by Mr. Thakkar was that of a Single Judge in Bhyraraju Ramaraju v. Lakshmiah, AIR 1931 Mad 103. The judgment holds that where the holder of a money decree who has been given permission to bid and set off is declared the purchaser, if the amount of his decree be equal to or less than the purchase price, he need not make the deposit of 25 per cent. nor pay the balance, but that if the sale price exceeds the amount of his decree, he can be called upon to deposit the difference only at the time when he is called upon to pay the balance under Rule 85 of Order 21, unless, of course, his decretal amount is not sufficient to cover even the deposit of 25 per cent., in which case he must deposit the short-fall in his decretal amount as compared with the deposit of 25 per cent.

25. The third judgment relied upon by Mr. Thakkar was the judgment of a single Judge of the Madras High Court in Murugappa v. Ramasami, AIR 1935 Mad 893. This judgment also is to the same effect as the other judgment of the Madras High Court in the above case of AIR 1931 Mad 103.

26. The provisions of the relevant rules of Order 21 were relied upon by Mr. Dhanuka only by way of a help when construing the provisions of Rule 500-A. We have already pointed out the difference between the two provisions and the cases where they can apply. None-the-less even the judgments relating to the relevant rules under Order 21 do not hold that the requirement as to the deposit of 25 per cent. is mandatory. The judgment of the Supreme Court does not so hold, nor do the said other judgments, except the said judgment of the Andhra Pradesh High Court. The judgments of the Rajasthan and Madras High Courts show that permission granted to a decree-holder in general terms to bid and set-off can be construed, depending on the circumstances of the case, by comparing the amount of the purchase price with the decretal amount due to the decree-holder purchaser, to include a right to set off even against the deposit of 25 per cent. And that for the latter purpose there need not necessarily be a specific order permitting set-off against the amount of the deposit of 25 per cent. The view taken by the Rajasthan and the Madras High Courts is, with respect to all the judgments referred to above, a view taken not merely on a construction of the relevant rules of Order 21 but based on commonsense. Needless to repeat that that view acquires greater strength when the sale is in pursuance of a decree absolute for sale in a mortgage suit and the decree-holder is the purchaser. We, therefore, hold that if the mortgagee decree-holder is declared the purchaser and he has been granted liberty to bid and set-off, then even though there be no specific order permitting the set-off against the amount of the deposit of 25 per cent. required to be made under sub-rule (i) of Rule 500-A of the Original Side Rules, he is entitled to set-off the amount decreed in his favour by the mortgage decree, to the extent of that decretal amount first against the said deposit of 25 per cent. and thereafter against the balance of his purchase price. We accordingly hold that in this case before us the first respondent was entitled to set-off its mortgage claim, which exceeded the amount of the deposit of 25 per cent. provided for under sub-r. (i) of Rule 500-A of the Original Side Rules, and that it was, therefore, not bound to make the said deposit of 25 per cent. We must, therefore, hold, which we do, that the sale is not an invalid sale, nor can it be set aside on the first ground urged by Mr. Dhanuka.

27. It should be noted that Mr. Thakkar had contended that even if the sale were to be held to be invalid or it were to be set aside on the ground that the first respondent was under an obligation to make the deposit of 25 per cent, but it failed to do so, the appellant had in the present case waived the said requirement of the deposit of 25 per cent. In view of the conclusion which we have reached, it is unnecessary for us to decide this contention of the first respondent about waiver.

28. We will now turn to the second contention urged by Mr. Dhanuka. He contended that under the requirement of sub-rule (ii) of Rule 500-A the first respondent was bound to deposit an amount of the full balance of 75 per cent., without deducting therefrom the said sum of Rs. 75,000/- which the first respondent has in fact deducted for its costs as estimated by it. He contended that on this ground also the sale is an invalid sale and is in any event liable to be set aside.

29. Now the preliminary decree, in so far as it concerns the first respondent, declares that there was due to the 1st respondent at foot of the mortgage an aggregate sum of Rs. 11,44,617.75 for principal and interest as at the date of the decree and further compound interest at the rate of four and a half per cent per annum with yearly rests from the date of decree till the date fixed for redemption and thereafter at the rate of four and half per cent per annum till payment and "the costs of the suit when taxed as between attorney and client and noted in the margin hereof" with simple interest on such costs at the rate of four per cent per annum "from the date of the decree" till payment. It is clear that the costs awarded by the Preliminary Decree to the first respondent are the costs of the suit till the date of the Preliminary Decree. The Preliminary Decree is silent as to the first respondent's costs subsequent to the preliminary Decree. To that provision for costs the Decree Absolute for sale adds a sum of Rs. 220/- for costs, being the costs of obtaining the Decree Absolute for sale. The amount of Rs. 75,000/-, which the first respondent retained with it when paying the amount of the balance of the purchase price, admittedly represented not only the costs covered by the Preliminary Decree and the Decree absolute for sale, but also the subsequent costs which related to the sale of the property, and according to Mr. Thakkar also the costs which the first respondent as mortgagee had to incur in respect of another suit, the costs whereof were ordered to be costs in the mortgage suit.

30. Now Mr. Dhanuka advanced five arguments in support of his said second contention. His first argument was that under the Preliminary Mortgage Decree, the costs of the suit become payable only when they are taxed and noted in the margin of the decree, but that they have not been taxed much less noted in the margin of that decree. His second argument was that neither of the two Decrees on their wording entitled the first respondent to costs other than the costs of the suit up to the date of the preliminary decree and the said sum of Rs. 220/-. His third argument was that neither of the two decrees, nor even the Original Side Rules, provide for a set-off being made for the costs subsequent to the decree absolute for sale which have not even been ordered to be paid. His fourth argument was that in any event there can be no set off in respect of estimated costs as the same are not an ascertained sum. His fifth argument was that no data whatever has been furnished by the first respondent to show how the first respondent estimated the costs in the sum of Rs. 75,000/- and that in any event the amount of Rs. 75,000/- is an exorbitant amount. He contended that the deduction of Rs. 75,000/- made the payment actually made an insufficient payment or tender and that the sale must therefore be held to be invalid or should be set aside.

31. Now as regards the first three of these five arguments of Mr. Dhanuka, Mr. Thakkar did not dispute that the costs of the suit have not been taxed or noted in the margin of the preliminary decree nor that neither the preliminary decree nor the decree absolute for sale provides for the first respondent's costs subsequent to the Decree Absolute for sale nor that neither the two decrees nor the Original Side Rules provide for a set-off for such subsequent costs. He contended that nonetheless the first respondent is entitled to estimate such subsequent costs and to set-off the same against the purchase price because of a practice of this court.

32. It is by the first respondent's Attorneys' said letter dated 30th September 1970 addressed to the Commissioner that the first respondent stated that it would retain the sum of Rs. 75,000/-. The Statement contained in that letter in this connection reads:—

"In addition to the aforesaid aggregate amount of Rs. 16,13,163.21 due to my clients for principal and interest further amount would also be due to them for costs. The above suit is of the year 1949 and since considerable costs have been incurred including the costs of so many as 18 auction sales of the mortgaged property held by you since 25th June 1951, the taxation of all such costs would take a long time. My clients roughly estimate these costs at Rupees 75,000/- and request you to allow them to add the said estimated costs to the aforesaid aggregate amount of Rupees 16,13,163.21 P. due to them for principal and interest so as to make their total dues for principal, interest and costs amounting to Rs. 16,88,163.21 P."

Thereafter the first respondent filed with the Commissioner of this Court an affidavit dated 5th October 1970 of Bodhraj Dhandra, the Assistant Secretary of the first respondent, in paragraph 4 whereof the first respondent stated:—

"The plaintiffs corporation therefore hereby undertakes to pay the learned commissioner whatever balance found due and payable by them in respect of their said costs in case the said costs are found less than Rs. 75,000/- on taxation by the Taxing Master of this Hon'ble Court."

The said practice of this court relied upon by the first respondent has been averred in the affidavit in reply filed by the first respondent in the matter of the said Chamber Summons. It is stated in paragraph 6 thereof as under:—

"The estimated costs of the suit is not only the costs awarded under the decrees herein but is inclusive of the costs of so many as 18 auction sales of the mortgaged property already held by the Commissioner in reference for sale made to him under the Decree Absolute for sale. The suit is of the year 1949 and the plaintiffs have incurred considerable costs in conducting the suit for so many as 21 years and according to Court's practice all costs incurred after the Decree absolute for sale are awarded at the time of confirmation of sale and all such costs in case of the plaintiffs being declared purchasers are allowed by the Commissioner to be set-off and as it usually takes considerable time to have all such costs taxed the Commissioner always makes provision for costs by retaining certain sum out of the sale proceeds in his hands. On 6th October 1970 the plaintiffs sent to the Commissioner their cheque for Rs. 5,00,556.79 P. and not for Rs. 5,00,00,556.79 P. as incorrectly stated in the said para 4. As required by the Commissioner the plaintiffs have given an undertaking by affidavit to pay the balance in case the costs when taxed or settled are less than Rs. 75,000/-. In fact the matter was discussed informally at a meeting held to pass the accounts of the Receiver when V. G. Pittie who has made the affidavit in support of the Chamber Summons was present and when it was decided to follow the aforesaid procedure."

The said affidavit in reply in its paragraph 7 further states as under:—

"The plaintiffs further submit that they are entitled to deduct the costs of the various auction sales which were about eighteen in number out of the purchase price in addition to the other costs awarded to them. Since taxing of all costs would take considerable time the plaintiffs have with the consent of the Commissioner for taxing accounts duly estimated their costs and paid the balance as aforesaid and reserved their right to claim from the said balance and excess amount in case the costs after taxation exceed the said sum of Rs. 75,000/- and have given an undertaking by an affidavit that in case the costs ultimately taxed are less than the said sum of Rs. 75,000/- then the plaintiffs would pay the difference. The plaintiffs submit that this is the only practical way of dealing with the matter."

33. To this affidavit in reply the appellant filed an affidavit in rejoinder of V. G. Pittie dated 3rd November 1970. Paragraph 2 of that affidavit deals with paragraphs 3 to 7 of the said affidavit of Bodhraj Dhandra in reply. The contentions of that paragraph are an outstanding example of supreme vagueness. Its first sentence states that paragraphs 3 to 7 of the affidavit in reply are mainly argumentative and that the deponent had been advised not to aver to the arguments. It then says that those paragraphs also contain allegations of half truths made by the appellant with a view to cause prejudice. What statements are half truths has not been specified either expressly or even by implication. It then purports to point out that in the affidavit in reply it is stated that the property was knocked down after a period of 20 years but the first respondent had not stated that it was for the first time put up for sale only in 1965. Now the record of the Commissioner shows that the auctions were held from time to time since as per books 1951 and innumerable infructuous sales were held before 1965 and this statement is therefore either made without due care or is a deliberate untruth. In paragraph 6 or any where else in the said affidavit not a word is said about the practice either confirming it or denying it or stating anything which is inconsistent with the same. The affidavit in rejoinder being what it is, it must therefore be held that the appellant has not at all denied and has as a matter of fact deliberately avoided denying the existence of the practice as averred by the first respondent in the said affidavit in reply. The existence of a practice be it the practice of the office of the Commissioner or of the court, is a question of fact. It has been so averred in the affidavit in reply and it has not been denied either expressly or even by implication in the affidavit in rejoinder. We, therefore, hold, as we must that the existence of the practice as averred in the affidavit in reply has been proved.

34. But apart from this practice being held established by reason of the assertion of the first respondent and want of denial by the appellant we are satisfied that there is something more to support the conclusion that such practice exists. On the Notice of Motion dated 26th December 1970 taken out by the appellant in this appeal, the first respondent filed an affidavit of Jamshed Phirozeshaw contractor dated 25th January 1971. To that affidavit has been annexed as Ex. No. 1 a copy of the Minutes of the Commissioner of a meeting dated 16th December 1970 held before him in relation to the sale which is the subject-matter of the present appeal. The question before him was concerning the first respondent's retention of the said sum of Rs. 75,000/- and in that connection the commissioner observes in those minutes:

"It is true that what the plaintiff decree-holder is entitled to set-off is the costs of the suit as would be taxed thereafter and that today the said costs are not taxed. In all such cases, the practice followed by this office is to take a statement of account from the plaintiff decree-holder, who is also the auction purchaser showing the different amounts for principal and interest as well as the estimated costs due under the decree and allow such amount of estimated costs to be set-off. This procedure is followed for the reason that the taxing of costs takes a considerable time after the sale is knocked down. It is quite possible that such estimated costs as are sought to be deducted by the decree-holder may be more or less. In order to safeguard the interest of all concerned, an undertaking is taken from the decree-holder on affidavit stating that if the taxed costs turn out to be less than the estimated costs including in the statement of account filed by him, the difference shall be deposited by him after the costs are taxed. On the plaintiffs' letter dated 30th September 1970 I had directed the plaintiffs to give such an undertaking and such undertaking was given by the plaintiffs by affidavit of their assistant Secretary of the Mortgage Department, dated 5th October 1970."

35. The Commissioner of this Court is one of the highest officers of this Court. His statements are prima facie worthy of credit unless some flaw is pointed out. He must have referred to the practice from his own knowledge and what is of greater importance, from the records available in his office.

36. The practice negatives Mr. Dhanuka's arguments that the first respondent was not entitled to set off the costs subsequent to the Decree Absolute for sale and that no set-off could be allowed as the sum of Rs. 75,000/- was not an ascertained amount as no costs whether up to or after the preliminary Decree had been taxed.

37. Mr. Thakkar's contention was that by reason of the existence of such practice it must be deemed to have been incorporated in the Original Side Rules and in the Decree Absolute for Sale or that in any event the payment after deduction of Rs. 75,000/- cannot be held to be an insufficient payment or tender. The existence of such a practice supports this contention of Mr. Thakkar.

38. In connection with the question of practice, it must however, be considered whether the practice is or is not repugnant to or inconsistent with any provisions of law. Under the general law, and particularly under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act a mortgagee is entitled to all costs properly incurred by him for realising his security. Such a provision has as a matter of fact, been made in sub-rule (3) of Rule 5 and sub-rule (1) of Rule 4 of Order 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure under which the mortgagee is entitled to his costs charges and expenses subsequent to the Preliminary Decree. The provisions of Rules 10 and 13 of Order 34 are also to the same effect. The Original Side Rules and particularly Rule 1086 provide form No. 35 for a Preliminary Decree and Form No. 37 for a Decree absolute for sale. Neither of these two Forms contain a provision about costs subsequent to the Preliminary Decree and the Decree Absolute for sale respectively. As the mortgagee is entitled to all the costs of realising his mortgage security, there ought to be some provision whereby the mortgagee can recover such subsequent costs. The actual order for costs subsequent to the Decree Absolute for Sale is normally made by this Court at the time when the Court makes the order confirming the sale by ordering all proper costs incurred after the date of the decree absolute for sale till and inclusive of the confirmation of sale to be tacked on to the mortgage claim and to be paid out of the net sale proceeds. But when the mortgagee decree-holder is given liberty to bid and set-off the question of set-off costs against the amount of the balance of 75 per cent. would arise prior to the time when the Court would consider the question of confirming the sale. It stands to reason and commonsense therefore that a practice as referred to by the first respondent and also by the Commissioner has come into existence in this High Court. Such a practice does not appear to be in any way repugnant to or inconsistent with any provision of law. The clear effect of the existence of such a practice would be to read it by way of a necessary implication into the provisions of R. 500-A and into the decrees passed in the Forms prescribed by the Original Side Rules for drawing up Preliminary Mortgage Decrees and Decrees Absolute for sale, unless, of course, there is some order of the Court to the contrary. Moreover, the sales under Mortgage Decrees are conducted by the Commissioner of this Court. The mortgagee initially supplies the funds to the Commissioner to enable the Commissioner to incur the costs of such sale. As such costs are incurred by or through the commissioner, there arises no question of such costs being improper. There are therefore good chances for the mortgagee to ultimately recover the costs of sale out of the sale proceeds. Moreover, the Commissioner has experience as to what the costs, though not taxed would approximately amount to. If the mortgagee for any reason happens to over estimate his costs, the commissioner would in all normal cases be able to question the mortgage and if necessary ask for a split up and satisfy himself as to what the correct estimate should be such estimate would normally be discussed at a meeting before him where the attorney of the mortgagee and also of the mortgagor would be present. In view of this safeguard so available for checking the estimates of costs, the practice seems not only to be reasonable, but to be consonant with commonsense.

39. It had, however, been contended on behalf of the appellant that under sub-rule (ii) of R. 500-A the time for payment of the balance of the purchase price is mandatory, because sub-rule (iv) provides that upon non-payment within the thirty days prescribed under sub-rule (ii) there should be an immediate re-sale. It was contended that the effect of the said practice would be to postpone the payment to the Commissioner of the amount of the estimated costs beyond the said period of thirty days and that the said practice would be inconsistent with the provisions of Rule 500-A. We are of the opinion, however, that the effect of the practice is to determine the amount which is payable under sub-rule (ii) of R. 500-A as and by way of the balance of purchase price and it is only that amount so determined which is payable within thirty days and to the non-payment whereof within that time the provision of re-sale under sub-rule (iv) is attracted. In other words, the quantum or the amount to which sub-rule (ii) applies would by reason of the practice be the balance of the purchase price as otherwise ascertained reduced by the estimated amount of costs. The said practice is, therefore not repugnant to any provision contained in sub-rule (ii) or sub-rule (iv) of R. 500-A.

40. It was also contended on behalf of the appellant that the amount of Rs. 75,000/- as the estimated costs is exorbitant. Now the word "exorbitant" is vague. This contention was not raised in the affidavit in support of the present Chamber Summons. It was, as a matter of fact, not raised even before the Commissioner. Mr. Thakkar stated that this point was not even argued before the learned Judge. This statement of Mr. Thakkar has not been contradicted on behalf of the appellant. It has certainly not been made a ground in the Memorandum of appeal. After all the correctness of the estimate is a question of fact. Mr. Thakkar stated that in the absence of a dispute raised by the appellant in this connection, the first respondent did not place on record the necessary material to support the estimate of Rs. 75,000/-. As an example, he pointed out, as stated earlier, that the first respondent's costs of defending a suit in this court as a Mortgagee have been made costs in the present suit out of which this appeal arises. Mr. Thakkar's grievance is justified because the appellant should have disputed the correctness of the amount of estimated costs before the commissioner or at least before the Learned Judge and as the appellant has not done so the point cannot be allowed to be argued for want of necessary material before the court. But we do not rest content only at that. We have made a rough estimate ourselves. As it is the mortgagee who has to furnish funds to the commissioner for the costs of the sale and the mortgagor has not at that stage to put his hand in his pocket for that purpose, the mortgagor always desires that the court should give widest publicity to the intended sale. Of course, if it was the mortgagor who had to foot the bill his tune would have been different. The mortgagor has always been a favoured litigant if one may use that phrase, of all courts, and quite rightly because a mortgagor being a debtor, needs protection against any improper tactics by his mortgagee. The Court therefore just to prevent any unfairness relating to the mortgagor leans a little in favour of the mortgagor's demand when the property is to be advertised for sale, and particularly when a large property like the one concerned in this appeal is to be sold. It is well known in Bombay that if an advertisement appears in a newspaper like the Times of India, the costs of advertisement themselves are comparatively much larger than what they would be if the advertisements were to be published in some other newspaper. The costs of infructuous sales thrown away, which should not be confused with the costs of the sale which are larger, used to be estimated and ordered by Chamber Judges at between Rupees 750/- to Rs. 1,000/- till about five or seven years ago. Because of diverse reasons these costs of sale thrown away are now being estimated at between Rs. 1,500/- to Rs. 2,500/-, depending on diverse factors like the newspapers in which the advertisements are inserted etc. There has been a progressive increase in such costs. Costs of nineteen sales have to be estimated on that basis. Moreover it is common ground that because of the long period of 21 years having elapsed between the date of the Decree absolute for sale and the 19th sale, the Commissioner of this court had obtained Valuation Reports for fixing the reserve bids on two occasions and the Commissioner's records show that he has paid Rs. 6000/- to the valuer for each of the two Valuation Reports. In addition, the Commissioner himself must have spent additional amounts for divers purposes such as, for example, for getting the particulars and conditions of sale printed, etc. To these costs must be added the costs of the lawyers representing the first respondent at the various meetings held before the commissioner and for attending at the auction sale. All of such costs are being allowed in taxation to a mortgagee decree-holder according to the scales of fees prescribed for that purposes. To that must be added the first respondent's costs of the mortgage suit and the other suit of which costs have been made costs in the former suit. Taking into account all these costs which the first respondent as the mortgagee would be entitled to recover out of the mortgage security, i.e., the sale proceeds, we are prima facie satisfied, only on a rough estimate that the estimate of Rs. 75,000/- will if at all, exceed the actual taxed costs by hardly any appreciable amount. To use the word "exorbitant" in this connection without even any material would in our opinion require re-writing of dictionaries relating to that word "exorbitant."

41. Mr. Thakkar had contended that if this court did not uphold the deduction of the said sum of Rs. 75,000/- for estimated costs, this Court should extend the time for making payment of the balance of the amount under sub-rule (ii) of R. 500-A. He pointed out that the deduction was made on the basis of an estimate by placing bona fide reliance on the said practice and that if that practice is now not upheld by this Court for any reason, this case would be the first to so hold and that this court should because of that reason in this case extend the time for paying that amount of Rs. 75,000/- to the Commissioner. He contended that if at all it be necessary, this court might so extend the time even by imposing some conditions on the first respondent, such as payment of interest from the date when that payment should have been made to the Commissioner till such time as this court may extend for making such payment. The appellant countered this contention by saying that in view of the provisions of Rule 500-A if the first respondent at all wanted to apply for extension of time, the first respondent itself should have taken out the necessary proceeding containing such an application, that the first respondent cannot do so in the matter of the present Chamber Summons which is taken out by the appellant for challenging the validity of the sale and that the first respondent has as a matter of fact, not made even in the matter of this Chamber Summons any such application before the learned Judge and has in any event not placed any material before this court in support of its application for extension of time. Now sub-rule (ii) of Rule 500-A contains the provision for extension of time. Rule 500-A, or for the matter of that no rule in the Original Side Rules, contains a provision which would require that in all such cases for extension of time it would be the first respondent who would be under an obligation to itself apply for extension of time. In other words, even in a proceeding taken out by the mortgagor, the mortgagee can if it is necessary, as and by way of defending against the relief asked for in that proceeding by the mortgagor request the court to extend the time. It is true that this point was not raised before the learned Judge, nor is there any material contained in the affidavits filed on behalf of the first respondent in the matter of the said Chamber Summons. So far as the material is concerned however the only ground relied upon by Mr. Thakkar is a bona fide reliance on the existence of the said practice. No other material having been relied upon, we do not see why if necessary Mr. Thakkar cannot make such an application. It is true that under R. 500-A it is the Chamber Judge who can grant such extension of time. It was contended on behalf of the appellant that this contention not having been raised before the Chamber Judge and the Chamber Judge not having considered or made any order either way in that respect, the extension of time was not the lis before the Chamber Judge and is certainly not the lis in the matter of this appeal. It is, however, pertinent to note that the learned Chamber Judge dismissed the Chamber Summons and it was therefore not necessary for him to consider the question of extension of time. We are of the opinion that the discretion which Rule 500-A vests in the Chamber Judge is also available to this Court when hearing an appeal against the order of the Chamber Judge. An appeal is a continuation of the suit as proceeding out of which the appeal arises. If it was necessary, we would have entertained this application of the first respondent and proceeded to consider whether such extension of time should be given to it or not. It was contended on behalf of the appellant that the provisions of sub-rules (i) and (ii) of R. 500-A being mandatory time for making the payment of the balance of the purchase price cannot be extended after the expiry of the prescribed period of thirty days. This argument completely ignores the provision of Rule 310 of the Original Side Rules which reads as under:—

"The Court of a Judge shall have power to enlarge or abridge the time appointed by these rules, or fixed by any order for doing any act or taking any proceedings, upon such terms (if any) as the justice of the case may require, and any such enlargement may be ordered although the application for the same is not made until after the expiration of the time appointed or allowed."

The power to extend time under R. 310 is very wide. The Rule does not proceed that time can be extended only before the expiry of the prescribed time. The only limitation is such as would exist when a Court exercises its judicial discretion. It is however, unnecessary for us to extend time as requested on behalf of the first respondent, in view of the conclusion which we have reached.

42. We have earlier stated that the mortgagor is in a sense a favoured litigant with courts because he needs protection of the Court against any possible unfair advantage being taken against him by his mortgagee. The contentions raised on behalf of the mortgagor in this case however make us feel that it can not be a universal rule and there can be some cases where it is the mortgagee who needs protection against the mortgagor. This case appears to be one of such cases. The reason why the mortgagor wants to cause delay does not require super intelligence to find it out. The reason is that the decree of 1949 provides for payment of interest subsequent to passing of the decree absolute for sale only at the rate of four per cent. per annum. The rates of interest have since then been continuously rising even the Central and the State Governments are today borrowing at the rate of about 5½ per cent. per annum and under the Bombay Money-lenders Act the rate of interest payable on secured loans has been twice raised from 6 per cent. per annum to 9 per cent. per annum and from 9 per cent. per annum to 12 per cent. per annum.

43. The appellant has failed and we therefore dismiss the appeal with costs we see no reason why the costs should not follow his event. The Costs of the appeal of the first respondent and the third respondent to be tacked on to their respective mortgage claims.

44. The Notice of Motion is also dismissed with costs. The Costs to be costs in the appeal.

45. As Mr. Dhanuka states that the appellant wants to consider its position about the filing of an appeal to the Supreme Court, he applies that the confirmation of sale should not be ordered before the expiry of three weeks from today. In view of the application, we order that no order for confirmation of sale should be made before Monday the 29th March 1971. The appellant to expeditiously make an application, if any, for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court.

Appeal dismissed.

VAIDYA, J.:— This is an application for certificate under Article 133 (1) (a) and (c) of the Constitution of India filed by the applicants whose Misc. Appln. No. 564 of 1965 (Bom) filed under Article 226 of the Constitution was dismissed by the judgment of this Court D/- 4, 5, 8-12-1969; and the question which arises is whether the said judgment is a judgment in respect of which the High Court can issue a certificate under Article 133 (1) (a) or (c).

2. Now, it is well established that the words "judgment, decree or final order" in Article 133 cannot apply to a judgment recording an interlocutory finding or a finding which does not finally dispose of the rights of the parties. See Ramchand Manjimal v. Goverdhandas Vishandas Ratanchand, 47 Ind App 124 = (AIR 1920 PC 86); Abdul Rahman v. D. K. Cassim & Sons, 60 Ind App 76 = (AIR 1933 PC 58); Sardar Syedna Taher Saifuddin Saheb v. State of Bombay, (1958) SCR 1007 = (AIR 1958 SC 253); Jethanand & Sons v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (1961) 3 SCR 754 = (AIR 1961 SC 794); Dr. Hori Ram Singh v. Emperor, AIR 1939 FC 43; Sridhar Achari v. The King, AIR 1949 FC 11; Mohammad Amin Brothers Ltd. v. Dominion of India, AIR 1950 FC 77. Hence, Mr. Shah, the learned Counsel for the applicant, relying on the decisions in Ramesh v. Gendalal Motilal AIR 1966 SC 1445 and Bhagwan Singh v. Chief Settlement Commr. Punjab, Jullundur, AIR 1968 Punj and Har 63, contended that as Miscellaneous Application No. 564 of 1965 was a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution, it was an original proceeding raising the question of the jurisdiction of the Sales Tax authorities under the Bombay Sales Tax laws to levy, assess and reassess sales tax on a dissolved firm and the judgment dismissing it finally decides the question of jurisdiction so far as this Court is concerned and hence, it is a judgment or final order within the meaning of Article 133.

3. It is true that the writ proceedings are original proceedings under Article 226. But that does not mean that every order passed in a writ petition is a judgment or a final order within the meaning of Article 133. The nature and effect of the order passed must be considered in every case as laid down in AIR 1966 SC 1445. Turning to the nature of Miscellaneous Application No. 564 of 1965, we find that it challenged the validity of the order by the Sales Tax authorities during the pendency of an appeal filed against the order under the Sales Tax legislation on several grounds. The judgment of the Court decided only the question of the jurisdiction of the Sales Tax authorities to proceed against a dissolved firm. This Court refused to deal with the other grounds raised in the petition as the applicant's appeal is pending, for the reasons stated in the judgment. Although the petition is an original proceeding, it springs from and is founded on the proceedings still pending before the Sales Tax Authorities. The judgment, no doubt, decides a preliminary point raised by the applicant in the proceedings. The effect of the judgment is that the applicants have to pursue their rights and remedies on merits before the Sales Tax appellate authorities. They are not finally barred by the judgment of the Court. Though the judgment deals with the jurisdiction of the Sales Tax authorities, it is in substance an interlocutory judgment or finding regarding the powers of the said authorities to deal with the grievances of the applicants in the appeals filed by them. We do not think that the decisions in AIR 1966 SC 1445 and AIR 1968 Punj and Har 63 support the contention of Mr. Shah that the impugned judgment of this Court is a judgment within the meaning of Article 133, having regard to all the facts and circumstances of this case.

4. The above application is, therefore, not maintainable and the rule is discharged with costs.

Rule discharged.

(A) Hindu Succession Act (1956), Section 14 (1) and (2) — Property of female Hindu — Where a coparcener died before the coming into force of Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act 1937, and the right of his widow was and recognised in an award or decree by allotting property to her, the widow in possession of such property on the date of commencement of the 1956 Act would get full ownership to these properties under Section 14 (1). Her case would not be covered by Section 14 (2). AIR 1967 Mad 429 and AIR 1970 Orissa 131, Dissented from; Observation in AIR 1968 Bom 308 held to be obiter. Case law discussed. (Paras 9 to 13, 17, 21, 22, 26)

Sub-section (2) to Section 14 covers only those cases of grants where the interest in the grantee is created by the grant itself or, in other words, where the gift, will, instrument, decree, order or award is the source of origin of the interest created in the grantee. Where, however, the instruments referred to above are not the source of interest created but are merely declaratory or definitive of the right to property antecedently enjoyed by the Hindu female, sub-section (2) has no application; and it matters not if in such instruments it is specifically provided in express terms that the Hindu female had a limited estate or that she shall not alienate the property or that the property would revert on her death to the next reversioner such terms are merely the reiteration of the incidents of the Hindu Law applicable to the limited estate. (Para 11).

(B) Hindu Succession Act (1956), Section 14 (1) — Limited ownership and restricted estate — An absolute estate may be restricted or limited in a variety of ways in point of duration, enjoyment, disposal or the like, and all such cases are covered by the Explanation without differentiating between the several kinds of restrictions. Limited ownership is also restricted ownership and every case of limited ownership will fall within the meaning of "restricted estate" in sub-section (2). (Para 18)

(C) Hindu Succession Act (1956), S. 14 (1) — "In any other manner whatsoever" — The expression "in any other manner whatsoever" in S. 14 (1) is wide enough to include property acquired under an award or a decree. (Para 19)

N. S. Shrikhande with L. G. Khare, for Respondents Nos. 2 to 6; K. J.
Abhyankar, for Respondents Nos. 2 and 3.

PALEKAR, J.:— This is an appeal by the plaintiffs whose suit for possession has been dismissed by the learned Joint Civil Judge Senior Division, Kolhapur. The suit was for the recovery of possession of some agricultural lands and a house in village Shrati in Kolhapur District. The lands are about 35 acres in extent and are assessed to land revenue of Rs. 211-5-9.

2. The plaintiffs and defendant No. 1 are the daughters of one Appa alias Jangonda and their mother's name was Hirabai. Appa was the only son of one Devgonda. Devgonda had a brother named Jingonda, who appears to have been deaf and dumb. Defendants Nos. 2 to 6 are the grand-sons of this Jingonda, being the sons of Nemgonda alias Balgonda.

3. Jingonda died sometime before Devgonda leaving behind him his son, Nemgonda alias Balgonda. In about 1902 Devgonda and his son Appa went on a pilgrimage. When they were on the pilgrimage Devgonda died first in 1902 and Appa soon thereafter. So, Devgonda's branch in 1902 consisted of Appa's widow Hirabai and her three daughters viz., the plaintiffs and defendant No. 1. It appears that the two brothers Devgonda and Jingonda were members of a Hindu joint family and it can, therefore, be said that after the death of Devgonda, Jingonda and Appa, the only male member of Hindu joint family was Nemgonda alias Balgonda. All the properties of the family, many of which had been acquired by Devgonda, were in the possession of Devgonda's branch, and, naturally, on death of Devgonda and Appa in 1902, Hirabai came into possession of all the agricultural lands belonging to the family and also the houses. Disputes arose between Nemgonda and Hirabai and the same were referred to an Arbitrator, who gave his award on 15-10-1903. This award was filed in Court and a decree in terms of the award was passed on 24-10-1903. Broadly, the result of this decree was that, out of about 130 acres of lands and six houses and house sites, 65 acres of lands and one house were allotted to Hirabai. Out of the 65 acres, 30 acres were ear-marked for the provision of maintenance and marriage of the three daughters and the rest of the property was ordered to be retained by Hirabai for life with certain restrictions. The 30 acres of lands given to the daughters were by way of absolute gift. But, so far as the lands allotted to Hirabai were concerned, they were to be in her possession only for her lifetime whereafter they were to revert to Nemgonda.

4. Accordingly, the daughters obtained possession of their thirty acres and there is no dispute about them before us. The dispute is confined to the remaining thirtyfive acres and the house. Hirabai was in possession of this property, which is the subject-matter of the suit, till her death on 25-2-1967. At that time Nemgonda was dead and his sons, viz. defendants Nos. 2 to 6, were in the village. They got their names entered in the revenue records in respect of this property and obtained possession of the same.

5. The plaintiffs, who are two daughters out of the three daughters of Hirabai, filed this suit for possession of these properties claiming title to the same through Hirabai. They alleged that Hirabai, who was the limited owner of these properties under the award, had become the full owner of the same after the commencement of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956 and, therefore, the two plaintiffs and their sister, defendant No. 1, were entitled to succeed to the properties of their mother after her death. They further alleged that the suit properties had been allotted to Hirabai by the award in lieu of maintenance.

6. Defendants Nos. 2 to 6 contested the suit and the principal contention with which we are now concerned is, whether Hirabai got full ownership of these properties after the commencement of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956. It is not disputed that if Hirabai is held to have become the full owner of the properties by reason of Section 14 of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956 (hereinafter referred to as the Act), the plaintiffs and defendant No. 1 would be her heirs and, therefore, entitled to the possession of the said properties. On the other hand, if Hirabai had not become the full owner of the properties, her estate being limited to her lifetime, then under the terms of the award the suit properties were liable to revert to Nemgonda and his branch in which case defendants Nos. 2 to 6 would be entitled to the suit properties. The learned Civil Judge held that by reason of the award-decree dated 24-10-1903, Hirabai was merely constituted a limited owner of the properties for her lifetime within the contemplation of Section 14 (2) of the Act and, therefore, neither the plaintiffs nor defendant No. 1 was entitled to those properties. It is on that ground that he dismissed the suit.

7. The plaintiffs have, therefore, come in appeal and Mr. Shah, appearing on their behalf, submits that the learned Civil Judge erred in holding that the case fell within Section 14 (2) instead of Section 14 (1) of the said Act. His contention is that by reason of the award-decree Hirabai was constituted a limited owner and as she was in possession of these properties at the commencement of the Act, she became the full owner thereof. Mr. Shah further contended that sub-section (2) of Section 14 of the Act had no application to this case, because the award-decree did no more than define and recognise Hirabai's right to the family properties for her maintenance. According to Mr. Shah, the said sub-section comes into play only when a restricted estate has its origin, for the first time, in the grant, decree or award, and the grant, decree or award do not merely give expression to a pre-existing or antecedent right to or against the family properties. On the other hand, it is contended by Mr. Shrikhande, appearing on behalf of the contesting respondents, that the learned Judge was right in holding that the case fell within sub-section (2) of Section 14 of the Act and not sub-section (1) thereof. That is the only point at issue before us.

8. Section 14 of the said Act is as follows:

"(1) Any property possessed by a female Hindu, whether acquired before or after the commencement of this Act, shall be held by her as full owner thereof and not as a limited owner.

Explanation—In this sub-section "property" includes both movable and immovable property acquired by a female Hindu by inheritance or devise, or at a partition, or in lieu of maintenance or arrears of maintenance, or by gift from any person, whether a relative or not, before, at or after her marriage, or by her own skill or exertion, or by purchase or by prescription, or in any other manner whatsoever, and also any such property held by her as stridhana immediately before the commencement of this Act.

(2) Nothing contained in sub-section (1) shall apply to any property acquired by way of gift or under a will or any other instrument or under a decree or order of a Civil Court or under an award where the terms of the gift, will or other instrument or the decree, order or award prescribe a restricted estate in such property".

The object of this particular enactment is clear. The object is to assure equality of rights to property to all Hindu males and females and to remove the artificial disparity in the capacity to hold property imposed by the Hindu Law on the Hindu female. In circumstances where a Hindu male was entitled to obtain full ownership of the property, a Hindu female could not be condemned to hold property as only a limited owner because of the restrictions imposed on her by the Hindu Law. On the other hand, where in circumstances it was lawful for a Hindu male to hold property as only a limited owner it was not the intention of the legislature that a Hindu female should hold the property as a full owner. Sub-section (1) of Section 14 of the Act takes care of the former while sub-section (2) takes care of the latter.

9. For the purpose of sub-section (1) we must be concerned with property which is in the possession of a Hindu female after the commencement of the Act of 1956. That Act came into force on 17-6-1956. If such property was acquired by her, whether before or after the commencement of the said Act, it would be held by her as a full owner and not as a limited owner in spite of the restrictions placed by the Hindu Law. Then there is an explanation of the word "property" referred to in sub-section (1). By this explanation all kinds of properties are attempted to be included in sub-section (1). Though the explanation purports to give an inclusive meaning of the word "property" it is really an exhaustive explanation, because after enumerating the various kinds of properties acquired by a Hindu female, traditionally mentioned in all the text books on Hindu Law, the explanation includes property acquired by a Hindu female "in any other manner whatsoever". To make the explanation all pervasive it also includes property held by a Hindu female as stridhana, because although it is well known that under the Hindu Law stridhana property is the property of the female with absolute ownership therein, under certain schools of the Hindu Law a few types of properties though regarded as stridhana are not disposable by the wife without the consent of her husband. The explanation, thus, brings under its purview all properties traditionally acquired by a Hindu female in which merely by reason of the incidents of the Hindu law she has limited ownership. In other words, sub-section (1) read with this explanation provides that any property, howsoever acquired and in possession of a Hindu female after the commencement of the Act shall be held by her as a full owner in all cases where she formerly held merely limited ownership. As a matter of fact, this sub-section proceeds on the basis that there are several categories of properties of which a Hindu female, under the provisions of the Hindu Law, is merely a limited owner. By this enactment her rights are enlarged and wherever under the Hindu Law she would merely obtain limited ownership, she would, after the commencement of the Act obtain full ownership.

10. Sub-section (2) of Section 14 of the Act comes by way of exception as is clear from the words with which the sub-section itself commences. If sub-section (1) had stood alone, a Hindu female would obtain full ownership in all properties however partial or limited interest in them a grant may create in her favour. If, for example, by a will or a gift a life interest is created in her favour with the remainder vesting in another, sub-section (1) would have the effect of making her the full owner thereof and destroy the remainder. This result, however, is not intended. In similar circumstances, a life interest created in a Hindu male would give him no more than a life interest and it would impair the principle of parity of rights between the Hindu male and female, if a similarly worded grant gives a Hindu male a life interest but a Hindu female an absolute estate. To prevent this anomaly sub-s. (2) is enacted. It emphasized that in all cases where a grant can lawfully create a limited estate in favour of a Hindu male grantee, it can equally do so in the case of a Hindu female grantee and the general rule of sub-section (1) would have no application. It is in that sense that sub-section (2) is read as an exception to sub-section (1).

11. There is consensus of judicial opinion with regard to the ambit of sub-s. (2) of S. 14 of the Act. It covers only those cases of grants where the interest in the grantee is created by the grant itself or, in other words, where the gift, will, instrument, decree, order or award is the source or origin of the interest created in the grantee. Where, however, the instruments referred to above are not the source of interest created but are merely declaratory or definitive of the right to property antecedently enjoyed by the Hindu female, sub-section (2) has no application; and it matters not if in such instruments it is specifically provided in express terms, that the Hindu female had a limited estate or that she shall not alienate the property or that the property would revert on her death to the next reversioner such terms are merely the reiteration of the incidents of the Hindu Law applicable to the limited estate. (See P. Pattabiraman v. Parijatham Ammal, AIR 1970 Mad 257, and the cases referred to in paragraphs 2 and 3 of that judgment).

12. It, therefore, follows that in cases arising out of the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937, which on the death of a coparcener gave a Hindu widow a share in the coparcenary property, the Hindu woman's limited estate would be enlarged into full ownership in spite of any subsequent instrument, award or decree declaring or redefining her rights as a limited estate. (See Raghunath Sahu v. Bhimsen Naik, AIR 1965 Orissa 59; Sasadhar Chandra v. Tara Sundari, AIR 1962 Cal 438; Sampathkumari v. Lakshmi Ammal, AIR 1963 Mad 50 and Lachhia v. Ram Shankar, AIR 1966 Pat 191).

13. In cases where a coparcener died before the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937 came into force, the widow did not have normally a share in the joint family property but only a right to be maintained out of the joint family property. In numerous instances this right was assured to her by allotting property to her for life whether under an instrument, award or decree or even by an oral arrangement. The difficult question which arises in such a case is whether the widow in possession of such properties on the date of the commencement of the Act of 1956 gets full ownership to these properties under sub-section (1). There is divergence of judicial opinion on this question between the various High Courts, some holding that she does and other holding that she does not. And that is the precise question which arises in the present case. Those cases which hold that the Hindu female gets full ownership proceed on the footing that a right to be maintained from the family property is a right crystallised, declared and recognised in the instrument, award or decree, having been in existence antecedent to those documents, and hence not covered by sub-section (2) of Section 14 of the Act. (See Yamunabai Gangadhar v. Parappa, (1968) 70 Bom LR 611; Gadam Reddaya v. Venkataraju, AIR 1965 Andh Pra 66; Sumeshwar v. Swami Nath, AIR 1970 Pat 348 and Sharbatl Devi v. Hiralal, AIR 1964 Punj 114).

14. Other cases hold that her right to be maintained out of the family property was not "a right to property" which, according to them, she gets for the first time under the instrument, decree or award and hence she falls under sub-section (2) of Section 14 of the Act. (See Gurunadham v. Navaneethamma, AIR 1967 Mad 429 and Narayan Patra v. Tara Patrani, AIR 1970 Orissa 131).

15. The first question for decision is whether Hirabai was a limited owner of the suit properties on the date of the commencement of the Act of 1956. For the present it may be conceded that she had no title to these properties before the date of the award except to the extent of a possessory lien for her maintenance which is recognised in this State for more than a hundred years. (See Yellawa v. Bhimangavda, (1894) ILR 18 Bom 452). It has been held in that case that the Court will not allow the heir to recover family property from a widow entitled to be maintained out of it without first securing a proper maintenance for her. This position in law has been recently recognised by the Supreme Court in Rani Bai v. Yadunandan (AIR 1969 SC 1118) where it is pointed out that the widow was entitled to remain in possession if she could establish that she had entered into possession by virtue of her claim or right to maintenance until the person laying the claim to the estate made proper arrangement for payment of maintenance to her. But, after the date of the award, Hirabai was undoubtedly constituted a limited owner with some restricted powers to alienate the properties. It would appear from the award that she was entitled to remain in possession for her lifetime, the right to alienate being confined to raising of a loan on the security of the properties for the purpose of paying Government revenue.

16. It is true that the award (Exh. 67) dated 15-10-1903 does not in so many words say that the suit properties were given to Hirabai in lieu of maintenance. But, we have no doubt that this was the case. Nemgonda, who was the other party to the dispute, had specifically asked in the plaint which he filed before the arbitrator that maintenance should be provided for Hirabai and all the properties which were in Hirabai's possession should be handed over to him. The arbitrator, while dealing with this aspect of the case, observed as follows:—

"... .. Devgonda was the Karta and an honoured gentleman. It would appear that since Jingonda was dumb he was not useful to conduct the day-to-day affairs. Since Devgonda was the Karta, both the parties agreed that it was Devgonda himself who developed the income of the properties. The plaintiff (Nemgonda) fully admits that it was Devgonda who retained the Patilki Watan in the family after putting forth great efforts in the dispute that had arisen. On the whole, there is no dispute before me that Devgonda was the Karta. The defendant Hirabai is the daughter-in-law of such a Karta member and to pass an order merely to give her maintenance as requested by the plaintiff (Nemgonda) would amount to ignoring the real position of those nearest to the man who had after great endeavours developed the properties. Therefore, having regard to the status of Devgonda and the relationship between Devgonda and the defendant (Hirabai) I do not desire to give to the defendant (Hirabai) bare maintenance as if she is an unsheltered woman".

Reliance was placed upon these observations made by the arbitrator in the award to contend that the award does not really give these properties to Hirabai in lieu of maintenance but that the award is an anomalous instrument wherein the rights of the parties were for the first time decided. We are unable to accept this submission. So far as could be gathered from the award it would appear that while Hirabai was saying that she should get all the properties and maintenance should be given to the other side, Nemgonda was contending that he should get all the properties from Hirabai and Hirabai should be merely paid some maintenance. That was the issue which was before the arbitrator. He found that they were all members of a joint family and against that background he had to pass the award. Nemgonda being the only surviving male coparcener could not be side-tracked by merely providing him with maintenance. On the other hand, having regard to the fact that Hirabai under the Hindu Law would be only entitled to maintenance, the arbitrator thought that it would be unfair to give her merely a pittance for her maintenance as a widow in the joint family and, therefore, he decided to make a liberal provision for her in lieu of her maintenance. Having regard to the manner in which the family properties had been increased and developed by the personal efforts of Devgonda, the arbitrator thought that Hirabai deserved to be provided on a liberal scale. As a matter of fact, a specific allegation was made in the plaint in the present suit that the suit properties were given to Hirabai under the award in lieu of maintenance, and we do not find any specific denial of the same in the written statement. We, therefore, hold that the suit properties had been allotted to Hirabai in lieu of her maintenance which is also the finding of the learned trial Judge.

17. Thus we find that the suit properties were allotted to Hirabai under the award in lieu of maintenance for life with a very restricted power of alienation only in cases where the land revenue fell in arrears. The Explanation appended to sub-section (1) of Section 14 of the Act assumes that property acquired by a Hindu female in lieu of maintenance is property of limited ownership a concept not inconsistent with the Hindu Law. Gupte in his book on the Hindu Law, 2nd Edition, at page 565 in paragraph 44 has stated as follows:

".....Although the division of property into stridhana and non-stridhana is based upon certain conceptions peculiar to Hindu law it corresponds to the division of property into absolute and limited. Absolute ownership means and connotes that (1) the owner has certain unqualified rights over the property such as (A) the exclusive right to its possession, (B) the right to its management, (C) the right to its exclusive enjoyment, and (D) the right of disposition by an act inter vivos or will, and (2) on the death of the owner the property devolves by succession on his heirs. Where any of these essentials (of the content) of absolute ownership is lacking, the property is not regarded as absolute but limited. Limited property would therefore be property the ownership of which is limited in some way or other irrespective of the manner in which it may be limited in any particular case".

We have no difficulty, therefore, in holding that on the date of commencement of the Act of 1956 Hirabai was a limited owner within the contemplation of sub-section (1) of Section 14 of the Act. It would then follow that Hirabai was entitled to become the full owner of the suit properties on that date in which case on her death after that date, her daughters would be entitled to inherit the suit properties.

18. It is, however, contended by Mr. Shrikhande that the case falls within the exception embodied in sub-section

(2) of Section 14 of the Act. His contention is that the award in this case creates a restrictive estate within the meaning of sub-section (2) and not a limited estate or limited ownership an expression which is to be found in sub-section (1). He contends that this is a restrictive estate because Hirabai was less than a limited owner and for this he refers to the restrictive terms of the award which lay down that Hirabai's right to alienate was strictly restricted to the purpose of raising a loan to pay the land revenue. The argument assumes that a restricted estate is different in quality from limited ownership. That is not so. "Restricted estate" is a generic term by which all kinds of limited ownerships are covered. The expression "limited ownership" has been used in sub-section (1) of Section 14 of the Act, because that is an expression generally found in the text books on Hindu law and has almost acquired a technical connotation in connection with the estate of a Hindu female. Sub-section (2), on the other hand, does not want to move within the technical concept of "limited ownership". Therefore, sub-section (2) has used a more generic term "restricted estate", which in its wide ambit can take into account all limited ownerships within sub-section (1). Indeed, the expression "limited ownership" within the Explanation appended to sub-section (1) accounts for a wide variety of cases as shown by Gupte in the passage already referred to. They range from Stridhana on the one hand, to acquisition in lieu of maintenance on the other. An absolute estate may be restricted or limited in a variety of ways in point of duration, enjoyment, disposal or the like, and all such cases are covered by the Explanation without differentiating between the several kinds of restrictions. In our opinion, Limited ownership is also restricted ownership and every case of limited ownership will fall within the meaning of "restricted estate" in sub-section (2).

19. Mr. Shrikhande next contended that the words "award or decree or order of a Court" are not specifically mentioned in sub-section (1) and, therefore, where a limited ownership or restricted estate is created by an award or decree, the case entirely falls within sub-section (2) and not sub-section (1) of Section 14 of the Act. We are unable to accept this submission. It is true that sub-section (1) does not in terms refer to an award or a decree of a Civil Court. But the Explanation to sub-section (1) is wide enough to include property acquired under an award or a decree. The property as explained therein, not only includes the several kinds of acquisition by a Hindu female under the Hindu law but the explanation winds up by providing that property acquired "in any other manner whatsoever" by the Hindu female would be property referred to in sub-section (1). The expression "in any other manner whatsoever" is wide enough to include property acquired under an award or a decree. Nor is there any substance in the further contention of Mr. Shrikhande that the words "the decree or award" are not mentioned in sub-section (1) but mentioned in sub-section (2) because of the higher respectability which is attached to a decree or award. They are adjudications by either a domestic court or by a Civil Court and, therefore, they stand on a higher footing. That is the reason why Mr. Shrikhande says that property acquired under a decree or award was intended to be excluded from the operation of sub-section (1). We do not really see why a decree or award passed on an agreement between the parties or on the basis of a settlement between them should have greater value than a private arrangement amicably arrived at. Moreover, sub-section (2) does not provide for acquisitions made only under an award or a decree but it also makes provision for the property acquired under a gift or will or any other instrument. They are all of the same quality and the only purpose for which sub-section (2) was enacted was to make it clear that where under these several documents a new restricted right to property is created for the first time, sub-section (1) will have no application to such a case.

20. That brings us to the really vexed question in the present case. Mr. Shrikhande does not dispute that when a limited or restricted estate apparently created by the means referred to in sub-section (2) is only a redefinition or recognition of an antecedent right to property, sub-section (1) will not cease to have effect. In such a case, he concedes that it will not be possible to argue that the limited interest created in favour of the grantee has its foundation or origin in the grant itself. The grant, instrument or decree will have only to be regarded as working out the Hindu female's antecedent right to property which is thereby recognised. He, however, contends that where a Hindu female has no right or interest directly to any property antecedent to the documents referred to in sub-section (2), there is no question of that right being recognised in the documents and, therefore, if a restricted estate is given by these documents they alone should be regarded as the foundation or source of the grant and such a grant would fall under sub-section (2). According to Mr. Shrikhande, Hirabai being a widow in the joint family had no direct interest in or right to the family properties prior to the award. Her right was confined to a mere claim for maintenance out of the joint family properties. Hence though her right of maintenance was antecedent to the award it was not a right to any property, that is to say, she had no proprietary right to any property, and hence the right to the limited estate created by the award has its origin in the award itself. Therefore Mr. Shrikhande contends, Hirabai's case falls under sub-section (2) of Section 14 of the Act. In other words, the emphasis, according to Mr. Shrikhande, is on the question whether the antecedent right of the Hindu female is a proprietary right or not. If it is not a proprietary right, the right which is given under the grant in sub-section (2) would be a restricted right having its origin in the grant itself.

21. The right of a Hindu widow to be maintained out of joint family properties has, amongst others, the following characteristics:

1. Under Hindu Law, where a person has succeeded by survivorship to the share of the deceased coparcener, he takes it subject to the burden of maintaining the widow and unmarried daughters of the deceased coparcener. The burden attaches to the property. The holder of such interest for maintenance amounting as it does to a burden on the property is entitled as a matter of right to ask the Court to create a formal charge on such property; (See Secy. of State v. Ahalyabai, 40 Bom LR 422 = (AIR 1938 Bom 321)).

2. A widow is entitled not only to claim maintenance out of the joint family property in possession of a coparcener but also from the property of the joint family which has been purchased by a stranger with notice of the existence of the widow. (See Dattatraya Putto v. Tulsabai Chidambar, 45 Bom LR 802 = (AIR 1943 Bom 412)).

3. If a widow entitled to maintenance is in possession of the joint family property, she is, as already pointed out, not to be ousted from the joint family property even by an heir unless arrangement is made for providing her with maintenance.

4. The liability to maintain a widow is attached to the joint family property. It is true that all these characteristics mentioned above do not amount to any proprietary right to any portion of the joint family property. Nevertheless, a right to maintenance is a right attached to the family property. The question is whether this distinction determines the application of sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) of Section 14 of the Act, as the case may be. In our opinion, this emphasis on the nature of the antecedent right is not as important as the question whether the instrument, decree or award in sub-section (2) is the real source or originator of the restricted estate granted thereunder. It is conceded that a widow having a share in the coparcenary property under the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937, cannot be prevented from claiming absolute estate under sub-section (1) by the mere fact that an instrument, decree or award which came into existence after 1937 allotted her some joint family property specifically declaring that she will have only a life estate. The reason is that the instrument, decree or award is not the source or foundation of the limited grant. Such a widow is entitled to say:

"The property which I have now in my possession is in lieu of my share in the joint family property. I was given nothing under the instrument or the decree. My antecedent right to a share in the property is merely translated into another form through the medium of the instrument, decree or award and hence sub-section (2) does not apply to me".

It appears to us that a similar contention can be made by a widow when some joint family property is allotted to her in lieu of maintenance. She can say:

"I have an antecedent right attached to the family property for my maintenance. What is given to me through the medium of the instrument decree or award is in lieu of my right to maintenance. My former right is merely translated into another form through the medium of the instrument, decree or award. Therefore, it is not the source or foundation of the right to property I have now in possession. Therefore, sub-section (2) does not apply". On principle we see no difference between the two cases. The emphasis is not on the nature of the antecedent right claimed against the joint family property but on the question whether the instrument, decree or award was the originator of the right conferred under it. Since in both types of cases the instrument, decree or award serves merely as a medium which translates one form of right into another it cannot be regarded as the originator of the right conferred under it.

22. It may be interesting to observe that under the Hindu Law the right to a share in coparcenary property given to some widows was held equivalent to the right to maintenance out of the family property. After the Hindu

Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937, came into force, the situation is explained by Mulla in his book on Hindu Law, 13th Edition, at page 98, as follows:—

"... The share she gets on partition, it has been held, is in lieu of maintenance and if she can get a share in all the coparcenary property including agricultural lands, her right to maintenance would cease. The right of claiming partition conferred upon a widow under the Act is personal to her. The right being personal would come to an end on her death if no partition had taken place. It has been held in a number of cases that, if she died pending a suit for partition, her undivided interest would devolve by survivorship and would not go to her husband's heirs as reversioners. The reason generally adopted is that she got her interest in lieu of maintenance and the right conferred upon her being personal would not be crystallised until actual partition by metes and bounds."

The passage cited above seems to suggest that a widow gets a share after 1937 in lieu of her maintenance. We have gone through the cases noted in the foot-note on that page. But, we have not been able to find therein any direct decision that a share has been granted to her under the Act in lieu of maintenance. That seems to be the learned author's inference from the fact that the share enures only for the lifetime of the widow, that the right given to her to share in the property is only personal to her and that if she gets such a share she is no longer entitled to get maintenance. The conclusion from these facts may well lead to the inference that the share which was for the first time granted to a widow in 1937 was in lieu of maintenance. Moreover, even before the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937, when some schools of Hindu Law permitted the wife, mother and grand-mother to share in the coparcenary property on actual partition, the share which was given to them was not because they had any direct or proprietary interest in the coparcenary property but in lieu of maintenance. Some of the favoured widows under the Hindu Law obtained a share in the property in lieu of maintenance, while others did not obtain any share but only got maintenance. It appears to us that in the context of the Hindu widows the right to maintenance conferred under the Hindu Law is indistinguishable in quality from her right to a share in the family property. That may well be the reason why the explanation to sub-section (1) of Section 14 of the Act makes the female allottee of property "in lieu of maintenance" as much a limited owner as when the widow acquires on "inheritance" or "at a partition". And if in the latter two cases it is conceded that sub-section (2) does not apply on the ground of antecedent right to the family properties, we do not see any rational justification to exclude a widow who has an equally sufficient claim over the family properties for her maintenance.

23. One has to see the anomalous results which follow on a narrow construction of Section 14 of the Act. Before and after 1937 there were widows in the joint family who did not get a share in the family properties but were only entitled to maintenance e.g. the widow of a pre-deceased son prior to 1937 would be entitled to maintenance and not to a share. If such a widow is allotted under an oral arrangement family properties of which she remains in possession till 1956, she would directly come under sub-section (1) of Section 14 of the Act and there is no question of the application of sub-section (2) since there is no instrument whatsoever under which she claims. Then again, if after she is allotted family properties orally, her rights to the same are confirmed in a document some years later but before 1956, she would still become the full owner of these properties after 1956. (See Sharbati Devi v. Hiralal, AIR 1964 Punj 114). But, if the same widow lives amicably in the family and in order to prevent future trouble some family properties are allotted to her for maintenance sometime before 1956, the Madras case (AIR 1967 Mad 429) and the Orissa case (AIR 1970 Orissa 131) referred to above would have it that her case should fall under sub-section (2) and not under sub-section (1) of Section 14 of the Act. We do not see any justification for coming to such an unjust result which could not have been within the contemplation of the legislature when it enacted sub-section (2). The provision therein which comes by way of exception must be strictly construed and would have no application to cases except those where for the first time a new right to property is created, unrelated to the antecedent right or interest in the grantee either in respect of the actual property which is the subject-matter of the grant or the family property the claim against which is crystallised in the allotted property. With respect, therefore, it is not possible to agree with the view taken by the Madras High Court in Gurunadham's case AIR 1967 Mad 429 or by the Orissa High Court in Narayan Patra's case AIR 1970 Orissa 131. We respectfully agree with the view taken by Mr. Justice Deshpande in Yamunabai Gangadhar's case (1968) 70 Bom LR

611) and also the view taken in Gadam's case (AIR 1965 Andh Pra 66), Sharbati Devi's case (AIR 1964 Punj 114) and Sumeshwar's case, (AIR 1970 Pat 348).

24. We must, however, draw attention to another judgment of this Court in Udhav Shankar v. Tarabai (69 Bom LR 795) = (AIR 1968 Bom 308). It is a decision of Mr. Justice. Patel sitting singly and we are in respectful agreement with him on the point which was necessary to be decided on the facts of that case. The learned Judge held that in Section 14 (2) of the Act of 1956 the word "acquired" means acquired for the first time under any of the instruments there mentioned or under a decree. When the Hindu female has already by reason of law or otherwise an interest in the property, then she does not "acquire" any interest in it by reason of the instrument or the decree, and in that case the restriction imposed cannot be effective. However, in the last paragraph of his judgment the learned Judge has observed as follows: (page 796 of Bom LR) = (at page 309 of AIR):

"... In both these cases the husbands of the widows had died prior to the coming into force of the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937, and on their husbands' death they had only a right of maintenance. In lieu of maintenance they were given a share in the properties with the restriction of their interest to their lifetime. Evidently, the interest was 'acquired' under the decrees of the Court."

These observations were made by the learned Judge with a view to distinguish the two cases which had been cited before him. The question with regard to property acquired in lieu of maintenance — whether it falls under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) of Sec. 14 of the Act was not directly before the learned Judge in that case. The observations are, therefore, merely obiter. There is no full discussion also of the basis on which the learned Judge made those observations.

25. In the present case, there is a further reason to hold that Hirabai had not only a right to enforce her claim for maintenance against the family properties which was antecedent to the award, but she had also a sufficient possessory title to the lands. She was in possession of the lands after the death of her father-in-law and her husband. That gave her a possessory title which could not have been displaced by the coparcener without making proper arrangement for her maintenance. We have already referred in this connection to the decision in Rani Bai's case (AIR 1969 SC 1118). Therefore, even if the narrow view of the Madras case in (AIR 1967 Mad 429) referred to above was the correct view, Hirabai would have a possessory lien sufficient to create an interest in the suit properties and she would, therefore, fall within sub-section (1) and not sub-section (2) of Section 14 of the Act. Mr. Shrikhande referred to the decision in Eramma v. Veerupane (AIR 1966 SC 1879) and contended that a widow in the joint family who had no proprietary interest in the joint family properties would be deemed to be a trespasser if not in possession with the consent of the coparceners. That case was not similar to the case of a widow who was in possession of the property in lieu of her maintenance. The widow therein claimed to be an heir by inheritance under Sections 6 and 8 of the Act although the provisions thereof did not apply to her. She maintained that she was the heir of the deceased and it was in that capacity that she claimed title. She also claimed that as she was in possession of the property at the time when the Act of 1956 came into force, she should be regarded as having enlarged her limited ownership into full ownership. Their Lordships in the first instance pointed out that she had no title by inheritance. On the other question, they held that in order that the widow may claim full title under sub-section (1) of Section 14 she must have some proprietary interest in the property however small it may be. They pointed out that the appellant before them did not show that in fact she possessed some vestige of title, her mere possession not being sufficient and that possession was held to be the possession of a trespasser. We do not think that that case has any application to the facts of the present case. There is nothing in the award before us to show that Hirabai was regarded as a trespasser when the award was made. Mere allegations and counter-allegations made in the pleadings before the arbitrator cannot be taken into account for the purpose of deciding now whether she was really a trespasser. Nemgonda in his plaint claimed the whole of the property as the last surviving coparcener and requested the arbitrator only to pay maintenance to Hirabai. This was countered by Hirabai by saying that she alone was entitled to the whole of the property and Nemgonda should be granted maintenance. The fact that both of them were saying that the other should get maintenance would go to show that the status of the joint family was not denied and the property also was claimed as joint family property. In a case like this, the position would be that Hirabai was in possession in exercise of her possessory lien over the property as no provision had been made for her maintenance. In that view also sub-section (2) of Section 14 of the Act will have no application to this case. Dated The 14th October, 1970:

26. In the result, therefore, we hold that Hirabai who was in possession of the suit properties till the commencement of the Act, obtained full ownership over them thereafter, and, therefore, after her death in 1967 her daughters viz., the two plaintiffs and defendant No. 1, would be the owners of the said properties. Since defendants Nos. 2 to 6 are in possession of the properties after Hirabai's death, the plaintiffs and defendant No. 1 would be entitled to recover possession of the same from them.

27. The appeal, therefore, succeeds, the order passed by the learned Civil Judge, Senior Division, Kolhapur, is set aside and a decree is passed in favour of the plaintiffs and defendant No. 1 for possession of the suit properties from defendants Nos. 2 to 6. Inquiry to be made under Order 20, Rule 12 (1) (c), Civil P. C. for mesne profits from the date of the suit. The plaintiffs shall get their costs in both the Courts from defendants Nos. 2 to 6.

Appeal succeeds.

Special Civil Appln. No. 1133 of 1964, D/- 18-6-1970.

Tenancy Laws — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (67 of 1948), Section 84-A, Second Proviso — Transfer resulting in eviction — The expression "Any person other than the tenant in actual possession" does not include a group of persons which includes a tenant in possession. (para 6)

Where a land is transferred by a landlord jointly in favour of a group of persons one of whom is a tenant and others non-tenants and the tenancy is not terminated it would result in eviction of the tenant from the share purchased by non-tenants if the effect is given to the transaction. It would be a transaction in favour of any person other than the tenant in actual possession within the proviso and would be invalid. The fact of non-tenant making a joint purchase with tenant will not change his status as non-tenant and a validation certificate would not be

Y. S. Chitale with D. K. Ghaisas, for Petitioners; M. V. Paranjpe with N. D. Hombalkar, for Opponents Nos. 1-A to 1-F and 2 to 4.

ORDER:— An interesting point of law that arises in this case is whether the expression "any person other than the tenant in actual possession" used in the second proviso to Section 84-A of the Tenancy Act would include a person other than a tenant jointly purchasing along with the tenant. The facts of this case which have led to this Special Civil Application are the following.

2. S. No. 59 of Sudawadi measuring about 106 acres belonged to the family of Natus which consisted of three branches. On December 18, 1948, an agreement was executed by two of the three branches, viz. Shankar and Harihar, for transfer of their one third share in the joint property to petitioner No. 1 and opponent No. 1. In pursuance of the agreement to sell, deeds of sale were executed on July 15, 1949 by Shankar and Harihar. Even vendor transferred his one-third share jointly in favour of petitioner No. 2 and Opponents Nos. 2 to 4 in one-half shares. Instead of the purchase being effected in the names of petitioner No. 1 and Opponent No. 1, it was effected in the names of their respective sons. The property, however, continued in the possession of the purchasers.

3. Civil Suit No. 158 of 1955 was filed by the present petitioners Nos. 1 and 2 against opponents Nos. 1 to 4 for partition and possession of their one-half share in the two thirds property purchased by them jointly. A contention was taken that the deeds were void under the Tenancy Act, as the purchase was effected by petitioner No. 1 and petitioner No. 2, neither of whom was a tenant. The petitioners, however, had taken up a contention that they were also the tenants. A reference was necessitated and the same was made by an order dated November 9, 1956.

4. In the reference, which was heard by the Revenue forum, petitioner No. 1 as well as opponent No. 1 were both held to be tenants. However, in Appeal No. 21 of 1957 decided on February 28, 1958, petitioner No. 1 was held to be a non-tenant. In order to validate the transaction, proceedings were taken by petitioner No. 1 on June 4, 1958, under Section 84-A for validation of the transaction. Ultimately, the District Deputy Collector by his order dated April 21, 1962, held that since the transaction resulted in the eviction of a tenant, a validation certificate could not be issued. This decision was confirmed by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal on March 3, 1964. The present petition is filed by the two petitioners original plaintiffs challenging the orders of the District Deputy Collector and the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal.

5. Mr. Chitale, who appears for the petitioners, contends that the provisions of Section 84-A have to be construed very strictly if the rights of a purchaser who has paid consideration have to be denied to him. According to Mr. Chitale, the provisions of the second proviso to Section 84-A of the Tenancy Act would not bar a validation certificate being issued to petitioner No. 2 for validating the transaction which was not valid when entered into. The proviso reads as follows:—

"Provided further that if any such transfer is made by the landlord in favour of any person other than the tenant in actual possession, and such transfer is made either after the unlawful eviction of such tenant, or results in the eviction of the tenant in actual possession; then, such transfer shall not be deemed to be validated....." I am not concerned with the rest of the proviso. The argument that was accepted by the District Deputy Collector and the Revenue Tribunal was that if the transaction was validated, then, in respect of one-half of two thirds, opponent No. 1, who was a tenant would be evicted. Both the authorities, therefore, held that the provisions of the second proviso squarely applied to the circumstances of this case. Mr. Chitale's argument, however, was that this would not be the correct position.

6. The expression "any person other than the tenant in actual possession" would not include a group of persons which includes the tenant in possession. If a group purchases the property and in the group one purchaser is a tenant in possession, then, according to Mr. Chitale, it cannot be urged that this is a transaction in favour of any person other than the tenant in possession. Since the possession is joint, each purchaser is entitled to contend that he has a share in the entire two-thirds purchased. Although his share may be delimited by one-half, still, since the property is held jointly, it cannot be held that the tenant is evicted from any particular piece of land out of the two thirds that was purchased. Mr. Chitale's argument, therefore, was that since the purchase was jointly made by some persons and amongst those persons there was one person who was the tenant in possession, the provisions of the proviso would not apply in the circumstances of the case.

7. In support of his contention, Mr. Chitale cited a decision of the Rajasthan High Court in Hari Pratap v. Ramgopal, AIR 1961 Raj 18. In the Rajasthan case, the facts were that a tenant of a shop had taken it on lease from three landlords. After being the tenant, he purchased the interest of one landlord. The two landlords thereafter filed a suit for possession by terminating the tenancy. The claim made by the landlords was that they were the landlords and the defendant was a tenant. The defendant had taken on tenancy the shop. The tenancy having been terminated, the two out of the three landlords were entitled to get possession of the entire shop. Their claim was negated by the High Court which held that at best the two landlords would be entitled to joint possession of two thirds share of the shop along with the one-third which remained with the tenant. This case has no application to the facts of the instant case. The facts of the Rajasthan case make it clear that if at all the tenancy continued after the purchase of one-third share by the tenant himself, the tenancy could only operate on two-thirds. It was therefore, held that the two landlords could only obtain what they had rented out and they were not entitled to obtain possession of what was rented out by the third landlord. In the instant case, however, the facts are that a purchase is effected by one group. The group includes a tenant. There is no termination of a tenancy which continued in the name of opponent No. 1 in spite of the purchase made by opponents Nos. 2 to 4 of one-half of the two-thirds. If, therefore, one-half of the two-thirds has been purchased by a person who is a non-tenant and it would result in the eviction of the tenant, if effect is given to the transaction, the case falls squarely within the provisions of the proviso to Section 84-A. The fact that the purchase is made jointly by a tenant and a non-tenant does not give additional right to the non-tenant. His status continues to be that of a non-tenant in spite of the fact that he had made a joint purchase along with the tenant.

8. A further argument was advanced by Mr. Chitale that the tenancy in respect of the two-thirds portion had been terminated as can be seen from the contentions made by the defendants in the suit. In the written statement a contention is made as follows:—
 “प्रतिवादी हा सर्व जमिनीपैकी २/३ हिस्साचा मालक व १/३ हिस्साचा कूळ आहे.”

Great reliance was placed on this submission in the written statement on behalf of opponent No. 1 that since the opponents or the defendants had become the owners of that two-thirds, the tenancy had automatically come to an end. This argument apparently looks quite good. But the statement made in the written statement cannot be dissociated from the circumstances under which it is made. The contention of the defendants in the suit was that the purchase was wholly effected by the opponent No. 1 who had paid the entire consideration and that no consideration had proceeded from the petitioners or either of them. On the basis of this submission, a further submission was made that the defendants had become the owners of two thirds. The plaintiff's contention, however, is that they are the owners of one-third and the question under Section 84-A has got to be construed by reference to what the petitioners contend. If the petitioners' contention is correct and the suit can proceed only on the basis that the same is correct, then the petitioners are the owners of one-half of the two-thirds. If that is so, the possession of that one-half of the two-thirds would definitely evict opponent No. 1. The District Deputy Collector and the Revenue Tribunal rightly took the view that the provisions of the proviso to Section 84-A would apply to the facts of this case and a validation certificate could not be issued.

(C) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11 — Interlocutory order — What is — Order made on Notice of Motion not necessarily interlocutory — Order dismissing Notice of Motion filed by defendant disallowing prayer claiming immunity as foreign Independent State under International Law is not interlocutory but final.

An interlocutory order is an order by way of an aid to the proper adjudication of the claims and disputes arising in the suit itself, for example orders by way of receiver, injunction, issuing of a commission for examination of witnesses, discovery, inspection, etc. Such orders do not finally dispose of any dispute or claim in the suit itself. The mere fact that an order has been made on a Notice of Motion cannot by itself lead to the conclusion that the order is an interlocutory order. It is the relief asked for and the order made thereon which determines whether a particular order is or is not an interlocutory order. The normal procedure in the High Court of Bombay for asking for a decree on admission or for a decree on award is by way of a Notice of Motion. If a decree is in fact passed on such a Notice of Motion, it cannot be said that the Motion and the order thereon were interlocutory. They clearly are final.

Where the relief asked for by the defendant in the notice of motion was dismissal of the suit in limine on the ground of immunity of the defendant as a foreign Sovereign State under International Law, the order rejecting the prayer in dismissing the Notice of Motion is not an interlocutory order but final order.

(Para 14)

(D) Letters Patent (Bom.), Cl. 15 — 'Judgment' — Order in the Notice of Motion in the suit filed on the Original Side of Bombay High Court refusing defendant's claim to immunity as foreign Sovereign State and want of jurisdiction against it is a judgment within Cl. 15 and is therefore appealable.

(Para 25)

The defendant as a result will be compelled to enter upon its defence on the merits of the cause of action and claim made in the suit. The defendant's claim to immunity has been finally negatived.

(Para 25)

A decision can, in certain circumstances, be a "judgment" and therefore appealable even if it affects an independent contention raised by the defendant, a contention which does not at all concern or raise a dispute about any part of the plaintiff's cause of action or claim in the suit. (E) Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 86, 87-A, 151 — Suit on Original Side of Bombay High Court — Claim by defendant to immunity from being sued in municipal courts as foreign Sovereign State — Procedure — Question can be raised on Notice of Motion — (X-Ref:— International Law — Private).

Although there is no specific procedure provided for a claim to immunity as a foreign Sovereign State in the Code of Civil Procedure or in the Original Side Rules of the Bombay High Court, basically it is necessary that a claim to immunity should be decided at the earliest opportunity and that the party who makes such a claim should have an opportunity to "move" the Court, i.e. apply to the court, for such an early decision.

(Para 29)

The only procedure by which the defendant could make and get an opportunity to establish its claim to immunity so far as the Original Side of the High Court of Bombay is concerned, would be by way of a Notice of Motion.

(Para 29)

The procedure by way of a Notice of Motion can be held to be the correct procedure by the Court even under its inherent powers under Section 151, Civil P. C. AIR 1932 Bom 271 & AIR 1966 Cal 319 (FB), Rel. on.

(Para 29)

The fact that the defendant has filed its written statement does not by itself make any difference. A foreign Sovereign State which claims such immunity need not file any written statement at all till the claim for immunity, if raised, has been adjudicated upon and rejected.

(Para 29)

(F) Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 86, 87-A — Doctrine of immunity of foreign Sovereign State from being sued in municipal courts under International Law — Principles apply in India but as modified by S. 86 — (X-Ref:— International Law (Private)).

A foreign Sovereign State is entitled to immunity from being sued in municipal courts under the principles of International Law. The principles of International Law would be applicable in India, but in its application Section 86 creates an exception. In International Law the immunity is absolute, subject only to the exception or exceptions recognised in International Law, one of such exceptions being when the foreign Sovereign State waives the privilege of immunity. Section 86 creates another exception, the exception being where the requisite consent is given by the Government of India as provided under Section 86. But the provisions of Section 86 would to that extent operate as another exception and to that extent modify the principles of International Law. But subject to such exception the relevant principle of International Law would still be applicable in India. AIR 1966 SC 230, Foll; (1921) 3 KB 532 & 1924 AC 797 & 1939 AC 256 & (1967) 1 AC 853 & AIR 1962 SC 797, Ref.; Observations that principles of International Law have no application whatever in India in AIR 1966 Cal 319 (FB) held overruled by AIR 1966 SC 230. (Para 49)

The doctrine has yet not been curtailed in England to exclude its applicability to commercial transactions. If the doctrine which is well established for over a large number of years requires, in view of changed circumstances, to be at all modified in India, it is highly desirable that the Supreme Court as the highest Court of the land should, in a proper case, lay down the principles. (Para 43)

The Court should obtain the necessary information about recognition of a foreign Sovereign State, whether de facto or de jure, from the Government of India. The Court has to reach a decision on the relevant information made available to the Court by the Government of our country. (Para 36)

The recognition, de jure or de facto, has the same value for the purpose of deciding whether a particular foreign State is a Sovereign State and is entitled to immunity under International Law or not. Order of Vimadalal, J. dated 18-9-1970 on Notice of Motion dated 14-8-1970 Reversed. (Para 47)

MODY, J.:— (14th Oct. 1970): This is an appeal against the Order of Vimadalal, J. dt. 18th September 1970 passed by him on the Notice of Motion dated 14th August 1970 dismissing the Notice of Motion.

2. The suit in which the Notice of Motion was taken out was filed on 5th June 1969. The plaintiffs are a company carrying on business in Fertilizers. There are three defendants to the suit. It is stated in the plaint that the first defendant is a body corporate controlled by and/or is a department of the second defendant. The second defendant is the German Democratic Republic. The third defendant is a Bank and is not directly concerned in the Notice of Motion. The plaintiffs entered into two contracts in writing with the first defendant for sale and supply of certain goods as more particularly mentioned in the two contracts. It is stated in the plaint, as also in the main contracts, that the same were within the frame work of the Trade Agreement dated 18th December 1959 between the Government of the 2nd defendant and the Government of India. It is further averred in the plaint that there was an implied term of each of the two contracts that any agreement which may subsequently be arrived at between the Government of India and the 2nd defendant in connection with the exports from the 2nd defendant to India and from India to the second defendant under the Trade Agreement would be binding between the plaintiffs and the first defendant. The plaintiffs claim by this suit from the first and 2nd defendants a sum of over Rs. 20,00,000/- as and by way of payment of the balance of the price payable to the plaintiffs. Although the contracts were entered into between the plaintiffs and the 1st defendant, the plaintiffs seek to make the 2nd defendant liable on the ground that the first defendant was merely a Department of the second defendant.

3. After the Writ of Summons was served on the second defendant, the second defendant filed an appearance in the suit specifically stating therein that it was under protest. Thereafter the second defendant filed its written statement. It is stated in the first paragraph of the written statement that the second defendant has filed the written statement under protest and without prejudice to the rights and the contention of the second defendant that this Court had no jurisdiction to try or entertain or dispose of the suit against the second defendant for the reasons therein stated. The reasons stated are that the second defendant is a Sovereign Independent State and that all Sovereign States are subject to International Law and enjoy immunity according to the general principles of International Law. It is further stated in the written statement that for many years the Government of India has treated the second defendant as a Sovereign Independent State and has continued to do so and that since the year 1954 there have been several Trade Agreements between the Government of India and the Government of the second defendant. It is further stated that in order to look after certain commercial interests of the Government of India in the second defendant it was agreed that if and when a Trade Representative is appointed he will enjoy the same rights and privileges that are accorded to the Trade Representation of the second defendant in India and that in pursuance of that agreement a Trade Representation of the second defendant was set up in India and that it continues to enjoy diplomatic privileges of cypher and mail bag, as also certain other privileges. Later in the written statement, in its paragraphs 10 and 11, it is stated that the suit having been filed without prior consent of the Government of India as contemplated under Section 86 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the suit against the second defendant is liable to be dismissed.

After taking such preliminary objections and after again specifically stating that in the event of the Court holding that the second defendant was not immune from the process of this Court, the written statement contains averments on the facts and submissions contained in the plaint. In support of its claim for immunity under International Law, the Written Statement relies upon certain Statements made by three Prime Ministers of India, being Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, Lal Bahadur Shastri and Mrs. Indira Gandhi. The first is a statement made by Jawaharlal Nehru on 17th August 1961 in the Lok Sabha, as appearing from the "Lok Sabha Debates" to the effect that "India had trade relations with the East German Government that de facto India recognised it and that they have got a Trade Representative in India and that India is dealing with them in many ways." The second is also a Statement made by Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru on 2nd September 1961 as appearing in "Jawaharlal Nehru's Speeches", Volume Four, to the effect that it seemed to him obvious that certain facts of life should be recognised, that there are two independent entities; the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany and the Government of the German Democratic Republic. The same position was reiterated by Lal Bahadur Shastri in the Indo-Soviet Communique issued by him jointly with his Soviet counterpart, specifically stating that at that time the fact of the existence of the two German States could not be ignored. The same position was again re-affirmed in the Indo-Soviet Communique dated 16th July 1966 to which Mrs. Indira Gandhi was one of the two parties.

4. Thereafter the second defendant took out a Chamber Summons dated 10th March 1970 praying for an order that the issues mentioned in the Schedule "A" to that Summons, with or without modifications, be tried and determined as preliminary issues so far as the second defendant was concerned and a date may be fixed for hearing of the preliminary issues. The four issues mentioned in the said Schedule "A" are:—

(1) Whether the defendant No. 2 enjoys immunity according to the general principles of International Law?

(2) If the answer to the first issue is in affirmative, then, whether this Honourable Court has jurisdiction to try or entertain or dispose of the suit?

(3) Whether the suit against the defendant No. 2 is barred by the provisions of Section 86 of the Code of Civil Procedure?

(4) If the answer to issue No. 3 is in affirmative, whether this Honourable Court has jurisdiction to try or entertain or dispose of the suit?"

5. By his order dated 16th March 1970 Kantawala, J. dismissed that Chamber Summons. The second defendant's appeal against that order was dismissed by the Appellate Court on 6th July 1970 on the ground that the order of dismissal of the Chamber Summons was not a judgment within the meaning of Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent of this Hon'ble Court and was therefore not appealable.

6. Thereafter the second defendant took out a Notice of Motion dated 14th August 1970, the two substantive reliefs prayed for therein being—

"(a) That the suit herein filed by the plaintiffs against the defendant No. 2 be dismissed;

(b) In the alternative to prayer (a) above this Honourable Court would be pleased to pass an order that the issues mentioned in Schedule 'A' herein with or without modification be tried and determined as preliminary issues as far as defendant No. 2 is concerned."

The issues in the said Annexure "A" are the same identical four issues which were mentioned in the Annexure "A" to the said Chamber Summons and which we have re-produced above in our judgment.

7. To the affidavit in support of that Notice of Motion is annexed a copy of the letter dated 1st April 1970 addressed by the Attorneys of the second defendant to the Secretary, Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, New Delhi. The letter referred to the present suit and the second defendant's contention about its immunity under International Law as well as under Section 86 of the Code of Civil Procedure and requests for answers to the two questions mentioned in that letter. The first question was whether, inter alia, the plaintiffs in this suit had made any application to the Government of India under the said Section 86 for filing this suit and what was the answer given by the Government of India. The second question was whether the German Democratic Republic was recognised de facto by the Government of India. There is also annexed to the affidavit a copy of the letter dated 1st August 1970 which is a letter in reply to the said letter dated 1st April 1970. The reply states:

"This is to certify that the Government of India has de facto relations with the German Democratic Republic. Accordingly that Government should enjoy immunity from jurisdiction of the local courts in suits and other proceedings similar to those enjoyed by any other Government, unless that Government has expressly waived its immunity."

The letter is addressed from the Legal and Treaties Division of the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, New Delhi, and bears the signature "K. K. Chopra", the Law Officer in that Department. The affidavit states that on 3rd August 1970 Mr. Swaran Singh, the Minister of External Affairs, Government of India, had, inter alia, made an announcement in the Parliament as follows:—

"The stage has now come when we feel that our growing economic, commercial and cultural relations should be reflected officially by the establishment of consular relations."

8. In the affidavit in reply filed on behalf of the plaintiffs on that Notice of Motion it was contended that the certificate dated 1st August 1970 purported to be issued by Mr. K. K. Chopra was not issued by or on behalf of the Government of India and that in any event it was not a certificate of which judicial notices can at all be taken and that the certificate went no further than the said statements made by Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru.

9. In view of the said contention raised in the plaintiffs' affidavit in reply about the said certificate dated 1st August 1970, the second defendant obtained another certificate dated 15th September 1970 and annexed a copy of it to its affidavit in rejoinder. The certificate shows that it was issued by the Under Secretary, Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, over the signature of Mr. Girish Dhume as Under Secretary. The certificate states that it was in continuation of the said certificate dated 1st August 1970 of Mr. K. K. Chopra, the Law Officer of that Ministry, and that Mr. Girish Dhume was directed on behalf of the Government of India to certify that the Government of India had and continues to have de facto relations with the German Democratic Republic and that accordingly that Government should enjoy immunity from jurisdiction of the local courts in suits and other proceedings similar to those enjoyed by any other Government unless that Government has expressly waived its immunity. To that affidavit in rejoinder is annexed another letter dated 18th August 1970 from the Foreign Secretary, Ministry of External Affairs, New Delhi, to the Consulate General of the second defendant, New Delhi. It states that following the establishment of the Consulate General of the second defendant in India at New Delhi all the appropriate authorities in India were being informed about the change in the status of the Regional Trade Representation of the second defendant at Bombay, Calcutta and Madras to that of Consulates of the second defendant and about the appointment of Mr. Herbert Fischer as their Consul General at New Delhi. It further states that the Government of India presumed that necessary facilities would be accorded for the establishment of an equal number of Indian Consulates in the German Democratic Republic on a reciprocal basis as and when the Government of India decided to establish such Consulates.

10. As stated earlier, Vimadala, J. by his said order under appeal dismissed the Notice of Motion.

11. It is necessary to bear in mind the exact applications made by the Notice of Motion and the contents of the order made thereon. Before the Notice of Motion was taken out, an application had been made by the earlier Chamber Summons for the trial of the same four issues again repeated in the Notice of Motion as preliminary issues. The four issues divide themselves into two groups, issues Nos. 1 and 2 relating to the claim for immunity under International Law and issues Nos. 3 and 4 relating to the contention for dismissal of the suit in view of the provisions of Section 86 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That Chamber Summons had been dismissed, as also the second defendant's appeal in respect of the same. In view of those facts the same relief was again asked for by the Notice of Motion, but as prayer (b) thereof and in the alternative to prayer (a). It is clear that prayer (a) was made to predominate over prayer (b). By prayer (a) the 2nd defendant invited the court to dismiss the plaintiffs' suit. Prayer (a) was a new prayer and distinct from prayer (b). The object sought to be achieved by each of those two prayers (a) and (b) was similar, but there was a little distinction which should not go unnoticed. Prayer (b) only sought that the four issues be tried as preliminary issues and made an application for fixation of the date of such trial of preliminary issues. If either of the two groups of issues were tried as preliminary issues and either of them succeeded, the second defendant would achieve its object of having the entire suit dismissed as against itself. But that would happen only if and when the four issues were ordered to be tried as preliminary issues and were actually tried as such. But such a result depended on the issues being tried as preliminary issues. Prayer (a) went a step further and invited the Courts to dismiss the suit as against the second defendant at the stage of the Notice of Motion itself, in limine, without raising any preliminary issues.

(15th October 1970).

12. This distinction between the two prayers will have to be borne in mind when considering the arguments advanced before us in this appeal.

13. Mr. Nariman, the learned Counsel for the respondents, raised a preliminary objection, the same being that no appeal lies because of two grounds: The first ground is that on a construction of the Order under appeal, the Order does not dispose of prayer (a) and that prayer (a) is yet to be decided. The second ground is that the Order under appeal is not a "judgment" within the meaning of Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and that it is therefore not appealable. In order to appreciate these two contentions it is necessary to know the exact phraseology of the Order under appeal. It is as follows:—

"Notice of Motion dismissed with costs on two grounds:—

(i) It is barred by the principles of res judicata in view of the order passed by Kantawala, J. on 16-3-1970 (AIR 1960 SC 941 and AIR 1964 SC 993). In my opinion, there are no new facts which would make the principles of res judicata inapplicable.

(ii) Even if the subsequent correspondence now relied upon is taken to be in the nature of 'new facts' the same do not disclose any clear recognition of the 2nd defendant within the terms of Section 87-A (1) (a) of the Civil P. C., and the question still remains a question of fact, in regard to which, it is well settled, no preliminary issues can be framed or tried."

The operative part of the Order makes it clear that what is dismissed is the entire Notice of Motion, which would include both prayers (a) and (b). It is true, as pointed out by Mr. Nariman, that if the said four issues were to be tried either as issues in the suit itself or even as preliminary issues, a regular hearing would have to take place and it would have been open to the parties to lead such evidence as they wanted to. But so far as the first two of the said four issues are concerned, both prayers, prayer (b) as well as prayer (a), concern the same (relief) (sic). Prayer (b) was merely for a direction that the first two issues be tried as preliminary issues and for fixing a date of hearing for that purpose. But, as seen earlier, prayer (a) is, in a sense, totally different. Prayer (a) does not seek the decision of the first two issues as preliminary issues, but invites the Court in limine to dismiss the suit at the stage of the hearing of the Notice of Motion itself without the raising of any issues or trying any of them as a preliminary issue. Now the first ground stated by the learned Judge in support of his order is that the Notice of Motion was barred by the principles of res judicata in view of the orders made on the Chamber Summons and in the appeal against that Order. An analysis of these two orders on the Chamber Summons shows that the second defendant's application for trial of the four issues as preliminary issues was rejected. Prayer (b) sought to re-agitate for the same relief and it was held to be barred by res judicata. Prayer (a), however, was different. The earlier decision on the Chamber Summons was a refusal to try these issues as preliminary issues. It did not deal with the point as to whether the suit should be dismissed in limine. As a matter of fact no such application had been made. That being the position, it would be erroneous to say that prayer (a) was barred by the principles of res judicata. Prayer (a) had therefore to be disposed of on its own merits. The result, however, of the dismissal of prayer (a) of the Notice of Motion now is that that application has been heard on the Notice of Motion and disposed of. Even if the hearing of the suit proceeds, the said issues Nos. 1 and 2 will be deemed to have been disposed of on the Notice of Motion itself and will not be allowed to be re-agitated at the hearing. The effect of the order dismissing prayer (a) is therefore, that so far as the suit is concerned, the claim of the second defendant to immunity as a foreign Sovereign State has been finally disposed of and the only way the second defendant can agitate the same is by way of an appeal and certainly not in the suit itself.

14. Mr. Nariman also contended that the Order under appeal is an interlocutory order. In our opinion, there is no substance in this contention. An interlocutory order is an order by way of an aid to the proper adjudication of the claims and disputes arising in the suit itself, for example, orders by way of receiver, injunction, issuing of a commission for examination of witnesses, discovery, inspection, etc. Such orders do not finally dispose of any dispute or claim in the suit itself. This entire contention of Mr. Nariman appears to originate in the fact that the order has been made on a Notice of Motion. In our opinion, the mere fact that an order has been made on a Notice of Motion cannot by itself lead to the conclusion that the order is an interlocutory order. It is the relief asked for and the order made thereon which determines whether a particular order is or is not an interlocutory order. The normal procedure in this High Court for asking for a decree on admission or for a decree on award is by way of a Notice of Motion. If a decree is in fact passed on such a Notice of Motion, it cannot be said that the Motion and the order thereon were interlocutory. They clearly are final. Therefore, looking to the nature of the relief asked for by prayer (a) and the order made thereon, it is clear that the second defendant's claim to immunity has been finally disposed of so far as the hearing of the suit itself is concerned. It now remains to be considered whether the order under appeal is a "judgment" within the meaning of Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and is therefore appealable.

15. So far as the order disposing of prayer (b) is concerned, the order is identical to that made on the Chamber Summons. In the appeal filed against that order it has already been held by a Division Bench that it is not a judgment and is therefore not appealable. That judgment is binding upon us. We must therefore hold that the order dismissing prayer (b) is for the same reasons not appealable. There is, however, another point of view from which the order dismissing prayer (b) can be looked at. The learned Judge has dismissed prayer (b) on the ground that it is res judicata. That aspect has, however, not been pressed into service by either party and we need not therefore consider the same. We, therefore, hold that the order dismissing prayer (b) is not a "judgment" and is therefore not appealable. The consideration of the preliminary objection that the order is not appealable must, therefore, be confined to the extent that it dismisses prayer (a).

16. The order under appeal has been passed by a Single Judge of this High Court sitting on the Original Side. In order to be appealable, that order must amount to a "judgment" within the meaning of Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent of this High Court. A similar provision appears in the Letters Patent of various High Courts in India and there is a wide divergence of opinion between different High Courts as to the interpretation of that word "judgment." As far back as in 1872, in the case of The Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. The Oriental Gas Company, (1872) 8 Beng LR 433, the Chief Justice Sir Richard Couch said:

"We think that 'judgment' in Cl. 15 means a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability. It may be either final, or preliminary, or interlocutory, the difference between them being that a final judgment determines the whole cause or suit, and a preliminary or interlocutory judgment determines only a part of it, leaving other matters to be determined."

17. The interpretation of that word "judgment" again arose before the same High Court a couple of years later in Hadjee Ismail Hadjee Hubbeeb v. Hadjee Mahomed Hadjee Joosub, (1874) 13 Beng LR 91. The order which fell for consideration in that case was an order refusing to rescind leave granted under Cl 12 of the Letters Patent. The order was held to be a "judgment" because it went to the whole subject-matter of the suit and decided whether the suit was to go on or not. These two judgments and interpretation put on the word "judgment" by the Calcutta High Court has consistently been followed in this High Court upto now. Some other High Courts have, however, put a different interpretation on the word "judgment", but in view of the Calcutta High Court and this High Court having taken the view which they have taken for such a long time, it is not necessary to refer to the judgments of other High Courts taking any other view.

18. In Jivanlal v. P. R. Vakharia and Co., AIR 1933 Bom 85, a Division Bench of this High Court held that the decision of a Judge under Section 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure is a "judgment" within Cl. 15 as it was not a mere order relating to the procedure in the suit and as it affected the question whether the Court had jurisdiction to entertain a suit which involved a determination of a right of a party who might be adversely affected if the court determined that it had jurisdiction and that it was therefore appealable as a "judgment" under Cl. 15. Apart from saying that it was not a procedural order, the test adopted was that the question involved was whether the court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and secondly, that it would involve the determination of the party's right adversely affected by it. If the order for stay was granted, the party's right to litigate that suit in the court in which it was filed would get stayed as provided for under Section 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It therefore affected the party's right to proceed or not to proceed with the suit before the forum in which it was filed.

19. The same point arose for consideration before a Division Bench of this High Court in Jai Hind Iron Mart v. Tulsiram, 54 Bom LR 844 = (AIR 1953 Bom 117). It was held that an order refusing stay under Section 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure is a "judgment" and therefore appealable under Cl. 15 on the same ground, viz., that the order was not merely procedural, but was an order dealing with the jurisdiction of the Court.

20. Later on the identical point arose before the Calcutta High Court and a Division Bench of that High Court in Sohrab Modi v. Mansata Film Distributors, AIR 1957 Cal 727, held that an order refusing stay of a suit under Section 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure was appealable as a "judgment" under Cl. 15 because it affected the question of jurisdiction of the court to entertain or proceed with a suit or proceeding and the decision on that question affected the merits of the controversy between the parties because an order refusing to stay involved assumption of jurisdiction and in so far as it negated the defendant's contention that the suit cannot be proceeded with and upheld the plaintiff's claim that the suit must proceed, it affected the merits of a part of the controversy between the parties, the particular controversy being a controversy in the suit as to where the subject-matter should be tried.

21. In Ashrumati Debi v. Rupendra Deb, AIR 1953 SC 198, an occasion arose for the Supreme Court to interpret the word "judgment" as occurring in Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent of the Calcutta High Court. The order which fell for consideration before the Supreme Court was an order for transfer of a suit under Cl. 13 of the Letters Patent. It was held that such an order for transfer neither affected the merits of the controversy between the parties to the suit itself, nor did it terminate or dispose of the suit on any ground and that it was therefore not a "judgment" and not appealable. The divergent views of the different High Courts as to the interpretation of the word "judgment" were pointed out in that case before the Supreme Court, but after referring to some of them the Supreme Court has rested content by deciding the particular case which arose before it without laying down any general interpretation which directly or impliedly resolves such divergence of opinion between different High Courts. In our opinion, therefore, the earlier judgments of this High Court on the point continue to apply with full effect without in any way being doubted or shaken by this particular judgment of the Supreme Court.

22. Mr. Nariman, however, relied upon a judgment of a Division Bench of this High Court in Govardhan Lalji v. Chandraprabhavati, 27 Bom LR 1496 = (AIR 1926 Bom 136). In the judgment delivered by him on behalf of the Bench Macleod, C. J. has, after considering certain judgments cited before him, observed:—

"After considering very carefully what was set forward as a definition of 'judgment' in that case, I prefer myself to consider each decision as it comes before me, and to form my own opinion whether it is a judgment or not for the purpose of deciding whether an appeal lies."

This remark occurring in this very judgment, as also a perusal of the judgment generally, show that the decision in that case was confined to the facts of that case and cannot be of any assistance by way of yielding a principle for determination of the meaning of "judgment" as it occurs in Cl. 15.

23. The ratio of the three above decisions holding that an order refusing to stay a suit under Section 10 is a "judgment" is that the decision refusing to stay affected the merits of a part of the controversy between the parties and finally decided the question as to jurisdiction of the court. The point to notice is that the order refusing stay did not concern any controversy as to procedure in the suit and what is more, it did not dispose of any dispute raised by the defendant as to the facts constituting the plaintiff's cause of action or any claim made by the plaintiff in the suit. The defendant's application for stay totally bypassed any contention as to the cause of action and the claim of the plaintiff in the suit. These three decisions are instances where what was in controversy between the parties and what was decided by the order under appeal in each of them, did not concern the plaintiff's cause of action or claim in the suit, but concerned a totally independent contention urged by the defendant as to whether the suit should at all be allowed to be proceeded with. We have, therefore, not referred to the decisions of the Calcutta High Court or of this Court which have determined the meaning of "judgment" from other view points, for example, as to whether the decision partly or wholly decided the case or finally decided only a part of the plaintiff's claim in suit because what was considered was the plaintiff's claim and whether it was wholly or partly decided or whether it was finally decided or not.

24. A decision can, in certain circumstances, be a "judgment" and therefore appealable even if it affects an independent contention raised by the defendant, a contention which does not at all concern or raise a dispute about any part of the plaintiff's cause of action or claim in the suit. As a matter of fact, the point decided in the said case of Hadjee Ismail Hadjee Hubbeeb v. Hadjee Mahomed Hadjee Joosub, (1874) 13 Beng LR 91, was that an order refusing to revoke the leave granted under Cl. 12 of the Letters Patent was a "judgment" and the ratio was that it was appealable as it affected the jurisdiction of the court. Similar was the position in the case of R. N. Airline Corpn. v. Manorama, AIR 1966 Cal 319. It was an appeal against an order of a Single Judge of the Calcutta High Court refusing the defendant's application for dismissal of the suit made on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit because of the Sovereign immunity claimed by the defendant Corporation as a department of a foreign Sovereign State, and the Appellate Court held that as the judgment under appeal had determined a right or liability affecting the merits of the controversy between the parties and as the decision affected the whole subject-matter of the suit and decided the question whether the suit was to go on or not, it was a "judgment" within the meaning of Cl. 15.

25. In the case before us the position is identical as that in the last case referred to decided by the Calcutta High Court. The point decided by the refusal of prayer (a) on the Notice of Motion is, as noticed earlier, that the second defendant's claim as to immunity and want of jurisdiction against it has been finally disposed of adversely to the second defendant. The second defendant, as a result, will be compelled to enter upon its defence on the merits of the cause of action and claim made in the suit. The second defendant's claim to immunity has been finally negated. It is, therefore, in our opinion, a "judgment" within the meaning of Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and is therefore appealable.

26. Mr. Amin, the learned Counsel for the second defendant, contended that the second defendant is entitled to immunity as a foreign Sovereign State, firstly, under the principles of International Law and, secondly, in view of the provisions of Section 86 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

27. So far as the second claim under Section 86 is concerned, it was sought to be tried as preliminary issues, being issues Nos. 3 and 4 of the four issues referred to earlier. The Chamber Summons making that application was dismissed and so was the appeal filed against the same dismissed. Prayer (b) of the Notice of Motion in so far as it concerns the said issues Nos. 3 and 4 is identical. The effect of the order of dismissal of the Chamber Summons and the appeal against the order thereon is that those two issues will have to be dealt with at the hearing of the suit. The Notice of Motion merely repeats that prayer and as no appeal lies against the order dismissing that prayer, we hold that it is not competent for the second defendant to again agitate it in this appeal against the order passed on the Notice of Motion. The result is that what remains to be considered in this appeal is the claim for immunity as made by the 2nd defendant in prayer (a) of the Notice of Motion.

28. In respect of this contention which survives for our determination Mr. Nariman advanced two contentions. The first was that it is an issue in the suit itself and that it was not competent to the second defendant to raise the point and invite its decision on a Notice of Motion. His second contention was that in view of the provisions of Section 86 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the privilege of claiming immunity as a foreign Sovereign State, even to the extent that may be available under the principles of International Law, is not available in India.

29. So far as the first contention of Mr. Nariman is concerned, he argued that even the claim for absolute immunity under International Law can be tried only at the hearing of the suit as there is no procedure in India permitting it to be tried otherwise. He pointed out that in England a specific procedure is provided for under O. 22, R. 8, of the Supreme Court Rules as applicable in 1970, the corresponding provision prior thereto being contained in O. 22, R. 30. He pointed out that the procedure so provided is by way of an application to set aside the Writ. Now it is true that there is no specific provision in India corresponding to the said provision in England either in the Code of Civil Procedure or in the Rules of this Court applicable on its Original Side. Procedural rules are, however, only to secure a fair and orderly determination of claims to substantive rights, whether made in a suit or in any other legal proceeding. In the matter before us the second defendant claims immunity from being sued in this court. That claim is a claim to a substantive right. From the nature of things it is obvious that it is necessary to decide that claim first as, if that claim is upheld, it would obviate the necessity of the second defendant being compelled to defend the suit on other points and having to undergo all the procedure like discovery, inspection, participating at the trial by cross-examination and leading its own evidence and possibly an appeal or appeals thereafter against the decision in the suit. It is true that the second defendant has in fact filed its written statement and the claim for immunity has been made in it at the forefront. The point about waiver of the immunity has not been advanced. Now the fact that the second defendant has filed its written statement does not, by itself, so far as this point is concerned, make any difference. A foreign Sovereign State which claims such immunity need not file any written statement at all till the claim for immunity, if raised, has been adjudicated upon and rejected. Although there is no specific procedure provided in the Code of Civil Procedure or in the Original Side Rules of this Court basically it is necessary that a claim to immunity should be decided at the earliest opportunity and that the party who makes such a claim should have an opportunity to "move" the Court, i.e., apply to the court, for such a early decision. Now a Notice of Motion means, as the very phrase indicates, that a person gives notice to all the concerned parties that the applicant, who usually is, though not necessarily so, a party to the suit intends to make a "motion", i.e., "move" the Court for the reliefs mentioned in the notice which is given. Some applications are permitted under the Original Side Rules to be made if they are of the nature specified in Rule 89 by way of a Chamber Summons. Applications not falling within the items specified in R. 89 must, if the suit or legal proceeding in which they are to be made is not on a daily board, be made in open court and the only procedure followed in the High Court for making such an application is by way of a notice of motion. There are provisions in the original Side Rules which mention specifically some of such applications as having to be made by way of a notice of motion, as, for example, receiver, injunction, decree on award, etc. Such provisions requiring the procedure of a Notice of Motion are, however, not exhaustive. By long practice many other applications like, for example, those for recording a compromise, for a decree on admission, for setting aside a decree, for committal for contempt of court and a host of others are made by way of Notices of Motion. Justice requires that the 2nd defendant should be allowed to apply for an early determination of its claim for immunity in order to avoid the necessity of defending the claims made in the suit as mentioned earlier. In our opinion, therefore, the only procedure by which the 2nd defendant could make and get an opportunity to establish its claim to immunity so far as the Original Side of this High Court is concerned, would be by way of a Notice of Motion. We, therefore, hold that the procedure by way of a Notice of Motion adopted in this case by the 2nd defendant was the correct procedure. But it may be stated that even if we had reached a contrary conclusion, we would have yet held the procedure to be correct in the exercise of our inherent powers under Section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The judgment in B. Mohanlal & Co. v. A. Yolibai, 34 Bom LR 714 = (AIR 1932 Bom 271) is an authority for the proposition that where the rules of procedure do not provide for any specific procedure to be followed, the procedure by way of a Notice of Motion can be held to be the correct procedure by the Court under its inherent powers under Section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure. A similar view was also taken by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in AIR 1966 Cal 319 where it was held that although there is no provision in the Code for the foreign Government entering a conditional appearance to the suit as is provided for in the Supreme Court Rules in England, nor is there provision in the Code of Civil Procedure for giving notice of motion for an order that the Writ should be set aside on the ground that it had impleaded a foreign Sovereign State, the procedure by way of a Notice of Motion is the correct procedure and that a foreign Ruler or a foreign State directly or indirectly impleaded in the proceedings filed in a court in India would not be left without any remedy by the absence of any specific procedure in the Code of Civil Procedure. It was further held that since laws are general rules, they cannot regulate all cases that may possibly happen and any particular point not specifically dealt with must be governed by general principles.

30. Mr. Nariman's second contention was that the doctrine of immunity of a foreign Sovereign State as available under International Law is not available in India in view of the provisions of Sections 86 and 87-A of the Code of Civil Procedure. Before dealing with this point, we will first consider what is the position in International Law.

31. The doctrine of immunity of a foreign Sovereign State from being sued in the Municipal Courts of England was recognised in Aksionairnoye Obschestvo A. M. Luther v. James Sagor & Co., (1921) 3 KB 532. That case further lays down certain principles which are of help to us in deciding this case. The first is that the Courts in England will not inquire into the validity of the acts of a foreign government which has been recognised by the Government of England. The second principle is that in that respect whether the foreign government has been recognised as a Government de jure or de facto would make no difference. The third point to be noted from this judgment is that evidence about the status of being a foreign Sovereign State was allowed to be led not only during the hearing of the appeal, but even "since writing the judgment."

32. The doctrine of immunity in International Law was again recognised in England in the judgment of the House of Lords in Duff Development Co. v. Kelantan Government, (1924) AC 797. Moreover, it was held in that case that it was the settled practice of the Courts in England to take judicial notice of the status of any foreign Government and for that purpose, in any case of uncertainty, to seek information from a Secretary of State; and the information so received was conclusive. In his Speech Viscount Cave observed:—

"No doubt the engagements entered into by a State may be of such a character as to limit and quality, or even to destroy, the attributes of sovereignty and independence x x x x x; and the precise point at which sovereignty disappears and dependence begins may sometimes be difficult to determine. But where such a question arises it is desirable that it should be determined not by the Courts, which must decide on legal principles only, but by the Government of the country, which is entitled to have regard to all the circumstances of the case. Indeed, the recognition or non-recognition by the British Government of a State as a sovereign State has itself a close bearing on the question whether it is to be regarded as sovereign in our courts. In the present case the reply of the Secretary of State shows clearly that notwithstanding the engagements entered into by the Sultan of Kelantan with the British Government that Government continues to recognise the Sultan as a sovereign and independent ruler, and that His Majesty does not exercise or claim any rights of sovereignty or jurisdiction over that country. If after this definite statement a different view were taken by a British Court, an undesirable conflict might arise; and, in my opinion, it is the duty of the Court to accept the statement of the Secretary of the State thus clearly and positively made as conclusive proof upon the point."

33. Later, in his Speech Viscount Finlay observed:—

"It is settled law that it is for the court to take judicial cognizance of the status of any foreign Government. If there can be any doubt on the matter the practice is for the court to receive information from the appropriate department of His Majesty's Government, and the information so received is conclusive. x x x x x Such information is not in the nature of evidence; it is a statement by the Sovereign of this country through one of his Ministers upon a matter which is peculiarly within his cognizance."

34. The principle of immunity of a foreign Sovereign State in International Law was again re-affirmed by the House of Lords in the Spain Republic v. Arantzazu Mendi, (1939) AC 256. A perusal of the Speeches in that case shows that the procedure followed for ascertaining whether the foreign State was a Sovereign State was by the Court directing a letter to be written to the Foreign Office asking whether the particular Government of the foreign state was recognised by the English Government as a Sovereign State and placing reliance on the information received by way of a reply to that letter.

35. The same doctrine was again recognised in England in the judgment of the House of Lords in Carl Zeiss Stiftung v. Rayner & Keeler Ltd. (No. 2), (1967) 1 AC 853. It so transpired that in that case no point was originally taken as to whether the English Government had recognised de jure or de facto the German Democratic Republic or its Government or as to the application in the English Courts of the East German legislation or decrees. In the appeal to the Court of Appeal, however, a request was made that a letter be written to the Foreign Secretary requesting him to certify whether, inter alia, the English Government had granted recognition de jure or de facto to the German Democratic Republic or its Government and if yes, when. A contention having been urged before the House of Lords about the evidence having been produced for the first time only before the Court of Appeal, the House of Lords held that recognition was a matter which the Court of its own motion was bound to consider and that therefore the information so received could be relied upon. The point for determination, shortly stated, was whether the Court was bound to have regard to the basis on which the German Democratic Republic purported to act and that as the English Government had never granted recognition de jure or de facto to that Republic or its Government, the English Court must refuse to recognise as effective all legislation emanating from it, and all acts done under such legislation. Now what had happened in that case was that the information received by the court mentioned a part of the history since after the Second World War and what had happened as regards the coming into existence of the German Democratic Republic. The House of Lords, after analysing all the contents of the certificate, observed that the U. S. S. R. may have purported to confer independence or sovereignty on the German Democratic Republic, but that the certificate clearly required the Court to hold that whatever the U. S. S. R. may have purported to do, they did not in fact set up the German Democratic Republic as a Sovereign or independent State and that as the U. S. S. R. retained their right to govern its territory, they could not possibly have done so and the certificate required the Court to hold that they did retain that right. The House of Lords further held that if they were bound to hold that the German Democratic Republic was not in fact set up as a Sovereign independent State, the only other possibility was that it was set up as a dependent or subordinate organization through which the U. S. S. R. was entitled to exercise governing authority indirectly.

36. It should not go unnoticed that the decision of the House of Lords just referred to dealt with the German Democratic Republic, which appears in this suit also as the second defendant. Now this decision of the House of Lords does not in any way militate against the doctrine of immunity of the foreign Sovereign State. It also re-affirms that Court should obtain the necessary information about recognition of a foreign Sovereign State whether de facto or de jure from the Government of England. In that case it was held that the German Democratic Republic was not recognised by the British Government as an independent, i.e., Sovereign, State. Now it must be borne in mind that that conclusion was reached because of the contents of the certificate given by the British Government. The Court analysed the contents of that certificate and on the statements contained therein reached the conclusion which it did as mentioned by us earlier. As the conclusion reached in that case is in respect of the same foreign Government with which we are concerned, viz., the second defendant, two points have to be borne in mind. The first point is that the Court has to reach a decision on the relevant information made available to the Court from the Government of the country of that Court. We cannot reach the same conclusion as was reached by the House of Lords merely on the basis of the information supplied in that case to the English Court by the British Government. What we will have to rely upon is the information supplied to this Court by the Government of our country. The second point to be borne in mind is that it is the principles of International Law under which the second defendant has made a claim to immunity. It is a well-known fact that the same foreign Government may be recognised by a second Government and may not be recognised by a third Government. Therefore, the point which we have to consider is not whether the British Government recognised the second defendant as a Sovereign State, but whether the Government of our country has recognised the second defendant as a foreign Sovereign State.

37. The principles of International Law relating to immunity accepted by England as seen above have also been recognised in the United States of America. See American Jurisprudence, Vol. 14, page 385, Art. 191.

38. We will now turn to some of the decisions in our country on this point.

39. In N. Masthan Sahib v. Chief Commr., Pondichery, AIR 1962 SC 797, the Supreme Court considered some of the above referred to English decisions, and particularly that reported in (1924) AC 797 and (1939) AC 256 and stated that the proposition laid down in the English decisions that a conflict is not to be envisaged between the executive Government and the judiciary appeared to the Supreme Court to rest on sound reasoning and except possibly in extreme cases the statement of the Government must be held binding on the court and to be given effect to by it.

40. At this stage it is convenient to see what well-known authorities on International Law have to say as regards the doctrine of immunity. A passage in Cheshire on International Law, 7th Edition, 1965, appearing at page 91, reads as under:—

"In accordance with the maxim par in parem non habet imperium, the English Courts are fully committed to the view that they will not exercise jurisdiction over the person or the property of a foreign sovereign State unless it is willing to submit to process."

41. It is stated in paragraph 115a in Oppenheim's book on International Law, 8th Edition, 1954, at page 264 as under:—

"The third consequence of State equality is that — according to the rule par in parem non habet imperium — no State can claim jurisdiction over another. Therefore, although States can sue in foreign courts, they cannot as a rule be sued there, unless they voluntarily submit to the jurisdiction of the court concerned. This rule applies not only to actions brought directly against foreign states, but also to indirect actions, as when, for instance, a sum in rem is brought against a vessel in the possession of a foreign State. Although, in giving effect to this rule, courts occasionally refer to the 'comity of nations' as the basis of their decision, the principle of immunity of sovereign States from the jurisdiction of the Courts of other States has in fact been treated by courts of most countries as a rule of International Law."

42. Dicey on "The Conflict of Laws", 8th Edition, 1967 (at page 126) states:—

"Sovereign immunity is not limited to actions arising out of the foreign sovereign's official acts but extends also to his commercial activities and even to personal contracts like contracts to marry. No distinction is drawn between acta imperii and acta gestionis. Such a distinction, though it is clearly very difficult to draw, is discernible in the practice of many other States, and it may well be that English Courts have extended the doctrine of sovereign immunity considerably further than international practice strictly requires. The results have proved unfortunate and have led to widespread dissatisfaction."

43. It may be stated that in recent years many States embark on industrial, business and commercial activities which are not confined only to their own territories but extend beyond their territories. Modern writers on International Law have expressed their own opinions as to whether the doctrine of immunity available to a foreign Sovereign State should be made available in respect of such transactions which are purely of a commercial nature. The point about making exception in the case of commercial activities, is, to say the least, in a very fluid state and it is very likely that it will take considerable time to boil down to a well recognised principle of International Law. Mr. Nariman did invite our attention to some other passages, but, in our opinion, it is not necessary to refer to them. We have already referred to decided cases and some well-known authorities on International Law and it is quite clear that the doctrine of immunity has yet not been curtailed in England so as to exclude the doctrine of immunity from applying to commercial transactions. So far as English Courts are concerned, it is a settled doctrine till it is hereafter revised. It has also been recognised in India. See, for example, AIR 1966 Cal 319. In International Law a foreign Sovereign State has absolute immunity. To carve out an exception is a matter having wide ramifications. Basically the matter concerns relations between India and foreign States. In a matter of that importance we are of the opinion that no occasion should arise for different High Courts to take differing views. It would result in chaos. If the doctrine which is well established for over a large number of years requires, in view of changed circumstances, to be at all modified, it is highly desirable that the Supreme Court as the highest Court of the land should, in a proper case, lay down the principles. We, for ourselves, prefer to follow the well-established doctrine.

44. At this stage it should be noticed that the said certificate dated 1st August 1970 given by the Law Officer in the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, New Delhi, uses the phraseology "the Government of India has de facto relations with the German Democratic Republic." The word used here is "relations" and there is no mention of any "recognition." In the later letter dated 15th September 1970 written by the Under Secretary in the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, New Delhi, the phraseology is "the Government of India had and continue to have de facto relations with the German Democratic Republic." Even here the word used is "relations" and not "recognition". In view of the English decisions approved by the Supreme Court in the above judgment it is the Court which has to ascertain whether the Government of the country recognises a foreign Government as a Sovereign State and that for that purpose necessary evidence can be allowed to be adduced even at the stage of an appeal. In view of these principles Mr. Amin tendered before us a letter dated 28th September 1970 written by the Under Secretary in the Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India, New Delhi, addressed to the Attorneys of the second defendant in reply to a further inquiry made by their letter dated 15th September 1970 and as Mr. Nariman stated that he did not object to this letter being made a part of the record in view of the authorities — already referred to by us, we took it on the record and marked it as Ex. A in this appeal.

45. We will now consider the effect of the evidence available to us on the record to ascertain whether the Government of India has recognised the second defendant as a Sovereign State, as it is not for the Court to pronounce any opinion on the point except on the information made available to the Court by the Government of India. Firstly, reliance has been placed on the said Statements made by three Prime Ministers of India, and India has had only three Prime Ministers since India attained independence. We refer only to the material words. Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru in his said statement dated 17th August 1961 has stated: "De facto we recognise it". In his second statement dated 2nd September 1961 he stated: "It seems to me obvious that certain facts of life should be recognised. There are two independent entities: The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany and the Government of the German Democratic Republic." This Statement clearly refers to the Government of the German Democratic Republic, i.e., the 2nd defendant, as an independent entity. Having been referred to as the Government, the reference must be construed to mean when the adjective "independent" is used that the second defendant was characterised as an independent i.e., Sovereign Government. In the said extract from the Indo-Soviet Joint Communiqué dated 20th May 1965 it is stated, inter alia, that at present the fact of the existence of the two German States cannot be ignored. The reference to one of the two German States referred to was obviously the second defendant. Lal Bahadur Shastri and Mrs. Indira Gandhi have subsequently reaffirmed the position as mentioned earlier. Next there is the evidence of several Trade Agreements between the two Governments, the Government of India and the Government of the German Democratic Republic. Those Agreements are Government to Government Agreement and they are entered on the basis that both the Governments which were parties to those Agreements were contracting as Sovereign States. Moreover, as seen earlier, there has been an exchange of Trade Representatives between the two countries. Later on the second defendant has established Consulate General in New Delhi and three Consulates in Bombay, Calcutta and Madras. It has already been stated earlier that the Government of India expects to correspondingly establish a Consulate General and Consulates within the territory of the second defendant. These are authoritative statements and acts of the Government of India. But, as seen earlier, these are not the only factors on the basis of which alone this court is required to reach a conclusion whether the Government of India recognises the second defendant as a Sovereign State.

46. By the said letter dated 1st August 1970 from the Law Officer Ministry of External Affairs, New Delhi, it has been certified that the Govt. of India has de facto relations with the second defendant. Thereafter by the said letter dated 15th September 1970, which is over the signature of the Under Secretary to the Ministry of External Affairs, it has been certified that the Government of India had and continues to have de facto relations with the second defendant. By the said letter dated 28th September 1970, Ex. A before us, a correction has been made in the said certificate dated 15th September 1970. The letter, read with this correction, amounts to a certificate that the Government of India de facto recognises the second defendant. The last two letters go further and state that the second defendant should enjoy immunity from jurisdiction of the local courts in suits and other proceedings similar to those enjoyed by any other Government unless that Government has expressly waived its immunity. This last statement is really a consequence which should normally follow from the recognition of the second defendant by the Government of India and it is a conclusion which normally it is for the court to reach. The only utility of this last portion, however, is that it confirms that what the Government of India intended to convey by their certificate was that the Government of India has accorded de facto recognition to the second defendant as a foreign Sovereign State.

47. Mr. Nariman, however, contended that in order that the second defendant may be held to be entitled to immunity, the recognition must be de jure and not merely de facto. The English authorities to which we have already referred do not make any such distinction. This is further supported by the following passage which occurs in Greig's International Law, 1970 Edition, at page 101:—

"The statement that a particular entity has been recognised de jure or de facto is a convenient shorthand form of saying it has been recognised as a de jure or de facto Government. In other words, its status as a Government, and not the recognition, that is de jure or de facto."

It is unnecessary to multiply further authorities to show that the recognition, de jure or de facto, has the same value for the purpose of deciding whether a particular foreign State is a Sovereign State and is entitled to immunity under International Law or not.

48. We, therefore, hold that the second defendant is a foreign Sovereign State and is entitled to immunity as claimed by it under the principles of International Law.

49. Mr. Nariman then contended that in India this principle of International Law can have no application because of the provisions contained in Section 86 of the Code of Civil Procedure. He contended that the Code being a codifying enactment and inasmuch as the principle of International Law has been recognised under Sections 86 and 87-A to the extent mentioned in those sections, only the relevant provisions of the Code can be looked at and the said principles of International Law can have no application whatever in India. This argument was advanced before the Supreme Court in the case of Ali Akbar v. United Arab Republic, AIR 1966 SC 230. In that case immunity was claimed both under the principles of International Law and under the said Section 86. In that case, in the earlier part of his judgment Chief Justice Gajendragadkar has stated that it being the view of the court that Section 86 created a bar in that case, the court did not propose to consider whether the absolute immunity under International Law was available in that case. Dealing with the argument which is the same argument as the one advanced by Mr. Nariman as just stated, the Supreme Court observed:—

from execution of any decree that may be passed against a Ruler, and apparently, the High Court thought that this tends to show that the Ruler of a foreign State within the contemplation of Section 86 (1) must be the Ruler himself and not the State. In our opinion, this view is not well-founded. The provision that a decree passed against the Ruler of a foreign State shall not be executed against the property of such Ruler, rather tends to show that what is exempted is the separate property of the Ruler himself and not the property of the Ruler as the head of the State. A distinction is made between the property belonging to the State of which the Ruler is recognised to be the head, and the property belonging to the Ruler individually. We are, therefore, satisfied that Sec. 86 (1) applies to cases where suits are brought against Rulers of Foreign States and that foreign States fall within its scope whatever be their form of Government. We have already indicated that whenever a suit is intended to be brought by or against the Ruler of a foreign State, it has to be in the name of the State, and that is how the present suit has, in fact, been filed.

The effect of the provisions of Section 86 (1) appears to be that it makes a statutory provision covering a field which would otherwise be covered by the doctrine of immunity under International Law. It is not disputed that every sovereign State is competent to make its own laws in relation to the rights and liabilities of foreign States to be sued within its own municipal courts. Just as an independent sovereign State may statutorily provide for its own rights and liabilities to sue and be sued, so can it provide for the rights and liabilities of foreign States to sue and be sued in its municipal Courts. That being so, it would be legitimate to hold that the effect of Section 86 (1) is to modify to a certain extent the doctrine of immunity recognised by International Law. This section provides that foreign States can be sued within the municipal Courts of India with the consent of the Central Government and when such consent is granted as required by Section 86 (1), it would not be open to a foreign State to rely on the doctrine of immunity under International Law, because the municipal courts in India would be bound by the statutory provisions, such as those contained in the Code of Civil Procedure. In substance, Section 86 (1) is not merely procedural; it is in a sense a counterpart of Sec. 84. Whereas Section 84 confers a right on a foreign State to sue, Section 86 (1) in substance imposes a liability on foreign States to be sued, though this liability is circumscribed and safeguarded by the

In Chandulal Khushalji v. Awad, (1897) ILR 21 Bom 351, at pp. 371-372, Strachey, J. had occasion to consider this aspect of the matter in relation to the provisos of Section 433 of the Code of 1882. What Section 433 does, said the learned Judge, 'is to create a personal privilege for sovereign princes and ruling chiefs and their ambassadors and envoys. It is a modified form of the absolute privilege enjoyed by independent sovereigns and their ambassadors in the Courts in England, in accordance with the principles of International Law. The difference is that while in England the privilege is unconditional, dependent only on the will of the sovereign or his representative, in India it is dependent upon the consent of the Governor-General in Council, which can be given only under specified conditions. This modified or conditional privilege is, however, based upon essentially the same principle as the absolute privilege, the dignity and independence of the Ruler, which would be endangered by allowing any person to sue him at pleasure, and the political inconveniences and complications which would result'. We are inclined to think that this view correctly represents the result of the provisions of Section 433 as much as of those contained in Section 86 (1)."

What has to be noted is that the Supreme Court has held that the effect of Section 86 (1) is "to modify to a certain extent" the doctrine of immunity recognised by International Law and has further observed that it is a modified form of the absolute privilege enjoyed by independent sovereigns and their ambassadors in the Courts in England in accordance with the principles of International Law. The word used is "modified". It signifies that the doctrine of immunity applies in India but only with the modification as made by Section 86. We do not read this judgment to mean or imply that Section 86 wholly supplants the relevant doctrine under International Law. The word "modified" shows that the principles of International Law would be applicable in India but that in its application Section 86 creates an exception. In International Law the immunity is absolute, subject only to the exception or exceptions recognised in International Law, one of such exceptions being when the foreign Sovereign State waives the privilege of immunity. Section 86 creates another exception, the exception being where the requisite consent is given by the Government of India as provided under Sec. 86. But the provisions of Section 86 would to that extent operate as another exception and to that extent "modify" the principles of International Law. But subject to such exception the relevant principle of International Law would still be applicable in India. We have earlier referred to the case of AIR 1966 Cal 319. In that case the view taken was that Sections 86 and 87 have no relation to the principles of private International Law based on the independence of a foreign sovereign or of a foreign State, but these provisions of the Code afford an additional protection or privilege to a foreign sovereign providing immunity from being sued in the Municipal Courts of this country without previous permission of the Central Government being obtained to the institution of such suits. This Calcutta Judgment envisages that principles of International Law about immunity apply in India and that simultaneously, that is, in addition, Section 86 also confers such immunity but to the extent provided in that section. In view of the above Supreme Court Judgment, however, in our view, it must be held that the principles of International Law about immunity apply in our country, but that they stand modified by the provisions of Section 86 and the modification, in our opinion, is to create an exception in cases where consent of the Government of India is obtained under Section 86. To the extent that the Calcutta Judgment is inconsistent with the said Supreme Court Judgment it must be deemed to be overruled or no longer good law.

50. Mr. Nariman contended that the said three certificates granted by the Government of India in its Ministry of External Affairs are not sufficient to establish that the Government of India has in fact recognised the second defendant as the de facto Sovereign State. He contended, that we should obtain information from the Government of India on the following three questions:—

(1) Whether the Government of India recognises the Government of the second defendant as entitled to exercise governing authority in respect of the territories known as East Germany;

(2) Whether the Government of India recognises the State, that is, the second defendant, and the Government of U. S. S. R. or any other State or Government as de jure entitled to exercise governing authority in respect of those territories;

(3) Whether the Government of India recognises the second defendant as an independent foreign State.

In view of the conclusions which we have already reached on the material already on the record it is not necessary for this Court to have these further inquiries made of the Government of India.

51. It may be stated that Mr. Nariman has not at all argued that the second defendant has waived the privilege of immunity as a foreign Sovereign State and it does not therefore arise for decision.

52. In our opinion, therefore, the second defendant is entitled to the immunity available to a foreign Sovereign State under the principles of International Law. We therefore hold that prayer (a) of the Notice of Motion should have been and should be granted as the Government of India has recognised the second defendant as a de facto Sovereign State. We, therefore, dismiss the suit as prayed for in prayer (a) of the Notice of Motion.

53. The costs must follow the event and we therefore direct that the plaintiffs to the suit do pay the second defendant's costs of this appeal and of the Notice of Motion.

54. The amount of Rs. 500/- deposited as security for the costs of the respondents in this appeal be refunded to the Appellants.

M. R. Kotval, for Appellant; V. M. Limaye, for Respondents Nos. 1 (A) to 1 (D); V. G. Madbhavi, for heirs of Respondent No. 4.

JUDGMENT:— This is an appeal by the original defendant No. 5 against the appellate judgment dated 31st December 1962 of the learned Assistant Judge, Jalgaon. Respondents 1-A to 1-D are the heirs and legal representatives of the original plaintiff. Respondent No. 4 is the heir and legal representative of the original defendant No. 3. Respondents Nos. 2, 3 and 5 are respectively the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4. They have not appeared.

2. On 8th May 1946 the plaintiff granted a lease of an area admeasuring 115 feet x 125 feet out of survey No. 284/1 in Pachora, District Jalgaon, to the defendants 1 and 2 for constructing a cinema house thereon by lease deed Ex. 54. On 31st December 1948 defendants 1 and 2 assigned their leasehold rights to defendant No. 3 who constructed a cinema house on the said land. He gave the cinema house to defendants Nos. 4 and 5 for running it. On 22nd November 1956 the defendant No. 3 assigned the leasehold rights to defendants Nos. 4 and 5. It appears, the defendant No. 3 had not paid rent to the plaintiff. Therefore in 1955 the plaintiff filed against the defendant No. 3 a suit for recovery of arrears of rent. The defendant No. 3 thereafter paid up the said arrears.

3. On 9th June 1958 the plaintiff filed against the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 the suit from which the present appeal arises in the court of the learned Civil Judge, Junior Division, Chalisgaon, for recovery of possession of the suit land alleging that the lease Ex. 54 was invalid being in contravention of Section 40 of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors' Relief Act, 28 of 1947 (hereinafter referred to as to B. A. D. R. Act). The plaintiff contended that the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 were therefore in unauthorised or illegal possession of the suit property and were liable to handover possession to him.

4. The defendants took several contentions, including one that the lease was not void. They also contended that the suit was barred by the law of limitation.

5. Defendants Nos. 4 and 5 were added as party defendants on 24th February 1959. They raised the same contentions as raised by defendants Nos. 1 to 3. They further contended that in any case so far as they were concerned, the suit was time barred.

6. The trial court decided the above issues against the defendants and decreed the suit. The defendants Nos. 3 and 5 appealed to the District Court at Jalgaon. In the said appeal the appellants took inter alia the same contentions that they had taken in the trial court. The learned Assistant Judge who heard the appeal dismissed the same with costs. Against the said decision, the defendant No. 5 alone has filed the present appeal.

7. The first contention taken before me by Mr. Kotwal on behalf of the appellant is that Section 40 of the B. A. D. R. Act was enacted for the benefit of the creditor and not for the benefit of the debtor. The plaintiff was not a "creditor", but was a "debtor". The plaintiff was therefore not entitled to avoid the lease in respect of the suit land. He further contended that in any case the lease was created by the plaintiff and he could not take advantage of his own wrong.

Section 40 of the B. A. D. R. Act read as under:—

"Notwithstanding any law or contract no alienation of any property belonging to a debtor who is a party to any proceeding under this Act or an award registered under this Act, made by him before all his debts are discharged shall be valid, except with the previous sanction of the Court."

8. It is admitted by the parties that the plaintiff was on 8th May 1946 a debtor, that he was a party to a proceeding under the B. A. D. R. Act, and that all his debts were not discharged. It is also admitted that the lease was not created with the previous sanction of the Court. In such circumstances, Section 40 clearly lays down that the "alienation of any property" shall be invalid. The section does not say that such alienation shall be voidable at the instance of the creditor. If it had so said, there would have been substance in the contention of Mr. Kotwal. The section makes the alienation invalid, whether any one wished to avoid it or not. Whether the alienation is invalid or illegal, there is no question of taking advantage of one's wrong. This contention must therefore be rejected.

9. There is more substance in the next contention of the appellant. This contention is that the lease Ex. 54 is not an "alienation of any property" within the meaning of that expression in Section 40 of the B. A. D. R. Act. Unfortunately, the word "alienation" is not defined in the B. A. D. R. Act. Section 28, however, refers to fraudulent "alienations or incumbrances" on the debtor's property. The use of the two words in the said section indicates that an "incumbrance" is not included in the word "alienation". On the other hand, Section 53 provides that a debtor shall not "hypothecate or sell the standing crops". The marginal note describes this hypothecation or sale by one word "alienation" of standing crops indicating that perhaps hypothecation would be covered by the word "alienation". Marginal notes to the sections are, however, not to be referred to for the purpose of construction, unless they have been inserted with the assent of the Legislature. We have no evidence that in the case of the B. A. D. R. Act, marginal notes have been inserted with the assent of the legislature. We therefore find that we do not derive much help from the B. A. D. R. Act itself in construing whether a lease is an "alienation".

10. Section 105 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 provides that "a lease of immovable property is a transfer of a right to enjoy such property." It does not provide that a lease is a transfer of property. It merely provides that it is a transfer of a right to enjoy such property. Section 5 of the Transfer of Property Act defines "transfer of property" as meaning an act by which a living person conveys property. In a lease there is no conveyance of property. There is no transfer of ownership. There is only a transfer of a right of enjoyment. The title remains in the lessor. We have therefore to see whether this transfer of right of enjoyment of property is an alienation.

11. The Concise Oxford Dictionary, 1961 Edition, states that in law the meaning of the word "alien" is "transfer of ownership of." The meaning of the word "alienate" is given as "transfer ownership of". The meaning of the word "alienation" is given as "transference of ownership." It would therefore appear that the ordinary literary meaning of the word "alienation" implies transfer of ownership, and not merely a transfer of a right of enjoyment.

12. Law Lexicon published by the Madras Law Journal Office states that the word "alienation" is generally applied to absolute conveyances of immovable property. To use the word "alienation" is as much to say as to make a thing another man's or to alter or put the possession of lands or other things from one man to another. "Alienation" imports an actual transfer of title.

13. In the case of Narayan Raghunath Kulkarni v. Krishnaji Govind Kulkarni, AIR 1930 Bom 534= (32 Bom LR 1249), the question was whether a devise by will was included in the word "alienate" in the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act, 1874. Patkar, J. observed as follows:

"The question therefore in the case is whether the word 'alienate' excludes a devise by will. It is urged on behalf of the appellant that the word 'alienate' means to transfer by sale. It is conceded on behalf of the appellant that the watandar can make a gift of the watan property to a watandar of the same watan. If a watandar can alienate the property by gift inter vivos, he would presumably have the right to alienate by will in favour of a watandar of the same watan. The word 'alienation', according to Stroud's Judicial Dictionary, Vol. I, p. 65, means 'to make a thing another man's'. 'Alienate', according to Wharton's Law Lexicon, means 'to transfer property.' Alienation would, therefore, include a devise by gift if the effect of it is to make the property another man's by means of a bequest."

14. The word "alienated" is defined by the Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879, Section 2 (2) as meaning "transferred wholly or partially to the ownership of any person." The definition of that word in Section 2 (2) of the Maharashtra Land Revenue Code, 1966 is the same. In these enactments the word "alienation" would be transfer of ownership to another person. Section 2 (15) of the B. A. D. R. Act provides that "words and expressions used in this Act but not defined have the meaning assigned to them in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 or the Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879, as the case may be." The word "alienation" or any of its grammatical variations is not used in the Code of Civil Procedure. We must therefore turn to the definition of that word in the Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879. In the case of Haji Abdulla Haji Sumar v. Secy. of State for India, (1911-13 Bom LR 883) the question whether a lease was an "alienation" within the meaning of that word in the Bombay Land Revenue Code arose before a Division Bench of this Court consisting of Chandavarkar and Hayward, JJ. In the judgment of Chandavarkar, J. it is observed:—

"Therefore, there cannot be any doubt that this kowl is no more than a lease, that Government parted with their rights as lessors in favour of the grantee as a lessee, and imposed upon him certain conditions. None of those conditions brings the contract within the definition of the term 'alienated' village, in Cl. 19 of Section 3 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code."

15. The learned Assistant Judge observes in his judgment that a lease is a transfer of some interest which the lessor has in the property and such transfer is bound to affect the property and the creditors are bound to run the risk of reducing their security. He goes on to observe that the very purpose of Section 40 to keep the property of the debtor intact and available for the purpose of discharging the debts would be nullified, unless a lease was interpreted as an "alienation". I regret, I am unable to accept this reasoning. The learned Assistant Judge has strayed in the realm of speculation as to the intention of the Legislature. Lord Watson has said in the case of Salomon v. Salomon & Co., 1897 AC 22 at p. 38 that the "intention of the Legislature is a common but very slippery phrase, which, popularly understood, may signify anything from intention embodied in positive enactment to speculative opinion as to what the Legislature probably would have meant, although there has been an omission to enact it. In a Court of law or Equity, what the Legislature intended to be done or not to be done can only be legitimately ascertained from that which it has chosen to enact, either in express words or by reasonable and necessary implication."

If the Legislature had intended to include a lease or any other transfer in the word "alienation", nothing would have been simpler than to say so and to use the words "transfer, sale, mortgage or lease" or whatever the Legislature intended to prohibit. It is reasonable to suppose that the Legislature knew the literary meaning of the word "alienation", as also its meaning in the Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879, the definitions in which were being made applicable by Section 2 (15) of the B. A. D. R. Act.

16. Mr. Limaye on behalf of the plaintiff made an attempt to argue that in Section 40 of the B. A. D. R. Act the word "alienation" was used synonymously with the word "transfer". In view however of what I have stated hereinabove, I cannot accept this contention. In my opinion "alienation" means transfer of ownership of property to another person. The word applies to absolute conveyances of immovable property and imports an actual transfer of title. It does not include a lease. The lease Ex. 54 therefore is not an "alienation" within the meaning of that word in Section 40 of the B. A. D. R. Act and is not invalid. The lease being valid the plaintiff is not entitled to possession on the footing that the defendants are trespassers. This suit must therefore fail.

17. The next contention of Mr. Kotwal on behalf of the appellant is that the suit of the plaintiff was time barred. The lease was granted on 8th May 1946. The suit was filed against the defendants 1 to 3 within time, but the present appellant was joined on 24th February 1959, beyond a period of 12 years from the date of the lease. The contention is that under Art. 144 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, the period of limitation for a suit for possession of immovable property is 12 years from the time when the possession of the defendant becomes adverse to the plaintiff. Mr. Kotwal contended that where a lease is invalid the possession of the defendant is adverse from the start and a suit beyond a period of 12 years from the lease is time barred.

18. In view of my finding that the lease is not invalid, this contention as to limitation really does not survive. Both the trial court and the lower appellate court have, however, held that the suit was not time barred. I do not find that these findings of law are correct on the basis that the lease was invalid. I shall, therefore, deal briefly with this point on the assumption that the lease was invalid. In the case of Alakhdeo Singh v. Gaya District Board, AIR 1957 Pat 321, a Division Bench of the Patna High Court has held that where a person enters into possession of property by virtue of an instrument of lease which is void and inoperative, his possession is adverse to the true owner from the very beginning for the simple reason that the transfer conveyed him no title. When his possession was adverse to the true owner from the very beginning, the payment of rent will not make the possession lawful. It will only affect the nature of the interest that he was prescribing by virtue of his adverse possession. When a person enters into possession of land under a void transaction and remains in possession for the full statutory period, the only question for determination is as to the nature of the interest that he has acquired by prescription. He cannot acquire by prescription a right higher than the right which the instrument of lease purported to convey to him. The transaction was admittedly a transaction of lease and therefore when he entered into possession under a void lease, he can acquire only the right of a lessee by prescription. In the case before me, originally defendants Nos. 1 and 2 entered into possession. They transferred their rights to defendant No. 3 who ultimately transferred them to defendants 4 and 5. It has been held in the case of Pandappa Mahalingappa v. Shivalingappa Murteppa, 47 Bom LR 962 = (AIR 1946 Bom 193) that where the possession of one trespasser is a continuation of the trespass of the previous occupant through whom he claims, the adverse possession of the one can be tacked on to that of the other, and if the total period exceeds 12 years, that possession ripens into full ownership under Section 28 and Art. 144 of the first schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. In such a case, it is essential that one trespasser should derive his liability to be sued from the other. Now, if this position be correct, even according to the learned Assistant Judge the suit against the defendant No. 5 was beyond the period of limitation. He, however, thought that as the defendant No. 3 had paid rent in 1955, his possession was permissive up to that date. As I have stated hereinabove, the Patna High Court has taken a different view from the above and I think rightly. This payment will not save the period of limitation. In my opinion, the suit against the present appellant was time barred, if the lease was invalid. In view of the fact however that in my opinion the lease is valid and the plaintiff is not entitled to recover possession the question of limitation does not survive.

19. In the result, the appeal is allowed and the decree of the trial court as well as the lower appellate court are set aside. The suit of the plaintiff will stand dismissed. There will be no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

Mangharam Chuharmal, Petitioner v. B. C. Patel and others, Respondents.

Spl. Civil Appls. Nos. 1819, 1786 to 1788 of 1969, D/- 22-9-1970, to set aside the order of Appellate Bench, Sm. C. C. Bombay, D/- 30-4-1969.

(A) Houses and Rents — Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), Sec. 13 (1) (i) — Classification under, is reasonable — Not hit by Art. 14 of Constitution — (X-Ref:— Constitution of India, Art. 14).

There is a clear cut intelligible differentiation which formed the basis of classification. Tenants of buildings are different from tenants of open pieces of lands. On considering the object of the Rent Act, it is also evident that there is a rational basis for the above mentioned classification. For good reasons different conditions are prescribed by the various clauses of Section 13 as conditions precedent for passing an order of eviction against tenants. Article 14 of the Constitution does not insist that legislative classification should be scientifically perfect or logically complete. Unless the classification is wholly arbitrary, the Court will not rule it discriminatory merely because it involves hardship or inequality of burden. (Para 21)

(B) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11 — Decision in previous suit when operates as res judicata.

In the previous suit when a number of findings are recorded and the suit is finally decided one way or the other, it is important to find out whether the decision of the suit was based on some or all the findings recorded in the suit. Where a previous decision is supported on two or more findings all the findings will necessarily operate as res judicata. Where the previous suit was dismissed on a technical ground which made the suit untenable, findings recorded on the merits would normally be obiter dicta. Similarly, if the Court which decided the prior suit has itself based the decision on only some of the findings recorded by it, or if under the circumstances of the case its decision can be fairly attributed to only some of the findings so recorded, the other findings would not operate as res judicata. In other cases, where the previous decision is based upon, and is attributable to, several findings, all the findings will have the force of res judicata. (Para 29)

Where the earlier decision was based only on the point of defective notice and other findings were recorded only to avoid a further remand such findings could not operate as res judicata. (Para 30)

(C) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11 — A fresh suit for possession on the ground of reasonable and bona fide requirement based on identical facts but pleading change of circumstances is not barred by res judicata. AIR 1951 Bom 336, Rel. on. (Para 31)

(D) Houses and Rents — Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), S. 13 (1) (i) — Tenancy of open plot — Subsequent construction thereon by tenant cannot make S. 13 (1) (i) inapplicable.

The expression "premises" in Section 13 (1) refers to the subject-matter of letting for which rent is payable and in respect of which there is a relationship of landlord and tenant. (Para 33)

Where the landlord had let out only an open plot of land and the rent payable by tenant was only for the open land the fact that the tenant built some structures on such land and is recovering rent for those structures from his tenants will not concern the tenancy it being not the subject matter of tenancy between landlord and tenant. (Paras 33, 34)

(E) Houses and Rents — Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), S. 14 — Effect of on rights and liabilities of sub-tenant.

By virtue of Sections 12, 14 and 15 a person remaining in possession after determination of the contractual tenancy becomes a statutory tenant. He can remain in possession but cannot enforce terms of the original tenancy. He is a statutory tenant but has no contractual interest in the premises. He cannot create lawful sub-leases in favour of others. It is not necessary to terminate the statutory tenancies before instituting proceedings against them under any of the provisions of the Rent Act. AIR 1965 SC 414, Foll. (Para 35)

(F) Houses and Rents — Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), S. 14 — Interpretation of.

A closer look at Section 13 (1) will show that the various grounds on which the landlord can seek possession are not of the same kind and they are different in material particulars. Grounds under Section 13 (1) (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e) can be said to be personal to the tenant, who by his act, has rendered himself liable to be evicted. Grounds under Section 13 (1) (g), (h), (hh), (hhh), (i) and (ii) are mainly concerned with the premises held by the tenant. They are not in the nature of defaults which could be committed by the tenant. The landlord must establish those grounds before he can ask for a decree in ejectment against the tenant. If in a suit against the tenant other persons are joined on the allegation that they are sub-tenants and if an eviction is sought only on the grounds which are personal to the tenant then a decree in ejectment against him will result in conferring direct tenancy rights on the lawful sub-tenants. They cannot be ejected in that suit on those grounds. On the other hand, if the landlord seeks a possession on the grounds which are not personal to the tenant and which concern the premises themselves, then it is open to the landlord in the same suit to plead and prove those grounds not only against the tenants but against the other persons impleaded in the suit and who are ultimately held to be lawful sub-tenants. In such a case the issues would be heard and decided between the landlord on the one side and the tenants and sub-tenants on the other. If the sub-tenants are not impleaded even in such a suit then the landlord, after obtaining a decree against the tenant, will have to file a fresh suit against the sub-tenants, who by then had become his direct deemed tenants by virtue of Section 14 of the Rent Act. AIR 1967 Bom 210, Dissented from. (Para 40)

(G) Houses and Rents — Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates (Control) Act (57 of 1947), S. 13 (1) — "Reasonable and bona fide requirement" — Meaning of.

Bona fide means honestly and not actuated by bad faith or oblique motive. Reasonably means, according to the dictionary that which is rational, just, not excessive. As these two words are used to govern the word 'require' all the three words must be construed in a manner which would be consistent with the object of the Rent Act in general, and Section 13 in particular. The landlord's contractual right to evict his tenant is recognised in a limited way in Section 13 so as to cause the minimum hardship to the tenant in the event of his eviction from the premises. While considering the proof of bona fides and reasonableness of the requirement, a number of factors are bound to overlap. The words "reasonably and bona fide" are not, and are not intended, to be used disjunctively. In a given case facts established must prove the bona fides without reference to the reasonable requirement. If want of bona fides, amounting to mala fides, is proved, courts can readily infer or hold that the requirement is unreasonable. If the requirement is wholly unreasonable that will also have a bearing on the question of bona fides of the landlord. Even on that basis the court will find that the requirement is not bona fide. But at the same time it is possible to hold that the landlord has succeeded in establishing his bona fides, but that, by itself, will not give him a right to evict the tenants; he must further prove that in addition to his bona fides, his requirement also is reasonable. Case law discussed. (Para 59)

are filed by the 15 petitioners the alleged sub-tenants of Defendant No. 1 who are aggrieved by the order of ejectment passed against them by the Appellate Bench of the Court of Small Causes. As common questions of fact and law are involved in these petitions, I propose to dispose them of by one common judgment. The proceedings arise out of the ejectment suit filed by the respondents against Defendant No. 1 and the petitioners.

2. A few facts leading to this litigation are as follows: The suit property comprises of an open plot of land measuring about 1050 square yards situate at Mahul Road, Chembur, Greater Bombay. The respondents are the owners of this plot. In February 1954 Respondent
No. 1 let out the said open plot of land to Defendant No. 1 Shaikh Hassan Shaikh Razack for his char-coal business. The agreed rent per month was Rs. 100/- and it is said that the lease was for a period of three years. No written document evidencing the lease is placed on the record of these proceedings. But it is admitted that the said lease was in the first instance for a period of 3 years. The rent of Rs. 100/- per month was subsequently reduced to Rs. 80/- per month as a result of proceedings between the parties. It appears that Shaikh Razack put up shop structures on the open plot of land in or about the month of August 1954 and let out the said structures to various sub-tenants. On 25-2-1957 Respondent No. 1 gave a notice to quit to Razack and on the basis of that notice

Respondent No. 1 filed a suit on 11-4-1957 seeking the eviction of Razack and some other defendants (those defendants are some of the defendants in these proceedings also) on various grounds. Possession was sought on the ground on non-payment of rent, breach of the terms of tenancy, erection of permanent structures, unlawful sub-letting, illegal profiteering and also on the ground that the plot of land was required reasonably and bona fide for construction of a building. The suit was initially filed only against Defendant No. 1 and the defendants who were alleged to be sub-tenants, were later on impleaded at their own instance. That suit was decreed on 21-7-1960. Defendant No. 1 Razack preferred an appeal and the other defendants also challenged that decree in appeal Court. In all three appeals were filed against the decree in ejectment passed by the trial Court. On 31-8-1961 the Appellate Bench of the Court of Small Causes allowed the appeals and directed the dismissal of the suit. The appellate Bench held that the defendants were in fact sub-tenants of the structures and not the sub-tenants of the land. Only one defendant was held to be a sub-tenant of the land. The Court also found that the plaintiff had not established any breach of the terms of the tenancy. The Court further held that the plaintiff had failed to prove profiteering by the tenant; that the structure put up by the tenant was not a permanent structure within the meaning of the relevant provisions of Section 13 of the Rent Act and that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the premises were required by him reasonably and bona fide for his own occupation after erecting the new building. The Appellate Bench also came to the conclusion that the suit filed on the basis of the quit notice dated 25-2-1957 was premature and the suit was liable to be dismissed. It was held that the lessor had not given one clear month's notice before the institution of the suit.

3. On 21-9-1961 the Respondents gave another notice terminating the tenancy of defendant No. 1 Razack. As the respondents felt that the notice was defective they, by way of abundant caution, gave another notice on 21-11-1961 terminating the tenancy of defendant No. 1
Razack. On 17-2-1962 they filed a suit against Razack claiming possession of the suit premises on various grounds. They alleged that Razack had erected permanent structures without their consent in writing; that he had illegally sub-let portions of the plot to others; that he was profiteering by charging his tenants rent far in excess of the standard rent which he was paying to the Respondents. In addition to these grounds the respondents also sought possession of the premises on the ground that they reasonably and bona fide required the same for erecting a new building. The present suit was first filed against defendant No. 1 and defendants 2 to 11. Later on, at the instance of the plaintiffs, the other defendants were also joined as necessary parties. That is how the suit came to be filed by the respondents against the defendant No. 1 and the present petitioners.

4. Defendant No. 1 died after the institution of the suit. Defendants 1-A to 1-D were brought on the record as his legal representatives and they filed the defences in which they contended that defendant No. 1 was not liable to be evicted on the various grounds mentioned in the plaint. In other words, they denied the fact of illegal sub-letting and profiteering. They also denied the defendant No. 1 had erected any permanent structure. They contended that the Respondents did not require the premises for erecting a new building. It was their defence that the suit was barred by res judicata in view of the earlier decision of the appellate Bench of the Court of Small Causes. The other defendants filed separate defences substantially supporting the case of the heirs of defendant No. 1. They claimed to be lawful sub-tenants and stated that by virtue of Section 14 of the Rent Act even if defendant No. 1 was liable to be evicted, they would become the direct statutory tenants of the plaintiffs. The learned trial Judge framed a number of issues and after considering the oral and documentary evidence came to the conclusion that the suit was not barred by res judicata. Defendant No. 1 had not unlawfully sub-let any portion of the suit premises; that defendant No. 1 was guilty of profiteering as he was charging the sub-tenants rent in excess of the standard rent and permitted increases; that the plaintiffs have failed to prove that the premises are reasonably and bona fide required for the erection of a new building. The learned trial Judge held that defendant No. 1 was liable to be evicted on the ground that he was guilty of profiteering. As regards the allegation of erection of permanent structures, he held that defendant No. 1 was not guilty of any breach of the terms of tenancy. The learned trial Judge accordingly held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to claim possession on the ground that defendant No. 1 had erected permanent structures. He also held that defendants 2 to 16 were lawful sub-tenants of the land. He passed a decree in ejectment only against the heirs of defendant No. 1. He held that by virtue of Section 14 of the Rent Act, the rest of the defendants had become the direct tenants of the plaintiffs. In the result he dismissed the suit of the plaintiffs against the defendants 2 to 16.

5. The heirs of defendant No. 1 preferred an appeal challenging the decree passed against them. The plaintiffs also filed an appeal against the decree in so far as it directed the dismissal of their suit for possession against defendants Nos. 2 to 16. The Appellate Bench of the Court of Small Causes heard the two appeals. The Appellate Bench dismissed the appeal filed by the heirs of defendant No. 1. The Appellate Bench disagreed with the various findings recorded by the trial Court against the plaintiffs. It also held that the suit was not barred by res judicata. It held that the defendant No. 1 was guilty of erecting permanent structures and profiteering. In respect of some defendants it is found that defendant No. 1 was liable to be evicted on the ground of illegal sub-letting. The Court also came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs have proved that they required the premises reasonably and bona fide for erection of a new building. In the result the appeal filed by the plaintiffs was allowed and the suit in ejectment was decreed against all the defendants including the heirs of the deceased defendant No. 1.

6. The petitioners, who are defendants 2 to 16, are challenging the decree passed by the Appellate Bench of the Court of Small Causes on various grounds. It must be noted that the heirs of the deceased defendant No. 1 have accepted the finality of the adjudication in so far as it concerned them. They have not approached this Court by making any grievance about the said decision. Before these petitions were taken up for hearing, the advocate for the petitioners pointed out that in these proceedings the vires of Section 13 (1) (i) of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act 1947 was challenged on the ground that that section infringes the fundamental right guaranteed under Article 14 of the Constitution. Notice was, therefore, ordered to be issued by this Court to the Advocate-General of Maharashtra. After the notice was returned served, the applications were fixed for final hearing. No appearance was entered on behalf of the Advocate-General. On the adjourned date Mr. Parpia, instructed by M/s. Little and Co., gave an application on behalf of the State of Maharashtra, for leave of the Court to appear on behalf of the State of Maharashtra. I granted the application and Mr. Parpia appears for the State of Maharashtra.

7. Mr. Singhvi, appearing on behalf of some of the petitioners, has raised the following points of law in support of the petition:

(1) That Sec. 13 (1) (i) of the Rent Act infringes the fundamental right under Art. 14 of the Constitution and is to that extent void under Art. 13 (1) of the Constitution;

(2) That the present suit of the landlords is barred by res judicata on account of the findings recorded in the earlier eviction suit;

(3) That Section 13 (1) (i) of the Rent Act applies to open land and the landlords will not be entitled to possession when the land is not open land at the date of the suit;

(4) The effect of Section 14 of the Rent Act vis-a-vis the rights of the petitioners who are the lawful sub-tenants under the original tenant;

(5) That the finding of the appellate Bench of the Court of Small Causes about the bona fide and reasonable requirement of the landlords under Section 13 (1) (i) of the Rent Act is a result of the misreading of that provision. Besides the findings of fact about sub-letting, etc. are erroneous in law, and

(6) Jurisdiction of this Court under Art. 227 of the Constitution of India.

8. Mr. Singhvi generally addressed me on all these points. Mr. Dhanuka, who appears for some of the petitioners, advanced supplementary arguments. Mr. Pardasani has endorsed the say of Mr. Singhvi and Mr. Dhanuka. Mr. Paranjpe, who also appears for one of the petitioners, confined his argument only to the interpretation of Section 13 (1) (i) of the Rent Act and submitted that the Appellate Court has not adopted a correct approach while recording the relevant findings.

9. In reply Mr. Sorabjee, who appears for the respondents plaintiffs, submitted that the decision of the Appellate Bench of the Court of Small Causes is based on appreciation of oral and documentary evidence and this Court cannot interfere with the said findings of fact. Even the points of law arising in this case have been correctly decided by the lower Court. He then submitted that Section 13 (1) (i) of the Rent Act does not in any manner infringe the fundamental rights under Art. 14 of the Constitution, and its constitutional validity is not open to challenge.

10. Mr. Parpia, on behalf of the State of Maharashtra endorsed all that was said by Mr. Sorabjee and pin-pointed the various features of the impugned legislation which go to show that it does not conflict with Art. 14 of the Constitution. I will consider these points of law in the order in which I have mentioned them.

11. Mr. Singhvi, as stated above, vehemently argued that Section 13 (1) (i) of the Rent Act unreasonably discriminates between tenants of one class against the tenants of another class. According to his submission the discrimination is wholly arbitrary and inconsistent with the known object of the Rent Act. Before I consider the criticism levelled against the impugned provision of the Rent Act, I would first enumerate the recognised tests or guidelines which are laid down by the Supreme Court. It is well settled that the constitutional provision which secures equal protection of the laws forbids class legislation and not reasonable classification. A law based on or involving a classification founded on intelligible differentia having a rational relation to the object sought to be achieved is considered constitutionally valid.

12. In Ramkrishna Dalmia v. Justice Tendolkar, AIR 1958 SC 538 at p. 547 the Supreme Court has enunciated the following principles. These principles have been consistently adopted and applied in all the cases. I am reproducing only those tests which are strictly relevant for deciding the point at issue:

(c) that it must be presumed that the Legislature understands and correctly appreciates the need of its own people, that its laws are directed to problems made manifest by experience and that its discriminations are based on adequate grounds;

(e) that in order to sustain the presumption of constitutionality the Court may take into consideration matters of common knowledge, matters of common report, the history of the times and may assume every state of facts which can be conceived existing at the time of legislation; and

(f) that while good faith and knowledge of the existing conditions on the part of a Legislature are to be presumed, if there is nothing on the face of the law or the surrounding circumstances brought to the notice of the Court on which the classification may reasonably be regarded as based, the presumption of constitutionality cannot be carried to the extent of always holding that there must be some undisclosed and unknown reasons for subjecting certain individuals or corporations to hostile or discriminating legislation."

13. As is stated by the Supreme Court in the above case, these principles will have to be constantly borne in mind by the Court when it is called upon to adjudge the constitutionality of any particular law attacked as discriminatory and violative of the equal protection of the law.

14. In an earlier decision of the Supreme Court (Kedar Nath Bajora v. State of West Bengal) reported in AIR 1953 SC 404 at p. 407, the following observation is made which may also be relevant while examining the constitutionality of the impugned legislation:—

"Article 14 does not insist that legislative classification should be scientifically perfect or logically complete."

The Supreme Court also added that merely because there is no such scientific perfection or logical infallibility in the mode of classification it cannot be said that the Act is based on no intelligible differentia and is, therefore, arbitrary. I also find that in Jalan Trading Co. v. Mill Mazdoor Sabha, AIR 1967 SC 691, the Supreme Court pronounced yet another principle which can be usefully followed while testing the validity of the impugned classification:—

"If the classification is not patently arbitrary, the Court will not rule it discriminatory merely because it involves hardship or inequality of burden. With a view to secure particular objects a scheme may be selected by the Legislature, wisdom whereof may be open to debate; it may even be demonstrated that the scheme is not the best in the circumstances and the choice of the Legislature may be shown to be erroneous, but unless the enactment fails to satisfy the dual test of intelligible classification and rationality of the relation with the object of the law, it will not be subject to judicial interference under Art. 14."

15. In a nutshell the argument of Mr. Singhvi against the constitutional validity of Section 13 (1) (i) is as follows:

16. While restricting the landlord's right to evict the tenants from premises on certain grounds mentioned in Section 13 of the Rent Act, the Legislature has in fact made class-legislation which favours one category of tenants by conferring on them rights and privileges in the matter of evidence. These are denied to the category of tenants to which the petitioners belong. The right of the landlord to evict tenants from premises which are buildings or structures under Section 13 (1) (g), (h), (hh) are hedged in by stricter conditions and provision is also made to minimise the evicted tenants' hardships. By contrast under Section 13 (1) (i) the landlord is awarded possession of premises as soon as he establishes that his requirement is reasonable and bona fide. Section 13 (3) and Section 17 make provision for certain safeguards in favour of the tenants but they are illusory and not as efficacious as those enjoyed by the privileged class of tenants of premises comprising of buildings or structures. Mr. Singhvi argues that the Rent Act seeks to protect tenants of premises against eviction whether they are occupying buildings or open land, or they occupy structures put up by them or their landlord. There is no good reason why there should be any discrimination in the matter of eviction clause. All these tenants irrespective of the nature of the premises held by them need the protection of laws against unscrupulous landlords. If the tenants of open lands have lawfully constructed their own structures on the demised property, they certainly stand in the same position as the tenants who occupy buildings built by their landlords. Section 13 (1) (i) when so considered and compared with the other relevant clauses of Section 13, clearly show that the classification is arbitrary and the same also suffers from want of an intelligible differentia.

17. At this stage I find it necessary to ascertain the object of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates (Control) Act 1947. The preamble of the said Act and the various clause notes accompanying the amendments effected in the Act from time to time show that the Rent Act was enacted, inter alia, to control evictions and wherever possible to boost and encourage the building activity by enabling landlords to rebuild dilapidated building and also to erect structures or buildings on vacant plots. The later object of the enactment is evident from Section 13 (1) (hh), (i) and (ii).

18. Section 12 (1) of the Rent Act provides that the landlord shall not be entitled to the recovery of possession of any premises so long as the tenant pays or is ready and willing to pay the amount of the rent and permitted increases, if any, and performs the other conditions of the tenancy in so far as they are consistent with the provisions of the Act. Section 12 (3) (a) provides that the tenant who falls in arrears of rent for more than six months forfeits the protection against eviction given by Section 12 (1) of the Act. The landlord is not free to evict the tenant as and when he chooses to do so. But Section 13 enacts that the landlord shall be entitled to recover possession of any premises if the Court is satisfied about the existence of the several grounds mentioned in that sub-section. Section 13 relaxes the rigour of law in favour of the landlords on certain limited grounds. The various clauses which contain different grounds for eviction are not the same. They differ in material particulars and in the result the tenants are granted protection against eviction in varying degrees under varying circumstances.

19. When Mr. Singhvi criticises this arrangement of the several clauses of Section 13 (1), he overlooks two important factors, and those factors betray the hollowness of his attack. The Rent Act protects tenants against unreasonable eviction from the demised premises. When the demised premises are either land or building, they are not the same and identical. Equal protection of laws cannot be claimed under unequal circumstances. Merely because the tenant of the land has lawfully constructed a structure of his own on the demised land it makes no difference. When we consider the legal position it is clear that the structure built by the tenant belongs to him at all times. Under Sec. 108 (B) (h) of the Transfer of Property Act, the tenant has, even after the determination of the lease, the right to remove all things which he has attached to the earth. He can take away his fixtures or the material which he may have used for putting up the structure when his tenancy of the land is determined for one reason or the other. As the landlord has no proprietary interest in such structure or building, there was no reason to extend the protection of the rent Act to the tenants of the lands in respect of their structures. This is the first aspect which must be given due importance while appreciating Mr. Singhvi's submission.

20. Then there is difference in legislative protection and that is also founded on a rational basis consistent with the known object of the enactment. The landlords of open lands should not find it burdensome when they propose to undertake building activity. Section 13 (1) (i), till it was amended by Bombay Act (No. 61) of 1963 allowed the landlord vacant possession of the plot only when he required it for erection of a new residential building. The note on clause which precedes that amendment justifies the dropping of the word "residential" on this ground. So the amendment was thought necessary to give greater incentive to builders.

21. Mr. Singhvi is right when he submitted that the tenants of lands will suffer hardship similar to those suffered by tenants of buildings. But that was inevitable. The difference, if any, cannot in any manner affect the validity of the classification. As observed by the Supreme Court, the matter cannot be examined scientifically and with meticulous precision. When the legislators undertake to mitigate a major social evil and provide for greater good of the greater number, one cannot adopt a too rigid mathematical test while deciding the validity of a legislative measure. In the words of the Supreme Court, Art. 14 of the Constitution does not insist that legislative classification should be scientifically perfect or logically complete. Unless the classification is wholly arbitrary, the Court will not rule it discriminatory merely because it involves hardship or inequality of burden.

22. Mr. Sorabjee is right when he says that in the present case there is a clear-cut intelligible differentia which formed the basis of classification. Tenants of buildings are different from tenants of open pieces of lands. When we consider the object of the Rent Act, it is also evident that there is a rational basis for the above mentioned classification for good reasons different conditions are prescribed by the various clauses of Sec. 13 as conditions precedent for passing an order of eviction against tenants.

23. Mr. Parpia, who appears for the State, has also emphasised this very aspect. After carefully considering the criticism levelled by Mr. Singhvi against the validity of the impugned clause of Section 13, I have come to the conclusion that the same is valid. The reasonable classification is not hit by the prohibition implicit in Art. 14 of the Constitution.

24. Then Mr. Singhvi contended that the present suit filed by the respondents is barred by res judicata. The petitioners relied on this defence even in the lower courts and they urged that the decision in R. A. E. Suit No. 918/5235 of 1957 as varied by the decision of the Appellate Bench bars the present suit and some of the findings recorded by the Appellate Bench in appeals filed by the defendants are conclusive and binding on the plaintiffs in the present proceedings.

25. Before I consider the strength of this submission, it will be necessary to refer briefly to the findings recorded by the Appellate Bench in the earlier proceedings. The Appellate Bench came to the conclusion that the notice to quit dated 25-2-1957 terminating the tenant's tenancy by the end of March 1957 was served on the tenant on 1-3-1957 with the result that the tenant had not one clear month to vacate the premises. The suit filed on the basis of such a notice was liable to be dismissed. Defendant No. 7 in this suit, who was also a defendant in that proceeding, who held to be a lawful sub-tenant. But the Court found that the plaintiff had failed to bring his case under S. 13 (1) (i) of the Rent Act as against this defendant on the ground that the law was subsequently amended. It was held that the structure put up by the tenant was not permanent. It was held that the land in question was let by the plaintiffs with the knowledge that defendant No. 1 would put up a structure on the said land. It was also found that the plaintiff had failed to prove that he required the premises reasonably and bona fide for erecting a new building.

26. Mr. Singhvi referred to a few rulings to show that the findings recorded in the earlier suit, whatever the result of the final order, are binding on the parties against whom those findings are recorded. Mr. Singhvi drew my attention to a Calcutta decision in P. M. Mukerjee v. Ambika Churn, (1897) ILR 24 Cal 900. In that case a point arose whether findings recorded in the earlier suit are binding in the subsequent suit although the earlier suit was decided against the plaintiff on the ground that the requisite notice was not given. When the ground of res judicata was pleaded in the subsequent suit the Court held that the matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit was directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit and it was finally heard and decided between the same parties notwithstanding the fact that the previous suit filed by reason of the decision of the Court upon some other matter as well. The subsequent suit was barred by res judicata. The ratio of this decision, no doubt, prima facie supports the contention of Mr. Singhvi. In the present case also the appellate Bench recorded a finding that the notice was not of the required duration and the suit was liable to be dismissed on that finding only. But the Court also recorded other findings mentioned above. The point will have to be decided after carefully considering the important question whether, or not the final decision was based squarely on some or on all the findings recorded in the suit. This decision was referred to by a Division Bench of this Court while considering a similar point of res judicata in Laxman v. Saraswati, 63 Bom LR 152 = (AIR 1961 Bom 218). As both the parties relied upon the decision, I will consider that authority towards the end of my discussion. Similarly both the parties relied upon another decision of this Court in N. J. Gor v. M. G. Raval, 53 Bom LR 174 = (AIR 1951 Bom 336). I will also refer to that decision when I conclude the discussion on the point of law raised by the parties.

27. Mr. Sorabjee also referred to certain other rulings dwelling on the point at issue. A Division Bench of the Madras High Court held in Ramaswami Reddy v. T. Marudai Reddy & Co., AIR 1924 Mad 469 that an adverse finding in a decree in favour of a party is not res judicata. While giving this decision the Madras High Court followed an earlier decision of the Privy Council in Midnapur Zamindari Co. Ltd. v. Naresh Narayan Roy, ILR 48 Cal 460 = (AIR 1922 PC 241). In the same volume at page 893 there is another ruling of the same High Court to the effect that a finding in the proceeding not necessary for the disposal of the suit but recorded only to avoid possible remand is not res judicata. It is not the basis of the judgment and, therefore, the point is not finally determined.

28. The next decision to be considered is the one in Hiralal Murarka v. Mangtulal Bagaria, AIR 1947 Cal 221. The Court held in that case that a finding upon an issue not necessary to be decided will not found a plea of res judicata. It was a case where the earlier suit was dismissed on the ground that a proper notice under Section 80 of the Civil P. C. was not given. Some findings were also recorded on other issues raised in that suit. When in the subsequent suit the decision was relied upon as constituting a bar in the nature of res judicata, the High Court of Calcutta held that once the Court comes to the conclusion that no notice had been given under Sec. 80, Civil P. C., it had no option but to dismiss the suit under Order 7, Rule 11 of the Code. The findings of that Court on the merits are obiter and cannot operate as res judicata. In this case reliance was placed on the earlier decision of that Court in (1897) ILR 24 Cal 900. It was held to be no longer good law. This matter went up to the Privy Council and the Privy Council upheld the decision of the Calcutta High Court and that judgment is to be found in Shankarlal Patwari v. Hiralal Murarka, AIR 1950 PC 80. I am mentioning this fact because the decision in (1897) ILR 24 Cal 900 is referred to as good law in 63 Bom LR 152 = (AIR 1961 Bom 218). It appears that the later decisions of the Calcutta High Court and also of the Privy Council were not brought to the notice of the Division Bench which decided that case. The decision in Bhiku Appa Kura v. Dattatraya Chandrayya, AIR 1947 Bom 392 is also an authority for the proposition that a finding which was wholly unnecessary for deciding the suit does not operate as res judicata.

29. Now, I must refer to a recent judgment of a Division Bench of this Court in 63 Bom LR 152 = (AIR 1961 Bom 218). This judgment is strongly relied upon by both the parties and as a decision of the Division Bench it is binding on me. After considering the various rulings of the High Court the Division Bench laid down certain broad propositions which would be helpful while resolving the point of res judicata which arises under similar circumstances. In the previous suit when a number of findings are recorded and the suit is finally decided one way or the other, it is important to find out whether the decision of the suit was based on some or all the findings recorded in the suit. The legal position summed up by the Division Bench of this Court at page 161 is to the following effect:—

"It appears from the decisions mentioned above that it cannot be laid down as a general proposition that where a previous decision is supported on two or more findings, all the findings will necessarily operate as res judicata. Where the previous suit was dismissed on a technical ground which made the suit untenable, findings recorded on the merits would normally be obiter dicta. Similarly, if the Court which decided the prior suit has itself based the decision on only some of the findings recorded by it, or if under the circumstances of the case its decision can be fairly attributed to only some of the findings so recorded, the other findings would not operate as res judicata. In other cases, where the previous decision is based upon, and is attributable to several findings, all the findings will have the force of res judicata."

Mr. Singhvi for the petitioners strongly relies upon the last part of the observation and argues that the previous decision in the present case is attributable to the several findings and not merely to the defective notice. Mr. Sorabjee, on the other hand relies upon this very authority and submits that the earlier decision can be said to be based only on the point of notice. The ultimate decision can be attributed only to that finding which was decisive for the disposal of the suit. The other findings were recorded by the Appellate Bench of the Court of Small Causes only incidentally to avoid a further remand if the higher court were to disagree with its finding on the point of notice.

30. I have gone through the judgment of the Appellate Bench and I find that Mr. Sorabjee is right in his submission. The final decision in that suit can be attributed only to the finding on the point of notice for more than one reason. It was in the nature of a technical point and the suit was, therefore, liable to be dismissed as soon as the court found that the notice of termination of tenancy was not proper. The final decision can be fairly attributed only to this one finding.

31. As for the claim under Section 13 (1) (i), the bar of res judicata does not avail the petitioners for the additional reason that the plaintiffs have based their claim on altered circumstances. I need only refer to 53 Bom LR 174 = (AIR 1951 Bom 336) wherein it is held that a fresh suit for possession on the ground of reasonable and bona fide requirement based on identical facts without pleading change of circumstances is barred by res judicata.

32. Mr. Singhvi then raised one small point which can be disposed of without much discussion. He says that Section 13 (1) (i) of the Rent Act is attracted only when the premises are land at the commencement of the tenancy and also at the time when the landlord institutes the suit for eviction on that ground. In the present case, says Mr. Singhvi, the tenant and the sub-tenants by their joint venture have erected structures on the leased land. The sub-tenants are occupying the structures which are shops. In such a case the landlord cannot ask for possession under Section 13 (1) (i) of the Rent Act. Mr. Sorabjee has raised an objection that this point was not taken in any one of the Courts below. He also submitted that the point of law is covered by a decision of the Supreme Court.

33. It is true that the point was not taken up in the Courts below, but as I find that Mr. Sorabjee's contention on the merits is well-founded, that omission on the part of the petitioners is of no consequence. I am referred by Mr. Sorabjee to a decision in K. R. Kundapur v. Krishnaji Karani, AIR 1966 SC 1024. A similar point was raised by the tenant in this case. The tenant had taken an open plot of land and built a structure thereon and he resisted the eviction on the ground that the landlord had no cause of action against him under Section 13 (1) (i) of the Bombay Rent Act. The Supreme Court examined the relevant clauses of the Rent Act including Section 5 (8) and Section 13 (1) (i) and came to the conclusion that the expression "premises" in Section 13 (1) refers to the subject-matter of letting for which rent is payable and in respect of which there is a relationship of landlord and tenant.

34. In the present case the respondents had let out an open plot of land to defendant No. 1. The rent payable by defendant No. 1 is for the land only. Defendant No. 1 is recovering rent from his tenants in respect of the structures standing on the land. Respondents have no concern with the structures and the structures are not the subject-matter of tenancy between the respondents and defendant No. 1. As the premises are land only, the respondent's suit cannot be defeated on the ground that the tenant of the land has put up his own structure on the land.

35. The next important point of law raised by Mr. Singhvi is about the effect of Section 14 of the Rent Act on the rights and liabilities of the petitioners who claim to be lawful sub-tenants. I will consider the issue of lawful sub-tenancy later on. For the present, the point of law is considered on the basis that all the petitioners are lawful sub-tenants and they become the direct tenants of the plaintiffs as soon as the tenancy of defendant No. 1 is determined. Mr. Singhvi relied upon a decision of the Supreme Court in Hiralal Vallabhram v. Sheth Kasturbhai Lalbhai, AIR 1967 SC 1853 for his proposition that the sub-tenant of the contractual tenant will not be deemed to be a tenant under Sec. 14 of the Rent Act as soon as the notice determining the tenancy is given. The words "is determined for any reason" in Section 14 mean that where the interest of a tenant comes to an end completely, Mr. Singhvi says that in the present case the tenant's interest comes to an end on the passing of a decree in ejectment. It is only at that point of time that the sub-tenants become the deemed tenants of the plaintiffs. As deemed tenants they are liable to be evicted only after a proper notice to quit is given by the plaintiffs. He argues that in the present suit a decree in ejectment against the petitioners cannot be passed for the simple reason that their tenancy has not been terminated by a proper notice to quit. Mr. Singhvi relied upon a decision of this Court in Satwant Kaur v. Abdul Kadar, 68 Bom LR 221 = (AIR 1967 Bom 71) for the proposition that the sub-tenant is as much a tenant under the Rent Act and is entitled to a notice of termination of tenancy before a suit in ejectment can be filed against him. It was a case where on the death of a sub-tenant the right of sub-tenancy had devolved on all his heirs. The Court considered the definition of "tenant" as given in Section 5 (11) and read that with the provisions of Section 14 of the Rent Act. The landlord had given a notice terminating the tenancy of only one of the several persons in whom the sub-tenants' rights were vested. This Court held that the suit was bad for the reason that the other persons who were virtually joint tenants were not given any notice to quit. Whether or not a statutory tenant is entitled to a notice was not considered in that case.

The point of law was decided on the assumption that on the death of a sub-tenant all his heirs become the lawful sub-tenants of the premises. In fact, it is held by the Supreme Court in Anand Nivas Pvt. Ltd. v. Anandji Kalyanji, AIR 1965 SC 414 that by virtue of Ss. 12, 14 and 15 a person remaining in possession after determination of the contractual tenancy becomes a statutory tenant. He can remain in possession but cannot enforce terms of the original tenancy. He is a statutory tenant but has no contractual interest in the premises. He cannot create lawful sub-leases in favour of others. The ratio of this decision squarely applies to the facts of the present case. The various lawful sub-tenants, who will become the deemed tenants of the plaintiffs, will be the statutory tenants and it is not necessary to terminate their tenancies before instituting proceedings against them under any of the provisions of the Rent Act. Of course Section 12 requires a demand notice before a suit is filed for possession on the basis of rent defaults. But that is a different thing. Mr. Singhvi is not right when he says that the suit against the petitioners should fail for want of a notice to quit.

36. Both the parties strongly relied upon another decision of this Court in Indian Coffee Workers Co-operative Stores Ltd. v. Mrs. Bachobai Cowasjee Dhanjeeshaw, 66 Bom LR 338 = (AIR 1967 Bom 210). It was a case where the landlord had filed a suit against the tenant and the sub-tenant for possession on certain grounds under Section 13 of the Rent Act. One of the grounds of eviction was that the tenant had erected a permanent structure without the written permission of the landlord. The lower Courts had found that the tenant had in fact erected a permanent structure and the sub-tenants were actively associated with the erection of that structure. The sub-tenants challenged the decree on the ground that by virtue of the ejectment order against the tenant, they become the deemed tenants themselves under Section 14 of the Rent Act. This Court held that as the sub-tenants were jointly responsible with the tenants for the erection of the structure they are liable to be evicted along with the tenant. Mr. Singhvi relies on this part of the judgment to show that in the present case the petitioners will not be liable to be evicted on the basis of the grounds for ejectment which are found against the tenant. The tenant here is found guilty of profiteering. According to Mr. Singhvi, such a ground is not available for ejectment orders being passed against the sub-tenants who are not guilty of any such default. But Mr. Sorabjee tried to receive support from this very judgment for his proposition of law that once the grounds mentioned in Section 13 (1) are established against the tenants, then the sub-tenants have no independent defence and a decree in ejectment can be passed against them all when all are made parties to the suit. This Court considered the effect of Section 14 and laid down two propositions of law:—

37. It was held that Section 14 cannot be read aside from the provisions of the Act, and if a sub-tenant became a lawful tenant from the inception of the sub-tenancy he was bound to act strictly according to the Act, i.e. must be ready and willing to observe the terms of the tenancy and must not do anything that is prohibited by the Act. If he contravened the Act or did not observe the terms of tenancy, Section 14 could not possibly be regarded as giving him the right to be a tenant under the landlord. As sub-tenants, in that case, had not observed the terms of the tenancy, by causing permanent alterations in the premises, they were held to be not entitled to be tenants of the landlord.

38. The other aspect which was stressed in that decision was that the right of a person to become a sub-tenant under Section 14 is not an absolute right but it is controlled by the other sections of the Act. If the other sections entitled the landlord in a given case to obtain possession, Section 14 cannot come in the way. Section 12 entitles the landlord to obtain possession for non-payment of rent and Section 13 for other reasons. If the landlord, therefore, is entitled to obtain possession under any of the provisions, Section 14 must give way.

39. I have carefully considered the ratio of this judgment and I find that this interpretation of Section 14 will render the section wholly nugatory. A landlord has no privity of contract with the sub-tenants of his tenant. Sub-tenants are answerable for performing the various conditions of sub-tenancy only to the tenant who is their landlord for the time being. It is only when the tenant's tenancy is determined either by surrender or by a decree in ejectment passed against him that the sub-tenants become the lawful tenants of the landlord by virtue of Section 14 of the Rent Act. Once they get that legal status or character, then they are to hold the premises on the same terms and conditions as they held before subject to the other provisions of the Rent Act. But the words "subject to the other provisions of the Rent Act," will have to be understood as giving them the same rights and privileges as are conferred on the statutory tenants, whose contractual tenancy for one reason or the other has come to an end.

40. A closer look at Section 13 (1) will show that the various grounds on which the landlord can seek possession are not of the same kind and they are different in material particulars. Grounds under S. 13 (1) (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e) can be said to be personal to the tenant, who by his act, has rendered himself liable to be evicted. Grounds under Section 13 (1) (g), (h), (hh), (hhh), (i) and (ii) are mainly concerned with the premises held by the tenant. They are not in the nature of defaults which could be committed by the tenant. The landlord must establish those grounds before he can ask for a decree in ejectment against the tenant. If in a suit against the tenant other persons are joined on the allegation that they are sub-tenants and if an eviction is sought only on the grounds which are personal to the tenant then a decree in ejectment against him will result in conferring direct tenancy rights on the lawful sub-tenants. They cannot be ejected in that suit on those grounds. On the other hand, if the landlord seeks possession on the grounds which are not personal to the tenant and which concern the premises themselves, then it is open to the landlord in the same suit to plead and prove those grounds not only against the tenants but against the other persons impleaded in the suit and who are ultimately held to be lawful sub-tenants. In such a case the issues would be heard and decided between the landlord on the one side and the tenants and sub-tenants on the other. If the sub-tenants are not impleaded even in such a suit then the landlord, after obtaining a decree against the tenant, will have to file a fresh suit against the sub-tenants, who by then had become his direct deemed tenants by virtue of Section 14 of the Rent Act. In my opinion this would be the proper interpretation of Section 14 of the Rent Act when that section is read along with the other relevant provisions of the Rent Act. The construction indicated by Patel, J. will make Section 14 wholly meaningless. I will give only one illustration to indicate the fallacy which is inherent in that interpretation. The tenant may commit rent defaults for more than six months. He may not have any defence to an action founded on rent defaults. Under Section 12 (3) (a) the Court has no option but to pass a decree against him. But the sub-tenants may have regularly paid the rent to the tenant and their only fault will be that during the term of their sub-tenancy they have not forced or compelled the tenant to pass on the money received by him to the landlord. It will be wholly unreasonable to expect the sub-tenants to perform such an onerous duty. In my opinion, it is one of those grounds which is personal to the tenant and if his tenancy comes to an end on that ground, the sub-tenants become the direct tenants by virtue of the provisions of Section 14 of the Rent Act and they will be protected under the Rent Act.

41. If this was the only point involved in this case then I could not have taken a view contrary to the decision of the Division Bench of this Court and I would have referred the matter to the Division Bench without considering the merits of the case. But as I am holding in favour of the plaintiffs on other points, I have not considered it necessary to refer this matter to a Division Bench.

42. In the present case the plaintiffs can succeed against the lawful sub-tenants only if they show that they are entitled to possession of the plot of land reasonably and bona fide under Section 13 (1) (i) of the Rent Act. If the plaintiffs succeed in establishing only the other grounds which are personal to the tenant then a decree in ejectment cannot be passed against the lawful sub-tenants on those grounds.

43. M/s. Singhvi and Dhanuka, relying on the legal effect of Section 14 of the Rent Act, tried to evolve a new defence for the lawful sub-tenants of the land in the event of a decree in ejectment against the principal tenant defendant No. 1 on any one of the grounds which involve his personal defaults. As the structures belong to defendant No. 1 after the decree the sub-tenants will continue to be tenants of defendant No. 1 in respect of his structures and will be deemed statutory tenants of the plaintiffs in respect of the land underneath subject to the provisions of the Rent Act. In Special Civil Application No. 1191 of 1967 decided on 10-3-1970 I have negated the theory that the building or structure, apart from the land on which it stands, could be the subject-matter of Sec. 105 of the Transfer of Property Act. Under that section a lease is a transfer of a right to enjoy immovable property. Under Section 3 of the Transfer of Property Act read with Section 3 (26) of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897) "Immovable property" shall include land, benefits to arise out of land, and things attached to the earth, or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth. When a tenant of a land puts up his own structure thereon then under Section 108 (B) (h) even after the determination of the lease whilst he is in possession of the property leased but not afterwards, he has a right to remove at any time, all things which he has attached to the earth, provided he leaves the property in the state in which he received it. The structure or building without the land cannot be the subject-matter of a valid lease. The doctrine of dual ownership peculiar to India cannot be stretched to postulate a theory of dual tenancies implicit in the submissions of the learned counsel for the petitioners.

44. Realising this insurmountable difficulty Mr. Dhanuka suggested a novel solution for regularising the legal relationship between the petitioners and the defendants after this decree in ejectment brings about a total extinction of the tenancy of defendant No. 1. Despite the decree for possession of the demised land the tenant may not exercise his statutory right to demolish and remove his structure on the land. In law after the prescribed time i.e. execution of decree for possession of land against the defendant No. 1, the right to structure will vest in the plaintiffs. At that point of time the sub-tenants should be deemed to be the tenants both in respect of the land and structure under the plaintiffs. Superficially considered, the argument is attractive. I am interpreting a benevolent statute like a Rent Act enacted to safeguard the rights and interests of tenants. I would gladly adopt a construction which will advance the object of the statute. But unfortunately for Mr. Dhanuka, I find it wholly unwarranted. Rent Act protects tenants in occupation of premises against unreasonable eviction by landlords. Under Section 5 (8) of the Rent Act 'premises' means land or building let. In the present case what was let by the plaintiffs to defendant No. 1 was land and not structure. The structure was not part of the demised property and not premises within the meaning of the Rent Act. It is not possible to extend the fiction of law implicit in Section 14 of the Rent Act in the manner and to the extent suggested by Mr. Dhanuka.

45. That takes me to the final phase of this case, viz. whether the plaintiffs have established the case under Section 13 (1) (i) of the Rent Act. Before I consider the point of law, I must make it clear that in my opinion all these petitioners are the lawful sub-tenants of the land. The trial Court correctly recorded a finding to that effect. The Appellate Bench of the Court of Small Causes was not justified in reversing that finding. The facts of this case clearly show that the plot of land was let out to defendant No. 1 some time in August 1954 for a period of 3 years. Shortly after the commencement of the tenancy in or about August 1954 defendant No. 1 had erected shop structures thereon. In all there are 15 shop structures erected on the demised plot. According to the plaintiffs only 11 shops were erected when the earlier suit was filed and the remaining 4 shops were subsequently erected. The trial Court has considered the various admissions of the plaintiffs and has come to the conclusion that very probably in August 1954 itself all the shop structures must have been erected. The plaintiffs have made halting admissions and concession in favour of some of the defendants. Plaintiffs challenge the sub-tenancy of defendants 2 to 16 only as illegal. That is again a curious position. From amongst these defendants a concession is made in favour of defendant No. 15. No good reason is given as to why from amongst these defendants a concession could be made in favour of defendant No. 15. Even the rent receipts show that the defendants were given the plot of land much earlier to the date of the Rent Act Ordinance of 1959.

46. Mr. Dhanuka has referred to the pleadings of the parties and their conduct. The trial Court has discussed all the relevant factors in greater detail. The Appellate Bench without sufficient reason has tried to explain away the admissions of the plaintiffs with reference to his belated explanation in his re-examination. Again, it is not conceivable that a tenancy could be created only in respect of the structure apart from the land on which the structure stands. I have held in Special Civil Application No. 1191 of 1967 decided on 10th March 1970 that a tenancy cannot be created in law in respect of the structure apart from the land on which it stands. In view of this decision, Mr. Sorabjee for the respondents, could not pursue the matter further but he did argue that a person could be a tenant of the structure at the same time having no interest in the land on which the structure stands. As defendant No. 1 has immediately built upon the open piece of land the several shops it is reasonable to assume that he let out the shops to the several defendants more or less at the same time long before the date of the Rent Act Ordinance of 1959. It is not shown by the plaintiffs that some other persons were in possession before the shops were occupied by the defendants Nos. 13 to 16. I therefore disagree with the finding of the Appellate Bench of the Court of Small Causes and hold that the trial Court was right in recording finding that all the defendants Nos. 2 to 16 are lawful sub-tenants in respect of the open plot of land.

47. As stated above, the plaintiffs will only succeed in getting an ejectment order if they show against all the defendants including the sub-tenants that they require the premises reasonably and bona fide for erection of a building within the meaning of Section 13 (1) (i) of the Rent Act. That takes me to the consideration of the key words in the sub-section 'reasonably and bona fide.' Advocates on either side have made various submissions relying upon a mass of case-law and tried to put forth their own interpretation on these two words. I shall presently consider the various possible interpretations and then express my view in the matter.

48. Mr. Singhvi for the petitioners attacked the finding of the Appellate Bench on the ground that the Appellate Bench has not taken into account the relevant factors which had influenced the decision of the trial Court. He further stated that all the relevant factors considered by the trial Court are ignored and the Appellate Bench has held that mere financial capacity to build is sufficient to satisfy the Court that the plaintiffs reasonably and bona fide require the premises. As against this Mr. Sorabjee for the respondents contended that the decision of the Appellate Bench is based on findings of fact and there is no error of law apparent on the face of the record which would justify any interference under Art. 227 of the Constitution.

49. The Supreme Court in the case of Neta Ram v. Jivan Lal, AIR 1963 SC 499 was interpreting S. 13 (3) (a) of Patiala & East Punjab States Union Urban Rent Restriction Ordinance. Section 13 (3) (a) (iii) enabled the landlord to recover possession of any building if he required it for the purpose of re-erection of that building or for its replacement by another building or for the erection of other buildings. While interpreting the word "require" in the light of the various provisions of the Rent Act, the Supreme Court held that certain conditions will have to be fulfilled. It must be noted that according to Section 13 (3) (a) (iii) (b) the Controller had to be satisfied that the claim of the landlord is bona fide. In other words the landlord had to establish that he required bona fide the building for the specified purpose. At page 502 of the report the Court has observed as follows:—

"The Controller has to be satisfied about the genuineness of the claim. To reach this conclusion, obviously the Controller must be satisfied about the reality of the claim made by the landlord. This can only be established by looking at all the surrounding circumstances such as the condition of the building, its situation, the possibility of its being put to a more profitable use after construction, the means of the landlord and so on. It is not enough that the landlord comes forward and says that he entertains a particular intention, however, strongly, said to be entertained by him. The clause speaks not of the bona fides of the landlord, but says, on the other hand that the claim of the landlord that he requires the building for reconstruction and re-erection must be bona fide, that is to say, honest in the circumstances."

What is observed by the Supreme Court shows that, there is a material difference in the scheme of Section 13 of the Bombay Rent Act and the relevant clauses of the Punjab Rent Act. Under Section 13, (1) (i) of the Bombay Rent Act the landlord's bona fides are to be considered. But under the Punjab Act, the Court must be satisfied that the claim of the landlord is bona fide. Mr. Singhvi cannot, therefore, rely upon this decision for interpreting the relevant clause of the Bombay Rent Act.

50. Then Mr. Singhvi read a passage from Halsbury's Laws of England, III Edn. Vol. 23 at page 814, para 1593:

Reasonableness:

"In determining whether it is reasonable to make an order for possession the Judge is entitled to take into account all the circumstances as they exist at the date of the hearing, in a broad commonsense way as a man of the world. Any facts which amount to hardship on landlord or tenant are relevant and so is the conduct of the parties generally. The question is not whether it is reasonable for the landlord to seek possession but whether it is reasonable to the court to grant it. The interests of the public are also relevant. The difficulty of establishing reasonableness will usually be less alternative accommodation is available than when it is not." But this statement of law is based upon the relevant clauses of the English Rent Act.

51. Mr. Sorabjee relied upon the exposition of law in the Rent Acts by R. E. Megarry, Tenth Edition, Vol. 1, page 258. Commenting on Section 2 of the English Rent Act, which deals with the reasonableness of order of ejectment, the learned author under the sub-heading (2) "Circumstances to be considered" states as follows:—

"(a) Approach of Court:— The duty of the judge is to take into account all relevant circumstances as they exist at the date of the hearing. That he must do in what I venture to call a board, commonsense way as a man of the world and come to his conclusion, giving such weight as he thinks right to the various factors in the situation. Some factors may have little or no weight, others may be decisive. The court must consider not whether the landlord's desire for possession is reasonable, but whether it is reasonable to make an order for possession; for because a wish is reasonable, it does not follow that it is reasonable in a court to gratify it."

Mr. Sorabjee, with reference to this passage and the passage quoted from Halsbury's laws of England, says that this statement of law holds good on the peculiar wording of the English Rent Act. Under Section 3 (1) of the Rent, Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 no order or Judgment for recovery of possession of any dwelling house governed by the Act shall be made or given unless the Court considers it reasonable to make such order or give such Judgment. One of the conditions of that section is that the Court must have the power to pass the ejectment order under the provisions set out in the first Schedule to that Act. The preamble to the first Schedule provides, among other things, that the Court shall have power for the purpose of Section 3 of the Act to make order or give judgment for the recovery of possession of any dwelling house where the Court considers it reasonable so to do and one of the grounds mentioned in that schedule is established. Even if the landlord under one of those grounds reasonably requires the dwelling house for occupation as a residence, the Court must consider it reasonable to make an order or give judgment for the recovery of possession. Relying upon this basic difference Mr. Sorabjee argued that the general observations in Halsbury's Laws of England or in Magarry's Book will have to be considered with suitable changes while interpreting the words "reasonably and bona fide" in Section 13 (1) (i) of the Bombay Rent Act. No doubt there is considerable substance in this submission and I cannot agree with Mr. Singhvi or Mr. Dhanuka, who pressed upon me to consider the English law as useful for interpreting the key words in the Rent Act. Mr. Singhvi also relied upon a decision of this Court in Nimbibai R. Onkar Mall v. R. P. Mali, (1962) 64 Bom LR 798 for emphasising his point that the landlord must need the premises for himself and the need must be of a pressing nature. Chainani, C. J. was considering a case under Section 29 read with S. 43-D (1) of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948. Under Section 43-D (1) of the Bombay Tenancy Act, the landlord may terminate the tenancy of a tenant if he bona fide requires the land for any non-agricultural purpose. While considering the exact connotation of these words, the learned Chief Justice referred to a number of cases under the Rent Act and came to the conclusion that before the landlord can be awarded possession of the land on the ground that he requires it bona fide for a non-agricultural purpose, he must prove some need or necessity on account of which it is necessary for him to have the land restored to him. The need for the landlord to have more or a larger income is not the only ground on account of which he can be said to require the land. Relying on these observations, Mr. Singhvi argued that the plaintiffs must make out a case that they need the premises and there is some pressing necessity which compels them to seek possession of the land. Strictly speaking the Division Bench considered only the words "bona fide requirement" without any reference to the reasonableness of that requirement. The Tenancy Act, among other things, is intended for bringing about equitable distribution of land. When the landlord wants to dispossess the tenant he may deprive him of his means of livelihood. Then the fact that the landlord is hard pressed by circumstances may be a relevant factor while deciding the question of bona fides. The ratio of this decision will not be very useful while interpreting Section 13 (1) (i) of the Rent Act.

52. At this stage I may also refer to a number of decisions cited by Mr. Sorabjee in support of his assertion that the court must consider the bona fides of the landlord and the reasonableness of his requirement without reference to the hardships of the tenant or other general considerations, which are mentioned in the above quoted passages from Halsbury's Laws of England and the book by Magarry. In Chandrasekhara v. Chetty's Charities, AIR 1966 Mad 14 the Madras High Court was interpreting Section 14 (1) (b) of the Houses and Rents, Buildings Lease and Rent Control Act (No. 18) of 1960. Under that section the landlord was entitled to possession of the premises if he required them bona fide for immediate purpose of demolition. At page 18, para 16 of the report the Court stated that while considering the bona fides the Judge should take into consideration every circumstance affecting the interest of the landlord and the tenant as well as the interest of the public at the date of hearing. In para 19 of the same report the Court stated that it was not whether the landlord's desire for possession was reasonable but whether it was reasonable to make an order for possession: because it was reasonable it did not follow that it was reasonable for a Court to gratify it. Again in para 20 it was stated that the landlord should satisfy the deciding authority that his requirement was reasonable and bona fide and that he had made plans and estimates for the new building; that he had obtained the necessary sanction of the municipal authorities for the purpose of such erection and that he had the necessary funds with him for carrying out such construction. Mr. Sorabjee relied upon only some of the ingredients which the Madras High Court considered as relevant while deciding whether the requirement of the landlord was a bona fide and reasonable one. The Madras statute used the word "bona fide." That Court noted the fact that in the English Act the word used was "reasonably required." Some of the courts felt that the two words are interchangeable and accepted the summary of the English law as affording proper guidance while recording a finding about the bona fide requirement of the landlord. But that again is not quite correct. The English Act used the word "reasonable" and made it clear that the Court must consider whether it is reasonable to pass an order in ejectment. The Madras Act used the word "bona fide." That being the position I cannot derive much assistance from the decision.

53. Mr. Dhanuka, who supplemented the arguments of Mr. Singhvi also referred to a few cases which involve the interpretation of similar words in rent legislation. (1951) 1 All ER 710 at page 713, Cresswell v. Hodgson, Singleton, L. J. has stated that while considering the reasonableness of the landlord's requirement, the position of the landlord and that of the tenant must be considered. At page 714, Denning, L. J. has made the following observation:—

"The Rent Restrictions Acts put a restraint on the exercise by a landlord of his common law right to possession. The restraint is not to be removed unless the county court Judge thinks it reasonable. That means, I think, reasonable having regard to the interests of the parties concerned and also reasonable having regard to the interests of the public." But I have already made it clear earlier that the scheme of the English Rent Act and the wording of the relevant provision is materially different from the wording of Section 13 (1) (i) of the Bombay Rent Act.

54. The other decision cited by Mr. Dhanuka is Deb Kumar Mukerjee v. A. Banerjee, AIR 1958 Cal 229. That Court was interpreting Section 12 (1) (h) Houses and Rents — W. B. Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act (17 of 1950). That section used the expression "reasonable requirement." That sub-section in addition to the word "reasonable" contained an explanation which required the court, while determining the reasonableness of requirement for purposes of building or re-building, to consider the comparative public benefit or disadvantage by extending or diminishing accommodation. The learned Judge interpreted the words "reasonable requirement" in the light of this explanation. In the Bombay Rent Act I do not find any similar provision and in fact in addition to the word "Reasonable" the word "bona fide" also is used here.

55. In Labhu Ram v. Ram Parkash, AIR 1959 Punj 103 the Court was considering the word "requires" in Section 13 (3) (a) (iii) of the East Punjab Urban Rent Restriction Act (3 of 1949). At p. 103 the learned Judge observed that the word "required" could not be held as synonymous of "desire". "Required" would import something more than the mere desire and would call for invocation of an outside authority who would give the verdict that in a given case for some objective standards the need was genuine and the tests had been satisfied. As the word used was the bare word "required" without any expression like "bona fide" or "reasonable", the Court struggled hard to properly interpret that word in the light of the object of that Act and thought it necessary that apart from the desire of the landlord there must be some objective standard to indicate that the landlord's need was genuine.

56. Mr. Sorabjee for the respondent, relying upon the difference in language of the English Rent Act and the relevant clauses of the Bombay Rent Act, argued that the Court must find out whether the landlord's requirement is bona fide and reasonable from his point of view without reference to other considerations including the hardship of the tenant. When a statute speaks only about the landlord's requirement being reasonable and bona fide, it is not necessary that the requirement should impress the Court as reasonable. He tried to derive some support from the observations of the House of Lords in Viscount Tredegar v. Harwood, 1929 AC 72. Their Lordships were considering the terms of a lease and the point argued was whether there was an implied term in the contract under which lessor's approval to certain act of the lessee was not to be unreasonably withheld. They were not called upon to consider any express terms. Reliance was placed on an implied term which would show that the lessor had no absolute right to withhold his approval. The approval was to be about the alternative Insurance office which would be approached for insuring the estate. It was suggested that there was an implied term in the contract under which the lessor's approval was not to be unreasonably withheld. The grounds of the lessor's disapproval were assailed as unreasonable. While dealing with this point Viscount Dunedin at p. 78 observed as follows:—

"I am not inclined to adhere to the pronouncement that reasonableness was only to be referred to something which touched both parties to the lease. I should read reasonableness in the general sense, and if it was necessary — it is not so in the view already expressed — I would hold here that the appellant's reasons are eminently reasonable."

But this decision is hardly relevant here. Their Lordships were considering the construction of a contract between the parties. And it may be that whether or not the conduct of one contracting party is reasonable or not will have to be decided upon the express or implied terms of the contract. In the absence of express terms, it may be that reasonableness of the lessor's conduct was to be considered without any reference to the lessee. This decision gives no assistance to me while interpreting the terms of a statute and different considerations will be relevant while considering the words "reasonable requirement" in the statute.

57. In Bhulan Singh v. Ganendra Kumar, AIR 1950 Cal 74, the Court was required to consider the question whether the premises were bona fide required by the landlord, among other things, for purposes of building or re-building. At page 76 of the report, Harries, C. J. has made the following observations:—

"It appears to me that the premises are bona fide required by the landlord for the purpose of rebuilding if the landlord honestly requires them for that purpose. The equivalent of the phrase "bona fide" in "honestly." It refers to the state of the landlord's mind. The landlord, therefore, will be entitled to possession as against the tenant if he established that he honestly requires the premises for rebuilding."

At p. 249 of the same volume (Basant Lal Shah v. Chakravarty) there is another decision which also is given while interpreting the words "requires" and "bona fide" under the West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provision) Act (38) of 1948. P. B. Mukharji, J. at p. 251 observes as follows:—

"Although the word 'reasonably' does not appear in the Statute, questions of reasonableness may come in for consideration in deciding the 'bona fides' of the landlord. Gross unreasonableness of the landlord may in proper circumstances lead the Court to the conclusion that the landlord's requirement is not bona fide."

58. In Tulsi Charan Bairagi v. Debendra Nath Sil, 1958 Cal LJ 149 at p. 150, S. N. Guha Roy, J. was considering the meaning of the expression "required" under the Calcutta Tenancy Act. The learned Judge while interpreting the word "required" expressed the view that that expression was wider than the expression 'bona fide required' or 'reasonably required' as used in the Rent Acts of 1948 and 1960. He stated that the expression nevertheless is not equivalent to a mere wish and it refers to an objective state of things. The element of need is expressed by the use of the word "required."

59. A consideration of the various ruling and passages from Law Books cited above shows one striking feature which is common to all, viz. in all the statutes either the word "bona fide" or the expression "reasonably required" is used. Sometimes the word used is only "requires" without any qualification. Whenever one of these three words is used, the Courts have tried to interpret the word bearing in mind the objects of the relevant statutes while interpreting the word "reasonable" even "bona fides" are considered. While interpreting the word "bona fides" the Courts have considered that reasonableness of the requirement is relevant. When the bare word "required" is used the courts have expressed the view that mere wish is not sufficient and there must be something more in the nature of objective facts. Indirectly expressions like "bona fide" and "reasonable" have been considered relevant while interpreting the word "required." But in the Bombay Rent Act in some of the clauses of Section 13, the words used are "reasonably and bona fide required." These words appear in Section 13 (1) (g), (h) (hh) and (i). For good reason the Legislature has used both the expressions and full effect must be given to those expressions while interpreting the subsection. "Bona fide" means honestly and not actuated by bad faith or oblique motive. "Reasonably" means, according to the dictionary that which is rational, just, not excessive. As these two words are used to govern the word "require" all the three words must be construed in a manner which would be consistent with the object of the Rent Act in general, and Section 13 in particular. The landlord's contractual right to evict his tenant is recognised in a limited way in Section 13 so as to cause the minimum hardship to the tenant in the event of his eviction from the premises. While considering the proof of bona fides and reasonableness of the requirement, a number of factors are bound to overlap. The words "reasonably and bona fide" are not intended to be used disjunctively. In a given case facts established must prove the bona fides without reference to the reasonable requirement. If want of bona fides amounting to mala fides, is proved, courts can readily infer or hold that the requirement is unreasonable. As observed in some of the cases quoted above, if the requirement is wholly unreasonable that will also have a bearing on the question of bona fides of the landlord. Even on that basis the court will find that the requirement is not bona fide. But at the same time it is possible to hold that the landlord has succeeded in establishing his bona fides; but that, by itself, will not give him a right to evict the tenant; he must further prove that in addition to his bona fides, his requirement also is reasonable.

60. Mr. Sorabjee wants me not to follow the English Law on the ground that the words "reasonably and bona fide" refer to the landlord without reference to the tenant. I am not prepared to agree with this submission. As I have shown above, even when one of the three words was used, i.e. 'Bona fide' or 'reasonably' or 'required' in the various Indian statutes dealing with rent legislation, the Courts have considered all the relevant factors objectively without reference to the landlord while deciding either the bona fides or the reasonableness or the bare requirement of the landlord. It is emphasised in so many words that the mere wish or the intention of the landlord is not sufficient to give him a right to evict the tenant. The Rent Act is enacted with the avowed object of protecting tenants against unreasonable eviction. While considering the relevant factors for deciding the bona fide and reasonableness of the landlord's requirement, the tenant cannot be forgotten for all the time. Various objective facts are mentioned like the public good, the hardship of the landlord, the plight of the tenant and it is said that the Courts should take a broad commonsense view of the whole matter. But at the same time while considering the reasonableness of the landlord's requirement, the mere fact that the tenant will be evicted and will suffer hardship is per se not relevant. It is the inevitable consequence of every order in ejectment which would be passed in favour of the landlord. If that is considered as decisive then the landlord, who, bona fide and reasonably requires the premises, will fail in all cases. But the tenants' hardship may be linked up with the conduct of the landlord and may give rise to some consideration of justice and equity in favour of the tenant. Such factors will have to be objectively considered while deciding the question of bona fides and reasonableness of the landlord's requirement. For instance, if the landlord lets out an open plot of land to the tenant and later on connives at or consents to the construction of some structure thereon at considerable cost by the tenant and shortly thereafter starts eviction proceedings, the tenant's hardship attributable to the landlord's conduct is a relevant factor which will reflect not only on his bona fides but also on the reasonableness of his requirement. I have given only one illustration to indicate as to how certain factors will have to be objectively considered while deciding the bona fide and reasonable requirement of the landlord. In my view that will be the true meaning of the expression "reasonably and bona fide required" used in Sec. 13 (1) of the Rent Act. Each case will have to be decided on the facts as appearing in that case. These are the only general observations which any court can make while interpreting these two words.

61. Now, on merits Mr. Singhvi has assailed the finding of the Appellate Bench of the Court of Small Causes on the ground that the Appellate Bench has committed an error of law in ignoring the relevant factors. The trial Court had emphasised certain factors without mentioning that those factors are taken from the other clauses of Section 13 of the Rent Act which require the landlord to prove certain facts for succeeding in eviction proceedings. The Appellate Bench has referred to those clauses of Sec. 13 of the Rent Act and said that the trial Judge was in error in emphasising irrelevant considerations. Mr. Singhvi is right when he says that the various factors may be relevant in any ejection proceedings where the landlord is required to prove that his requirement is both bona fide and reasonable. It may not be a technical requirement in the nature of a condition precedent but certainly the fact that the landlord has not got the plans, has not made the estimate of expenses for building construction, has not obtained the necessary permission of the municipal authorities, are relevant factors. But after all is said and done, I am not prepared to say that the appellate Bench has not considered the relevant facts while recording a finding in favour of the landlord. The Appellate Bench has pointed out that the landlord has adduced evidence to show that he has the financial capacity to invest money in building a structure; that he has got the plans prepared and although the plans are not up-to-date in accordance with the latest municipal regulations, it is established that under the Municipal regulations it is possible for the landlord to use a portion of the plot for building purposes. One of the landlords is himself a builder and evidence is led to show the estimated cost of the proposed building. If the landlord wants to build in these circumstances, then nothing can be said against his bona fides or the reasonableness of his requirement. The finding of the Appellate Bench of the Court of Small Causes is based on appreciation of evidence and I cannot review the findings while exercising my limited powers under Art. 227 of the Constitution.

62. Mr. Dhanuka wanted me to review the finding of the appellate Bench about the purpose of letting the land. According to him, the trial Court has found that the structure on the demised land was of permanent nature and erected, if not with the consent, at least with the connivance of the landlord. Evidence on record shows that the various sub-tenants had contributed large funds towards the cost of construction. As no written document of lease was produced, the Trial Court found that there was no breach of the terms of the tenancy and the tenants showed that letting out of the open plot was with a clear understanding that the same would be used for construction of structures.

63. Mr. Dhanuka wants me to review the adverse finding recorded by the Appellate Bench and after accepting the finding of the trial Court I should consider that as a relevant factor while deciding the question of bona fides and the reasonableness of the landlords' requirement.

64. Mr. Dhanuka has got two difficulties in his way. Firstly, I cannot review the facts and record a finding different from the one recorded by the Appellate Bench. Secondly, If Mr. Dhanuka succeeds in persuading me to adopt that course, then Mr. Dhanuka will be urging a new point of law, which was not taken up in the lower Courts. Mr. Dhanuka relied upon Regulation 2 of 1827 and argued that I have wider powers under that Regulation and I can, in the interest of justice, interfere even with findings of fact. He relied upon a decision of this Court in Bombay Steam Navigation Co. Ltd. v. Vasudev Baburao Kamat, 29 Bom LR 1551 = (AIR 1928 Bom 5). This Court held that the High Court at Bombay has, apart from Section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, the power to call for the proceedings of any subordinate Civil Court and to issue order under Bombay Regulation 2 of 1827, Cl. I, Section 5 (2), in spite of its repeal by Act 12 of 1873 by virtue of Sections 106 and 130 of the Government of India Act 1915. While recognising this power in this Court, the Court made it clear that it is only in very exceptional cases that the court would be prepared to exercise the power and normally the Court would act only, if at all, under S. 115 of the Civil P. C.

65. Mr. Sorabjee also submitted that that caution will assume greater importance today as this Court is now invested with supervisory jurisdiction under Art. 227 of the Constitution. When the makers of our Constitution have invested all the High Courts in India with supervisory jurisdiction under Art. 227 of the Constitution, there is no good reason why this Court should resort to the archaic power contained in Regulation 2 of 1827. Apart from that I do not think that this is an exceptional case where I should exercise the power in favour of the petitioners and review the findings of fact.

66. Mr. Dhanuka also challenged the finding of the Appellate Bench of the Court of Small Causes that the tenant was guilty of profiteering and had built a permanent structure and thereby forfeited the protection of the Rent Act. These are findings of fact and I cannot disturb them in proceedings under Article 227 of the Constitution.

67. In the result I hold that the Appellate Bench of the Court of Small Causes has rightly held that the respondents have proved that they required the plot of land reasonably and bona fide for the erection of a new building within the meaning of Section 13 (1) (i) of the Rent Act. Even if I am wrong in confirming this finding, I am satisfied that this is not a fit case for interference in favour of the petitioners under Art. 227 of the Constitution. The initial tenancy was only for a period of three years. Just about the time of the expiry of the lease the landlord filed a suit in ejectment. The suit failed mainly on a technical ground. Immediately thereafter he filed the present suit and is seeking to eject the tenants of the land so that he may profitably use the plot for building purposes. The litigation is pending for over nine years. Even justice requires that the matter should end at this stage between the landlords and the tenants and in favour of the landlords. I am not bound to interfere in every case in which I find an error of law committed by the lower Courts. As I find, in this case, interference is not called for in the interest of justice. I also refuse to exercise the discretionary jurisdiction in favour of the petitioners.

68. In the result the petitioners fail and the rule in each of the petitions is discharged with costs. The decree not to be executed for a period of one month from the date of the signing of the judgment.

Petition dismissed.

Debt Laws — Bombay Money-Lenders Act (31 of 1947), S. 2 (9) — Loan — The expression "advance at interest" in the sub-section covers cases of interest payable either under an agreement or under a statutory provision — A transaction evidenced by a promote on which interest would be payable under S. 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act would be a loan within the sub-section — A suit by a money-lender on such promotes cannot be dismissed for want of a licence under the Act unless he is given an opportunity under S. 10 (2) of the Act to produce his licence — (X-Ref:— Section 10 (2) — Negotiable Instruments Act S. 80). (Paras 9, 10)

B. R. Naik, for Appellant; V. V. Divekar, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 4.

JUDGMENT:— Both the Second Appeal and the Civil Revision Application have been filed by the original plaintiff. The Second Appeal arises from the suit he filed in the Court of the learned Civil Judge, Junior Division, Nandurbar, for recovery of Rs. 1,500/- from the four defendants in the said suit. The Civil Revision Application arises from the suit he filed for the recovery of Rs. 600/- in the same Court from the defendant in that suit. Both the claims are based on promissory notes which are executed after filling in blanks on a printed form, which is in Marathi. The printed form provides space for rate of interest both in figures and in words and in both the promissory notes these blanks were not filled in. In both the suits no interest was claimed upto the date of the suit. In both the suits, contentions were taken as to whether the transactions were governed by the Bombay Money Lenders Act, 31 of 1947, (hereinafter for the sake of brevity referred to as the "Money-Lenders Act"). The learned trial Judge thought that as no interest was claimed in the suits, the transactions were not "loans" within the meaning of that word in S. 2 sub-s. (9) of the Money-Lenders Act. Evidence was led on the point as to whether the plaintiff was a money-lender and whether he carried on the business of money-lending. But the learned trial Judge did not give any finding on that point. After disposing of the other contentions of the defendants as to whether the promissory notes were brought about by fraud or consideration had failed, the learned trial Judge decreed the two suits in favour of the plaintiff.

2. The defendants in both the suits appealed to the District Court at Dhulia. The only contentions taken before the learned Assistant Judge, who heard the appeals, were whether the plaintiff was a money-lender and secondly whether the transactions were "loans." On the second point, the learned Assistant Judge took the view that as the documents in the suits were promissory notes and a promissory note was not excluded from the definition of the word "loan" in the Money-Lenders Act, it was irrelevant whether the interest was mentioned in the promissory note or not. He was of the opinion that the transactions covered by the promissory notes were "loans" as defined in S. 2, sub-section (9) of the Money-Lenders Act. On the first point, he gave a finding of fact that the plaintiff was carrying on the business of money-lending and was a money-lender within the meaning of that expression in S. 2, sub-section (10) of the Money-Lenders Act.

3. Section 2, sub-s. (9) of the Act defines "loan" as meaning an advance at interest. It further provides that it does not include an advance made on the basis of a negotiable instrument as defined in the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, other than a promissory note. It is clear that if the advance is made on the basis of a promissory note, it would not be excluded from the definition of a loan if it was an advance at interest. Section 2, sub-s. (10) defines a money-lender as a person who carries on the business of money-lending in the State. Section 10 of the Act provides that no Court shall pass a decree in favour of a money-lender in any suit filed by him to which the Money-Lenders Act applied unless the Court was satisfied that at the time when the loan or any part thereof, to which the suit relates was advanced, the money-lender held a valid licence. Sub-section (2) provides that if during the trial of any such suit, the court finds that the money-lender had not held such licence, the court may, on the application of the money-lender, stay the hearing of the suit and require him to produce a licence within a period of three months.

4. The two contentions taken before me by Dr. B. R. Naik, appearing for the plaintiff, are; firstly that the transactions in the two suits are not governed by the Money-Lenders Act, and secondly that even if they are, when the learned Assistant Judge came to that conclusion he ought to have informed the plaintiff to enable him to make an application, if he so desired, for stay of the hearing of the suit for production of a money-lender's licence. He contended that the learned Assistant Judge ought not to have dismissed the two suits.

5. Now, dealing with the first contention, it has been held as a finding of fact, that the plaintiff is carrying on the business of money-lending and he is a money-lender. The only question that remains is whether the transactions in the two suits were advances at interest. As I have mentioned above, the blanks in the printed forms of promissory notes as to interest have not been filled. Dr. Naik contended that, firstly because interest is not mentioned in the promissory notes and secondly because no interest has been claimed in the suits these were not advances at interest. In my opinion, whether interest is or is not claimed in the suits is totally irrelevant to the determination of the question whether these were or were not advances at interest. The plaintiff cannot by giving up interest in the suit take the transaction out of the provisions of the Money-Lenders Act.

6. If the documents in the two suits had not attracted the provisions of Section 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, there would have been no controversy on the question. The controversy is, however, introduced by Section 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, which provides:—

"When no rate of interest is specified in the instrument, interest on the amount due thereon shall, notwithstanding any agreement relating to interest between any parties, to the instrument be calculated at the rate of six per centum per annum, from the date at which the same ought to have been paid by the party charged, until tender or realisation of the amount due thereon, or until such date after the institution of a suit to recover such amount as the Court directs." (Underlining supplied).

7. The words "notwithstanding any agreement relating to interest between any parties to the instrument", were substituted for the words "except in cases provided for by the Code of Civil Procedure, Section 522". Section 522 now corresponds to Order 37 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. The effect of the amendment appears to be that on the one hand it enables the Court to allow interest at the rate of 6 per cent even in summary suits on negotiable instruments on the other hand it affects all collateral agreements between the parties either as to the rate of in-interest payable or as to the liability of interest at all. Whether there is an agreement to charge interest at a rate either lower or higher than 6 per cent. or there is an agreement not to charge interest at all or the rate of interest is not specified in the promissory note interest shall be allowed at 6 per cent. per annum. The question is whether by virtue of Section 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, an advance becomes an advance at interest and, therefore, a loan within the meaning of Section 2 (9) of the Money-Lenders Act.

8. Dr. Naik on behalf of the plaintiff contended that "an advance at interest" could only mean an advance where interest is payable by contract and not by virtue of statute. In my opinion, this contention is not correct, because what is not included in the definition of the word "loan" is enumerated in Section 2 (9). To put the meaning suggested by Dr. Naik on the word "loan" would be to add to the list of excluded categories advances on promissory notes in which no rate of interest was specified. On the other hand, Dr. Divekar on behalf of the respondents contended that as an advance made on the basis of negotiable instrument other than a promissory note was not included, this indicated that in all cases advance made on the basis of a promissory note was included in the word "loan". This contention also does not follow naturally from the words used in Section 2 (9) of the Money-Lenders Act.

9. In my opinion, the expression "an advance at interest" would cover cases where the interest was provided by the contract as well as cases where the interest was payable under a statute. The suit transactions were, therefore, loans within the meaning of Section 2 (9) of the Money-Lenders Act. The suit transactions being loans by a money-lender were hit by Section 10 of the Money-Lenders Act.

10. The trial Court had decreed the two suits. The learned Assistant Judge held in his judgments that the transactions were hit by the Money-Lenders Act and, therefore, he dismissed the two suits. The plaintiff was not aware of the findings of the learned Assistant Judge until after the judgments. There was, therefore, no opportunity given to him to make applications for stay of the hearing of the suits to enable him to produce a money lender's licence. The learned Judge, in my opinion, ought not to have dismissed the suit, but to have followed the procedure prescribed by Section 10 of the Money Lenders Act.

11. The appeal and the Revision Application are, therefore, allowed and the judgments and decrees of the lower appellate Court are set aside. The rule in the Civil Revision Application will be made absolute. The finding that the plaintiff is a money-lender and that the suit transactions were loans within the meaning of Section 2 (9) of the Money-Lenders Act, will, however, stand. The two appeals to the District Court are remanded to the District Court at Dhulia. That Court shall give an opportunity to the plaintiff to apply for stay of the hearing of the appeals to enable him to produce a money lender's licence within the period allowed by Section 10. If he does not produce the licence within the period, the suits shall be dismissed. If, however, the plaintiff produces such licence within that period, the suits shall be decreed after taking into consideration the question of interest, costs and instalments under Sections 21 and 24 of the Money-Lenders Act. Each party shall bear his own costs throughout in both these matters.

ORDER:— This Special Civil application arises out of the proceedings under the Bombay Rent Act instituted by respondent No. 1 plaintiff landlord against petitioner-defendant No. 1 and respondent No. 2 (defendant No. 2). The premises in dispute appear to be an open land with some structures thereon situate at City Survey No. 366, Sadashiv Peth, Poona City. Originally the premises were let out to one Sevaksingh Makhansingh on a rent of Rs. 25/- per month. The said Sevaksingh assigned his tenancy rights in favour of defendant No. 2. Defendant No. 2 then started paying rent at the rate of Rs. 30/- to plaintiff-landlord. On 12-2-1963 defendant No. 2 assigned his interest in the premises to defendant No. 1. It appears that defendant No. 2 through his lawyer Redkar informed the fact of this assignment to the landlord and asked him to accept the rent from defendant No. 1. In reply thereto the landlord gave notice on 20-3-1963 calling upon defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to vacate the premises for various reasons, including that the same were reasonably and bona fide required by him for his own occupation. Copies of this notice addressed to the lawyer Redkar were endorsed to defendants Nos. 1 and 2. After some time the present proceedings were instituted for possession against both the defendants by the landlord on various grounds, including the one that he required the premises for his own occupation, where he wanted to construct a house for himself. Defendants denied the various averments made in the plaint. By judgment and decree dated 7-8-1964 in Civil Suit No. 3396 of 1963 the trial Court decreed the suit on the ground of the landlord requiring the premises bona fide and reasonably for his own occupation under Section 13 (1) (g) of the Bombay Rent Act. On appeal by the tenant to the District Court, the decree has been affirmed by the judgment and decree dated 12th April 1966 in Civil Appeal No. 696 of 1964. The learned Third Extra Assistant Judge, Poona, however, granted the decree for possession under Section 13 (1) (i) of the Rent Act. This decree is challenged in this Special Civil application by defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 2 naturally supports his case.

2. Mr. Sharad Manohar, the learned Advocate appearing for the petitioner, contends that the quit notice is invalid for two reasons. He firstly contends that notice addressed to a lawyer, cannot be effective for terminating tenancy where lawyer is not shown to have authority to receive the same. He secondly contends that the notice does not in terms give 15 days time as required under Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. There is hardly any substance in either of these contentions of the learned Advocate. Admittedly copies of the notice addressed to the lawyer were served on both the defendants indicating that the tenancy was sought to be terminated thereby. Without going into the question as to whether the lawyer to whom the notice was mainly addressed was authorised to receive this notice or not, the implications of such copies also simultaneously being received by both the defendants, are too plain. I have not been able to appreciate in the face of these admitted facts how notice ceases to be effective merely because original of the same was addressed to a lawyer, assuming that notice to defendant No. 1 was also necessary. Secondly, the said notice also calls upon the defendants to vacate the premises and deliver peaceful possession thereof to the landlord "by the end of the month of tenancy commencing after receipt of this notice". It is not suggested that, after the receipt of this notice, less than 15 days were left with the tenant before the expiry of the period of the tenancy. All that is suggested is that the notice seeks to extinguish the tenancy rights from the date when the notice itself was given on 20th March, 1963. The whole foundation for this submission is based on the wording of the notice saying that he was "giving this notice extinguishing the rights..... hereby". This wording cannot be construed to mean that tenancy was being extinguished with effect from the date of notice. These words only, notify that the tenancy rights were being extinguished by virtue of this notice dated 20th March, 1963, and obviously the tenancy was contemplated to be terminated "by the end of the month of tenancy commencing next after receipt of this notice." There is thus no force in the first contention raised by Mr. Sharad Manohar.

3. Mr. Sharad Manohar then contends that in either case the decree for possession under Section 13 (1) (i) is not warranted by the facts of the case. Premises assumed by the Assistant Judge, says the Counsel, themselves have no foundation in facts. The learned Assistant Judge, no doubt, assumes that the structure on the land in dispute belonged to the tenant and it is on this basis that the decree for possession is passed by him under Section 13 (1) (i) of the Rent Act. This assumption, according to Mr. Sharad Manohar, is not only not borne out by any evidence, but is contrary to the case pleaded by the landlord himself in his plaint. He drew my attention to the recitals in the plaint. Paragraph 1 of the plaint describes the suit premises to mean land at C. T. S. No. 367 admeasuring about 756 sq. feet with temporary shed thereon. In paragraph 2 of the plaint, the plaintiff in terms says that the property and the premises described in paragraph 1 belong to the plaintiff as full and absolute owner. The plain implication of this averment is that the plaintiff claims the ownership not only of the land but also of the temporary shed standing thereon. Paragraph 3 recites that the premises consist only of vacant lands and temporary shed thereon. This is not denied by the tenants. Evidence also was led by the parties on the basis of these averments. It is thus clear that, even according to the plaintiff's own case, the temporary shed or the structures on the land belonged to himself. There is thus no basis for the assumption that it belonged to the tenant.

4. Mr. Chitale, the learned advocate appearing for respondent No. 1 landlord could not dispute this though he faintly suggested that the above construction of the plaint was not correct. He, however, contends that the trial proceeded on the basis that the temporary shed on the land belonged to the defendants. In support of this contention he firstly relied on the language of the decree passed by the learned trial Judge. It is true that the learned trial Judge has directed defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to "put the plaintiff in possession of the land by removing their structures standing on the suit site on or before 1-11-1964." Now, such a decree could have been passed only on the footing that the structure on the land belonged to the defendants. But Mr. Chitale could not draw my attention to any material from which the trial Court could have made such an assumption. Mr. Chitale, secondly, drew my attention to the observations in paragraph 10 of the judgment of the Assistant Judge and contended that this position was, in fact, admitted by the tenants before the Assistant Judge. Relevant observations in paragraph 10 of his judgment are as follows:

"There was no dispute before me that the suit open plot belongs to the landlord. At present there is some structure in it, but it appears that the landlord is not claiming the ownership of the same. The landlord has said in his plaint that the premises included also this structure but it is clear from his notice Exh. 32 that this structure was built by his tenants who were in possession of the open plot. It was also an admitted proposition as argued before me that this structure never belonged to the landlord, but it was erected by the tenant. It is on the basis of this admitted fact that the lower Court has also passed a decree for vacant possession of the suit plot by removing the said structure by the person in possession. As such I have no hesitation to hold that it is an admitted fact that only the open plot was let out to Sevaksing by the present landlord."

The observations in the above para. on the face of them betray lack of precision and some misconception of the facts and presumably the argument advanced. In the first place, he says "... it appears that the landlord is not claiming the ownership of the same." But this is plainly contrary to the averments in paragraphs 2 and 3 of the plaint. He then says that in his notice Exhibit 32 the landlord has stated "that this structure was built by his tenants, who were in possession of the open plot." The contents of Exhibit 32 do not bear this out, and Mr. Chitale, could not place his finger on any portion of Exhibit 32 to support these observations. The Assistant Judge then says that it was also an admitted proposition as argued before him that this structure never belonged to the landlord and it was erected by the tenant. But the learned Judge does not indicate to whose arguments he was referring to and what precisely was the admission. Then he says that "it is on the basis of this admitted fact that the lower court has also passed a decree for vacant possession of the suit plot by removing the said structure by the person in possession." But the learned trial Judge has not in any part of his judgment, however, referred to any such admission of the tenant to which the Assistant Judge has made reference. He says that "It is an admitted fact that only the open plot was let out to Sevaksing by the present landlord." It is not known to whose admission the Assistant Judge is referring to. It is true that defendant No. 1 has not filed any affidavit, denying having made such admissions before either of the two Courts below. But, as stated by me earlier, the observations of the Assistant Judge themselves do not attribute such admissions either to defendant No. 1 or to defendant No. 2 and none of the defendants were really called upon to refute any such assertions. I do not think it possible to rely on such vague observations of the Assistant Judge for coming to the conclusion that the structure on the land, in fact belonged to the tenant or that any of the tenants had admitted this fact before either of the Courts below.

5. On the contrary, while assigning his tenancy rights to defendant No. 1, defendant No. 2 has not claimed ownership of such structure in the assignment deed (Exhibit 40.) Had it belonged to him, he would not have failed to mention it in Exhibit 40 and claim higher price from defendant No. 1. This question assumes importance in this case because, on it depends the decision as to which of the clauses of Section 13 (1) of the Rent Act governs the claim of the landlord and whether the conditions necessary for the application of the said clause have been duly fulfilled or not. I must, therefore, conclude that there is no basis for assumption that the structure on the land belonged to the tenant. The case shall have to be decided on the footing that the land and structure both belonged to the landlord. Plaintiff's own case is that he wants to construct a house on the land for his occupation and this he shall have to do after demolition of the present structure.

6. This at once raises the question whether the case is covered by clause (g) or clause (i) of Section 13 (1) of the Rent Act. Mr. Sharad Manohar however contends that neither of the two clauses are applicable and the case clearly falls under Section 13 (1) (hh), as firstly the premises do not consist of more than two floors, and secondly plaintiff requires the same for demolition and for erecting a new building thereon. He then contends that the landlord is not entitled to possession of the suit premises, not having proved to have complied with the provisions of sub-section (3-A) read with sub-section (3-B) of Section 13 of the Rent Act.

This contention need not detain me as the point can be said to have been concluded by the Supreme Court in its judgment reported in AIR 1964 SC 1676, Ramniklal Pitambardas Mehta v. Indradaman Amratlal Sheth. There also the landlord claimed possession of the premises under Section 13 (1) (g) on which some structure belonging to him was then standing. He intended to demolish the existing structure, and build new one for his own. On behalf of the tenant it was argued that such a claim for demolition of the existing structure, and erecting a new building thereon, was covered by Section 13 (1) (hh) and not by Section 13 (1) (g) of the Bombay Rent Act. This contention was overruled by the Supreme Court holding that contemplated demolition of the existing unsuitable structure and construction of a bungalow thereon, cannot take out landlord's case from Sec. 13 (1) (g) when this process was necessitated for the purpose of his own occupation. The Supreme Court also held that clause (hh) of sub-section (1) of Section 13 was inapplicable as proposed construction was not intended for the tenants. In view of this pronouncement of the Supreme Court, I do not think it necessary to examine the contention of Mr. Sharad Manohar any further, as the said authority is conclusive of the points raised by him before me. The present case also shall have to be decided by reference to Section 13 (1) (g) of the Rent Act in view of the ratio of the above judgment of the Supreme Court.

7. But Mr. Chitale, the learned advocate appearing for the landlord, contends that even when the landlord seeks possession of land with structure thereon raised by him, his case still cannot be said to have been excluded from the purview of Section 13 (1) (i) of the Rent Act. He contends that application of Section 13 (1) (g) to the facts of such a case cannot have the necessary consequence, of its exclusion from Section 13 (1) (i) of the Rent Act. This contention is devoid of any substance. Clauses (g) to (ii) of sub-section (1) of Section 13 cover the different contingencies under which any landlord can claim possession of the premises from the tenant. These rights are available on proof of certain set of facts. These rights are then subjected to certain other overriding considerations provided in sub-sections (2) to (3) (b), and protection to the tenants is again ensured by suitable provisions of Sections 16 to 17-B against the possible abuse of these provisions by the landlords. A set of facts falling under any one clause excludes the possibility of the application of any other clause of Section 13 (1) of the Rent Act to the same facts. This case must either fall under clause (g) or clause (i) of Section 13 (1). Contention that it can fall under both the clauses is thus misconceived.

8. Mr. Chitale then contends that clause (i) of sub-section (1) of Section 13 opens with the words "where the premises are land," and according to Mr. Chitale, there is no warrant for the narrow construction of the word "land" only to mean open land. The word "land", according to him connotes ordinarily everything attached to the land, and must be deemed to include not only open land but also the structure standing thereon. In support of his contention he relies on the dictionary meaning of the word 'land' in Stroud's Judicial Dictionary in Volume II at page 1571. I do not think it necessary to refer to the several passages to which my attention was drawn by Mr. Chitale, as this dictionary meaning is based on several English cases. Now, unlike in England, Indian law recognizes the dual ownership in the property and the dictionary meaning given by Stroud's and based on English conception of property will not be of much assistance for construing the word "land" correctly. The precise connotation of the word 'land' shall have to be ascertained by reference to the context and the setting in which the word is used in Section 13 of the Rent Act.

9. The word "premises" has been defined in Section 5 (8) of the Rent Act. Three kinds of properties appear to have been sought to be covered by this definition. It firstly covers the land not being used for agricultural purposes in clause (a). It secondly covers building or part of a building let separately as set out in Clause (b). It, thirdly, also seeks to cover the adjuncts of any such building enumerated in clauses (i) to (iii) in the latter part of the said clause (b). In the context the word 'land' in clause (a) of Sec. 5 (8) ought to be deemed to connote open land on which there is no building or a part of building or to which there are no adjuncts of any kind. If the word 'land' in Section 13 (1) (g) is read in this light, it can be construed to mean only open land. This definition on which Mr. Chitale relied rather than support him, supports the contention of Mr. Sharad Manohar. In view of the interpretation of this clause in the judgment reported in AIR 1966 SC 1024, Landlord can claim possession under this clause by removal of the structure, built by the tenant after getting the lease of the open land from the landlord, when the landlord still remains the owner of the open plot. But he cannot avail of this provision when structure also belongs to him, though the above authority does not deal directly with this point.

10. This view gets further reinforced if one examines the provisions of Section 13 closely. In clauses (a) to (i) in sub-section (1) of Sec. 13 several contingencies are enumerated in which the landlord is enabled to exercise his right to possession of the premises from his tenant. Clauses (g) to (ii) cover the contingencies where the premises let out to the tenant are bona fide required by the landlord for some purpose or the other enumerated in the said clause. In Clauses (g) to (hhh) the word 'premises' is used to denote building or structure belonging to the landlord. This is too clear to require any detailed discussion. Requirements for, occupation, repairs, and demolition covered by these clauses can have no meaning unless existence of some structure belonging to the landlord is assumed. As against this, in clauses (i) and (ii) of this sub-section (1), the import of the word 'premises' is distinctly restricted by saying "where the premises are land" or "where the premises are land in the nature of garden or ground.....". Thus the word "land" in clauses (i) and (ii) on the face of it imports restricted connotation and is used in contradistinction to the word "premises" which in the context cover a building or a structure erected on any land. The word land in both these clauses (i) and (ii) must be construed, therefore, to mean only open land without any structure of the landlord thereon.

11. Secondly, clause (g) contemplates a case where the premises "are reasonably and bona fide required by the landlord for occupation by himself or by any person for whose benefit the premises are held." This includes a case where demolition and reconstruction is necessary for this purpose. As against this clause (i) covers a case where the premises are reasonably and bona fide required "for the erection of a new building." The distinction between the emphasis on the two different purposes, where the premises are required for occupation and the purpose where the premises are required for erection of a new building can hardly be ignored. This distinction cannot be said to be without difference. Apart from this facts of this case attract Cl. 13 (1) (g) which deals specially with cases of landlords' requirements for their own occupation. Clause (g) generally dealing with requirements of landlords to erect a building, will not therefore apply.

12. It may be noted in this context that all open lands are not covered by Part II of the Bombay Rent Act. Only such pieces of open lands are covered by Part II of the Act which are let for residence, education, business, trade or storage within the meaning of Section 5 (1) of the Rent Act. When the purpose in clause (i) of Section 13 is shown to be "the erection of a new building", the same can have reference ordinarily to buildings capable of being used for any of these purposes. On the face of it, such purpose of erection of new buildings is different from the purpose of occupation by the landlord himself. It is true that in view of the width of the phraseology new erection for the purpose of landlord's occupation cannot be altogether excluded from Section 13 (1) (i). But then it will still be a case of possession of an open plot with structure of the tenant thereon covered by Section 13 (1) (i) and not the case of possession of land and structure of the landlord thereon which he seeks to demolish and reconstruct for his own occupation attracting the provisions of Section 13 (1) (g) of the Rent Act. Looked at from this point of view, clause (g) which enables the landlord to claim possession of premises for him when the same is reasonably and bona fide required for his own occupation, on proof of certain set of facts excludes the application of clause (i) under which a landlord can be said to have been enabled to claim possession when bona fide and reasonably required for erection of a new building.

13. Mr. Chitale strongly relied on the words "new" in the phrase "erection of a new building" in Section 13 (1) (g) of the Act and contends that the word "new" will become meaningless unless it is construed to have reference to some structure of the landlord, in the place of which new building is sought to be erected. In other words, it is urged that question of erection of "new" building cannot conceivably arise, unless the landlord makes out a case of demolition of his old one. There is not much substance in this contention. As held by the Supreme Court in AIR 1966 SC 1024, this clause also applies to the case where tenant has erected his structure on obtaining the lease of open plot. As stated earlier, this Part II of the Rent Act is applicable to the open lands only when the same is let for residence, education, business or storage. In each of these cases some sort of structure is ordinarily raised thereon by the tenant to whom the open land is let out. The word "new" presumably has reference to some such structure of the land, the possession of which is invariably claimed by the landlord by the removal thereof. Cases may, however, arise when no structure whatsoever is raised by the tenant though such cases are likely to be few and rare. Even so, that by itself will not give the word "new" any added significance.

14. Thus looked at from any point of view, the conclusion is irresistible that the word "land" in clause (i) of Section 13 (1) of Rent Act means open land and this clause covers a case where the premises are open land and the structure constructed thereon, if any, belongs to the tenant. It is not capable of covering a case where the existing structure belongs to the landlord himself. The words in Section 13 (1) (c) "where the premises are land" ought to be construed to mean when the premises are land without any construction of the landlord thereon. In the present case the landlord seeks possession of the open land on which his own structure is standing for the purpose of his own occupation. This case can be said to have been covered only by clause (g) of Section 13 (1). Clause (hh) or (i) of Section 13 (1) can have no application to such case.

15. As the learned Assistant Judge has not considered the case from this point of view, the same shall have to be remanded to the Appellate Court for reconsideration thereof. I accordingly allow this Special Civil Application, set aside the order passed by the learned Assistant Judge and remand the case back to him for consideration afresh, on the evidence and for deciding as to whether the landlord is entitled to claim possession under Section 13 (1) (g) of the Rent Act. As the matter is pending since 1963, the learned Assistant Judge will dispose of this case as early as possible.

16. Costs will abide by the result.

into force on 1-8-1956) — Applicability — Sub-section (2) of Section 25 applies only in cases where at the date of the institution of the application for ejectment by landlord, tenant can be held to be in arrears of payment of rent for any three years. (X-Ref:— Section 14 (as came into force on 1-8-1956). (X-Ref: T. P. Act (1882) Section 111). AIR 1962 SC 753 and AIR 1968 SC 461 held no longer good law in view of Amendments made in 1956 in the Bombay Act 67 of 1948. (Para 16)

The defaults made by a tenant at any previous dates are not relevant. Unless the landlord proves and establishes that at the date of the institution of his application for ejectment the tenant was in arrears and/or had failed to pay rent for any three years, the Mamlatdar's power under sub-section (1) of Section 25 will have to be exercised and relief will have to be granted against termination of tenancy. The tenant's voluntary payment of all arrears of rents to the landlord prior to institution of an application for ejectment would have the same effect as waiver of the termination of tenancy by the landlord by accepting rent in ordinary law. A breach which could be remedied by a tenant upon the Mamlatdar making order under sub-section (1) of Section 25 can also be remedied by the tenant himself by voluntary action of payment of all arrears of rents prior to the date of application for ejectment that might have been made by his landlord.

(C) Tenancy Laws — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (67 of 1948) Section 25 (2) — (As came into force on 1-8-1956) — Failure to pay rent for any three years involves failure to pay even any part of rent for any year. Sub-section (2) does not contemplate that the failure must be of the aggregate of rents of the three years. (Para 11)

K. K. DESAI, J.:— In the Special Civil Application No. 861 of 1967 instituted on behalf of the original opponent-tenant, the only contention that is made is that the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, the District Deputy Collector and the Tenancy Awal Karkun who had heard the application of the original applicant-landlord for ejectment of the tenant erred in holding that the provisions of Section 25 (2) of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948, hereinafter referred to as the Act, were applicable to the facts of the case and for that reason the Mamlatdar had no jurisdiction under Section 25 (1) of the Act to make an order directing the tenant to pay arrears of rents within 3 months and that upon such payment to make an order directing that the tenancy had not been terminated.

2. It is stated that in the three next Special Civil Applications on our board the same question has arisen between tenants and landlords. We have, therefore, in this Special Civil Application heard Advocates of landlords and tenants in these three next following Special Civil Applications. We, however, propose to decide the question and arguments advanced by both sides in this Special Civil Application.

3. The short facts leading to the institution of the present Special Civil Application may be stated as follows:—

4. On January 20, 1964, the opponent No. 1-landlord instituted an application for ejectment of the petitioner-tenant from land bearing S. No. 225/7B situated at Shirolu on the ground that the tenant had defaulted in payment of rents from 1956-57 to 1962-63. For defaults for the last three years, i. e. 1960-61 to 1962-63 due intimations as required under the Act had been given. The tenancy had been terminated by notice dated September 12, 1963. As the tenant had made defaults in payment of rents in respect of the last 3 years, i. e. 1960-61 to 1962-63, the landlord was entitled to an ejectment order. One of the contentions made on behalf of the tenant was that in respect of the previous defaults relied upon on behalf of the landlord, the tenant had from time to time paid off all rents and thus remitted the defaults and/or breach of law, if any. In fact, at the date of the notice dated September 12, 1963, terminating the tenancy, the tenant had paid off the arrears of rents in respect of all the years including the years 1961-62. That fact was admitted in the notice itself. The tenant had remained in arrears only for one year, i. e. 1962-63. As the default that remained outstanding and/or rent in arrears was for one year only, it was obligatory on the Mamlatdar under Section 25 (1) to make an order directing the tenant to pay outstanding arrears within three months of the date of the order and on the tenant complying with that direction, to dismiss the ejectment application and direct that the tenancy had continued in existence. This very contention is repeated before us and in that connection the main argument is that the finding of the authorities below including the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal that to the above facts of the case provisions in sub-section (2) of Section 25 were applicable and that accordingly the Mamlatdar had no power to give relief to the tenant against forfeiture of tenancy under Section 25 (1) is incorrect. In connection with this contention, reliance is placed on the language of Section 25 (2) read with Section 14 (1) (a) and (b) and the general scheme of the Act. In connection with the reliance placed on behalf of the landlord on the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Raja Ram v. Aba Maruti, 64 Bom LR 569 = (AIR 1962 SC 753), the submission is that the true effect of the observations in that case and the ratio thereof was as ascertained by the Supreme Court itself in the case of Vithal Vasudeo v. Maruti, 70 Bom LR 314 = (AIR 1968 SC 461). There was accordingly nothing in the decision in the case of 64 Bom LR 569 = (AIR 1962 SC 753) which was against the submissions made on behalf of the tenant. The alternative submission is that if it is held that the observations in the case of 64 Bom LR 569 = (AIR 1962 SC 753) completely supported the findings made by the lower authorities, that decision did not help the landlord. The reason for that was that since the decision in the case of 64 Bom LR 569 = (AIR 1962 SC 753) material amendments had been incorporated into the relevant Sections 14 and 25. The alterations and amendments were such that the observations in the case of 64 Bom LR 569 = (AIR 1962 SC 753) entirely ceased to be applicable. In other words, the submission is that the contents of amended Sections 25 and 14 have, hitherto, not been decided by the Supreme Court and have arisen for decision by a Division Bench of this Court for the first time.

5. Before referring to the arguments advanced on behalf of the landlords, it is convenient to refer to the scheme in the amended Sections 14 and 25 of the Act that came into force on August 1, 1956, and then to notice the relevant parts of these very sections as existing prior to the amendments. The relevant parts of the amended Sections 14 and 25 run as follows:—

"14. (1) Notwithstanding any law, agreement or usage, or the decree or order of a court, the tenancy of any land shall not be terminated—

(a) unless the tenant—

(i) has failed to pay the rent for any revenue year before the 31st day of May thereof;

(ii) x x x x x

(iii) x x x x x

(iv) x x x x x

(v) x x x x x

(b) unless the landlord has given three months' notice in writing informing the tenant of his decision to terminate the tenancy and the ground for such termination, and within that period the tenant has failed to remedy the breach for which the tenancy is liable to be terminated.

(2) x x x x x

6. The marginal note against Section 25 reads: "Relief against termination of tenancy for non-payment of rent." The section provides:

"25 (1) Where any tenancy of any land held by any tenant is terminated for non-payment of rent and the landlord files any proceeding to eject the tenant, the Mamlatdar shall call upon the tenant to tender to the landlord the rent in arrears together with the cost of the proceeding, within three months from the date of order, and if the tenant complies with such order, the Mamlatdar shall, in lieu of making an order for ejectment, pass an order directing that the tenancy had not been terminated and thereupon the tenant shall hold the land as if the tenancy had not been terminated:

x x x x x x x

(2) Nothing in this section shall apply to any tenant whose tenancy is terminated for non-payment of rent if he has failed for any three years to pay rent and the landlord has given intimation to the tenant to that effect within a period of three months on each default."

7. The relevant parts of the un-amended sections provided as follows:—

"14. (1) Notwithstanding any agreement, usage, decree or order of a Court of law, the tenancy of any land held by a tenant shall not be terminated unless such tenant—

(a) (i) has failed to pay in any year, within fifteen days from the day fixed x x x x, the rent of such land for that year, or

(ii) x x x x x, or

(iii) x x x x x ; provided that no tenancy of any land held by a tenant shall be terminated on any of the grounds mentioned in this sub-section, unless the landlord gives three months' notice in writing intimating the tenant his decision to terminate the tenancy and the ground for such termination.

x x x x x x x"

8. The sub-section (1) of Section 25 was the same as now appears in the amended Section 25 (1) except that the period of three months mentioned in the sub-section (1) was previously 15 days only.

"25 (2) Nothing in this section shall apply to any tenant whose tenancy is terminated for non-payment of rent if he has failed for any three years to pay rent within the period specified in Section 14."

9. At the very outset, it requires to be emphasised that by introducing clause (b) in Section 14 (1) the Legislature afforded to the tenant himself an opportunity to remedy the breach, i. e. default in payment of rent, by making payment, and date fixed under Section 14 (1) (a) (i) in that connection, is three months from the date of the notice to be given by the landlord. Apparently, the effect of this provision is that default in payment of rent for a particular previous year on or before May, 31 would be rendered useless and cease to be any default in the event of the tenant remedying the default, by making payment within three months from the date of the notice tendered by the landlord. Thus the cause of action for ejectment based on default in payment of rent on May 31, would altogether cease to exist in cases where the tenant remedies the default. The extremely significant amendments in the sub-section (2) of Section 25 are the deletion of the last phrase "within the period specified in Section 14" and addition of the phrase "and the landlord has given intimation to the tenant to that effect within a period of three months on each default." As we will point out whilst dealing with the observations of the Supreme Court in the case of 64 Bom LR 569 = (AIR 1962 SC 753) on which reliance has been placed for the landlord, these amendments make considerable alteration in the scheme of these sections and render the observations of the Supreme Court in that case inapplicable to cases governed by these amended sections.

10. It is convenient at this stage to discuss the true construction and effect of these two sections. Apparently, under sub-section (1) of Section 25, duty is cast on the Mamlatdar in the matter of every application for ejectment filed on the ground of defaults made in payment of rent to make an order granting relief against termination of tenancy for non-payment of rents and for that purpose to make an order as provided in the sub-section. This sub-section has the effect of providing that if the defendant-tenant pays arrears of rents within three months from the date of the order of Mamlatdar, the defaults and the cause of action for ejectment will have ceased to exist. The termination of tenancy by the landlord on the ground of such defaults will have ceased to exist. The scheme of the section is that upon the Mamlatdar making such an order, the tenant "shall hold the land as if the tenancy had not been terminated." It is also clear that a tenant who remains a defaulter and even after notices tendered by landlord pays off all arrears of rents before landlord institutes an application for ejectment will by his own conduct of payment get the same benefit which he could get by making payment in accordance with an order made by the Mamlatdar under Section 25 (1). The tenant's voluntary payment of all arrears of rents to the landlord prior to institution of an application for ejectment would have the same effect as waiver of the termination of tenancy by the landlord by accepting rent in ordinary law. There is no reason why a breach which could be remedied by a tenant upon the Mamlatdar making order under sub-section (1) of Section 25 could not be remedied by the tenant himself by voluntary action of payment of all arrears of rents prior to the date of application for ejectment that might have been made by his landlord.

11. Now, the language of sub-section (2) of Section 25 is clear. If there is any ambiguity in the language, the above true construction and effect of Section 25 (1) will assist us in arriving at correct construction of the sub-section (2). For ascertaining the true construction and effect of this sub-section tion it is convenient to read it without the phrase "whose tenancy is terminated for non-payment of rent." The sub-section will then read as follows:—

"Nothing in this section shall apply to any tenant if he has failed for any three years to pay rent x x x x."

The word "any" is of importance and meets with the arguments advanced on behalf of some of the landlords that the failure to pay rent must be in respect of the aggregate of three years' rents. Failure to pay rent involves failure to pay even any part of rent for any year. Even if one rupee of rent for any year remains outstanding, the tenant will not be justified in submitting that he had not failed to pay rent for that year. The failure mentioned in the sub-section, therefore, has nothing to do with the aggregate of the rents of the three years referred to in the section. It is also true that the word "any" indicates that the three years may not be connected with each other in any manner whatsoever. It is more important to ascertain the point of time at which the failure mentioned in the sub-section must exist. Having regard to the scheme and language of the amended Section 14 (1) including Cl. (b) thereof, the first failure will occur on May 31 of each year. The second failure will occur on the expiry of the three months from the date of the notice tendered under clause (b). The third failure will occur when the three months' period mentioned in the order made by the Mamlatdar under Section 25 (1) expires. The fourth point of time which also is relevant is the date of the institution of the application for ejectment. The question of the failure and/or the issue that the tenant has failed to pay rent for any three years will arise in the proceedings of the application for ejectment. That question will arise only in connection with the tenant's claim that is incumbent on the Mamlatdar to make an order under sub-section (1) of Section 25 for granting relief against termination of tenancy. The question relates to the exercise of the powers invested in the Mamlatdar and the duty cast upon him under sub-section (1) of Section 25. Apparently, in relation to a tenant whose defaults were complete on each of the three points of time indicated above for any three years, but who has by making payments subsequently ceased to be in arrears of rents at the date of the institution of an application for ejectment, the landlord cannot justifiably contend that the tenant has failed to pay rents for any three years. The payment and/or the wiping off of all arrears of rents has the effect of wiping off the cause of action for ejectment. It is difficult to appreciate how the facts which lead to the wiping off of the cause of action for ejectment have not the effect of wiping off the failure and defaults in payment of rents. Having regard to these circumstances, in our view, the point of time with reference to which the question whether a "tenant has failed for any three years to pay rent" arises for decision is the date on which an application for ejectment is instituted. The other points of time indicated above do not fit in with the scheme of the Section 25 (1) and the policy of law in favour of the tenants as can be ascertained from diverse sections of the Act. In that connection, in passing, one may notice, though it was not argued at the Bar, that a bar of limitation of two years from the date on which the right to obtain possession of land accrues to the landlord is provided in connection with all applications for ejectment. This provision has the effect of making all defaults made prior to the above period of two years ineffective.

12. It has been rightly pointed out on behalf of the tenants that the word "default" is used in this Act at several places including the sub-section (2) of Section 25. The word "failed" is used also in connection with the liability for payment of rent under Section 14 as well as in sub-section (2) of Section 25. Reliance has been rightly placed on the fact that in sub-section (2) the Legislature used the phrase "he has failed" instead of the phrase "he has defaulted" and that must also be a relevant fact in arriving at the true construction of the provisions in the sub-section. In our view, the word "failed" in sub-section (2) cannot be replaced by and has not been used to mean "defaulted". As the provision in this sub-section relates to withdrawal of powers vested in the Mamlatdar, the failure mentioned in this sub-section must exist at the date of the institution of an application for ejectment. Having regard to the plain language of the sub-section, we are not in a position to accept the contention that defaults previously made even when remedied by payments made before the institution of an application for ejectment will attract provisions in S. 25 (2). The above construction is supported by the fact that from this sub-s. (2), by the amendment made in 1956, the phrase "within the period specified in S. 14" has been deleted. That phrase could not have justified any finding as made by us this morning. The failure mentioned in the unamended section would always be connected with the period specified in Section 14. The existence of that phrase in sub-section (2) before 1956 compelled Courts to hold that the failure mentioned in the sub-section occurred on the expiry of the period for payment specified in Section 14. This position has been altogether altered by deletion of this phrase from sub-section (2) and by addition of clause (b) in Section 14 (1). Under that clause, the default is incomplete even if rent is not paid on May 31 of the year in question. If the landlord wants to rely on that failure or default, the landlord is required to give specific notice of termination of tenancy on the basis of that default and the tenant has been afforded an opportunity to remedy the default by paying the rent due within three months from the notice given by the landlord. These alterations in these relevant sections have made significant difference and the meaning and effect of the provisions in sub-section (2) of Section 25 have not remained the same as prior to the above amendments.

13. On behalf of a landlord Mr. Paranjape contended that for application of the provisions in sub-section (2) of Section 25 defaults in payment of rents for any three years must exist at the date when notice of termination of tenancy is given by the landlord. He contended that the phrase "he has failed for any three years to pay rent" was not independent of the phrase "whose tenancy is terminated for non-payment of rent". Both these phrases are descriptive of tenant. In his submission, the construction which we have arrived at above has the fault of adding the word "and" in the sub-section after the phrase "for non-payment of rent". This submission made by Mr. Paranjape was not acceptable to Mr. Chitale who also appeared for another landlord. Mr. Chitale's submission was that the provision in sub-section (2) of Section 25 was limitation on the powers vested in the Mamlatdar under sub-section (1) of Section 25. He accordingly submitted that unless there were some arrears at the date of the institution of the ejectment application, the question under Section 25 (1) and/or 25 (2) would not arise at all. In his submission, a tenant who makes defaults in payment of rents after the period of three months from the date of the notice tendered by a landlord under clause (b) of Section 14 (1) (a) would continue to be a defaulter and in connection with the question arising under Section 25 (2) he would be a tenant who has "failed" for the year in question to pay rent. He supported this submission by reading the judgments of the Supreme Court in the above two cases. We have already discussed the true effect of the provisions in sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 25 and we cannot accept Mr. Paranjape's submissions. In connection with the submissions made by Mr. Chitale and other Advocates appearing for landlords, we will now refer to the decisions in the cases of 64 Bom LR 569 = (AIR 1962 SC 753) and 70 Bom LR 314 = (AIR 1968 SC 461). In the case of 64 Bom LR 569 = (AIR 1962 SC 753), the issue first decided by the Supreme Court was regarding the relief against forfeiture of tenancy granted by the authorities below and this court on principles of equity, though the relief could not be granted under any of the provisions of the Act itself. In that connection, the Supreme Court first noticed that the tenancy under the Act was not contractual but compulsory tenancy of 10 years. The Supreme Court then noticed that right of termination of tenancy and to ejectment was invested in the landlord under the scheme of Sections 14 and 29. In connection with that right, relief was liable to be granted only if the tenant's case was covered by the provisions in Section 25 (1). This relief could not be granted if the tenant's case was covered by the provisions in Section 25 (2). The Supreme Court held in the first three appeals before it that admittedly the facts were such that the tenant's case was covered by the provisions in sub-section (2) of Section 25. It was admitted that for the above reason the Mamlatdar had no power under sub-section (1) of Section 25 to give relief against forfeiture of tenancy. Having noticed that situation, the Supreme Court held that on principles of equity, relief could not be granted to the tenants in question. The main reason for the finding was that the tenancy was not contractual. The right to relief against forfeiture of tenancy was not available except as provided in the statute itself. The Supreme Court accordingly reversed the decision of this Court whereby relief against forfeiture of tenancy was granted to the tenants in spite of the provisions in sub-section (2) of Section 25. In the fourth case, relief against termination of tenancy was granted to a tenant who had, after being defaulter in compliance with order made by Mamlatdar under Section 25 (1), made payments and had obtained order that his tenancy had not terminated. The question was whether such tenant can be held to have "failed" to pay rent under Section 25 (2). The Supreme Court referred to the fact that the sub-section (2) of Section 25 provided that "nothing in sub-section (1) of S. 25 shall apply to any tenant whose tenancy is terminated for non-payment of rent if he has failed for any three years to pay rent within the period specified in Section 14". Having regard to the last underlined phrase (underlining being ours), the Supreme Court observed:

"We are unable to appreciate the contention that when a tenant has been granted relief under Section 25 (1) in respect of any year's default, the default merged in the order granting relief and ceased to be a default".

Similar are further observations of the Supreme Court which are all based, in our view, on the now deleted phrase "within the period specified in Section 14". The observations of the Supreme Court based on this deleted phrase, therefore, are now not applicable to the facts of cases which are governed by the amended Sections 14 and 25.

14. It also requires to be noticed that the contentions made on behalf of the landlord in the case of 70 Bom LR 314 = (AIR 1968 SC 461) were almost similar to those made before us. The submission was that the scheme of Section 25 (2) was mandatory and the revenue authorities were bound to order eviction even though the tenant had paid up rent and landlord had accepted it before filing application for ejectment. This submission was based on the fact that admittedly the tenant had defaulted in paying the rents within the period specified in Section 14 of the Act. The tenant had at a very late date paid up the arrears and at the date of the application for ejectment there were no arrears. The Supreme Court negated the submissions made on behalf of the landlord by observing that sub-section (1) of Section 25 pre-supposes that there are arrears at the date of the application and sub-section (2), on the other hand, deals with a case where there is persistent default by the tenant for three years and provides that to such a case the provisions of sub-section (1) would not apply. The finding was that sub-section (2) "pre-supposes (i) that the tenant has made defaults for more than two years and (ii) that the tenant was in arrears at the date of the application x x x x".

The Court further observed:

"If this was not the correct construction of sub-section (2) and if the appellant's construction were to be accepted it would lead to a very astonishing result, viz., that even where the tenant had paid up all the arrears and the landlord has accepted them, he would still have the right to evict the tenant, though his reason for terminating the tenancy and his cause of action for an eviction have disappeared by his acceptance of the arrears due to him. The Legislature could never have intended such a result which also would be contrary to all principles governing the relationship between landlords and tenants".

Reference was then made to the policy of law indicated in Section 20 and other sections that no provisions in the Act "shall be construed to limit or abridge the rights or privileges of any tenant x x x x". The material observation was: "The Act, therefore, does not rule out the payment by the tenant and acceptance by the landlord of arrears of rent before a suit for eviction is instituted resulting in waiver by the landlord of the termination of tenancy by him". In discussing the ratio of the case of 64 Bom LR 569 = (AIR 1962 SC 753) the Court observed:

"It will, however, be noticed that this court did not hold that even where there are no arrears at the date of the application for ejectment and the landlord has prior thereto received and accepted the arrears which entitled him to terminate the tenancy, he would still have the right to obtain eviction against such a tenant".

The Court's construction of the sub-section (2) of Section 25 as then existing was:

"x x x x Sub-section (2) took away the power of the Mamlatdar to give relief which he can give under sub-section (1) viz., to call upon the tenant to pay the arrears and on such payment to direct that the tenancy had not been terminated. It is this power which is denied to the Mamlatdar by sub-section (2), if the conditions there contemplated exist, that is, the tenant is in arrears of rent for more than two years on the date when the application for ejectment is filed".

15. Mr. Chitale has asked us to read this observation by substituting at certain places the phrase "default" for the phrase "in arrears". On behalf of the tenants, with emphasis, it is pointed out that even in connection with the provisions in sub-section (2) of Section 25 as then existing, the Supreme Court has understood the case of 64 Bom 569 = (AIR 1962 SC 753) to mean that where arrears of rent for more than two years did not exist the Mamlatdar was bound to exercise powers for giving relief against forfeiture of tenancy under sub-section (1) of Section 25. We are unable to read the judgment of the Court in the manner submitted by Mr. Chitale. As we have already observed, the amendments made in Section 14 and particularly in sub-section (2) of Section 25 have rendered the observations and construction of that sub-section in these two previous decisions inapplicable. The observations are accordingly useful in arriving at correct construction of the present sub-section (2) but not binding.

16. In our view, the sub-section (2) of Section 25 applies only in cases where at the date of the institution of the application for ejectment by landlord, tenant can be held to be in arrears of payment of rent for any three years. The defaults made by him at any previous dates are not relevant. Unless the landlord proves and establishes that at the date of the institution of his application for ejectment the tenant was in arrears and/or had failed to pay rent for any three years, the Mamlatdar's power under sub-section (1) of Section 25 will have to be exercised and relief will have to be granted against termination of tenancy.

17. In this Special Civil Application, admittedly, before the date of the notice of termination, i.e., September 12, 1963, the tenant had committed several defaults. He had paid arrears of rents after suits had been filed. Admittedly, at the date of the above notice, he had paid off all arrears of rents for the previous years including the year 1961-62. The only default which had continued was for the year 1962-63. There was thus at the date of the institution of the application for ejectment one default that was in existence. It is, therefore, clear that he was not a tenant who had failed to pay rent for any three years as required for attracting the provisions in Section 25 (2). The order for ejectment was passed against the petitioner-tenant by holding that the payments made by him for wiping off previous arrears of rents were not relevant as the defaults had been completed. This finding was contrary to law and the order for ejectment passed by the Tenancy Awal Karkun and confirmed by the District Deputy Collector and the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal was wrong and is set aside. The matter is remanded back to the Tenancy Awal Karkun to proceed to consider the question of the order to be made under sub-section (1) of Section 25 having regard to the findings made above.

18. Rule absolute. No order as to costs.

Special Civil Application No. 1409 of 1965.

19. In this Special Civil Application, the tenant has challenged the order of remand dated February 27, 1965, made by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal. The only relevant facts which need to be noticed are as follows:—

20. The opponent No. 1, landlord instituted an application for ejectment of the petitioner-tenant on the ground that he had made defaults in payments of rents for three years, i.e., 1958-59, 1960-61 and 1961-62. It is admitted that at the date when the application for ejectment was instituted, i.e., on January 8, 1963, the tenant had paid off all arrears of rents including the arrears for 1960-61. The payment of the arrears of rents for that year was made on September 18, 1962. On January 8, 1963, the rent was not paid only for the year 1961-62. After the institution of the application, the rent for that year also was paid off on March 12, 1963. In connection with the years mentioned in the application, arrears of rents are not outstanding even till this date. In the result and having regard to what we have observed above, the finding of the Prant Officer in his order dated June 25, 1964, in Tenancy Appeal No. 340/63 that the tenant was entitled to relief against forfeiture of tenancy is correct. He was, therefore, right in setting aside the order of the Tenancy Awal Karkun and directing that the possession of the suit land should be continued with the tenant. Having regard to the findings which we have now made, the order of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal directing that the issue whether there was any agreement between the landlord and tenant that the landlord should accept rent with interest and about the waiver of notice should be tried appears to be unnecessary. Even without any findings being made on that issue, the order made by the Prant Officer is liable to be sustained.

21. In the result, the order of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal remanding the matter for trial of issue is set aside. The order made by the Prant Officer is confirmed. Rule absolute as above. No order as to costs.

Special Civil Application No. 1762 of 1965.

22. The present Special Civil Application is by the landlord challenging the correctness of the order made by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal dated April 20, 1965, setting aside the order of the Additional Collector granting ejectment of the opponents-tenants and restoring the order of the Tenancy Mahalkari dismissing the landlord's application for ejectment.

23. On the issue whether the tenants had committed defaults in payment of rent for the years 1951-52 to 1954-55, on appreciation of oral and documentary evidence, the Mahalkari held that as regards the years 1953-54 there had been late payment but he found that at the date of the institution of the application for ejectment there were no arrears at all. He accordingly rejected the application for ejectment. The Additional Collector in his appellate order dated September 14, 1964, held that the fact that the rent was paid beyond the stipulated time could not erase the default. He, therefore, held that the sub-section (2) of Section 25 applied and the tenant was not entitled to relief against termination of tenancy and/or forfeiture of tenancy. In this connection, by the impugned order dated April 20, 1965, the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal held that the tenant had committed defaults and not paid the rents, but at the date of the institution of the application for ejectment there were no defaults in payment of rent. In that connection, it further held: "Even it is seen from the record and admitted by the opponent-landlord that the rent for the year 1955-56 was accepted by the landlord though not as a rent but as a compensation". On the ground that there were no arrears at the date of the institution of the application for ejectment the Tribunal restored the order of the Mahalkari rejecting the application for ejectment.

24. Mr. Pratap for the landlord contends that since defaults had been made by the tenants in payment of the rent for three years and since rents due for three years had not been paid by the date fixed under Section 14 (1) (a) of the Act, the provisions in sub-section (2) of Section 25 were attracted and the tenants were not entitled to an order relieving them from forfeiture of tenancy by reason of non-payment of rent.

25. In that connection, it is sufficient to state that in the case of 70 Bom LR 314 = (AIR 1968 SC 461) the Supreme Court definitely held that the question of application of the provisions in sub-section (1) of Section 25 could not arise and the application for ejectment could not be sustained in a case where at the date of the application arrears had ceased to exist. As the finding of fact in this case is that there were no arrears of rent at the date of the application for ejectment, following the judgment of the Supreme Court in the above case, we are bound to hold that the cause of action in favour of the landlord for ejectment had altogether ceased to exist at the date of the application for ejectment. As there were no outstanding arrears of rents in respect of any prior period at the date of the institution of the application for ejectment, the same was liable to be dismissed.

26. Under the circumstances, the rule is discharged. There will be no order as to costs.

Special Civil Application No. 1430 of 1967.

27. This is the tenants' Special Civil Application challenging the correctness of the order of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal dated April 13, 1967, whereby, after setting aside the order passed by the lower Courts, the tenants were directed to hand over possession of lands in suit to the opponent No. 1-landlord.

28. Mr. Abhyankar for the tenants contends that the finding of the Tribunal was that the aggregate sum of Rs. 1010-3-0 was the arrears of rents at the date of the institution of the application for ejectment. The annual rent was fixed at Rs. 685-15-0. The aggregate rent for the two years would come to Rs. 1,390/-. As the arrears of rents were for a sum which was less than the aggregate of two years' rents, the Tribunal should have held that the tenants had not failed to pay rent for any period in excess of two years and were entitled to relief against forfeiture of tenancy under sub-section (1) of Section 25. The Tribunal was accordingly wrong in granting the ejectment application of the landlord.

29. Now, in connection with this submission, it is necessary to notice that there is no dispute on the fact that the arrears of Rs. 1,010-3-0 were in respect of the rents for 1953-54 to 1955-56 in the following particulars, viz.:-

1955-56	Rs. 154-04-0.

This being the true position, it is quite clear that the tenants had failed to pay the total rents due for the above three years. Defaults had been committed in payment in respect of the rents which became due for each of the years. At the date when the application for ejectment was instituted, the arrears as mentioned in the above particulars for the three years mentioned above had remained outstanding and payable. As already discussed in the judgment delivered in the above first Special Civil Application, we have not been able to appreciate the argument that the phrase "failed for any three years to pay rent" contained in sub-s. (2) of S. 25 has the effect of providing that there would be no failure if the aggregate amount in arrears does not exceed the aggregate of the rent for two years. Arrears for any year, even if it is as small as one rupee, will have to be considered as failure to pay rent in respect of that year whilst considering the application of the provisions in sub-section (2) of Section 25. As in the present case, the arrears for all the three years mentioned above existed at the date of the institution of the application for ejectment, the landlord was bound to succeed. The tenants' application is without any substance.

30. Rule discharged with costs.

31. The amount deposited in Court to be paid to the landlord towards satisfaction of the rents due.

Order accordingly.

(NAGPUR BENCH)

CHANDURKAR, J.

Kamālesh Dashrath Fokmare and another, Petitioners v. Sukudeo Pundlik Mahalle, Respondent.

Spl. Civil Appln. No. 683 of 1968, D/- 25-2-1970, against order of S. N. Hadole, Member, Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, at Nagpur, D/- 4-3-1968.

(A) Tenancy Laws — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act (99 of 1958), Section 30 (1) — Determination of tenancy by landlord's valid notice under Section 19 — Application under Section 36 (3) for eviction of tenant and possession of land — Tenant can be ordered to pay arrears of rent or lease money falling due prior to Act but not paid by him in exercise of jurisdiction for granting relief to tenant under Section 30 (1). (X-Ref:— Sections 19 and 36 (3).)

The termination of tenancy is brought about by a notice under Section 19, but there is a bar to obtain possession by the landlord created by Section 36 (2) of the Tenancy Act and he has, therefore, to approach the Tahsildar for ejecting the tenant. It is in such a proceeding for ejectment that the Tahsildar exercises his statutory power under Section 30 with a view to grant a relief to the tenant against termination of tenancy. (Para 8)

A notice under Section 19 terminating the tenancy in case the tenant failed to pay the arrears of lease money for the three years prior to coming into force of the Tenancy Act is invalid and ineffective. Spl. Civil Appln. No. 544 of 1963, D/- 13-1-1965 (Bom). Rel. on. (Para 7)

But when the landlord issued a second notice under Section 19 on 30-11-

1959 purporting to terminate the tenancy for non-payment of rent for the year 1959-60 the notice was perfectly valid and effective notice and in a proceeding started on an application of the landlord under Section 36 (3) for eviction of the tenant and possession of the land, the tenancy authorities in exercise of their jurisdiction for granting relief to the tenant can order the tenant to pay also arrears prior to the Act along with those accruing due after the Act within the statutory period of 3 months under Section 30 of the Act. (Paras 7, 9, 11)

(B) Tenancy Laws — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act (99 of 1958), Section 30 (1) — Object of — Object is to give relief against termination of tenancy for non-payment of rent — Section 30 (1) embodies the same principle underlying Section 114, T. P. Act — The power under the former provision is obligatory while that under the latter is discretionary. Consistently with this object the words "rent in arrears" in Section 30 (1) and Section 2 (26) should be interpreted to include also the arrears of rent for a period prior to coming into force of Act. (X-Ref:— Section 2 (26) and Section 2 (32)). (X-Ref:— T. P. Act (1882), Section 114). (Para 11)

The definition of a 'tenant' in Section 2 (32) includes a person who is a protected lessee. Therefore, having regard to the nature of the definition of rent in Section 2 (26) of the Tenancy Act which is intended to refer to a consideration paid on account of use or occupation of the land it will also cover the concept of lease money as contemplated by the provisions of Berar Agricultural Leases Act. (Para 12)

(C) Constitution of India, Art. 227 — Order of Revenue Tribunal depriving landlord of his accrued right to possession of land from tenant on a misconception of its own earlier order — Order quashed under Article 227.

Where the tenant had failed to tender the arrears of rent within the statutory period of three months from the order of the Revenue Tribunal, no discretion is left with the tenancy authorities to grant the tenant any relief under Section 30 of the Tenancy Act and the landlord gets an accrued right to the possession of the land. If in such circumstances, the Revenue Tribunal on a misapprehension of the nature of the order passed by it on the earlier occasion dismisses the landlord's application for possession thus depriving him of the accrued right, the error must be corrected by quashing the order of dismissal passed by the Revenue Tribunal. K. H. Deshpande, for Petitioners;
C. P. Kalele, for Respondent.

ORDER:— An important question which arises in this case and has been very elaborately argued is whether a Tahsildar in the exercise of the powers under Section 30 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act, 1958, hereafter referred to as the Tenancy Act, can make an order directing the tenant to pay arrears of rent which had fallen due before the Tenancy Act came into force. The petitioners are the landlords of survey number 37/1, area 7 acres 34 gunthas, situated at Chandur, Taluq and district Akola. This field originally belonged to Bhikaji the grand-father of the petitioners and devolved on them by virtue of a will made by Bhikaji, who died on 21-8-1957. It is not disputed that the petitioners, had a right to recover lease money in respect of the years 1954-55, 1955-56 and 1956-57. They had served a notice on 30-11-1959 purporting to be one under Section 19 of the Tenancy Act terminating the tenancy of the respondent-tenant in case he failed to pay Rs. 480 as lease money. No steps for obtaining possession consequent on this termination were taken, but the petitioners later gave another notice on 6-6-1960 calling upon the respondent to pay an amount of Rs. 72 as lease money for the year 1959-60. As this amount was not paid during the statutory period of 3 months the petitioners filed a proceeding for ejectment against the respondent. The Tenancy Tahsildar held that the respondent had failed to pay lease money for the years 1958-59, 1959-60 and 1960-61 but that the petitioners were not entitled to recover lease money for the years 1954-55 to 1956-57 which he determined at Rs. 72/- per year, because according to the Tahsildar, the right to recover this amount was barred by limitation. The Tahsildar then passed an order directing the respondent to pay the arrears of 3 years, that is, 1957-58, 1958-59 and 1959-60, within a period of one year.

2. The petitioners filed an appeal against this order. The appellate authority dismissed the appeal. The petitioners then filed a revision application before the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal. The Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal held that the petitioners were entitled to recover the amount of lease money for the years 1954-55 to 1956-57, and therefore, made an order that an amount of Rs. 216/- on account of arrears of rent for 3 years should be paid within 3 months from the date of the order. Since the nature of this order has been a matter of controversy of the parties it is necessary to reproduce the operative part of this order, which is as follows:

"For the aforesaid reasons I allow the revision application for the arrears of rent for three years and direct that the non-applicant shall pay Rs. 216/- for the arrears of rent for the three years, i.e., 1954-55, 1955-56 and 1956-57 within three months from the date of this order failing which his tenancy shall be liable to be terminated."

This order was passed on 2-9-1963. The respondent had claimed before the Additional Tahsildar that he had sent a money order which was received by the post office at Deori on 3-12-1963, that is, after the expiry of the period of 3 months granted by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal and the Additional Tahsildar, therefore, held that there was no proper tender of the amount of rent on or before 2-12-1963, and consequently, the respondent was liable to be ejected from the land. An appeal against this order filed by the respondent was rejected and the Revenue Tribunal also rejected the application for revision filed by the respondent. The respondent had then filed a petition being Special Civil Application No. 906 of 1965 in this Court and it was contended in that petition that there was a proper tender of the rent as directed by the Tribunal and that the Revenue authorities had no power to terminate the tenancy in respect of the arrears of lease money due for the period prior to the coming into force of the Tenancy Act. This Court, however, without disturbing the finding that the amount as ordered by the Tribunal by its order dated 2-9-1963 was not paid or tendered within the prescribed period of 3 months remanded the revision application to the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal "for giving a fresh hearing to the parties with respect to what would be the proper consequential order which can be passed in accordance with law on the facts of the present case". It appears that it was contended in that petition that even though the tenant had failed to pay arrears as ordered by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal an order for possession could not be made in favour of the petitioners.

3. When the revision application was re-heard by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, the Tribunal took the view that the order passed on 2-9-1963 was without jurisdiction and that the respondent could not be evicted for non-compliance with that order. This view was taken on the basis of a decision of this Court in Shantabai v. Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, Nagpur, Spl. Civil Appln. No. 544 of 1963, D/- 13-1-1965 (Bom). The Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, therefore, allowed the revision application filed by the respondent and rejected the application of the petitioners for possession. It is this order which the petitioners are now challenging in this petition.

4. It is contended by the learned counsel appearing on behalf of the petitioners that the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal has misapprehended the nature of the order passed by the same Tribunal on 2nd September 1963. According to the learned counsel for the petitioners the order passed on 2nd September 1963 was not one directing termination of tenancy for non-payment of rent for the years prior to the coming into force of the Tenancy Act, but that it was in substance an order made under Section 30 of the Tenancy Act which had the effect of modifying the order made by the Tahsildar who had directed the tenant to pay arrears of rent only with respect to 3 years. The learned counsel contends that the decision of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal dated 2nd September 1963 does not fall within the rule laid down in Shantabai's case.

5. It is however, vehemently contended by the learned counsel on behalf of the respondent tenant that the order passed by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal on 2nd September 1963 in terms directs that the tenancy of the respondent was liable to be terminated in case he failed to pay arrears of rent for the 3 years specified therein and as such the orders squarely fall within the rule laid down in Shantabai's case and the Tribunal was, therefore, justified in holding that such an order for termination of the tenancy was without jurisdiction. It is contended on behalf of the respondent that the petitioners wanted to terminate the lease of the respondent for non-payment of lease money for the years prior to the coming into force of the Tenancy Act and that they were not entitled to do so having regard to the decision in Shantabai's case Spl. Civil Appln. No. 544 of 1963, D/- 13-1-1965 (Bom). The learned counsel has referred to two other decisions of this Court in which Shantabai's case was followed. These were Umeshchandra Sundarsa Jain v. Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, Spl. Civil Appln. No. 258 of 1964, D/- 23-4-1965 (Bom) and Sitaram v. Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, Spl. Civil Appln. No. 1051 of 1956, D/- 19-7-1968 (Bom).

6. In order to decide the rival contentions which have been vehemently argued, before referring to the provisions of the Tenancy Act it is necessary to refer to the decision in Shantabai's case, Spl. Civil Appln. No. 544 of 1963, D/- 13-1-1965 (Bom). In that case the landlord had obtained a decree from the Civil Court against a tenant for arrears of lease-money for the years 1955-56 and 1956-57. The tenant was also in arrears of lease-money for the year 1957-58 for which also a decree was obtained from the Civil Court. The tenant continued to be in arrears of lease-money for the years 1958-59 and 1959-60 and a notice under Section 19 (1) (i) (a) of the Tenancy Act was issued by the landlady. This notice called upon the tenant to pay the arrears of the amount due under the decrees together with costs and also rent of the field for the year 1958-59. As the tenant did not pay the amounts demanded in spite of this notice an application for possession was filed on 6th March 1961. The Tahsildar passed an order that the tenant shall pay all the arrears of rent to the landlady failing which his tenancy will stand terminated. This order called upon the tenant to pay the amounts in respect of which the landlady had already obtained decrees. The tenant appealed against this order and the appellate authority after recalculating the amounts due in respect of the periods for the years 1955-56 to 1959-60 called upon the tenant again to make the payment within the period of 30 days. The landlady filed a revision application against this order and the Tribunal remanded the matter to the Tahsildar for a fresh decision according to law.

The Tribunal's order was then challenged by the landlady by a petition in this Court and while disposing of this petition this Court observed that the liability by way of arrears of lease-money had merged into the decrees passed by the Civil Court and that under the provisions of Section 19 of the Tenancy Act there was no right in the landlord to determine the tenancy of a tenant for nonpayment of rent in respect of the period in dispute inclusive of the year 1957-58. The decision with regard to the right of the landlord under Section 19 was stated thus in the judgment:

"It is thus clear that so far as termination of the tenancy for nonpayment of rent is concerned, the landlord is entitled to issue a notice under Section 19 of the New Tenancy Act in respect of the years 1958-59 and onwards, and not with respect to anterior period. The notice given by the petitioner in this case undoubtedly calls upon the respondent to pay arrears for the years for which she had already obtained decrees and also the arrears of the years 1958-59 and 1959-60. If the notice given is valid so far as its result of terminating the tenancy for nonpayment of rent is concerned, it was only in respect of nonpayment for the years 1958-59 and 1959-60. Thus, the question that will fall for consideration before the Naib-Tahsildar will be whether the respondent was in arrears of rent for the years 1958-59 and 1959-60, and if he is found to be in arrears to fix the time according to law for payment of those arrears. After that time is fixed, the tenant's liability for payment of the arrears for these two years will arise and the legal consequence for nonpayment within the time allowed in such an order by the Naib-Tahsildar will follow."

Thus the order of remand was not interfered with. It is true that in view of this decision which has not been departed from so far in this Court the petitioners were not entitled to terminate the lease of the respondent in respect of the arrears of lease-money for the years prior to the coming into force of the Tenancy Act.

7. The crucial question, however, which falls for determination in this case is whether the petitioners have in fact terminated the lease for nonpayment of arrears of rent for the years prior to the coming into force of the Tenancy Act or whether the order passed by the Tribunal on 2nd September, 1963 was in effect and in substance an order passed in a proceeding properly instituted after proper and legal termination of tenancy in the exercise of the powers under Section 30 of the Tenancy Act. If what has been done by the petitioners was to terminate the tenancy for nonpayment of arrears of rent for the periods prior to coming into force of the Tenancy Act there would really be no case for interference with the order passed by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal. As already stated, the rival contentions of the learned counsel are really based on the manner in which the Tribunal has worded its order passed on 2nd September 1963. According to the learned counsel for the petitioners, this order has the effect of modifying the earlier order of the Tahsildar, dated 28th March 1962, by which he directed payment of the arrears of rent for the years 1957-58, 1958-59 and 1960-61, while according to the learned counsel for the respondent it is in effect an order directing the tenancy of the respondent to be terminated for nonpayment of arrears of rent for the years 1954-55 to 1956-57. I have already stated that the petitioners had taken no steps for obtaining possession consequent on termination of tenancy by their notice dated 30th November 1959. Indeed, now in view of the decision in Shantabai's case this notice would be ineffective because the notice which was given on 30th November, 1959 purported to terminate the tenancy for nonpayment of lease-money for the years 1954-55 to 1957-58. The second notice however, which was issued on 6th June 1960 terminating the tenancy of the respondent for nonpayment of rent for the year 1959-60, was perfectly legal and operative notice. It is on the basis of the termination of tenancy by this notice that the proceeding for eviction and for obtaining possession from the respondent was initiated by the landlords.

8. When this application for possession came before the Additional Tahsildar the manner in which the Tahsildar had to deal with this application was regulated by the provisions of S. 36 (3) and S. 30 of the Tenancy Act. Under Section 36 (3) he had to make an enquiry in which it was competent for him to go into the question of legality of the notice, but if no effective challenge could be made to the notice issued on 6th June 1960 and there was an effective termination of tenancy by this notice, then the Tahsildar had to exercise his statutory power under Section 30 of the Tenancy Act to give time to the tenant to pay arrears of rent within the statutory period of 3 months. No controversy seems to be now possible on the question that the termination consequent on which a claim for possession is made by the landlord is brought about by the notice under Section 19 and that Section 30 of the Tenancy Act does not deal with any power of the Tahsildar to make any order as to termination of tenancy. If any authority for this proposition is necessary it is to be found in the decision of the Supreme Court in Rajaram v. Aba Maruti, 1962 Nag LJ 256 = (AIR 1962 SC 753) in which the Supreme Court was dealing with the provisions of Sections 14 (1), 25 (1) and 29 (3) of the 1948 Tenancy Act which correspond respectively to the provisions of Sections 19 (1), 30 (1) and 36 (3) of the 1958 Tenancy Act. Referring to the scheme of Sections 14 and 25 of the 1948 Tenancy Act their Lordships of the Supreme Court observed in para 7 of the judgment as under:—

"Under Section 14 on the default in payment of a year's rent occurring, the landlord may, if he so chooses, bring the tenancy to an end by giving the prescribed notice. If the tenancy is terminated, the tenant has, of course, no right to hold the land. The landlord would then be entitled to recover possession of the land from him. In view, however of Section 29 (2), the landlord cannot do so except by an application made to a Mamlatdar for the purpose. Now when such an application is made in a case where the tenant has been in default for not more than two years, Section 25 (1) would have to be applied and the Mamlatdar would have to give the tenant a chance to pay up and thereby annul the termination of the tenancy brought about under Section 14."

Same is the position under Section 19 of the 1958 Tenancy Act. The termination of tenancy is brought about by a notice under Section 19, but there is a bar to obtain possession by the landlord created by Section 36 (2) of the Tenancy Act and he has, therefore, to approach the Tahsildar for ejecting the tenant. It is in such a proceeding for ejectment that the Tahsildar exercises his statutory power under Section 30 with a view to grant a relief to the tenant against termination of tenancy. This position is also made clear by the opening words of Section 30 of the Tenancy Act which are as follows:

"30 (1) Where any tenancy of any land held by any tenant is terminated for nonpayment of rent and the landlord files any proceeding to eject the tenant, the Tahsildar shall call upon the tenant to tender to the landlord the rent in arrears....."

If this is then the true nature of the proceedings and the powers of the Tahsildar, it is difficult to accept the contention that the order of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal passed on 2nd September 1963 had the effect of termination of tenancy of the respondent for nonpayment of arrears of rent for the period prior to the coming into force of the Act. The order of the Tribunal is unfortunately improperly worded, but merely because the Tribunal in its order, dated 2nd September 1963, has stated that otherwise the tenancy will be liable to be terminated it cannot have the effect of overriding the statutory right which the petitioners had already exercised by giving the notice dated 6th June, 1960.

9. If the different stages through which this application made by the landlords for possession had passed are looked at, it is clear that they have throughout made a grievance of the fact that they were entitled to possession because the tenancy of the tenant had been validly terminated by the notice, dated 6th June, 1960 and when after the order directing the tenant to pay only arrears in respect of 3 years was made by the Tahsildar they challenged that order by an appeal and by a revision application before the Tribunal they were agitating denial of their right to possession, because, according to them, the Naib-Tahsildar should have made an order directing the tenant to pay the entire arrears due up to the date of the order of the Naib-Tahsildar. It is in the light of these facts that the order of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal dated 2nd September 1963, must be read and the only irresistible conclusion which is possible in the instant case is that the Tribunal has modified the order passed by the Tahsildar and had called upon the tenant to pay additional arrears though no doubt those arrears related to the period prior to the coming into force of the Tenancy Act.

10. It is at this stage that it is contended by the learned counsel for the respondent that even assuming that the power which the Tribunal was exercising was the power of the Tahsildar under Section 30 it was not open to it to do so in respect of the arrears of lease-money for the period prior to the coming into force of the Tenancy Act. The argument is that the respondent was a protected lessee prior to coming into force of the Tenancy Act and that he was liable to pay lease-money and since lease-money cannot be said to be synonymous with 'rent' as the term is used not only in Section 2 (26) but also in Section 30 of the Tenancy Act, the power under Section 30 to direct the tenant to pay arrears of rent could not be exercised in respect of lease-money due for the period prior to coming into force of the Tenancy Act. Another limb of the same argument is that where the legislature wanted to incorporate in the Tenancy Act rights of the parties under different enactments a specific reference has been made to those enactments and a reference is made to Section 5 of the Tenancy Act in which certain provisions of the Transfer of Property Act are made applicable to the leases governed by the Tenancy Act and it is, therefore, contended that in the absence of any reference to the provisions of Berar Regulation of Agricultural Leases Act in the Tenancy Act or in the absence of any specific reference to the lease-money or the right to recover lease-money in the Tenancy Act the power under Section 30 cannot be so exercised as to indirectly convert the proceeding for ejectment into a proceeding for recovery of arrears of lease-money which were due under the Leases Act, and therefore, the provisions as they are must alone be given effect to. If the order passed by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal on 2-9-1963 falls within the jurisdiction of the Tenancy authority under Section 30 of the Tenancy Act, then that order could not be said to be without jurisdiction and that order would fall under Section 30 (1) of the Tenancy Act, if power could be spelt out under that provision which could enable the Tahsildar or the appellate authority or the revisional authority exercising power under that section to direct payment of arrears to the landlord in respect of the period before the coming into force of the Tenancy Act. It cannot be disputed that the power under Section 30 can be so exercised as to call upon the tenant to tender the landlord the rent in arrears.

11. While it cannot be seriously disputed that the phrase "rent in arrears" includes arrears after the coming into force of the Tenancy Act, the question which is required to be decided for the purposes of the present case is whether these words take within their sweep the arrears for the period prior to the coming into force of the Tenancy Act. The words "rent in arrears" are not in any way qualified and given their natural meaning these words will obviously include rent which has not been paid by the tenant to the landlord. But what the learned Counsel for the respondent contends is that the lease-money which was not paid by the protected lessee to the landlord cannot be said to be rent within the meaning of the word as it is used in the Tenancy Act and a reference is made to the definition of rent in Section 2 (26) of the Tenancy Act, but before a reference is made to the definition it is necessary to refer to the object of Section 30 (1). The object of Section 30 (1) is to give relief against termination of tenancy for non-payment of rent and the principle embodied in that section is the same principle as is embodied in Section 114 of the Transfer of Property Act. But it cannot also be lost sight of that while under Section 114 of the Transfer of Property Act a discretionary power is vested in Court, under Section 30 of the Tenancy Act the exercise of this power is obligatory on the Tahsildar and even the period during which the tenant is called upon to pay the arrears of rent is statutorily prescribed by the provisions of Section 30 of the Tenancy Act itself. If the object of the provisions of Section 30 (1) therefore is that the tenant has to be relieved against termination of tenancy for nonpayment of rent, then in the absence of any qualifying words to the phrase "rent in arrears" I fail to see why arrears prior to the coming into force of the Tenancy Act should be excluded from the sweep of this phrase. Apart from the fact that I shall presently show that the word "rent" could also include lease money payable by the protected lessee, Section 2 which is the definition section itself starts with the words "unless the context requires otherwise" and the scheme of Section 30 (1), therefore, cannot be left out of consideration while considering the meaning of the words "rent in arrears". Consistently, a view has been taken that this phrase includes arrears after the date of the notice, that is, arrears up to the date of making of the order and it is not possible for me to find any reason why if there was a liability of the protected lessee who became tenant under the Tenancy Act which remained undischarged why the tenant who wanted to continue in possession could not be put to terms by directing him to pay arrears even in respect of the period before the coming into force of the Tenancy Act.

12. The words used in Section 114 of the Transfer of Property Act were "rent in arrears." Apart from the principle which is contained in these two provisions, namely, Section 30 of the Tenancy Act and Section 114 of the Transfer of Property Act, even the phraseology used in them is also the same. It may not be out of place to refer to the view which has been taken with regard to Section 114 of the Transfer of Property Act that the words "rent in arrears" include arrears the recovery of which has become barred by limitation. In Gurpur Vamana Pai v. Venkatu, AIR 1936 Mad 116, it has been held that the words "arrears of rent" are wide enough to cover a rent which is even barred by limitation. This decision was later followed by a Division Bench of the same Court in Janab Vellathi v. Smt. K. Kadervel Thayammal, AIR 1958 Mad 232 in which the Division Bench held that when granting the extraordinary relief against forfeiture the Court has jurisdiction to decree time-barred arrears also where it is fully warranted by considerations of justice, equity and good conscience under which the relief against forfeiture is granted. A reference may also be made to a decision of the Calcutta High Court in Dhurrumtolla Properties Ltd. v. Dhumbai, AIR 1931 Cal 457 in which the Calcutta High Court observed:

"The argument that the words mean the rent claimed in the suit and not rent which had accrued due since the determination of the tenancy by the notice to quit, up to the date when the application for ejectment is heard is acceptable."

The word "rent" is defined in Section 2 (26) of the Tenancy Act as follows:

"2 (26) 'rent' means any consideration, in money or kind or both, paid or payable by a tenant on account of the use or occupation of the land held by him but shall not include the rendering of any personal service or labour."

The contention that this definition cannot be extended to cover lease money due under the provisions of the Leases Act cannot be accepted. It is true that the provisions of the Leases Act used the word lease money and "lease money" was defined in Section 2 (i) of the Leases Act as meaning anything that is payable to a landholder in money or kind by a lessee for the right to use land. It must be appreciated that the Leases Act was in force only in the four districts of Berar and the other four districts which are also now governed by the provisions of the Tenancy Act were then governed by the provisions of Madhya Pradesh Land Revenue Code, 1954. Chapter XIV of that enactment dealt with tenants and the provisions of that Chapter dealt with the liability of the occupancy tenants to pay rent used the word rent as is clear from the provisions of Sections 173 and 178 of that Code. With regard to other tenants also the word used was rent as will be clear from the provisions of Sections 181, 182 and 183 of that Code. Section 181 raised a presumption that if rent was due, every payment by a tenant to the tenure-holder shall, unless the tenant otherwise agreed in writing, be presumed to be a payment on account of the rent. Section 182 had cast an obligation on the tenure-holder to "give a written receipt for the amount of rent at the time when such amount is received by him." Section 183 provided for a penalty if the tenure-holder "fails to give a receipt as required by Section 182 or receives by way of rent any amount in excess of the rent payable under the Code." The definition of rent in Section 2 (26) of the Tenancy Act defines rent as any consideration which was paid or payable by the tenant on account of use or occupation of the land held by him and it obviously has the same meaning as it had under the aforementioned provisions. The word "tenant" is defined in Section 2 (32) of the Tenancy Act and it includes a person who holds land on lease and includes a person who is a protected lessee. If a protected lessee is included in the definition of a tenant, the definition of rent with reference to the protected lessee would then read as "rent means any consideration in money or kind or both paid or payable by a protected lessee on account of use or occupation of land held by him....." Having regard to the nature of the definition of rent in Section 2 (26) of the Tenancy Act, therefore, which is intended to refer to a consideration paid on account of use or occupation of the land it will also cover the concept of lease money as contemplated by the provisions of Leases Act. Even, therefore, taking this view of the matter the arrears of lease money which is nothing else but rent payable by the protected lessee but were not paid and were, therefore, in arrears could be ordered to be paid by the tenant in the exercise of the jurisdiction under Section 30 of the Tenancy Act. I have already taken the view that the effect of the order of Tribunal was nothing more than modifying the order of the Tahsildar with a further direction that additional amount which was due on account of arrears up to date should also be paid by the tenant and if that was the nature of the order passed on 2-9-1963 it is difficult to say that that order was without jurisdiction.

13. It is then contended that this Court should not interfere with the order of the Tribunal in the exercise of its discretionary powers under Article 227 of the Constitution of India, because the tenant has bona fide made an attempt to pay off the arrears as ordered by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal by the order, dated 2-9-1963. It is not possible to accept this submission. Even this Court has confirmed the finding on the earlier occasion when the matter came to be placed before this Court that the amount was not tendered during the statutory period of 3 months granted by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal. It is difficult to appreciate how a question of bona fides really becomes material. The fact remains that it has now been decided that there has been no tender within three months of the order of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal and on failure of the tenant to so tender the amount he has deprived himself of the relief which he was entitled to in view of Section 30 of the Tenancy Act. There is, therefore, hardly any discretion left with the tenancy authorities and the only order that could follow would be an order for possession. If that was the nature of the right which had accrued in favour of the landlord and if the landlord has been deprived of that right by the Revenue Tribunal by the impugned order on a misapprehension of the nature of the order passed by the Tribunal on the earlier occasion that error must be corrected.

14. The result, therefore, is that the impugned order passed by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal on 4th March 1968 is quashed and the orders passed by the Special Deputy Collector and the Additional Tahsildar are restored. As the impugned order has now been quashed the landlords would be entitled to be restored to possession, as I am now informed that the tenant is now in possession.

15. In the circumstances of the case there will be no order as to costs. Order quashed.

C. R. Dalvi, for Appellant; K. J. Abhyankar, for Respondents 1 (a) and 1 (b).

WAGLE, J.:— Special Civil Suit No. 3 of 1967 was filed by the respondent-firm for recovery of an amount of Rupees 22,717.12 and costs with interest at 12 per cent. per annum from the date of suit till recovery. The defendant put in contentions disputing the claim of the plaintiff. After filing the suit, an application for attachment before judgment under Order 38, Rule 5 of the Civil Procedure Code was made by the plaintiff. The property was attached but the attachment was removed as the defendant furnished security in the shape of a surety bond executed by the present appellant agreeing to hold himself liable for the decree to be passed to the extent of Rs. 25,000/-.

2. Subsequently on November 14, 1968 a consent decree was made by the trial Court for Rs. 22,717.12, costs of the suit and interest at 12 per cent. per annum but subject to a condition that if payments were made as detailed in the terms of compromise, the decree was to be entered as satisfied provided the amount of Rs. 20,000/- was paid. After this decree was made, the respondent firm made an application for execution and had the pro-party of the appellant-surety attached on September 9, 1969. On October 8, 1969 the attached property was ordered to be sold for satisfaction of the decree. Against this order for sale, the appellant-surety filed the present appeal.

3. When this matter reached hearing before Vaidya, J., one point was placed before the learned Judge, namely that there is a conflict of decisions of two Division Benches of this Court. The learned Judge having found that the conflict exists referred this matter to a Division Bench. The point in respect of which a conflict was shown to exist was whether by reason of the fact that a decree by a compromise was made, the surety who had agreed to pay the decretal amount was discharged.

4. Mr. Dalvi appearing for the appellant contended that although in strict terms a surety bond executed in favour of the Court would not be covered by Sections 133 and 135 of the Contract Act, still this Court has held that the principles embodied in Sections 133 and 135 of the Indian Contract Act would apply. It was urged by him that the surety could not be expected to anticipate that the plaintiff and the defendant would settle the claim and that the defendant would submit to a decree shifting the liability from himself to the surety. The fact that the decree was by compromise was, according to Mr. Dalvi, a variation of the original terms of the surety bond and necessarily therefore if the principles of Sections 133 and 135 of the Contract Act applied, the surety was entitled to contend that he was discharged.

5. In support of his contention that the principles embodied in Sections 133 and 135 of the Indian Contract Act applied to the surety bond executed in favour of the Court, reliance was placed by Mr. Dalvi on Parvatibai v. Vinayak, 40 Bom LR 989 — (AIR 1939 Bom 23). The facts of this case were as follows: The defendant in the suit offered two sureties who executed bonds to the Court for securing the payment of mesne profits for two years. Against the decree made in the suit, an appeal was filed by the defendant. A stay of execution by offering fresh security was also obtained by the defendant-appellant. After the appeal was dismissed an execution was sought by the decree-holder for mesne profits against the original sureties. A contention was taken by sureties that they were discharged. Broomfield, J., while considering this question observed that although having regard to the definitions in Section 126 of the Indian Contract Act, Sections 133, 135 and 139 cannot apply in terms to a transaction of the type, where the bond is given to the Court, it does not follow that the principles underlying those provisions should not be applied mutatis mutandis. The learned Judges then held that this was a case in which the Court was itself responsible for a change in the situation which materially affected the position of the first sureties under the terms of their surety bonds and held that the sureties were discharged. Mr. Dalvi placed great reliance upon this case to urge that the two points which were decided in this case satisfactorily established, firstly that the principles of Sections 133 and 135 of the Contract Act applied to a surety bond executed in favour of the Court and secondly that if there is a variance between the terms of the surety bond and the ultimate order that is passed, there is ground to hold that the sureties are discharged. But one circumstance that has to be considered in addition to these two factors is that the learned Judges held in that case that the surety was adversely affected by the course of action taken by the Court itself and that this adverse effect was to the prejudice of the surety.

6. This point, however, whether a surety is discharged upon a compromise after a surety bond is executed by a third person for satisfaction of a decree by Court has been dealt with on several occasions by this Court and by the other High Courts. The earliest decision on this point of this Court is to be found in Shivappa bin Gurlingappa v. Nagappa bin Shivappa Kudrimoti, (1894) Bom PJ 25. Jardine, J., observed in this decision as follows:—

"It is argued that the bond being conditioned as to what the Court might adjudge, that verb excluded a decree passed on consent, and therefore that the decree passed is beyond its purview. We do not think, however, that we ought to limit the meaning in this manner. It is matter of notoriety that many suits are terminated by consent decrees, and we cannot hold that the creditor's taking the usual advantage of the debtor's consenting to the claim was inconsistent with the terms of the bond."

Ranade, J., while concurring with the order proposed by Jardine, J. observed as follows:

"The adjudication by the Court is only a means to an end, and in the absence of fraud there is nothing to prevent a judgment-debtor obtaining a consent decree and saving costs, or, as in this case compromising his creditor's claim."

The observations of the learned Judges are clear enough to indicate that the words "a decree to be made by the Court" would also include a decree by consent between the plaintiff and the defendant.

7. The next judgment on the point which is the subject-matter of conflict between two Division Benches is Mahomedalli v. Lakshmbai, 31 Bom LR 1442 = (AIR 1930 Bom 122). The facts of this case were that in a suit to recover money, attachment before judgment was obtained by the plaintiff, and the husband of the respondent stood surety and executed a bond in form 6 to App. F, Civil Procedure Code. Subsequently the plaintiff and defendant arrived at a compromise under which the amount in dispute was agreed to be paid in monthly instalments. The question was whether in view of these terms of compromise the surety was discharged. The learned Judges of the Division Bench did not agree on the first point whether by reason of the fact that the decree was passed by consent it followed ipso facto that the surety was discharged. It was observed by Kemp, Acting, C. J. that the correct test to apply to that case was whether the compromise which was subsequently embodied in the decree was in the contemplation of the plaintiff and the surety when the latter became a surety. But in the application of the test the learned Judge did not hold that that would be a sufficient ground for holding that the surety was discharged. It was observed that it would be nine months before the surety's liability was extinguished by reason of the compromise decree and that during those nine months the position of the judgment-debtor might have altered very much for the worse. It was further observed that the surety's rights against the debtor were prejudiced by the compromise and that therefore such a compromise was not contemplated when the surety bond was given by the surety. Blackwell, J., agreed with Kemp Ag. C. J. on this point and they held that the surety was discharged. One thing to be noticed in this connection is that by the mere fact that there was a compromise, the learned Judges did not hold that the surety was discharged.

8. The third case on the point and the case on which a conflict was considered by Valdia, J., was Haji Ahmed Karim v. Maruti Ravji, 32 Bom LR 1394 = (AIR 1931 Bom 55). A similar point had arisen in this case whether a surety was discharged by reason of the fact that the decree was not in invitum but it was passed by consent. Madgavkar, J., who delivered the judgment of the Bench observed as follows:

"The first question in these cases, in our opinion, is whether a compromise as such is or is not excluded under the terms of the surety-bond. That must be a question of fact in each case." The opinion of the Division Bench after considering the question was as follows:—

"It follows on this view that a compromise as such is not explicitly or implicitly outside the terms of the surety bond in this case."

The position, therefore, was that a compromise could not be excluded from the term "a decree of the Court" to be found in the surety bond. We find on going through the decisions of the two Division Benches in 31 Bom LR 1442 = (AIR 1930 Bom 122) and 32 Bom LR 1394 = (AIR 1931 Bom 55) that there is in fact no such conflict on this point. An opinion was expressed by Kemp Ag. C. J., but that opinion was personal to him and did not become the opinion of the Bench as Blackwell, J., did not concur in that opinion. From these decisions we find that it depends upon the construction of the surety bond whether the surety is discharged or continues to be liable.

9. The Calcutta High Court in Jia Bai v. Joharmull Bothra, ILR 59 Cal 1450 = (AIR 1932 Cal 858) concurred with the decision in 32 Bom LR 1394 = (AIR 1931 Bom 55). Rankin C. J. while considering this point observed at page 1461 (of ILR Cal) = (at page 863 of AIR) as follows:—

"In this appeal, we have been referred to the decision in 32 Bom LR 1394 = (AIR 1931 Bom 55). In that case, a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court, in a judgment with which I fully agree, as I do with the judgment of Lord-Williams, J., in the present case, examined the terms of the surety bond which said that, in case the defendant failed to pay the decree, 'I bind myself to pay any sum upto Rs. 3,000/- according to the orders of the Court'. The Bombay High Court held that the bond in that form was just as applicable to a consent decree as to any other Assuming that the consent decree is not in anywise fraudulent, it is just as much within the terms of such a bond as any other decree and indeed it strikes one as rather surprising that the ordinary form of a bond in a case under Order XIV should not be supposed to cover the case of a consent decree".

10. Similarly in Annadana Jadaya v. Konammal, ILR 56 Mad 625 = (AIR 1933 Mad 309) the Madras High Court held that the consent order had not the effect of releasing the surety. Of course, on facts it was held that the surety was discharged because time was given to the judgment-debtor to pay which had materially affected the rights of the surety. In Kabiruddin v. Debisingh, AIR 1935 Nag 16, the Nagpur High Court expressed itself as follows:

"A consent decree is not any the less a decree because it is agreed to by the parties to the suit, and though for certain limited purposes it is treated on the same footing as the agreement itself, the rules of contract do not apply in their entirety, nor do those of tort. Where therefore a surety undertakes to be bound by such decree or order as may be passed by the Court, he undertakes to be bound by a consent decree as well as by one after contest."

11. Similarly the Kerala High Court in Chakkunnu v. Viswanathalyer, AIR 1961 Ker 312, also held that a consent decree would be included in the expression "decree passed by Court".

12. On the point, therefore, whether a consent decree would be included within the expression "a decree to be passed by the Court", the decisions of the Calcutta High Court, Madras High Court, Nagpur High Court as it then was and the Kerala High Court are consistent and in agreement with the decisions of this Court. Obviously therefore there is no substance in the contention advanced by Mr. Dalvi that upon the passing of a decree by consent the surety is ipso facto discharged.

13. However, it has been consistently held by our High Court and also by the other High Courts that this rule is subject to three limitations, (1) that the decree is not the result of a fraud, (2) that the decree is not by collusion between the plaintiff and the defendant and (3) that the decree has not prejudiced the surety in any respect. In this case there is no argument advanced before us that either there was a fraud in the making of the decree or that there was collusion between the plaintiff and the defendant which had brought about the consent decree. The point to be considered therefore is whether the rights of the surety are in any way prejudiced by the consent decree that is made therein.

14. According to Mr. Dalvi appearing for the appellant, the very fact that the decree is made by consent is itself sufficient to prove that it is adverse to the rights of the surety. On this point reliance was placed by Mr. Dalvi on the observations of Broomfield, J., in 40 Bom LR 989 = (AIR 1939 Bom 23). The learned Judge quoted the observations in Keshavlal v. Pratapsing, 34 Bom LR 167 = (AIR 1932 Bom 168) to the following effect:—

"If there is a substantial alteration in a contract by the principal, without the consent of the surety, even if there be no extra prejudice to the surety which can be shown to exist, the surety will be discharged, because the Court will not go into the question whether there has been any actual prejudice or not. The surety is to be the judge whether he will continue to remain liable on the new contract or not."

Broomfield, J. then observed as follows:

"On the same principle the respondents are not bound to prove that they have actually been prejudiced."

Reliance was placed upon these observations by Mr. Dalvi to urge that it is not necessary that prejudice in fact must be proved by the surety but that an alteration in the original terms of the bond is sufficient to prove that prejudice has been caused.

15. In order to substantiate his argument that the sureties are discharged, it was further urged by Mr. Dalvi that when there is a variance between the surety bond and the ultimate decree that is passed, there is a substantial alteration in the terms so far as the surety is concerned and that in such cases no prejudice need be proved. The term of the surety bond of which a translation was given in the lower court was as follows:—

"The said defendant will personally and voluntarily pay without fail to the plaintiff the entire amount with costs which will be declared as payable in pursuance of the decree which the Civil Judge, Senior Division, Ratnagiri will pass in the suit after a trial finally and will satisfy the amount according to the decree which will be passed for the plaintiff. But if he does not pay accordingly, I personally or after me my heirs and executors of my will bind ourselves to pay an amount not exceeding Rupees twenty five thousand out of the amount which will be due to the plaintiff according to the said decree"

Emphasis was laid by Mr. Dalvi on the expression "the decree which the Civil Judge, Senior Division, Ratnagiri will pass in the suit after a trial finally." The learned single Judge has reproduced in original Marathi the relevant term of the bond in his judgment. The Marathi term is as follows:

“दायांत चौकशी अंती जो अखेर निर्णय दिवाणी न्यायाधीश वरिष्ठधर, रत्नागिरी, हे देतील त्या निवा- ह्यास अनुसरून”

The word “चौकशी अंती” (after trial) was, according to Mr. Dalvi, not the same as a decree by compromise. According to Mr. Dalvi, a decree by compromise was not after trial but the same was without trial. On the construction of this term we find that Mr. Dalvi is not supported by any decided case, namely, that a decree by consent is not a decree after trial. We have referred to the various decisions which have held that a consent decree is not excluded from the term “decree” in the surety bond. Necessarily therefore it must be held that there is no substance in this contention that a consent decree materially alters the terms of a surety bond executed in this case. The other cases in which the surety was held to be discharged were either on the ground that there was fraud in the making of the decree or that there was collusion between the plaintiff and the defendant in the suit or that by grant of time to the defendant, the surety was adversely affected in his rights. In the instant case there is no argument that the surety was in any way prejudiced. In fact we find that from the terms of the decree, the amount of the decree is reduced to Rs. 20,000/- from Rs. 22,000/- and odd and costs etc. In fact, the liability of the surety is reduced by the compromise and the burden is not increased nor is the right of the surety affected in any way. We, therefore, hold that the appellant fails to prove that he is discharged.

16. In the result, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Debt Laws — Bombay Money Lenders Act (31 of 1947), Section 2 (9) — Loan to a trader — Not a loan within the sub-section — Purpose immaterial.

LO/LO/F890/71/MNT/SSG

A loan advanced to a trader, for whatever purpose, is excluded from the definition of loan within the sub-section except for the purpose of Sections 23 and 25 of the Act. Section 21 does not apply to such a loan and the plaintiff cannot be deprived of interest till the date of suit on the ground of breach of provisions of Sections 18 and 19 of the Act — (X-Ref: Section 21).

U. R. Lalit, for Appellant.

JUDGMENT:— Issues Nos. 1 and 3 before the trial Court were:

“(1) Whether the provisions of the Bombay Money-lenders Act are applicable to the suit transactions?

(3) Whether the plaintiff proves compliance of Sections 18 and 19 of the Act?”

Though issue No. 1 was answered in the affirmative, issue No. 3 was answered in the negative. Under the provisions of the above Act, the trial Court deprived the plaintiff-mortgagee of interest that accrued due on the mortgage till the date of the institution of the suit. In that connection, before the lower appellate Court, the contention that was raised on behalf of the appellant-plaintiff was that the mortgage in suit had been executed in connection with the loan advanced to traders. The trial Court was, therefore, wrong in its affirmative finding on issue No. 1 and in depriving the plaintiff of interest due till the date of the institution of the suit. The lower appellate Court held that loan would be to a trader when it was advanced for purposes of trade. In order to succeed in his contention, it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove that the suit-loan and mortgage were made for purposes of trade of the defendants. There was no such evidence. The loan had not been advanced for purposes of trade and accordingly the learned Judge negatived the above contention.

2. Mr. Lalit has rightly contended that the above finding of the lower appellate Court is incorrect. There is clear and uncontradicted evidence of the plaintiff in this case that Sidram and his children being defendants Nos. 1 to 6, carried on joint family business and were trading in saris. Sidram, along with his children defendants Nos. 1 to 6 and his wife defendant No. 7, had taken the mortgage loan of Rs. 4,000/-. Sidram and the defendants were traders. There was no cross-examination of the evidence of the plaintiff. It is, therefore, clear that Sidram and his sons, defendants Nos. 1 to 6, were traders. They carried on a joint family business and as such were dealing in sarls. It is true that some of the defendants Nos. 1 to 6 were at the date of the mortgage minors. It is true that defendant No. 7 was merely the wife of Sidram and was not taking part in the trading transactions. Even so, it must be held that the business in sarls that was carried on by the elder and major members of the family was joint family business and was carried on for all the defendants and Sidram. The loan must, therefore, be held to be made to traders.

3. Now, in connection with loan to traders, the relevant provisions are in Section 2 (9) of the Act and read as follows:

"2 (9) loan means an advance at interest whether of money or in kind, but does not include—

(a) x x x x x

(b) x x x x x

(c) x x x x x

(d) x x x x x

(e) x x x x x

(f) x x x x x

(g) except for the purposes of Sections 23 and 25,—

(i) a loan to a trader.

x x x x x x x"

On a reading of the above definition of loan in Section 2 (9), it is clear that the provisions of the Act, including those in Sections 18 and 19, are not applicable to loans advanced to traders. To loans advanced to traders, Sections 23 and 25 only apply. The learned appellate Judge below was not justified in his view that if loan was not shown to have been advanced to a trader for purposes of his trade, the same is not excluded from being loan under Section 2 (9). The learned Judge failed to appreciate that the provisions in clause (g) of Section 2 (9) have not the effect of providing that loans which were not advanced to traders for their trade purposes would be loans within the meaning of the Act. On the contrary, the clear and unambiguous language in the above clause (g) has the effect of providing that whenever loan was advanced to a trader, except for the purposes of Sections 23 and 25, it could not be loan within the meaning of the Act, i.e., the defining Section 2 (9). The learned Judge should have, having regard to the clear evidence of the plaintiff on record, held in the plaintiff's favour that, since the above mortgage loan had been advanced to a joint family which was carrying on business in sarls, it was covered by the provisions in the above clause (g) and was loan to traders. Merely for the reason that it was not stated in the evidence that the loan was advanced for purposes of the trade of the joint family, the learned Judge was not justified in holding that the loan was not made to traders. That two of the sons of Sidram were minors at the date of the mortgage and that his wife had joined in the mortgage was, in that connection, not sufficient to make a finding that the loan was not advanced to a trader. It is quite clear that the loan was advanced to the trading family and must be held to have been made to traders.

4. The power to refuse interest to a moneylender on breach of the provisions in Sections 18 and 19 of the Act is contained in Section 21 of the Act. Section 21 was not applicable to the facts of the suit mortgage having regard to the above provisions contained in clause (g) of Section 2 (9). The two Courts below were, therefore, not justified in depriving the plaintiff of the interest that had accrued due on the mortgage till the date of the institution of the suit.

5. The appeal is accordingly allowed and the decree passed by the trial Court and confirmed by the lower appellate Court is modified to include the interest due till the date of the institution of the suit, viz. Rs. 2,915/-. The preliminary decree will be drawn accordingly.

6. No order as to costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

The construction of a reservoir by the State for facilitating the supply of drinking water is an act of welfare State for the betterment of the people of a part of the State and it is not an act in the exercise of its sovereign power. Therefore when damage is caused to the adjoining lands by the overflow of such reservoir due to negligence of its servants by not providing for such an overflow, the State Government is liable for the damage.

M. R. Kotwal Asst. Govt. Pleader, for Appellant; M. V. Paranjpe with V. V. Divekar, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT:— This is an appeal by the State of Mysore challenging the orders passed by the two lower Courts granting damages to the plaintiff for loss caused by reason of water overflowing from a reservoir constructed for the residents of Nipani.

2. In order to provide drinking water facilities to the town of Nipani, the State Government erected a reservoir adjoining Survey Nos. 92 and 93 at village Arjuni. Survey Nos. 92 and 93 belong to the plaintiffs. The construction of the reservoir was completed in 1954 by the Water Works Department. By a notification under Section 4 of the Land Acquisition Act issued on September 27, 1955, Government proposed to acquire part of the land belonging to the plaintiffs for the purpose of constructing a channel for carrying the overflow of water from the reservoir to the Nalla which is at a distance of about 1500 feet from the waste-weir of the reservoir. By private negotiation possession of the necessary land was taken by the State Government on October 21, 1956. However, the channel was not constructed except to the extent of about 250 feet on the side of the Nalla. The construction of the channel was not attempted from the waste-weir towards the Nalla. On November 14, 1957, there was heavy rainfall of 2½" in four hours and the water from the reservoir overflowed into the waste-weir and thereafter flowed over the land belonging to the plaintiffs. Considerable damage was caused both to the land and to the crops. Plaintiffs therefore came to Court seeking damages for the loss occasioned to him by reason of the overflow of the water which had collected in the reservoir. Plaintiffs' case was that due to the negligence of the defendant in not taking proper precautions to guard against the overflow, the loss was caused to the plaintiffs.

3. The defendant-State did not dispute the following facts, namely that the reservoir was built, that there was overflow due to heavy rains in November 1957 and that the loss assessed at Rs. 3,000/- was caused. The defendant's stand, however, was that the Mysore Government through its Engineering Department had taken proper legal and timely action in this case and that adequate and proper compensation has been paid to the plaintiffs under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act. It denied the contention of the plaintiffs that the plaintiffs had suffered loss to his land due to the negligent act of the servants of Government. Lastly it was contended that the Government was not liable for tortious acts or negligent acts of its servants. It was their further contention that it was an act of God and therefore nobody was liable.

4. Before the trial Court plaintiffs examined plaintiff No. 1 and the defendant examined Balvant Appaji Chavan, an Overseer working at Nipani at the relevant period. The issues framed by the trial Court include the issue: "Does plaintiff prove that due to gross negligence of the employees of Defendant in Public Works Department in not channelling the excess water through especially built channel, damage was caused to the crops and the lands of the plaintiff?" This issue was answered in the negative and therefore the main claim of the plaintiffs about the damage to the land and crops was not allowed. A small decree for rent and damages to the standing crop was made. Against this decision the plaintiffs went in appeal and the appellate Court holding that there was negligence on the part of the servants of the defendant-respondent decreed the claim of the plaintiffs for damages to the extent of Rs. 2,700/-. Against this decision the defendant-State has filed this second appeal.

5. Mr. Kotwal arguing for the appellant, the State of Mysore, contended that the lower appellate Court had taken an erroneous view in regard to the liability of the State. It was also urged by Mr. Kotwal that loss which was due to the act of God could not be considered as due to the act of any State Department. His argument was that during the course of several years at no time had $2\frac{1}{2}$ " rain fallen during four hours. It is not disputed that damage by overflow of water was caused because of the accumulation of water during the course of four hours heavy rain amounting to two and a half inches. Mr. Kotwal's argument therefore was that the heavy rain of $2\frac{1}{2}$ " was an act of God and therefore since the flow of water was due to the act of God, the State should not be made liable for the loss occasioned thereby. It was also urged by Mr. Kotwal that the act of the State in constructing the reservoir was an act in the capacity as a sovereign and therefore it being an act of State in its sovereign capacity, a loss occasioned to any citizen could not be made a liability on the State. The lower appellate Court considered the authorities cited before it and came to the conclusion that there was negligence on the part of the State in not constructing the channel in time and that even if it be held that the heavy rain was an act of God, still the negligence of the State is not wiped out by the said act of God.

6. The point whether heavy rainfall could be considered as Vis Major or act of God was considered by the House of Lords in Greenock Corporation v. Caledonian Rly., 1917 AC 556. There the question was as to the liability for the consequences resulting from works in alveo fulminis whereby the natural alveus was filled up and the flow of water under the force of gravity thrown into a new channel at a new and higher level. Lord Wrenbury observed on this point as follows:

"In such a case the corporation is responsible, I conceive, for resultant damage howsoever arising. The responsibility to prove a substituted channel is not limited to providing a channel sufficient to meet all demands which might reasonably be anticipated, or even all demands (in excess of the ordinary) short of the act of God. The corporation must provide a substituted channel which will be equally efficient happen what will. Assuming an act of God, such as a flood, wholly unprecedented, the damage in such a case results not from the act of God, but from the act of man in that he failed to provide (as there* was before) a channel sufficient to meet the contingency of the act of God. But for the act of man there would have been no damage from the act of God."

Relying upon these observations, the learned appellate Judge held that in spite of the heavy rain, the negligence of the State in not providing a proper channel for absorbing overflow of water was responsible for the damage caused to the land and crops of the plaintiffs.

7. Mr. Paranjape pointed out that by a letter dated May 17, 1957 (Exh. 46) this fact was brought to the notice of the State Government that there was a likelihood because of the heavy rains of overflow of water causing immediate danger to his land on the border. Even after this, according to Mr. Paranjape, sufficient precautions were not taken by the State Government to provide against a heavy overflow of water. In this connection the actions of the State Government may be considered. In 1954 the water works were completed but no provision was made for a channel for overflow of water from the Waste-weir to the Nalla which is at a distance of about 1500 feet. Such a possibility it seems was contemplated a little before September 1955 and a notification under Section 4 of the Land Acquisition Act was made for taking possession of the adjoining lands ostensibly for the purpose of creating a channel to absorb the overflow of water from the waste-weir to the Nalla.

8. It appears that as an emergent act, possession was taken by the State Government on October 21, 1956. Exh. 38 shows that this possession was taken from the owners of the land, two of whom were the plaintiffs themselves. Thereafter the evidence led by State shows that upto a distance of about 250 feet from the Nalla a channel was made adjoining the Nalla. The channel was 7 feet in depth and about 10 feet in breadth. But this channel was adjoining the Nalla and no such channel was constructed near the waste-weir so as to take the water from the waste-weir towards the Nalla. In this state of events, Exh. 46, dated May 17, 1957, was sent by the plaintiff to the State Government. The receipt of this letter is not disputed. The cause for writing this letter appears in the letter itself. It is stated therein "During rains of 1956, his land outside the acquired area was damaged by the water flowing through the waste-weir of the said Dam." It is also stated therein that he had applied to higher authorities to improve the same and to dig a channel through acquired area of Survey Nos. 92 and 93 from Arjuni but that he was sorry to note that nothing had been done. It is further mentioned in this letter that the rains were heavy and there was a chance that the flow would begin soon causing immediate danger to his land. It is not as if the danger of the likelihood of the loss was not brought to the notice of the Government. In fact, by Exh. 46 it was specifically brought to the notice of the authorities that damage was caused in 1956 rains and that such events might recur in 1957 and thereafter.

9. The point, therefore, to consider is whether the State Government was negligent in that no proper channel for the flow of overflow water from the waste-weir was constructed by it in time in order to see that loss by damage of crops is not occasioned to the adjoining lands. In the instant case it must be noted that a proposal was before Government for the construction of such channel and in 1957 in fact the proposals were taken in hand, but the proposal only went to the extent of construction of a channel about 250 feet in length but adjoining the Nalla. In these circumstances a question arises whether the damage that was caused to the land and the crops of the plaintiffs was due to an act of God or the negligence of the State. A further question that would arise is whether State would escape the liability on the ground that it was an act of God which led to the overflow if proof is given that the State was itself negligent on earlier occasion in not taking proper precaution. In the instant case, two things cannot be disputed, first, that a channel to provide for the flow of overflowing water from the waste-weir was not only contemplated but partly constructed by State Government and inference must therefore follow that the State Government must have considered that such a channel was necessary as a precautionary measure to guard the property of the adjoining land-owners. On this inference it must follow that the State Government was aware of the fact that if such a channel was not constructed, damage was likely to be caused to the adjoining owners of land. The State Government did not complete the channel. Intimation was received by it by Exh. 46 that an event which had taken place in 1956 of heavy rains might recur in 1957. The intimation was given in May 1957, that is before the rainy season started. In the rainy season it appears that no untoward incident of heavy rains occurred. But such heavy rains started on November 14, 1957 and within a period of four hours, there was two and a half inches rainfall.

10. As has been pointed out by Lord Wrenbury in 1917 AC 556, cited above, assuming an act of God, such as a flood, wholly unprecedented, the damage in such a case results not from the act of God, but from the act of man in that he failed to provide a channel sufficient to meet the contingency of the act of God. But for the act of man there would have been no damage from the act of God. The observations of Lord Wrenbury are most telling in regard to the liability of loss due to the negligence of an individual or a corporation. If the reservoir was not built by the State, there would have been no occasion for the accumulation of water at a high level and overflow thereafter due to heavy rains. The damage, therefore, was due, firstly, to the act of the State in having the reservoir built so that the danger always continued to exist. Whether subsequently the danger materialised by an act of God is not a matter which absolves the State from its liability for the earlier negligence in not taking proper precautions. The precautions were intended but were not fully taken. The fact that a channel about 7 feet in depth, about 10 feet wide and extending over 1500 feet was found necessary by the State is a justification for the proposition that precautions were necessary to avoid loss or damage by overflow of water. This jurisdiction (sic) itself justifies the claim made by the plaintiffs that because proper precautions were not taken as were to be taken by the State, the loss was occasioned to them.

11. Mr. Kotwal for the State, however, argued that the loss was occasioned solely by the act of God and not by any negligence of the State servants. He referred to certain authorities of the Supreme Court to point out that tortious act of servants cannot impose a vicarious liability on the State if the act of the State is done in its sovereign capacity. In Kasturi Lal v. State of U. P., AIR 1965 SC 1039, a similar point was considered by their Lordships of the Supreme Court regarding the liability of the State for the tortious acts of its servants. It was observed by the Supreme Court that if the act of the State is done in its capacity as a sovereign, then there is no liability upon the State for the tortious acts of the employees in carrying out the act of State. Their Lordships, however, raised a distinction between the acts of Govt. in its capacity as sovereign and other acts of Govt. as non-sovereign acts. Sovereign acts were considered as those which related to maintenance of law and order. In the instant case, the State Government built up a reservoir for supply of water to the citizens. This act could at best be considered as welfare act but certainly not an act of the State Government in its capacity as a sovereign. It was not an act which the State Government had to commit as it was obliged to do so. An action of the State relating to law and order would stand on a footing different from the act of the State in its capacity as for welfare of the subject. The act of the State for the purpose of welfare of the State cannot be considered as obligatory as the State Government could not be compelled to do so. Their Lordships, therefore, restricted the rule of vicarious liability of its servants upon State Government in respect of acts which were committed by State Government in pursuance of sovereign power of the State.

12. A similar proposition was laid down by their Lordships of the Supreme Court in State of Rajasthan v. Mst. Vidhyawati, AIR 1962 SC 933. The facts of this case were that a driver of a jeep, owned and maintained by the State of Rajasthan for the official use of the Collector of a District, drove it rashly and negligently while bringing it back from the workshop after repairs and knocked down a pedestrian and fatally injured him. The point was whether the State Government could be made vicariously liable for the loss occasioned to the plaintiff by reason of the tortious act of employee. It was held by their Lordships that the State can be made vicariously liable for the tortious act like any other employer. While considering the proposition about the vicarious liability of the State for the tortious acts of its servants, their Lordships observed in paragraph 10 as follows:

"In this connection it has to be remembered that under the Constitution we have established a welfare State, whose functions are not confined only to maintaining law and order, but extend to engaging in all activities including industry, public transport, the State trading, to name only a few of them. In so far as the State activities have such wide ramifications involving not only the use of sovereign powers but also its powers as employers in so many public sectors, it is too much to claim that the State should be immune from the consequences of tortious acts of its employees committed in the course of their employment as such. In this respect the present set up of the Government is analogous to the position of the East India Company, which functioned not only as a Government with sovereign powers, as a delegate of the British Government, but also carried on trade and commerce, as also public transport like railways, post and telegraphs and road transport business."

"It was in the context of those facts' observed their Lordships, "that the Supreme Court of Calcutta repelled the argument advanced on behalf of the Secretary of State." Their Lordships therein refer to the judgment of Chief Justice Peacock in the case of Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Co. v. Secretary of State for India, (1861) 5 Bom HCR App. 1. and quote with approval the following observations:

"There is a great and clear distinction between acts done in the exercise of what are usually termed sovereign powers, and acts done in the conduct of undertakings which might be carried on by private individuals without having such powers delegated to them."

Their Lordships held that the act of the driver in bringing the car after repairs from the garage was not an act which he was doing in the exercise of the part of the sovereign power of the State. Therefore, as has been laid down by the Supreme Court, a distinction has to be made between acts of the State in their sovereign capacity and acts of the State in non-sovereign capacity.

13. In the instant case it has not been pointed out that the act of State in constructing the reservoir was an act in its sovereign capacity. At best it could be said to be an act of welfare State for the betterment of the people of a part of the State. By no stretch of imagination can the act of the State in constructing a reservoir for facilitating the supply of drinking water be considered as an act in exercise of sovereign power. In the instant case, therefore, the immunity for acts in the sovereign capacity cannot be made available to the defendant-State. The State therefore has no protection either because the damage was caused by the act of God or because of the immunity that was available to it if the act were in its capacity as a sovereign power. The ordinary rule of negligence will, therefore, apply and the fact that there was negligence has been accepted by the appellate Court as a finding of fact. I have also dealt with it earlier to point out that although a channel was contemplated and the danger was brought to the notice of the authorities by the plaintiffs themselves by Exhibit 46, no action was taken by the State to prevent damage being caused by overflow of water even if excess of water was due to act of God. I, therefore, hold that the lower Court was justified in coming to the conclusion that the State was liable for the loss that was caused to the plaintiffs. So far as quantum of damage is concerned, the appellate Court has found as a fact the quantum of damage, and no further argument can lie on that point. In the result, the appeal has to be dismissed.

N. S. Shrikhande, for Appellants
V. V. Albal, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT:— This is an appeal against the appellate Judgment dated 31st December, 1961 of the learned District Judge, Satara. The appeal was originally filed by the three Defendants in the suit from which the present appeal arises. Defendant No. 1 died during the pendency of this appeal and his heirs and legal representatives were joined as respondents. 2 to 7. The appeal was dismissed against the respondent No. 6 for want of prosecution. The respondents 2 to 5 and 7 have not appeared. Respondent No. 1 is the original plaintiff.

2. The dispute is about three properties. They formed a part of the estate of one Shivaba who died in or around 1920. He was succeeded by his son Baba who died leaving him surviving his widow Goja. Goja alienated three of the properties of which her late husband Baba was the full owner. One of the properties was sold on 2nd May, 1942 to Defendant No. 1, another on 4th January 1943 to defendant No. 2 and a third on 23rd March 1943 to Defendant No. 3. After these alienations she adopted the plaintiff as a son to her husband on 22nd April 1959. Thereafter she died.

3. On 19th September, 1960 the plaintiff as such adopted son filed in the court of the learned Civil Judge, Junior division, Karad, the suit from which the present appeal arises challenging the three alienations as being without legal necessity. The defendants denied the adoption and further contended that the plaintiff was in any case past the age of fifteen years on the date of his adoption and therefore by virtue of Section 10 of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956, the adoption was invalid. They further contended that as these properties had vested in them prior to the adoption by virtue of proviso (c) to Section 12, the plaintiff could not divest them. They further pleaded that there was legal necessity for the alienations by Goja.

4. The learned trial Judge held that there was a custom in the community of Goja to adopt a boy who was more than fifteen years of age at the date of adoption and therefore under Section 10 (iv) of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956, the adoption was valid. He held that fact of adoption proved. The learned trial Judge also held that the alienations by Goja were for legal necessity and were for consideration and were bona fide. He also held that notwithstanding the proviso (c) to Section 12, the plaintiff was entitled to sue. Having come to the conclusion that the alienations were for legal necessity, the learned trial Judge dismissed the suit. Against the said decision, the plaintiff appealed to the District Court at Satara.

5. The learned District Judge held that there was a custom in the community of Gaja, whereby a boy above 15 years of age could be validly adopted. He further held that proviso (c) to Section 12 did not stand in the way of the plaintiff. He, however, reversed the finding of fact as to the legal necessity and held that the legal necessity was not proved. In the result, he allowed the appeal and set aside the alienations subject to repayment of certain small amounts of consideration to the alienees. Against the said decision, the defendants, who are the alienees, have filed the present appeal.

6. The first point taken before me by Mr. Shrikhande on behalf of the appellants is that the legal necessity for the alienations should be held to have been proved. I am afraid that the finding of fact to the contrary of the District court is binding upon me and in a second appeal it is not open to the appellants to challenge it. This contention must therefore be rejected.

7. The second contention taken on behalf of the appellants is that the custom or usage applicable to the parties which would permit persons who have completed the age of 15 years being taken in adoption has not been proved and, therefore, the adoption is void under Sec. 10 of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act. In the judgment of the learned District Judge reliance for proving the custom has been placed on two instances one of 1942 and another of 1948 and certain oral evidence. These instances may not be sufficiently ancient to establish a custom. But what Section 10 (iv) of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956, talks of is not only custom, but also usage. The instances and the evidence would be sufficient to establish a usage. However, this sufficiency of evidence for establishing a custom or usage loses all importance in territories which were formerly part of State of Bombay, such as Satara District. Even prior to the passing of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act in 1956, the Hindu Law applicable to the Bombay State was that a person may be adopted at any age even though he may be older than the adoptor and even though he may be married and had children. It is well-known that Hindu law in India is derived from various texts and commentaries some of which have by custom held the field in various parts of India. Hindu law, therefore, is by itself customary law, except to the extent to which it has been subsequently codified. In my opinion, therefore, the prohibition contained in Section 10 (iv) against the person adopted who has completed the age of 15 years has no meaning in relation to male persons adopted in the territories which were comprised in the former State of Bombay which include the District of Satara from where this appeal comes. The custom or rule of Hindu law prevailing in these territories permitting adoption of males over the age 15 years is expressly saved by Section 10, (iv). The position with regard to the adoption of females may be different as there was no rule of Hindu law permitting adoptions of females prior to the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956. This contention of Mr. Shrikhande must therefore be rejected.

8. The last contention taken on behalf of the appellants is that by various sale deeds executed in 1942 and 1943, Goja had alienated the properties which are the subject-matter of this litigation. On such alienations the properties completely vested in the respective appellants. Goja, although a Hindu widow, was full owner of the alienated properties subject to certain restrictions on her right of alienation and such alienations were valid until they were set aside at the instance of a proper person. Proviso (c) to Section 12 of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956 provides that the adopted child shall not divest any person of any estate which vested in him before the adoption. An adopted son was therefore not the proper person at whose instance the sales could be avoided.

9. This contention of the appellants does not appear to me to be correct. What had vested in the alienees as a result of the alienations by a Hindu widow was only her life estate. After her death, the adopted son as a reversioner became entitled to the reversion and was entitled to challenge an alienation in respect of which it has been established that it was not for legal necessity.

10. Mr. Shrikhande relied upon the following words in para 176 of Mulla's Hindu Law, 13th Edition:—

"A widow or other limited heir is not a tenant-for-life, but is owner of the property inherited by her, subject to certain restrictions on alienation, and subject to its devolving upon the next heir of the last full owner upon her death. The whole estate is for the time vested in her and she represents it completely." He also invited my attention to the commentary of Mulla on Hindu Law under paragraph 185 to the effect that a sale by a widow is not absolutely void as regards the reversioners, but is voidable at their option. It is true that a widow was even prior to 1956 the owner of the property of her husband. But she was its limited owner and not absolute owner. In this case as she alienated the properties in 1942 and 1948 and was not in possession in 1956, when the Hindu Succession Act, 1956 came into force, she never became the absolute owner of the property. But nonetheless she was an owner in a limited sense. The estate taken by a Hindu widow in property of her husband may be described by saying that she was the owner thereof, but she could not sell the corpus of the property or otherwise alienate it unless it was for legal necessity or for the benefit of the estate or with the consent of the next reversioners. It was only when the alienation was made for legal necessity or for the benefit of the estate or with the consent of the next reversioners that it passed an absolute estate to the alienee to the same extent as an alienation made by full owner. In absence of legal necessity or benefit of the estate or the consent of the next reversioners what passed to the alienee was merely a life estate. The limitations imposed upon her estate were not imposed upon her for the benefit of reversioners. These limitations were inseparable from her estate so that even if there was no reversioner, she could not alienate the corpus of the property except for legal necessity. If she did alienate the property without legal necessity and there were no reversioners, the alienation could be set aside by the Government taking the property by escheat. It is therefore wrong to say that prior to 1956 a Hindu widow was a full owner of her property in every sense. The restrictions on her power of alienation were a part of and inseparable from her estate. In this case the finding that the alienations were not for legal necessity has become final. Therefore, it appears to me that what passed to the alienees was merely the life interest of Goja and not an absolute estate.

11. When on 22nd April 1959 the plaintiff was adopted as a son by Goja to her husband, the plaintiff succeeded to the property of his adoptive father and became a reversioner in respect of the reversion. Under Section 12 of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956, it is true that he becomes the child of his adoptive father with effect from the date of adoption. It is further true that he could not divest the appellants-alienees of any estate which vested in them before the adoption. But what vested in them was, in my opinion, only the life interest of Goja and nothing more. There was, therefore, no question of divesting under proviso (c) to Section 12 of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956. The reversionary interest did not vest in the appellants and on his adoption the plaintiff became entitled to it and after the death of Goja when the life interest ceased, the plaintiff became entitled to claim possession of the property from the appellants. This contention also fails.

12. Mr. Shrikhande tried to take me through the reasoning of the learned District Judge in arriving at his conclusions on the two points of law argued before me. It is true that I do not agree fully with the reasoning of the learned District Judge. I have come to the same conclusions on these points of law by different processes of reasoning. But that does not affect the correctness of the conclusions arrived at by the learned District Judge.

13. The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed. There will be no order as to costs. The decree dated 31st December 1962 of the District Court is confirmed.

Appeal dismissed.

M. D. Hombalkar, for Appellants;
P. S. Joshi, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT:— The second appeal arises out of a suit filed by the respondent to obtain possession of western half share out of house No. 611 situated at Vadgaon in Ichalkaranji Taluka. According to the plaintiff, the house originally belonged to one Tatoba Laxman Pise. On March 14, 1958, Tatoba sold his undivided half share in the house to defendant No. 1. The defendants were, however, in possession of the entire house as tenants, since 1953. On March 8, 1960, Tatoba sold the remaining half to the plaintiff under a registered sale deed. The defendants were not willing to make an actual partition of the house. The plaintiff, therefore, prayed in the suit for an equitable partition of the house and possession of the western half of the house. The defendants resisted the suit contending that on March 8, 1960, Tatoba had no saleable interest in the suit property; hence, the plaintiff could not maintain the suit. They further alleged that on January 24, 1958, Tatoba had entered into an agreement with the defendants to sell the entire house to them and they were in possession of the house since then in pursuance of that agreement. As it transpired later that one Nivrutti Haval had half share in the entire house, they entered into an agreement with Haval on October 18, 1958 to purchase the remaining half share in the house. They had, in the meanwhile, got a registered sale deed executed by Pise in respect of his half share on March 14, 1958, as stated by the plaintiff. Thus the defendants claimed to be in possession of the half share sold by Tatoba under the sale deed dated March 14, 1958 and the remaining half share under the agreement dated January 24, 1958 entered into with Tatoba and the agreement dated October 18, 1958 entered into with Haval and claimed equity of part performance against any transferee with notice of their possession. They further stated that Haval entered into an agreement with the defendants and thereafter transferred his share to Tatoba Pise and hence Haval had lost all interest in the property and Tatoba was bound to convey the property to the defendants under the original agreement dated January 24, 1958. They submitted that the plaintiff was not a bona fide purchaser without notice of the above transactions between the defendants and the said Tatoba and Haval and hence, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover possession of the house from the defendants. The learned Civil Judge framed the necessary issues and on considering carefully the documentary and oral evidence in the case found

(1) that the plaintiff proved the sale deed executed by Tatoba in his favour on March 8, 1960,

(2) that Tatoba had only half share in the suit property at the time of the said sale deed dated March 8, 1960,

(3) but that defendant No. 1 (though the findings in this behalf have been recorded by the learned Judge in a confused way by referring to both the defendants it appears he meant defendant No. 1) was entitled to protect his possession of the whole house under Section 53-A of the Transfer of Property Act, and

(4) that the plaintiff was estopped from bringing his suit in view of the contracts entered into by his predecessor-in-title with defendant No. 1.

He, therefore, dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs by his judgment and decree dated July 25, 1961. Feeling aggrieved by the said decision, the plaintiff carried on appeal in the Court of the District Judge at Kolhapur and the learned District Judge reversed the decree on the ground that although the defendants were entitled to the equity of part performance under Section 53-A against Tatoba and Haval, that equity was not available against the plaintiff because the plaintiff was a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the contracts or of the part performance thereof. In view of this finding, the learned District Judge decreed the plaintiff's suit.

2. The said decree is challenged in the above second appeal by the defendants and it is urged by Mr. Hombalkar, the learned Counsel for the defendants, that the learned District Judge erred in law in holding that the plaintiff had no notice of the equity of part performance in favour of the defendants. The finding of the learned District Judge that the defendants fulfilled all the requirements of Section 53-A of the Transfer of Property Act and were entitled to protection of their possession under the said Section 53-A is a finding which cannot be assailed by the plaintiff. The finding is recorded by the learned District Judge after carefully considering all the relevant agreements and the requirements of Section 53-A and Mr. Joshi, the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-res-pendent, has not been able to point out any error in that finding.

3. Mr. Joshi, however, submitted that the learned District Judge was quite right in further holding that the facts of the case attracted the operation of the proviso to Section 53-A which runs as follows:—

"Provided that nothing in this section shall affect the rights of a transferee for consideration who has no notice of the contract or of the part performance thereof."

The learned District Judge reversed the finding recorded by the learned Civil Judge on this point observing as follows:

"Here again, if we remember the facts that the Defendants were occupying the house since 1953 as tenants, the fact that they continued in possession in part performance of the contract can hardly be known to a third person. After all, it was a change in character of possession. And therefore, unless there is something more on the part of the Defendants to show this change in character or possession, it would be extremely difficult to hold that the third person could have knowledge of the fact that the Defts. were continuing in part performance of their contract with Nivrutti Haval. It is true that admittedly the Defendants have taken tap-water connection and have also constructed a bath-room. But even assuming that these improvements were made by the Defendants in part performance of the contract, the question is whether the plaintiff would be said to have had the notice of it. The notice contemplated under the proviso to Section 53-A, is not of improvements, but of the part performance of the contract. But there is nothing on the record to show that at the time the plaintiff purchased this house from Tatoba Pise he knew that the Defendants had made these improvements, much less can it be said that he had the knowledge that the Defendants had made these improvements in part performance of the contract. I am, therefore, inclined to think that the Defendants have failed to prove that the plaintiff had the notice either of the contract between them and Nivrutti Haval or of the part performance thereof."

It may also be noticed that the defendants relied on a notice published in a daily newspaper known as 'Pudhari' dated March 4, 1960 and contended that the publication must have come to the knowledge of the plaintiff. The learned District Judge rejected this contention on the ground that there was nothing on the record to show that Pudhari was in circulation in Vadgaon and there was also nothing on the record to suggest that the plaintiff had any opportunity to know about this notice.

4. However, it appears that the attention of the learned District Judge was not drawn to the definition contained in Section 3 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, the material portion of which runs as follows:—

"A person is said to have notice" of a fact when he actually knows that fact, or when, but for wilful abstention from an enquiry or search which he ought to have made, or gross negligence, he would have known it.

Explanation I— x x x x

Explanation II— Any person acquiring any immovable property or any share or interest in any such property shall be deemed to have notice of the title, if any, of any person who is for the time being in actual possession thereof.

Explanation III— x x x x

Reliance is placed by Mr. Hombalkar for the appellant on the terms of Explanation II. He contended that the defendants being admittedly in possession of the entire suit house, in view of the said Explanation II, the plaintiff should be deemed to have notice of the contracts between defendant No. 1 and Tatoba and Haval; and in any event, it was his duty to make a proper enquiry about the rights of the defendants who were in possession of the property before purchasing the property; and he having failed to do so, he must be said to have had notice of the equities in favour of the defendants within the meaning of that definition.

5. It is not the case of the plaintiff that he made any enquiry with the defendants about the rights, if any, which they had in the property. But Mr. Joshi tried to repel this argument by contending that the constructive notice imputed to the purchaser under Explanation II is only in respect of 'title' and not in respect of any equity such as a contract to purchase the property or part performance referred to in the proviso to Section 53-A. Mr. Joshi's contention is, however, contrary to well established principles of law regarding constructive notice. The principle stated by Rankin, J. in Tiloke Chand Surana v. J. B. Beattie & Co., AIR 1926 Cal 204 at p. 211 which of course, was a case decided prior to the amendment of the definition of notice in Section 3 — will apply to the facts of this case; and that principle is as follows:—

"In this case there was a tenant upon the property and his open possession is notice not only of the immediate terms of his tenancy but of collateral agreements as well, in the absence of all enquiry by the transferee."

The principle was also adopted in Illustration 3 to Section 27 (b) of the Specific Relief Act, 1877; and the section is re-enacted in Section 19 (b) of the Specific Relief Act, 1963, though the illustration has been omitted. In Mohammad Aslam Khan v. Feroze Shah, AIR 1932 PC 228, while dealing with the said S. 27 (b) of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, the Privy Council laid down:

"Whether a transferee has knowledge of such facts which would put him on inquiry which if prosecuted would have disclosed a previous agreement, such transferee is not a transferee without notice of the original contract within the meaning of the exception in S. 27 (b)."

6. In my judgment, the use of the word 'title' in Explanation II does not mean that the general principles with regard to constructive notice embodied therein will not be applicable to the notice referred to in the proviso to Section 53-A. From the illustration to Section 27 (b) of the Specific Relief Act, 1877 referred to above and from the above decision of the Calcutta High Court, it is clear that the word 'title' as used in the Explanation II means not only a completed title in accordance with law but also includes an equitable interest which a transferee may acquire in any property by virtue of, and under the contract of transfer. A subsequent purchaser of an immovable property would be affected with notice of the interest of a tenant who is in possession of the property in part performance of an unregistered agreement with the lessor and consequently with notice of such agreement and would not succeed in defeating the tenant's claim to retain possession under the protection given to him by Section 53-A of the Act. Reference in this connection may be made to Ramkrishna v. Mahadev, AIR 1965 Pat 467.

7. In the aforesaid Calcutta decision also there was a tenant in possession. During the pendency of the lease, the tenant advanced Rs. 7800/- to the landlord on a verbal agreement that the money was to be spent on repairs and repaid by the landlord by giving credit to the tenant for monthly rents as they became due. Some time later, the mortgagee of the property obtained a decree against the landlord for sale on the mortgage, purchased the house at the court sale and gave notice to the tenant to quit. It was held by Sanderson, C. J. and Rankin, J. that the mortgagee was not entitled to evict the tenant on that notice because the possession of the tenant was constructive notice to the mortgagee not only of his tenancy but also of the agreement under which he was entitled to remain in possession until the end of August 1923 as the landlord had agreed to allow the tenant to remain in possession of the premises till that time when he borrowed from the tenant Rs. 7800/-.

8. As stated by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Baburam v. Madhab Chandra, (1913) ILR 40 Cal 565, "the occupation of property by a tenant ordinarily affects one who would take a transfer of that property with notice of that tenant's rights and if he chooses to make no inquiry of the tenant, he cannot claim to be a transferee without notice." In view of these principles, it was the duty of the plaintiff to make an enquiry with the defendants as to what their rights were. As the plaintiff admittedly failed to make any enquiry in respect of the rights of the defendants in the said house, it must be held that he had notice of the contract or part performance thereof; and hence, in my opinion, the learned District Judge erred in law in holding that the proviso to Section 53-A was attracted in this case. In the facts and circumstances of the case, it cannot be said that the plaintiff was a transferee for consideration, who had no notice of the contract or of the part performance thereof within the meaning of that proviso, because the defendants were in possession of the house and it was incumbent on the plaintiff to make proper enquiry into their rights before getting a sale of the half share in the property in his favour.

9. For these reasons, the defendants must succeed because under Section 53-A, defendant No. 1 having contracted with Tatoba and Haval to purchase the property, must be continued in possession of the suit house in part performance of the contract; and defendant No. 1 being ready and willing to perform his part of the contract, neither Tatoba nor Haval or the plaintiff, who claims under Tatoba, can deprive the defendants of the possession of the suit house.

10. In the result, the decree passed by the learned District Judge is set aside and the decree passed by the Civil Judge is restored. Appeal allowed with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

J. I. Mehta with M. R. Mody, for Plaintiffs; A. H. Mehta, for Defendant.

JUDGMENT:— This is an Originating Summons taken out by the plaintiffs who, along with the defendant, are the trustees under an Indenture of Trust dated the 18th of January 1927 executed by one Pranjivan Tuljaram, for the determination of certain questions propounded therein. The facts necessary for the purpose of disposing of this Originating Summons are very few. One Pranjivan Tuljaram executed an Indenture of Trust dated 18-1-1927 and the plaintiffs and the defendant are the present trustees of that trust. The relevant clause of the said Indenture of Trust which has been quoted in para 3 of the plaint is as follows:—

"To have and to hold the said land hereditaments and premises unto the trustees.....Upon trust.....To pay all rates taxes and outgoing out of the rents and profits thereof and all expenses of keeping the said hereditaments and premises in a proper state of repair and properly insured And that the Trustees shall pay the residue of the net rents and profits thereof to the Settlor during the term of his natural life and subject thereto from and after the death of the settlor the trustees or trustee shall stand possessed of the residue of such rents income and profits hereinafter called the trust income upon the trust to pay the same unto the said Vishwakant Pranjivan (the deft) during his natural life and it is hereby further agreed and declared that from and after the death of the said Vishwakant Pranjivan the Trustees or trustee shall stand possessed of the said trust property to sell the same and it is hereby agreed and declared that the trustees or trustee of these presents shall hold the money to arise from any such sale after payment of all expenses attending such sale upon trust to divide or distribute the same together with the balance of the unapplied income thereof as if such sale proceeds and income had absolutely belonged to the said Vishwakant Pranjivan at the time of his death and he had died intestate in respect thereof."

The settlor died on 9th June 1930. On 25th October 1962, the defendant executed an Indenture of Release under which he released unto the trustees his entire right, title and interest as a beneficiary under the said trust. The plaintiffs have taken out this Originating Summons for the purpose of determining the legal effect of the said Indenture of Release.

2. Though, in the Originating Summons, the opinion of the Court is sought on several questions, in effect, the question that arises is only one, and that is whether by reason of the release or disclaimer or surrender of his life interest under the Indenture of Trust by the defendant, by the said Indenture of Release dated 25th October 1962, the subsequent absolute interest granted by the said Deed of Trust to the heirs of the defendant as on an intestacy is accelerated, or whether there is a resulting trust in respect of the income that was payable to the defendant during his life-time under the said Indenture of Trust. That is a question which has often arisen in England and has been the subject-matter of several judicial decisions in that country, but I have not been referred to a single reported decision on this point in India which could be said to be an authority in regard to it. In view, however, of the characteristic lucidity with which the ratio of judicial decisions in England on this point has been culled in the standard English works on the subject, it is not really necessary for me to consider all those decisions in this judgment. In Lewin on Trusts (16th Edn) at p. 121, the law on the point is formulated as follows:—

"Where a life interest or some like interest income fails or comes to a premature end the question arises whether subsequent interests are accelerated or whether there is a resulting trust of the income. In the case of a will the question is slightly different, because there, if there is no acceleration, the income falls into residue or is undisposed of. The principle is well settled in relation to wills, that where there is a gift to some person for life, and a vested gift in remainder expressed to take effect on the death of the first taker, the gift in remainder is construed as a gift taking effect on the death of the first taker or on any earlier failure or determination of his interest, so that the person entitled in remainder will take immediately on such an earlier failure or determination and will not be kept waiting until the death of the first taker. There is no reason for applying any different rule to a settlement inter vivos, though it may well be more difficult, in the case of a settlement, to collect the intention necessary to bring the doctrine of acceleration into play. Where it can be brought into play there is, of course, no resulting trust for the settlor."

As pointed out in Halsbury's Laws of England (3rd Edn.) Vol. 34 pp. 607-608 para 1062 where the same principle is laid down, the doctrine of acceleration does not, however, apply if the remainder is not a vested remainder but is contingent on an uncertain event. The doctrine of acceleration of subsequent interests by the premature determination of the prior interest is however, based on the express or implied intention of settlor which enables the court to construe the grant of the subsequent interest as intended to take effect on the failure or determination of the prior interest in any manner. If, therefore, the document creating the trust expressly or impliedly indicates a contrary intention, the subsequent interests are not accelerated, but there is a resulting trust of the income in favour of the settlor or his estate (Vide Halsbury's Laws of England (3rd Edn.) Vol. 39, pp. 947-948/para 1434).

3. The learned counsel for the plaintiffs cited before me the decisions in the English cases of Midland Bank Executor & Trustee Co. v. Morrison, (1943 Ch 300) & Davies v. Mackintosh, ((1957) 3 All ER 52) which were both cases in which the doctrine of acceleration was applied to testamentary dispositions. In the Midland Bank's case the principle of acceleration was applied to annuities given subject to a life interest in the residuary income. In doing so, Simonds J. enunciated the principle of acceleration in the following terms (at pp. 301-302):—

"I see no reason why it should not be appropriate in the case of any interest, whether partial, such as an annuity, or residuary. The principle is the same. An interest is postponed that a prior interest may be enjoyed. If that prior interest is determined whether by the death of a prior beneficiary or for any other cause, the reason for postponement disappears and there is no reason why there should not be acceleration. Accordingly, when I find an annuity expressed to be subject to a life interest and that the tenant for life has disclaimed his life interest, I come to the conclusion that the annuity is to be accelerated, for it is just as if the direction for the payment of the annuity was 'subject to the interests of the tenant for life which may be determined either by his death or for some other reason'."

In the case of 1957-3 All ER 52 a testatrix gave the residue of her estate to be divided equally between her two sons and her step-daughter P. She further provided, "P's portion to be hers for life and then to be divided equally between her issue." The testatrix died on the 22nd March 1955, and by a deed dated 5th October 1956, P irrevocably renounced and disclaimed all the life or other interest in the residuary estate of the testatrix conferred on her by the will. P was a widow aged 58 years. She had three children, the youngest of whom was nearly 21 years' old. None of P's children had any issue. On the question as to how P's portion should be dealt with, it was held that the effect of the disclaimer was to accelerate the interest of P's children and preclude the participation of P's remoter issue, and P's portion belonged to P's three children in equal shares absolutely. It was observed in the judgment of Vaisey, J. (at p. 54) that, but for the disclaimer, the funds would, at the death of P, have been divisible in equal shares between the class of persons comprising all her descendants or whatever degree (children and remoter issue) who had been in existence at any time between the death of the testatrix and the death of P. The learned judge stated that each such person's interest would be an absolute vested interest, so that the class might include not only persons living at the death of P, but also the legal representatives of person who had predeceased her. The learned judge then pointed out that, at the time when he delivered judgment, the class however consisted only of the three children of P. In regard to the contention that the purely gratuitous act of one of the beneficiaries P. should not operate to deprive and dispossess a number of other beneficiaries, viz., P's grand-children and remoter issue, of the interest which the testatrix had given them by her will, the learned judge stated that it was clear that acceleration might and did sometimes alter the constitution of a class of beneficiaries from what it would have been if the gift had not been accelerated. He then proceeded to apply the doctrine of acceleration and declared that the fund belonged to the three children of P in equal shares absolutely.

4. Though, in the above two cases, the principle of acceleration was applied to testamentary dispositions, the same principle has been held to be applicable to trusts inter vivos also. In the case of Flower v. Inland Revenue Commrs., (1957) 1 All ER 462, the facts are that, by a settlement inter vivos, it was provided that the trustees should stand possessed of the trust funds during the lifetime of the settlor to apply the income of the trust funds in each year for such charitable and benevolent purposes as they might from time to time direct, with power to accumulate any income not so paid and to apply such accumulations for the like purpose. It was, however, provided that though the said trust was not confined to purposes charitable in law and the trustees could make payments of subscription or gifts, no payment was to be made which would benefit the settlor or any of trustees. The said settlement laid down, that after the death of the settlor, the trustees were to hold trust fund upon trust to pay the annual income to the settlor's wife for life and, on the death of the survivor of them the settlor and his wife, to hold the capital and income for the settlor's three children in equal shares. The settlor's wife died, and then the settlor himself died. It was common ground that the discretionary trust during the settlor's life was void for uncertainty. For the purpose of ascertaining whether estate duty was payable in connection with the death of the settlor in respect of the trust funds, it became necessary to decide whether the result of the invalidity of the discretionary trust was to accelerate the interests expressed to take effect after the death of the settlor, or to give rise to a resulting trust in favour of the settlor so that the trust funds passed on his death. Jenkins, L. J. who delivered the leading judgment laid down (at p. 465) that, although all the authorities in regard to the principle of acceleration which had been referred to before him were concerned with wills, there was no reason for applying any different rule to a settlement inter vivos, and that the principle must be broadly the same. He, however, went on to observe that he could not help feeling that it might "well be more difficult, in the case of a settlement, to collect the intention necessary to bring the doctrine of acceleration into play." He then went on to hold that the interests of those beneficially entitled after the death of the settlor were not accelerated, because the character of the disposition made by the settlement in that case showed that the settlor's intention was that during his life neither he nor his wife nor his children should have any beneficial interest in the trust fund, and that, therefore, there was a resulting trust in favour of the settlor and the fund must be held to have passed on his death for the purposes of the Finance Act of 1894. The learned judge stated (at p. 468) that, having regard to the terms of the deed of settlement before him, "it would be a large and unwarrantable extension of the doctrine (of acceleration) so to apply it" in the said case. It will thus be seen that though the principle of acceleration was in fact not applied in Flower's case because the settlor had manifested a contrary intention, its applicability to trusts inter vivos was recognized and accepted by the Court of Appeal in England.

5. Three decisions of the courts of this country were cited before me by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs but, in my opinion, none of them can be said to be an authority in regard to the doctrine of acceleration. In the case of the Commr. of Income-tax v. Kasturbai Walchand Trust, (63 ITR 656) = (AIR 1967 SC 844), the facts were that, under a deed of trust inter vivos created by Seth Walchand and his wife Kasturbai, the said Kasturbai had a life interest in respect of the income of the trust funds as well as a right of free residence in some of the properties. By clause 8 of the said deed of trust it was provided that, after the death of Kasturbai, the trustees were to apply the income of the properties to the charitable purposes enumerated in the deed of trust. After the death of Seth Walchand, Kasturbai executed a deed dated 21st July 1955 whereby she surrendered and released her life interest in the income as well as her right of free residence and her entire beneficial interest under the said deed of trust "to the intent that her beneficial interest may be determined as aforesaid and the same may be immediately vested in the trustees and that the trustees may utilise the same for charitable purposes mentioned in the said indenture of settlement." The Supreme Court held that the deed executed by Kasturbai was valid in view of the provision contained in Section 58 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, which provided that the beneficiary, if competent to contract, could transfer his interest that by executing the said deed dated 21st July 1955 Kasturbai had surrendered all her rights, and that the income of the trust property became exempt from liability to income-tax as soon as the rights of Kasturbai ceased on execution by her of the deed of surrender dated 21st July 1955, since the same would have to be applied for charitable purposes in accordance with the other terms of the deed of trust. The Supreme Court, however, did not decide the further question as to whether the trustees were entitled to apply the funds of the trust properties for charitable purposes immediately on the execution of the deed of surrender, or were required to accumulate the income and apply the same to charitable purposes on the death of Kasturbai under Cl. 8 thereof, as it took the view that in either case the income would be exempt from income-tax under the provisions of Section 4 (3) (i) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. The decision in Kasturbai Walchand Trust's case, 63 ITR 656 = (AIR 1967 SC 844) is, therefore, not an authority for holding that the doctrine of acceleration applies to deeds of settlement inter vivos. That decision was followed by a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Commr. of Income-tax v. Trustees of Sir Kikabhai Premchand Trust, (1967-65 ITR 213 (Bom)) and the same is also, therefore, of no assistance for the purpose of deciding the question before me. The last case referred to by the learned counsel on behalf of the plaintiffs was a decision of the Division Bench of this court in the case of Commissioner of Income-tax v. Lady Ratanbai Mathuradas, (1967-68 ITR 504 (Bom)), but in the judgment in that case the application of the doctrine of acceleration appears to have been assumed and it was stated (at p. 510) that the sole question was whether the shares of the beneficiaries under the trust deed were indeterminate and unknown, so as to make the trustees assessable at the maximum rate under the proviso to Section 41 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

6. The Indian Trusts Act was intended to codify the law relating to private trusts and trustees. The use of the expression "define and amend" in, and the omission of the word "consolidate" from, the preamble to the said Act shows that, whilst the Act is exhaustive in respect of any matter specifically provided for in it, not exhaustive of all matters relating to private trusts. In cases covered by the Act, therefore, the provisions of the Act alone must be applied, but in any case not covered by the Act, the Court is entitled to apply rules of English law, as laid down by judicial decisions in that country, which are not inconsistent with the Act, as the rules of justice, equity and good conscience, (1886-87) 14 Ind App 89 at p. 96 (PC) and 59 Ind App 236 at p. 246 = (AIR 1932 PC 158 at pp. 160-161). Though Section 9 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, provides for a beneficiary renouncing his interest under a private trust by disclaimer, the said Act does not contain any provision relating to the acceleration of subsequent interests on the failure or premature determination of a prior interest. In such a situation Courts of this country must, therefore, resort to the principles of English law on the subject as laid down by judicial decisions in that country. The English doctrine of acceleration of subsequent interests when a prior interest fails or comes to a premature end is not inconsistent with any provision of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882. I accordingly hold that the said doctrine applies in India, both to trusts created by will as well as to settlements inter vivos, provided two conditions are fulfilled, viz., (1) the settlor has not shown a contrary intention in the document creating the trust; and (2) the subsequent interest is vested interest, and not a contingent interest. Turning to the Indenture of Trust dated 18th January 1927 in the present case, it is impossible to find a contrary intention on the part of the settlor so as to negative the applicability of the doctrine of acceleration. In fact, the intention of the settlor, as disclosed by the relevant clause of the Indenture of Trust quoted above is clearly that the heirs of the defendant as on an intestacy should be the only persons who are to be beneficiaries on the failure or determination of the defendant's life interest, whatever be the manner in which the same comes to an end. The words "and he had died intestate in respect thereof" in that clause do not, in my opinion, disclose a contrary intention so as to negative the applicability of the principle of acceleration, but merely describe the class of beneficiaries amongst whom the trust property is to be distributed. There can also be no doubt that the interest which has been conferred on the said class of beneficiaries is a vested interest within the terms of Section 19 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, in so far as the condition upon which their interest is dependent is one which is certain to occur, and is not in the nature of an uncertain event so as to make it a contingent interest. Moreover, as observed by Vaisey, J. in the case of 1957-3 All ER 52 cited above (at p. 54) the application of the doctrine of acceleration may, and does sometimes, alter the constitution of class of beneficiaries from what it would have been if the gift had not been accelerated. The terms of the relevant clause of the Indenture of Trust in the present case are very similar to the terms of the trust created under the will in the old case of Pestonji v. Khurshedbai, (1905-7 Bom LR 207) in which a bequest was made to D for life and, after her death, the corpus was to be divided between her issue "according to the law or statute for the time being in force in India relating to intestate succession among Parsees." The testator died in 1885 when D had two sons and two daughters. One daughter N died in 1885. One son F died in 1889. D herself died in 1904. It was held (at p. 211) that, on the death of the testator, the legacy became vested in the class of persons referred to and described in the will, viz., the issue of D. In the present case also, the interest granted to the defendant's heirs under the Indenture of Trust dated 18th January 1927 is therefore, a vested interest. Both the conditions necessary for the applicability of the principle of acceleration being satisfied, I have come to the conclusion that the legal effect of the execution of the Indenture of Release dated 25th October 1962 by the defendant is to accelerate the distribution of the trust funds among the class of persons answering the description of being the heirs of the defendant as on an intestacy on whom a vested interest has been conferred by the Indenture of Trust dated 18th January 1927. I, therefore, hold that the trustees must distribute the corpus of the trust funds, as well as the unapplied income thereof (if any), amongst the persons who at the date of the Indenture of Release dated 25th October 1962 answered the description of being the heirs of the defendant as on an intestacy. I answer the question propounded by the Originating Summons as follows:

1. In the affirmative.
2. In the affirmative.
3. In the affirmative.

& 4. The trustees must sell the Trust property in the manner directed by the Indenture of Trust dated 18th January 1927 and hold the money arising from any such sale, after payment of all expenses attending such sale, upon trust to divide or distribute the same, together with the balance of the unapplied income thereof, amongst the persons who would be the heirs of the defendant as on an intestacy if he had died on the 25th of October 1962.

 - 7.
 - 8.
 - 9.
 - 10.
 - 11.
- Do not arise.

7. I order that the plaintiffs' costs of this Originating Summons, as between attorney and client, as well as the costs of the defendant, do come out of the trust estate.

Order accordingly.

 Little Gibbs Co-op. Housing Society, Ltd. Bombay and another, Petitioners v. The State of Maharashtra and others, Respondents.

Spl. Civil Appln. No. 2127 of 1970 with Civil Appln. No. 3050 of 1970, D/- 25-2-1971.

(A) Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act 1960 (24 of 1961), S. 78 — Supersession of Committee — Pre-requisite condition of affording opportunity to show cause before taking action — Non-observance of — Effect — (X-Ref:— Natural Justice — Principles of).

The conditions which are required to be satisfied prior to the exercise of the authority and power under Section 78 are: (1) giving an opportunity to the Committee or its member, as the case may be "of stating its or his objections" and (2) consultation with the Federal Society. These are not empty formalities. The safeguards have been provided against the misuse of the powers by the officers of the Co-operative Department. Hence, the Registrar cannot supersede the Committee unless the members of the Managing Committee are given an opportunity to explain their conduct. The scheme of the section is that action taken thereunder without affording due opportunity to show cause would be illegal and accordingly of no effect. (Paras 10, 11)

(B) Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act, 1960 (24 of 1961). Section 78 — Supersession of Committee — Grounds — Existence of rival groups by itself, cannot furnish any basis for supersession of managing committee under S. 78 unless it interferes with the normal functioning of the Managing Committee and exercise of control by it over the affairs of the Society. (Para 12)

H. G. Adwani with B. S. Chandnani, for Petitioners; S. N. Naik i/b M/s. Little & Co. Attorneys (for Nos. 1 and 2), D. R. Dhanuka (for Nos. 3, 4, 5, 8 and 9) and P. N. Tulsian (for Nos. 6 and 7), for Respondents.

DESHPANDE, J. — The two petitioners in this Special Civil Application challenge the legality and validity of the order passed by the Government of Maharashtra on 8th November 1970 in exercise of their revisional jurisdiction under Section 154 of the Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act, 1960, herein-after referred to as 'the Act'. Petitioner No. 1 is a Co-operative Housing Society registered under the Act in or about the year 1960. Petitioner No. 2 is one of the 13 shareholders of the said Society and also Honorary Secretary appointed as such at the General Body meeting held on 27-10-1968. The facts, which gave rise to this special Civil Application, briefly are that on 3rd September 1964 the Assistant Registrar, Co-operative Societies, passed an order directing an inquiry in the affairs of this Society under Section 83 of the Act. On 28-5-1968 the Inquiry Officer submitted his report and referred therein to several irregularities and malpractices. The Deputy Registrar then sent extracts of the said report to the Society presumably in terms of sub-section (4) of S. 83 on 28-6-1968. On 11-9-1968 the then Managing Committee of the Society resigned en bloc. The District Deputy Registrar thereupon convened a General Body meeting of the Society on 27-10-1968. Normally the balance-sheet and statements of accounts of this Society for the year ending on 30th June 1968 should have been placed before the Annual General Body meeting before the expiry of the month of September 1968. It, however, appears that for some reasons or the other the accounts of this Society remained unaudited and such statements were not ready for placing before any such Annual General Meeting. At the said meeting on 27-10-1968 referred to as "Eighth Annual General Body meeting" an Adhoc Managing Committee consisting of five persons was appointed "till the regular Managing Committee" was elected, and petitioner No. 2 to this petition was elected as Honorary Secretary of the same. Some differences of opinion seem to have arisen between the Adhoc Managing Committee on the one hand and the District Deputy Registrar on the other hand in regard to the precise follow up actions to be taken to comply with the findings of the Inquiry Officer. It is unnecessary to make a detailed reference to all these differences. On 1-2-1969, the Honorary Secretary of the Society seems to have complained against the District Deputy Registrar to the Divisional Joint Registrar, Bombay, but he seems to have virtually refused to take any notice of the same and, on the contrary, by his letter dated 11-4-1969 asked the Secretary vaguely to proceed with the follow up action in compliance with the report of the Inquiry Officer.

2. On 26-4-1969 the District Deputy Registrar served a notice under Section 78 (1) of the Act on the Chairman and Secretary and all the Members of the Adhoc Committee of the Society calling upon them to show cause as to why the said Adhoc Committee should not be superseded "in the interest of smooth and proper functioning of the Society", as in his opinion "the Adhoc Managing Committee has not been functioning properly." By explanation dated 8th May 1969 cause was shown against the said proposed action, by the Honorary Secretary. At the end of the said letter the Secretary had requested the District Deputy Registrar to give him and the members of the said Adhoc Committee a personal hearing. On 18-10-1969, however, the District Deputy Registrar without any further enquiry or hearing passed an order superseding the said Adhoc Managing Committee under sub-section (1) of S. 78 of the Act and appointed one B. S. Gokral as the Administrator to manage the affairs of the said Society. The Society thereupon preferred an appeal to the Divisional Joint Registrar and on 17-1-1970 the said appeal was allowed and the supersession order of the District Deputy Registrar dated 18-10-1969 was set aside. It appears that seven other members of this Society out of the total strength of 13 had also appeared before the Divisional Joint Registrar seeking his permission to intervene and support the supersession order and their request seems to have been granted and the appeal of the Society seems to have been allowed only after hearing them. These seven members then preferred a revision application to the State under Section 154 of the Act. This is how the impugned order dated 8th September 1970 came to be passed by the Government.

3. The principal contention of Mr. H. G. Advani, the learned advocate appearing for the petitioners, is two-fold. The findings recorded by the Government in their order dated 8th September 1970, according to Mr. Advani, are at variance with and on matters other than the charges levelled against the petitioners in the notice dated 26th April 1969. He, therefore, contends that the petitioners have been deprived of the management of the Society and their office of the Managing Committee on the basis of charges and/or causes on which they have not been afforded any opportunity to show cause. This action is, therefore, in contravention of the Scheme and provisions in Section 78 and accordingly entirely illegal. He further contends that even if the findings recorded by the State Government are accepted as correct and binding, the same still do not make out any case for action under Section 78 of the Co-operative Societies Act.

4. Now, the notice dated 26th April 1969 broadly alleges that the Adhoc Committee of the Society was not functioning properly. In support of this allegation four charges are incorporated in four clauses of the said notice. Supersession order of the State Government is based on two findings, firstly that there were two rival groups in the Society, each questioning the actions of the other, and secondly, that the Adhoc Committee failed to hold elections implying thereby that it failed to get regular Managing Committee elected. This, according to the State Government, affected the functioning of the Society. Mr. Advani contends that the petitioners were never called upon to answer these charges, Mr. Dhanuka, Mr. Tulsiani and Mr. Naik, the learned advocates for the respondents, contended that the allegations are implicit in the charges Nos. 2 and 3 of the Show Cause notice dated 24-4-1969. The text of the charges is as follows:—

"2. There is practically no co-operative spirit in the members of the Society with the result that mere exchange of letters from the Adhoc Committee and the members making allegations against each other is going on.

3. That the Adhoc Committee did not convene the Annual General meeting of the Society for the year 1968-69 and did not get the Society's accounts for the year ending 1967-68 audited so far and that the statement of accounts etc. for that year have not been placed before the General Body for approval so far." It is unnecessary to quote the allegations in charges Nos. 1 and 4 inasmuch as no adverse findings against the petitioners are recorded, either by the District Deputy Registrar or by the State Government in their orders nor any reliance was placed on them seriously before us by the respondents' Advocates.

5. In our opinion, the two findings, on which the supersession order of the State Government is based, are at variance with and on matters other than the allegations which were the subject-matter of charges Nos. 2 and 3 in the notice dated 26th April 1969. One of the findings of the State Government is that the petitioners failed to hold elections. The finding is vague but the learned advocates on both sides agreed on the implications thereof. The implication is that the Adhoc Committee was appointed only by way of a stop-gap arrangement and the said Committee failed to convene a General Body meeting of the Society and get the regular Managing Committee elected from 27-10-1968 till 26-4-1969. There is no doubt, from minutes, that the said Adhoc Managing Committee was appointed "till the regular Managing Committee" was elected. It is possible to contend that the petitioners should have taken steps to get regular Committee elected. This omission or failure, however, is not specifically mentioned in any one of these charges. The learned Advocate appearing for the respondents tried to argue that this allegation is implicit in charge No. 3. We have therefore, deliberately quoted charge No. 3. It consists of two parts. The first part refers to the failure of the Adhoc Committee to convene Annual General meeting of the Society for the year 1968-69. This charge is absurd and frivolous. It could not have been levelled at all inasmuch as the accounting year 1968-69 itself had not expired by 26th April 1969, when the notice was given and it was open for the Society to convene Annual General meeting for the said year ending on 30-6-1969 before the expiry of September 1969. The second part of this charge pertains to the failure of the Adhoc Committee in not getting the Society's accounts for the year ending 1967-68 audited and placed before the General Body meeting for approval. This, however, has nothing to do with the failure to get the regular committee elected. Thus neither part of charge No. 3 pertains to the failure of the Adhoc Committee to get regular Managing Committee elected. It is thus clear that the petitioners were never called upon to explain as to why regular Managing Committee was not got elected and it was not open for the Government to base its order on such a charge and finding.

6. Second finding is that "the membership is small and each rival group will continue to question the action of the other." Mr. Dhanuka contends that allegations in Charge No. 2 are sufficient to warrant such a finding. All that is alleged under this charge is that there was "practically no co-operative spirit in the members of the Society", and secondly that the same resulted in "mere exchange of letters from the Adhoc Committee and the members making allegations against each other." It is not known as to what precisely is meant by the allegation that co-operative spirit was not in existence in the members of the Society. To us the allegation appears to be too vague, wide and general for any one to meet and reply. There is indication which precise correspondence the District Deputy Registrar had in his mind. It is pertinent in this context to note that in spite of the petitioners' objections and insistence in their reply dated 8th May 1969, no details were furnished nor particulars were supplied to them nor personal hearing was given before the order dated 18-10-1969 was passed by the District Deputy Registrar. In fact, such charges really could not have been answered in the absence of any specific details and specific references to such particular letters.

7. Assuming, however, that there was absence of co-operative spirit among the members of the Society, and that they went on indulging in making merely allegations against each other, the same cannot necessarily lead to the proof of the existence of two rival groups, and even such existence of two rival groups in a Society or in any institution does not necessarily lead to the further conclusion that each group is determined to question the action of the other. Existence of rival groups as also the extent of the depth of their rivalry, are after all questions of facts. The necessary facts and allegations not having been mentioned in the Show Cause notice dated 26th April 1969, the finding recorded by the State Government, in this behalf, is liable to be quashed for want of charge and notice to show cause. Both the findings of the State Government on which the supersession order is founded thus are arrived at by non-observance of principles of natural justice.

8. Mr. Dhanuka urged that no inference is called for in exercise of jurisdiction under Arts. 226 and 227 of the Constitution on such technical grounds, when facts are incapable of being disputed. It is true, as contended by Mr. Dhanuka, that admittedly the petitioners have failed to get the regular Managing Committee elected till this day. But Mr. Advani contends that this was because of the stay order obtained and obstructions created by the respondents and he could have proved this to the hilt had he been called upon to explain his failure.

9. In connection with the contention, as to the scope of Section 78 made by Mr. Advani it is necessary to ascertain the true meaning and effect of the provision in Section 78, the relevant parts whereof read as follows:—

"78 (1) If, in the opinion of the Registrar, the Committee of any Society or any member of such Committee persistently makes default, or is negligent, in the performance of the duties imposed on it or him by this Act or the rules or the bye-laws or commits any act which is prejudicial to the interests of the Society or its members or wilfully disobeys directions issued by the Registrar for the purposes of securing proper implementation of co-operative production and other development programmes approved or undertaken by Government, or is otherwise not discharging its or his functions properly, or where a situation has arisen in which the committee or any member thereof ceases or refuses to discharge its or his functions and the business of the society has or is likely to come to a standstill, the Registrar may, after giving the Committee or the member, as the case may be, an opportunity of stating its or his objections (if any) within fifteen days from the date of issue of notice, and after consulting the federal society to which the society is affiliated, by order

(a) remove the committee, and

(i) xx xx xx

(ii) appoint one or more administrators, who need not be members of the society, to manage the affairs of the Society for a period (not exceeding two years) specified in the order, x x x x xx xx xx"

Apparently the legislature has, by the language of the section indicated that in its view the authority and power to remove the Committee enacted by the section was extraordinary and abnormal and that this authority and power must not be used except in abnormal situations mentioned in the section and only upon satisfaction of the conditions mentioned in the section. These abnormal situations are:—

(a) the committee of any Society or any member of such committee persistently makes default; or

(b) the said committee or any member thereof is negligent in the performance of the duties imposed on it or him by the Act or the Rules or the Bye-laws; or

(c) the committee or any Society or any member of such committee commits any act which is prejudicial to the interests of the Society or its members; or

(d) the committee or its member wilfully disobeys directions issued by the Registrar for the purposes of securing proper implementation of co-operative production and other development programmes approved or undertaken by Government; or

(e) committee or its members is otherwise not discharging its or his functions properly; or

(f) where a situation has arisen in which the committee or any member thereof ceases or refuses to discharge its or his functions and the business of the Society has or is likely to come to a standstill.

10. It is only when the Registrar forms an opinion as to the existence of such situation that he can proceed to take action for the removal of the Committee. The conditions which are required to be satisfied prior to the exercise of the authority and power are: (1) there is an opportunity to the Committee or its member, as the case may be "of stating its or his objections" and (2) consultation with the Federal Society. These, in our opinion, are not empty formalities. The safeguards appear to have been provided against the misuse of the powers by the officers of the Co-operative Department.

11. Apparently the co-operative Societies under the Act are autonomous bodies. Final authority of each such Society vests in the General Body of members. The management, however, of such Society vests in a Committee which is otherwise known as Managing Committee. The provisions of the Act, Rules and the Bye-laws regulate proceedings at the General Body meeting as also the manner of election of the Managing Committee and the exercise of control over it by members of the Society. These also provide for the removal thereof, in case of loss of their confidence. Members and shareholders are prima facie the masters of their own Society and the property or the business owned by it, and it is really for them to decide as to how they should function, subject to their obligation to comply with the provisions of the Act as also other laws of the land. Powers are also vested in the Registrar under Section 79 to enforce the performances of such obligations which a Society or its Committee owe under the law. It is only when such normal checks are found to be unenforceable and lawful functioning of the Society becomes impossible, that recourse to the extreme step contemplated under Section 78 is intended to be taken. In the event of any action under Section 78, the shareholders are deprived, at any rate, temporarily of their rights to manage their own affairs through the Committee of their choice. Such action also, on the other hand, constitutes a slur on the persons who happen to occupy seats in the Managing Committee. The management then consequently stands vested in the hands of one who is not of their own choice, but is the choice of the Registrar. This apart, the remuneration of the Administrator is also required to be borne by the shareholders or is otherwise defrayed from the assets of the Society. This drastic action, therefore, cannot be resorted to lightly and without regard to the legal rights of the shareholders as also the members of the Managing Committee. Such action has to be taken only to protect the interest of the Society, or the community at large. That is why the Registrar cannot have recourse to such an extreme step unless the members of the Managing Committee are given an opportunity to explain their conduct. The scheme of the section is that action taken thereunder without affording due opportunity to show cause would be illegal and accordingly of no effect.

12. Now, the order of the State Government itself does not show which of the several contingencies contemplated under Section 78 of the Act had, in its opinion, warranted such supersession in this case. All that the learned Advocates for the respondents could do in defence of the order, was to harp on the admitted existence of rival groups in the Society and rely on Cl. (e) of Section 78, as analysed above. In our opinion, existence of rival groups by itself, cannot furnish any basis for such action unless it is shown further that it interferes with the normal functioning of the Managing Committee and exercise of control by it over the affairs of the Society. We have already shown that this aspect of the matter, as discussed earlier, was not even the subject-matter of any one of the charges incorporated in the show-cause notice dated 26th April 1969.

13. Mr. Dhanuka contends that findings of the Inquiry Officer as also the conduct of the parties during the present litigation do warrant some action to put the house of the Society in order. All this undoubtedly presents a very sorry picture. It will be open for the Registrar to have a fresh look and take such action as is warranted in his opinion. It is for the Registrar to examine and take appropriate action.

14. We cannot but observe that the timing at which the show cause notice is given against the background of the controversy between the Co-operative Department and the Committee, and the casual manner in which the charges are levelled and the way in which the supersession order is passed on 18-10-1969, does not inspire much confidence in the judgment of the District Deputy Registrar, as to the necessity and urgency of the action. Complaint of the petitioners to the Joint Registrar dated 1-2-1969 against the District Deputy Registrar was almost ignored on 11-4-1969 and show cause notice follows on its heels on 26-4-1969. Charge No. 2 is too vague, wide and uncertain to admit of any precise reply. Charge No. 3 is absurd and frivolous as the petitioners were charged with the omission of holding a meeting for the year 1968-69 on 26-4-1969 when the year itself had not expired and last date in the month of September was still five months ahead. Charge No. 4 could have hardly any relevance for action under Section 78 and complaints under three other charges could have been got removed by recourse to other milder provisions. While under charge No. 1 the petitioners are accused of not recovering dues of Rs. 56,000/-, it was admitted by the respondents' advocates that implication of charge No. 2 was the grievance as to why Rs. 24,000/- and odd, included in the above sum of Rs. 56,000/-, was being recovered from respondent No. 3. Laconic order dated 18-10-1969 beyond repeating some phrase from the Section 78 does not even refer to any findings on the four charges. While officers must act fearlessly where action is necessary, they must also not fail to acquit the delinquents of the charges, when charges are not found to have been justified. This silence is unfair not only to the persons charged but to the department itself as the fog of suspicion will continue to cloud and obscure their visions while examining any subsequent allegations, when an occasion arises. Order of the Deputy Registrar is based ultimately on the petitioners, (a) failure to get the regular Managing Committee elected and (b) existence of factions, with which allegations they were not charged. This can hardly be said to be fair manner of exercising statutory powers pregnant with far-reaching consequences.

15. Mr. Dhanuka also made a grievance that the conduct of petitioner No. 2 in not complying with the order of the State Government, even when stay was refused, amounts to an offence under Section 146 (f) and (g) of the Act. Mr. Advani has tendered unconditional apology on behalf of petitioner No. 2 and we do not propose to take any notice thereof, in view of this apology.

16. The appointment of the present Ad hoc Committee at the General Body meeting dated 27-10-1968 was contemplated, no doubt, to be a stop-gap arrangement. The present litigation has unwarrantedly prolonged the life of the said Ad hoc Committee. Mr. Advani, the learned advocate appearing for the petitioners, has made a statement before us that his clients, the petitioners, are willing to write to the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, immediately requesting him to convene a General Body meeting of the Society as early as possible, with a view to get the new Managing Committee elected. If he fails to do, it will be open for the Registrar, to convene such meeting and get the regular Managing Committee elected. He is also free to proceed afresh in accordance with law, if the situation so warrants.

17. We accordingly allow this petition and make the rule absolute. The order of the State Government dated 8-9-1970 is set aside and that of the Divisional Joint Registrar dated 17-1-1970 is restored.

18. In the circumstances of the case there will be no order as to costs.

19. No order on Civil Application No. 3050 of 1970.

Petition allowed.

K. J. Abhyankar, for Petitioner; R. B. Andhyarajina I/b Vachha & Co., Attorney, for Opponent No. 1.

ORDER:— This is a dispute between the sister and her brother. The petitioner and Respondent No. 1 are respectively the daughter and son of late Rustomji Lala, who was the tenant of a flat on the fifth floor of the building known as 'Joshi House,' Cumballa Hill, Bombay 26. Rustomji Lala was the contractual tenant. He was residing in the flat with his wife and three children. His wife died in 1942. His one son Sohrab left India and went abroad in 1948. Since that time Rustomji stayed in the flat with petitioner and Respondent No. 1. It appears that in 1947 Rustomji gifted away his another building "Jor Mahal" to the petitioner. In 1952 he transferred his business to his son the Respondent No. 1. On 19-2-54 Rustomji made a Will. Under that Will he gave away all his moveables and the tenancy right in the suit flat to the petitioner. Rustomji died on 12-3-1958. The petitioner obtained the probate of the Will on 17-9-1964. The landlord had given a notice terminating the tenancy of the petitioner and also of Respondent No. 1. It appears that the petitioner had made an application No. RAE, 1650 of 1959 against the landlord for a declaration that she alone was the tenant. An ex parte declaration in her favour was made on 9-8-1962. On 18-11-1960 Respondent No. 1 had made an application and the order passed in that application is the subject-matter of the proceedings before me. That application was given against the petitioner and also the landlord, rather the landlady, alleging that he was residing with the deceased tenant at the time of the death of the tenant. As a member of the tenant's family he was entitled to a declaration under Section 5 (11) (c) of the Rent Act that he was the tenant in respect of the suit flat.

2. The petitioner objected to this application on various grounds. She strongly relied on the Will and submitted that the deceased tenant had bequeathed the contractual tenancy in her favour. She alone had the right to be declared as a tenant in respect of the suit flat. In that application the petitioner also mentioned the fact that the Respondent No. 1 was not residing with the deceased tenant as a member of the family. He was occupying a room separately and was paying monthly charges because he was allowed to reside as a paying guest. The landlady did not file any written statement. She did engage a lawyer but the lawyer made a statement that his client was not interested in the dispute. But it appears that the landlady was examined as a witness on behalf of Respondent No. 1.

3. The learned trial Judge considered all the facts and circumstances of the case. He came to the conclusion that Respondent No. 1 was residing with the deceased tenant in the same flat as a member of his family. It is true that the deceased-tenant had made a Will and bequeathed the contractual tenancy right to the petitioner. But, according to the learned trial Judge, that was not a decisive factor. Both the petitioner and Respondent No. 1 were qualified to become tenants under Section 5 (11) (c) of the Rent Act. Accordingly he made a declaration that the petitioner and Respondent No. 1 are the tenants within the meaning of that sub-section. Respondent No. 1 appears to have accepted the finality of this adjudication. But the petitioner aggrieved by that decision approached the Division Bench of the Court of Small Causes by filing a revisional application. The Bench of the Court of Small Causes summarily rejected the revisional application on 2-3-1965.

4. The petitioner had first filed a Civil Revision Application in this Court.

On 28-6-1966 she was allowed by this Court to convert that Civil Revisional Application into a Special Civil Application. The Special Civil Application has thus come before me for final disposal.

5. Mr. Abhyankar, who appears for the petitioner, contends that the learned Judge was not justified in holding that both the persons are entitled to be declared as tenants. The petitioner, in addition to her being a legatee under the Will in respect of the tenancy rights, was the only member residing with the deceased-tenant and she alone has a right to become the tenant of the suit flat. As the petitioner got the tenancy right under the Will, she alone will have to be considered as the person entitled to a declaration under Section 5 (11) (c) of the Rent Act. Lastly Mr. Abhyankar submitted that the learned Judge has committed an error of law in declaring both the persons tenants. Under the relevant part of the sub-section only one person can be declared to be the tenant.

6. Mr. Abhyankar first relies upon the Will under which the petitioner gets the tenancy rights. He says that under the first part of Section 5 (11) (c) of the Rent Act the petitioner is the person who can be considered to be the tenant. Once it is held that the petitioner has become the tenant under the first part of the section, then it is not necessary to consider the various other clauses. Those clauses will have to be considered only when the statutory tenant dies and the question arises as to who should succeed to his interest in the property. This will not be a correct reading of that sub-section. It is true that S. 5 (11) (c) begins with the following definition of the tenant:

"5 (11) 'tenant' means any person by whom or on whose account rent is payable for any premises and includes"

If the expression "tenant" means only a person who acquires the tenancy rights of the deceased-tenant, either as a heir or under the Will, then the other clauses will become redundant. It is true that as a person who gets the contractual tenancy rights under the Will the petitioner may claim to be the tenant within the meaning of the first part of Section 5 (11). But that by itself will not take away the rights which can be claimed by the various other persons under the clauses which follow. Mr. Abhyankar strongly relied on an unreported judgment of this Court for the proposition that under Section 5 (11) (c) of the Rent Act the legal heir of a deceased tenant has the right to exclude other claimants who may claim tenancy rights by relying upon the other clauses of Section 5 (11). Mr. Abhyankar referred to the unreported decision of K. K. Desai, J. in Civil Revision Application No. 1556 of 1963 decided on 9th February 1966. Although the learned judge was deciding a different point, he did make certain observations which suggest that under Section 5 (11) (c) the rights of the heirs of a deceased tenant must be preferred to the rights of mere members of the tenant's family as referred to in Section 5 (11) (c). The learned Judge also made certain observations that the question of tenancy as under Section 5 (11) (c) in favour of mere members of a tenant's family can arise only when the contractual tenancy is found to have been terminated before the death of a tenant and the heirs entitled to continue in occupation are unable to settle their disputes regarding their claim to be held tenants. K. K. Desai, J., who made the aforesaid observations, had not quoted any authority in support of this proposition. The wording of the section does not warrant any such restrictive interpretation. It is now well settled that the expression 'tenant' appearing in Section 5 (11) (c) leaving behind the members of his family, at any rate, includes both statutory and contractual tenants. It may be that the opening words of Section 5 (11) (c) are used to denote only a contractual tenant. The decision of the Supreme Court in Anand Niwas Private Ltd. v. Anandji Kalyanji Pedhi, AIR 1965 SC 414 cited by Mr. Abhyankar contains certain observations about the scheme of Sec. 5 (11) (c) and the Rent Act. Justice Shah (as he then was) has explained at page 424 the expression 'tenant' as appearing in the different clauses of Section 5 (11) of the Act. According to the learned Judge in the principal definition the expression 'tenant' means only a person who is a contractual tenant because rent is payable by a contractual tenant and not by a statutory tenant. On that view of the matter, Mr. Abhyankar is right when he says that according to the opening words of Section 5 (11) (c) the petitioner will become the contractual tenant in respect of the suit flat by virtue of her title under the Will.

7. It appears that on 28-6-1960 the respondent-landlady addressed a notice to the petitioner and also the Respondent No. 1 terminating their tenancy on certain grounds. As the notice was addressed to the petitioner, who had acquired the contractual tenancy right under the Will it is clear that after the expiry of the month of tenancy the petitioner became the statutory tenant for all purposes.

8. Then Mr. Abhyankar relies upon the wording of Section 5 (11) (c) and submits that at any rate at the death of the deceased tenant the petitioner was having the contractual tenancy rights. She was also residing as a member of the tenant's family with him at the time of his death. As against the respondent No. 1 she had a better title and the Court should have named as the sole statutory tenant under Section 5 (11) (c). Mr. Abhyankar relies upon a decision in Trayfoot v. Lock, (1957) 1 All ER 423. In that case a similar point arose under identical provisions of the English Rent Act. The son and the step-daughter were both members of the tenant's family when the tenant died. The tenant had, before his death, by a writing expressed his wish that the tenancy rights should devolve on the step-daughter. The learned Judge while considering the claim of the step-daughter based on the writing and also the other circumstances of the case, expressed that the crucial factor would be the deceased-tenant's wishes. He also made it clear that such wishes may not always have an overriding consideration but they may in some cases have decisive effect. Mr. Abhyankar says that in the present case the deceased-tenant before his death had disposed of his entire property according to his wishes. He had transferred his business to his son in his lifetime. He had also given away another building to the petitioner, and in the Will he had expressed a wish that the tenancy rights in respect of the flat should devolve on the petitioner. It is true, as stated by the learned Judge in the above case, the wish of the deceased-tenant will be considered as relevant and having regard to the other circumstances, at times that may be accepted as decisive. But I am of the opinion that it will not affect the unfettered discretion vested in the court to select one of the several contestants in exercise of its powers under S. 5 (11) (c) of the Rent Act.

9. While this matter was argued before me there was some interesting discussion about the rights of the contractual tenant as against the tenant who would be declared as a statutory tenant by the Court under Section 5 (11) (c) of the Act. Mr. Andhyarjina referred to a decision in Moodle v. Hosegood, 1952 AC 61. It was held in that case that under the relevant provisions of the English Rent Act the widow of a deceased tenant, (whether the tenant is contractual or statutory), who was residing with her husband at the date of his death is entitled to the protection given by the Act. It was also held that if a contractual tenancy is still subsisting at her husband's death and devolves upon some one other than the widow, it is not destroyed but the rights and obligations which ordinarily devolve upon the successor-in-title of the contractual tenant are suspended so long as the widow retains the possession of the dwelling house. It was further made clear in that decision that the contractual tenancy is determinable by notice. The landlord or the contractual tenant can determine it by giving the appropriate notice but the determination will not affect the widow's rights and obligations. If no notice is given the contractual tenancy will come into full operation when the widow gives up possession. In the present case admittedly a quit notice was given terminating the contractual tenancy which vested in petitioner No. 1 after the death of the tenant. It is for this reason that the question about the position of the contractual tenant pending the statutory tenancy vesting in someone else either under the Rent Act or as a result of the declaration made by the Court under S. 5 (11) (c) of the Rent Act need not be debated further in this case. Similarly there was some discussion about the extent of the transmission of the tenancy rights after the death of the statutory tenant who derives his rights under a declaration made by the Court under S. 5 (11) (c). That presents a vexed problem and will have to be resolved in a proper case.

10. Mr. Abhyankar lastly submitted that the learned Judge was in clear error when he declared both the petitioner and Respondent No. 1 tenants under Section 5 (11) (c) of the Rent Act. Mr. Abhyankar argues that the wording of the section clearly postulates that the court can declare only one person as the tenant in respect of the deceased tenant's premises. When more than one person claim such a right and there is no agreement between them inter se, then the Court must make a choice and declare that only one person is the tenant of the premises. For appreciating the point raised by Mr. Abhyankar, it will be desirable to reproduce the relevant part of the sub-section.

- | | | |
|--------|---|---|
| (a) x | x | x |
| (aa) x | x | x |
| (b) x | x | x |

(c) any member of the tenant's family residing with him at the time of his death as may be decided in default of agreement by the Court."

Mr. Abhyankar emphasises the words "any member of the tenant's family" and submits that the Court must pick up one of the several claimants as the fit person to be tenant and make the declaration accordingly. Mr. Andhyarujina, on the other hand, submits that the singular used in the section includes the plural. He strongly relies upon Section 13 (b) of the Bombay General Clauses Act. That section reads thus:—

13. "In all Bombay Acts (or Maharashtra Acts), unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context

(b) words in the singular shall include the plural, and vice-versa."

Mr. Andhyarujina also brought it to my notice that at one time while interpreting a similar provision of the English Act it was held that the singular under that Act included the plural Mr. Andhyarujina was fair enough to refer to a recent contrary ruling in Dealex Properties Ltd. v. Brooks, (1966) 1 QB 542 (CA). The Court of Appeal was considering a similar provision of the English Rent Act, i.e. Section 12 (1) (g) of the Act of 1920. The relevant part of that section was to the following effect:—

12(1)(g). "..... and the expression 'tenant' includes the widow of a tenant dying intestate who was residing with him at the time of his death, or where a tenant dying intestate leaves no (such) widow or is a woman, such member of the tenant's family so residing as aforesaid, as may be decided in default of agreement by the county court....." The expression "such member" was construed to be not plural but singular. It was argued that the court should construe the word "member" as "members" because under the Interpretation Act a singular includes a plural. But the learned Judge brushed aside that suggestion by saying that that was to be done only when the statute did not evince a contrary intention. Any other interpretation would have undesirable consequences. The learned Judge admirably sums up some of the consequences in these words:—

"To my mind a fearful confusion ensues once it is supposed that there can be a plurality of 'members' who may agree together, and so have a sort of tontine which will last for so long as the survivor of them is in existence. I think that under the Rent Acts a tenant must be a single person because it is a status of irremovability which belongs to him, and I do not think to anyone but him." So, according to the learned Judge, the member of the family of the tenant who can inherit the right could be only one person. This position appears to be accepted even by the learned author, R. E. Megarry, in his recent book, the Rent Acts, 10th Edn. at page 217 para (d). The relevant portion from that paragraph may be reproduced here:—

"(d) No Joint tenancy.— It has been held that two or more claimants cannot take the transmitted tenancy as joint tenants, thus avoiding 'fearful confusion' and 'absurd consequences'."

So Mr. Andhyarjina cannot rely too much on Section 13 (b) of the General Clauses Act. Under that clause of the General Clauses Act singular shall include the plural when there is nothing repugnant in the subject or context. Considering the subject and context of the Rent Act and its object, I am of the view that the Court must declare only one person as the tenant under Section 5 (11) (c) after considering the claims of all those persons who say that they are members of the tenant's family and were residing with him at the time of his death. This interpretation found favour with Patel, J. in C. R. A. No. 1511 of 1962, D/- 17-9-1965 (Bom).

11. Whenever persons who are members of the tenant's family start a scramble for the tenancy rights, in a sense the war of succession begins. Succession to the property of the deceased is generally decided by applying the rules of Succession forming part of the personal law of the parties. But the law of Succession is substantially modified while resolving the disputes which arise after the death of the tenant, whether statutory or contractual. If the several members, who are residing as members of the tenant's family, fail to come to an agreement, then the Court has to make the choice and declare that one amongst them will be the tenant for claiming the protection of the Rent Act. The Court will have to take into account several relevant factors including the wishes of the deceased-tenant. In all such cases the Court should have regard to the paramount collective interest of the family of the deceased-tenant. The court should make the choice in such a way that the person selected to be the tenant is likely to act in the interest of the family, like the Karta of a Hindu Joint Family or the paterfamilias. If the Court has in mind such considerations, then it is likely that the Court will select the right person for looking after the collective interest of the tenant's family after his death. In any event the court cannot declare more than one person as the tenant under Section 5 (11) (c) of the Rent Act. The learned trial Judge was clearly in error when he made a declaration that both the petitioner and Respondent No. 1 are tenants under Section 5 (11) (c) of the Rent Act.

12. Despite this finding in favour of the petitioner I do not propose to interfere with the order of the learned trial Judge for certain good reasons. The petitioner is a younger sister of Respondent No. 1. They were residing together under the same roof for several years. During the life time of the father and even after his death Respondent No. 1 is paying a substantial amount by way of contribution towards the family expenses. After the death of the deceased-tenant the landlady treated both as tenants and served them with quit notices. Even when the dispute started between the brother and sister, the landlady had not shown any interest in the proceedings. After the learned trial Judge made the declaration the landlady accepted that as final and binding. In view of these circumstances, I am of the view that no interference is called for in exercise of my powers under Art. 227 of the Constitution of India.

13. In the result the application fails and the rule is accordingly discharged. There will be no order as to costs.

14. The rule issued on the Civil Application is discharged with no order as to costs.

Rule discharged.

Spl. Civil Appln. No. 1166 of 1966, D/- 9-9-1970 to set aside order of Appellate Bench, Sm. C. C. Bombay, D/- 27-6-1966.

(A) Houses and Rents — Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), S. 13 (1) (c), second sub-clause — Under the provision the tenant is held liable not only for his own acts but also for the acts of those who reside with him. (Para 3)

(B) Houses and Rents — Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), S. 13 (1) (c) second sub-clause — Mere proof of conviction of an offence alleged to have been committed on the premises alone will not satisfy the requirement of the provision. (Para 8)

The second sub-clause of S. 13 (1) (c) is intended to cover cases where a tenant or any person residing with him is convicted of an offence committed on the premises with deliberate and conscious use of the premises pursuant to some illegal and immoral purpose or where the tenant has allowed somebody consciously to commit such an offence pursuant to some such illegal or immoral purpose. The user of the premises pursuant to an illegal or immoral purpose shall have to be proved to have played a dominant and main part in the incident, if not the ingredient of the said offence itself. Even if the single act is found to be sufficient to bring home the guilt to the accused, the said single act alone without the proof of the same having been committed pursuant to some illegal or unlawful purpose, will not furnish any cause of action to the landlord for eviction of the tenant. AIR 1955 Bom 111 Explained.

ORDER:— This petition under Article 227 of the Constitution arises out of the Rent Act (Bombay Act No. 57 of 1947) proceedings instituted by the landlord-respondents Nos. 1 to 3 against the original petitioner-tenant, since deceased. Possession of the premises from the tenant was sought to be obtained on the ground that the tenant's wife was convicted for using the premises for immoral and illegal purposes as contemplated in Section 13 (1) (c) of the Rent Act. This suit was decreed by the trial Judge on 4-2-1966 in RAE Suit No. 4770 of 1962 and the appeal by the tenant was dismissed by the Appellate Bench of the Court of Small Causes at Bombay on 27-6-1966.

2. It appears that the tenant has been occupying the premises in dispute for about 35 years before the institution of the proceedings. The tenant's wife was admittedly convicted for offence under Section 66 (1) (b) of the Bombay Prohibition Act on 19-7-1962. Details of the circumstances under which she was tried and convicted are not directly proved, as the plaintiff remained content with examining one bill collector as his witness and the defendant led his own evidence saying that he did not know anything about the criminal case, though admitted that his wife was convicted. However, the judgment passed by the Presidency Magistrate, 14th Court, Bombay (Exhibit 'A') has gone on record without objection, though this judgment could not have been strictly admissible in evidence for proving the facts constituting the offence, as held in AIR 1955 SC 566, particularly when the tenant was not even party to the case. It appears from the judgment that the premises were raided by the police on 22nd July 1961. Four persons in addition to the wife of the tenant were found inside the room at the time of the search. In the kitchen under the table one pint bottle bearing the label of Black and White Whisky, containing .09 litres of illicit liquor was found. Near the 'mori' was found an aluminium pot containing 1.52 liters of lukewarm water smelling of alcohol. One red coloured hot-water bag smelling of alcohol and a glass smelling of alcohol from the said premises were also seized. It is on these facts that five accused were tried for an offence under Section 66 (1) (b) read with Sec. 81 of the Bombay Prohibition Act. The contents of the vessel were not sent for Chemical Analysis. However, another bottle containing .09 litres of illicit liquor was sent to the Chemical Analyser and was found to contain ethyl alcohol. The learned Magistrate acquitted other four accused but convicted the wife of the tenant only for an offence under Section 66 (1) (b) for possession of .09 litres of illicit liquor and sentenced her to one day's simple imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 250/-. The trial Court relied on 56 Bom LR 836 = (AIR 1955 Bom 111) (Jayantilal Motilal Pathak v. Dayaram Ranchhoddas Soni) and on the strength of this judgment in Criminal case alone held that these facts attracted the provisions of Section 13 (1) (c) of the Rent Act and the tenant was liable to be evicted. The same finding has been confirmed by the Appellate Bench.

3. Mr. Lovekar, the learned advocate appearing for the petitioner-tenant, contends that conviction of the wife for offence under Section 66 (1) (b) cannot render the tenant liable to eviction and Section 13 (1) (c) cannot be said to have been intended to hold the tenant vicariously liable for the act of his wife or any person residing with him. Answer to this argument much naturally depends upon the true construction of the section. Clause (c) can be divided into three sub-clauses. So divided, Cl. (c) of Section 13 (1) reads as follows:—

"13(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act a landlord shall be entitled to recover possession of any premises if the court is satisfied.

(i) that the tenant or any person residing with the tenant has been guilty of conduct which is a nuisance or annoyance to the adjoining or neighbouring occupiers, or

(ii) (that the tenant or any person residing with the tenant) has been convicted of using the premises or allowing the premises to be used for immoral or illegal purposes; or

(iii) that the tenant has in respect of the premises been convicted of an offence of contravention of any provisions of Cl. (a) of sub-section (1) of S. 394 or S. 394-A of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act."

This contention of Mr. Lovekar cannot be accepted unless the words "has been convicted" are held to control only the words "the tenant" and not the words "or any other person residing with the tenant" in the opening of the first sub-clause. Mr. Lalit, the learned advocate appearing for the respondents, seems to me to be right when he contends that such reading militates against the plain dictates of grammar. Even the setting and context of this sub-clause does not admit of such construction. This apart, when the conduct of any person residing with the tenant amounting to nuisance and annoyance also renders the tenant liable to eviction, there is no reason why similar acts on the part of such person residing with the tenant resulting in his conviction as envisaged in the second sub-clause could not have been intended to furnish a cause of action for eviction against the said tenant. This entire Cl. (c) deals with the objectionable user of the leased premises involving some sort of nuisance or annoyance or discomfort to neighbours. This object aimed at is likely to be frustrated, if the tenant is not held liable, not only for his own acts, but also vicariously liable for the acts of those who reside with him. It is true that in the third clause, no reference is made to the act of "any person residing with the tenant." But then, this clause was introduced in this section long after the main statute was enacted in 1947 by Maharashtra Amendment Act No. 38 of 1962. This apart, Ss. 394 (a) (i) and 394-A also contemplate, of vicarious liability of the occupant for suffering or allowing any body to commit like offences on the premises, though its extent and measure is slightly different. Considered as whole, it shall have to be held that the words "has been convicted" in second clause has not only reference to the word "the tenant" but also to "or any person residing with the tenant." This interpretation will be in accordance with the plain wording of the clause as also with the governing legislative intent. The first submission of Mr. Lovekar, therefore, fails.

4. Mr. Lovekar then contends that mere proof of commission of some offence on the premises in the absence of proof of something more cannot amount to "using the premises or allowing the premises to be used for immoral or illegal purpose." It is true that both the courts below have merely relied on conviction and have not further considered how tenant's wife, i.e. the person residing with the tenant, can be said to have used the premises for immoral or illegal purposes, merely by possession of .09 litres of illicit liquor. Mr. Lovekar contends, firstly, that there is no evidence that it was so possessed with any unlawful and immoral purpose and, secondly, that finding of lukewarm water and the hotwater bag in addition to the quantity of the liquor and the fact that these were not found actually inside the room where the five persons including the wife of the tenant were sitting at the time of the raid militates against the said liquor having been possessed for any unlawful purposes. I find some substance in this contention of Mr. Lovekar. This contention has nothing to do with the legality or the validity of the conviction itself, but has a bearing on the application of the second part of Cl. (c). The trial Court relied on the judgment of this Court reported in 56 Bom LR 836 = (AIR 1955 Bom 111). This Court followed the judgment of an English case reported in (1925) 1 KB 301, in which corresponding analogous provisions of Section 5 (1) (b) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restriction Act of 1923 was interpreted. This court held that the facts found in the case were covered by the ratio decided by the English case, without adding anything of its own, this Court quoted the observations of Atkin, L. J. at page 311 with approval. I wanted to check up the detailed facts of the said case. Unfortunately, however, I could not get the paper book of Civil Revision Application No. 162 of 1954 decision of which is reported in 56 Bom LR 836 = (AIR 1955 Bom 111) as I am told that the papers have been sent to Gujarat High Court on the bifurcation of the erstwhile Bombay State. However, from the facts given in the report, the tenant seems to have been convicted in that case for offences under Sections 65 (e) and 66 (b), though it is not possible to find out what exact quantity of liquor was found in possession of the tenant and precisely under which circumstances. Section 65 (e) deals with offences of selling and purchasing liquor at the premises. The observations of the learned Judge, therefore, have got to be understood in the context of the facts found in that case. The facts of the present case, as stated earlier, are clearly distinguishable. Not only that a very small quantity of liquor was found in possession of the wife of the tenant, but the same was found inside the kitchen along with the hot-water bag as also a vessel of lukewarm water. These facts do prove the conviction for possession of liquor. These do not further prove that user of the premises was for or pursuant to any unlawful or immoral purpose. One cannot definitely say that liquor was possessed for any prohibited use or that such user was contemplated pursuant to any purpose planned in advance. Casual, accidental, incidental and unintended possession and user without any such prohibited purpose cannot be ruled out on the facts established. Presumably it could not be so on the facts in 56 Bom LR 836 = (AIR 1955 Bom 111).

5. This apart, the judgment of the English case relied upon by Dixit, J. itself makes a clear distinction between the cases where offences like these are committed incidentally on the premises in dispute and premises being used for the purposes of commission of the offences pursuant to some immoral or illegal purposes. Thus Banker, L. J. at page 307 observes:—

"It may be that the mere fact of a crime being committed on the premises would not constitute a user of the premises by the tenant for an illegal purpose."

A little further the learned L. J. agreeing with the observations of Lush, J. in Waller & Son v. Thomas, (1921) 1 KB 541 says:—

"I agree with Lush, J. that the object of this clause is to deal with cases in which the improper user of the premises is in furtherance of an unlawful purpose, and not with an isolated instance of illegality in carrying out a lawful purpose."

Similarly, Scrutton, L. J. observes at page 310 of the report saying:—

"..... it is enough if there is a conviction of a crime which has been committed on the premises and for the purpose of committing which the premises have been used; but that it is not enough that the tenant has been convicted of a crime with which the premises have nothing to do beyond merely being the scene of its commission."

Third Judge Atkin, L. J. after making the observations quoted at page 838 of the Bom. L. R. says a little further:

"On the other hand if the premises are once used for an immoral or illegal purpose, it does not necessarily follow that they have been used for such a purpose within the section."

It is thus clear that the three learned L. Js. who decided the English case relied upon by Dixit, J. in 56 Bom LR 836 = (AIR 1955 Bom 111) were conscious of the distinction between the cases where the offence happens to be committed incidentally and casually on the premises without any conscious intention or purpose of using it for any illegal or immoral purpose and the cases where offence is committed on the premises pursuant to some unlawful purpose. The present case clearly falls within the purview of the former category of cases. The present case thus is clearly distinguishable from the case in 56 Bom LR 836 = (AIR 1955 Bom 111) and as such the ratio of the said judgment has been on the face of it wrongly applied to the facts of this case.

6. There are, however, stronger grounds why I think the provisions of Cl. (c) of Section 13 (1) can have no application to the facts found in this case. Now, Section 12 (1) of the Bombay Rent Act affords protection to the tenants as long as they are ready and willing to pay the amount of standard rent and permitted increases and to observe and perform other conditions of tenancy, in so far as they are consistent with the provisions of the Rent Act. It is only under certain contingencies enumerated in Cls. (a) to (l) that the landlord had been enabled to recover possession of the said premises from the tenant in violation of the above protection. Clauses (a) to (e) and (j) to (l) deal with certain acts or omissions of the tenant having some bearing or the other on his obligation to the landlord as his tenant or the demised premises, or to the neighbours. These provisions seek to put an end to the tenant, where the tenant has been guilty of some act injuriously affecting the leased property or adversely affecting the landlord directly or indirectly. Cl. (a) deals with acts of the tenant contrary to the provisions of Cl. (o) of Section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act. Clause (b) deals with the effect of the tenant having erected any permanent structure on the premises by affecting the use of the property. Clause (c) essentially deals with the user of the property in a manner which is likely to constitute some sort of discomfort to the adjoining and neighbouring occupiers. Clause (d) deals with the conduct of the tenant which estops him from refusing to vacate. Clause (e) deals with the effect of sub-letting and assignment. It is unnecessary to go into details of Cls. (j) to (l). Suffice it to observe that each one of these clauses deals with the act or omission of the tenant, which either affects the landlord adversely or the leased premises injuriously. Clause (c) cannot have been intended to be a moral code for the conduct of the tenants for ensuring compliance by them of all the existing laws independently of such obligation. Any infraction on the premises, therefore, cannot be intended to have been covered by the provisions of Cl. (e), unless such infraction directly or indirectly affects the landlords or affects the premises or affects the adjoining or neighbouring occupiers. Considered from this point of view, it is impossible to hold that, mere possession of .09 liters of illicit liquor without more alone can have any bearing on his obligation arising out of the tenancy.

7. Mr. Lalit contends that such construction runs counter to the plain words of this sub-clause, and also to dicta laid down in 56 Bom LR 836 = (AIR 1955 Bom 111) and the English case according to which even solitary user of premises resulting in conviction, as against continuous or frequent user, is sufficient to warrant eviction of the tenant. I have already stated how facts in 56 Bom LR 836 = (AIR 1955 Bom 111) and legal position there is distinguishable. This contention, however, will lose its force if distinction between stray and casual act of user and solitary act of user with or pursuant to some purpose and design is borne in mind. This sub-clause itself speaks of conviction and not of convictions. Conviction for an offence covered by this sub-clause may be very often than not based on solitary or single act, though instances of a single conviction for more than one act cannot be ruled out. Such one act of the tenant covered by the conviction may be casual, incidental, intentional and without any specific prohibited purpose or it may also be of the nature covered by this sub-clause. The question that Mr. Lalit's submission raises really is: how and where to draw a dividing line? Does this sub-clause require proof of something more than the act covering the conviction itself to warrant eviction?

8. Now, shorn of all the unnecessary verbiage the relevant part of Cl. (c) will read as follows:—

"that the tenant has been convicted of using the premises or allowing the premises to be used for immoral or illegal purposes."

Any literal and too technical a construction may render this entire sub-clause meaningless. As observed by Atkin, L. J. in the above case, there is no offence known to law of "using the premises for any immoral purposes." This was the position when Atkin, L. J. was called upon to construe practically analogous provisions of Section 5 (1) of Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1923, and the position is in no way changed when this court is called upon to consider the above sub-clause (c) of S. 13 (1) of the Rent Act. Similarly there are very few offences, which can answer the description of "using the premises for illegal purposes." Then there is also no law making any act of "allowing the premises to be used either for immoral or illegal purposes" an offence, unless it is construed to have reference to an abetment of an offence in which user of the premises for unlawful purposes is an ingredient. This is why Atkin, L. J. was constrained to say that corresponding clause of English Act should be construed less technically. The phraseology, therefore, requires to be interpreted after making an attempt to find out the precise legislative intent, as to the remedy that was sought to be advanced and the mischief that was sought to be suppressed. Looked from this point of view, this sub-clause seems to have been intended to cover cases where a tenant or any person residing with him is convicted of an offence committed on the premises with deliberate and conscious use of the premises pursuant to some illegal and immoral purpose or where the tenant has allowed somebody consciously to commit such an offence pursuant to some such illegal or immoral purpose. This view gets support also from the context, particularly from the acts covered by the immediately preceding and following sub-clauses. The entire Cl. (c) appears to have been intended to cover acts of tenants etc. Which tend to make life of the neighbours miserable, rendering thereby premises a source of some discomfort. Emphasis appears to be more on the nature of user of the premises and its purpose than on the conviction itself. The user of the premises pursuant to an illegal or immoral purpose shall have to be proved to have played a dominant and main part in the incident, if not the ingredient of the said offence itself. The words "convicted for using the premises for immoral or illegal purposes" or allowing it to do so cannot be given full meaning and effect in any way otherwise. One plain implication of this construction is that user of the premises for illegal or immoral purposes not being necessarily the ingredient of the offence, circumstances to that effect shall have to be proved in addition to the facts constituting the offence to attract this sub-clause of Cl. (c) of Section 13. Mere proof of conviction of an offence alleged to have been committed on the premises alone will not satisfy the requirements of this clause. Even otherwise, the judgment regarding the conviction passed by the criminal court is not admissible in civil proceedings excepting to prove the fact of conviction or acquittal. The facts constituting the offence and the conviction have got to be proved independently. But as stated above, the tenant may not entail the forfeiture of the tenancy merely by proof of the facts constituting the offence unless it is further shown that the user of the premises for the said offence was a deliberate act and also was in pursuance of some illegal and immoral purpose. All that is held in 56 Bom.LR 836=(AIR 1955 Bom 111) and the English case is that landlord need not prove the continuous user or even a frequent user. That does not mean that offence casually an incidentally committed on the premises without there being any intention of user pursuant to the purposes mentioned there were intended to be covered by the above clause. Even if the single act is found to be sufficient to bring home the guilt to the accused, the said single act alone without the proof of the same having been committed pursuant to some illegal or unlawful purpose, will not furnish any cause of action to the landlord for eviction of the tenant.

9. Result is that the application is allowed and the orders passed by the two Courts are quashed.

10. There will be no order as to costs, in the circumstances of the case.

Application allowed.

(A) Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (67 of 1948), S. 86 (c) — Scope.

Under the section the Tenancy Authorities are to decide not only whether the land is less than economic holding and the total income thereof is less than Rs. 1500/- but has also to decide whether the land in question is an agricultural land within Section 2 (8) of the Act so as to attract the section. (X-Ref.— Section 2 (8)). (Para 3)

(B) Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (67 of 1948), S. 85-A (1) and (2) — Reference under the section — When necessary.

Sub-section (1) has to be read subject to sub-section (2). Sub-section (2) does not contemplate a reference to Tenancy Authorities in a case where the issues have already been decided by competent authorities under the Act in earlier proceedings between the same parties in respect of the same land. (Para 4)

M. V. Sali, for Applicant; V. D. Govilkar, for Opponents Nos. 1 and 2.

ORDER:— This is a Revision Application from the order of the Civil Judge,

AP/BP/A371/72/MNT

Junior Division, Kagal, declining to make a Reference to the authorities under the Bombay Tenancy Act, 1948, under Section 85-A thereof, of the issue as to whether the present petitioner is a tenant within the meaning of that Act. The plaintiff-landlord had filed the suit in that Court for possession of his half share in land bearing S. No. 84/1 and for mesne profit. By his written statement, the first defendant-tenant had, inter alia, contended that the court had no jurisdiction to decide whether he was a tenant under the Bombay Tenancy Act and hence an issue in that behalf should be referred to the competent authorities under that Act for decision. The trial court declined to make the Reference on the ground that that issue had already been decided against the present petitioner on 18-10-1960 by the authorities under the said Act in proceedings under Section 88-C between the same parties in respect of the same land initiated by the plaintiff-landlord, and directed that the hearing of the suit be proceeded with. It is against that order that the first defendant-tenant has approached this Court in Revision.

2. Various elaborate arguments have been advanced by Mr. Sali on the Petitioner's behalf, but it is not necessary to deal with all of them. Only two narrow questions arise: (1) Did the question in regard to the applicability of the Bombay Tenancy Act fall to be decided in proceedings under Section 88-C thereof; and (2) Does Section 85-A require that the question as to whether a person is a tenant under that Act must be referred to the authorities under it in every case, even though it may have already been decided by those authorities in previous proceedings between the same parties in respect of the same land.

3. As far as the first question is concerned, in my opinion, the question had to be decided in proceedings under Section 88-C. I do not agree with Mr. Sali that in those proceedings the tenancy authority had only to consider two things viz. (a) whether the land was less than the economic holding of 16 acres; and (b) whether the total annual income thereof was less than Rs. 1500/-. The authority concerned had first to decide whether the land in question was agricultural land within Section 2 (8) of the Act. In the proceedings under Section 88-C between the parties in respect of this very land the tenancy authority has, in terms, held by his Order dated 18-10-1960 that the major portion being grass land, the Bombay Tenancy Act was not applicable to it. From that decision it necessarily follows that the first defendant was not a "tenant" within the meaning of Section 2 (18) of the Act, as he sought to contend in the present suit. I am not concerned with the merits of that decision. Moreover, there was an appeal filed by the present petitioner against that decision which was dismissed by the Deputy Collector on 30th June 1969. I do not accept the petitioner's contention that the Mamlatdar's order dated 25-11-1965 in proceedings which were initiated in the ordinary course under Section 32-G holding that, in view of the minority of the plaintiff-landlord, the Tillers' Day was postponed necessarily implied a decision to the contrary viz. that the land was agricultural land. In view of the finding that the landlord was a minor, no other question arose in those proceedings and the short order dated 25-11-1965 shows that the question as to whether the said land was agricultural land was, in fact, not decided or even considered by the tenancy officer.

4. As far as the second question formulated by me above is concerned, on first impression, Section 85-A does seem to suggest that a Reference must be made to the tenancy authorities each time a question under the Act arises, but on a close scrutiny of the language used in that section I have come to the conclusion that I am not driven to a construction which would lead to such an oppressive and unreasonable result. If a defence under the Tenancy Act is raised, the suit, no doubt "involves" an issue under that Act. That issue would be "required" by that Act to be decided by the authorities under it. The use of the mandatory words "shall stay", by themselves, would suggest that in every such case the suit must be stayed by the trial Court and a Reference made to the appropriate authority under the Act. Those words must, however, be read and understood in the context of the language used in sub-section (2) of S. 85-A itself. Sub-section (2) deals with the proceedings and the decision that must inevitably follow upon a Reference made by the Civil Court under sub-section (1). If, therefore, there is anything in the language employed in sub-section (2) which shows that the legislature could not have contemplated a Reference in a certain case, sub-section (1) must necessarily be construed as limited to that extent. In my opinion, the words "and decide such issues" in sub-section (2) clearly negative a Reference in cases in which those issues have already been decided by the competent authority under the Act in earlier proceedings between same parties in respect of the same land, for it could never have been contemplated by the legislature that the same issue or issues should be decided again and again by the authorities under the Act resulting in multiplicity of proceedings, and perhaps, even in conflict of decisions.

5. In the result, I hold that the decision of the lower Court was right and this Revision Petition must be dismissed with costs.

Revision dismissed.

Special Civil Appln. No. 719 of 1970, D/- 12-10-1971, from order of S. N. Hadole, Member Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal Nagpur, D/- 17-6-1970.

Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region and Kutch Area) Act (99 of 1958), S. 107 (1) (a-1) (as inserted by Maharashtra Act 17 of 1966) — Appeal — Decision on contractual tenancies under S. 100 (2) is also appealable under S. 107 (1) (a-1) — (X-Ref:— Section 100 (2)).

The right of appeal which has been granted by virtue of insertion of Cl. (a-1) in Section 107 (1) is not confined only to the orders arising out of proceedings where only questions of deemed tenancies are raised but it also covers all orders where the question of a person being a tenant or not, including a deemed tenant, is involved. (Para 8)

Previously no order of the Tahsildar under Section 100 (2) was made appealable. This omission was sought to be supplied by the amendment. The Legislature could not have intended that the right of appeal should be given only in cases where the question is about a person being a deemed tenant or a protected lessee or an occupancy tenant and no right should be given where the question is raised about a person being a contractual tenant or not. The Legislature must have intended to give a right of appeal against all orders passed by the Tahsildar under Section 100 (2) which should also cover cases of contractual tenancies. (Para 8)

S. N. Kherdekar, for Petitioners;
 K. G. Chendke, for Respondent No. 1.

ORDER:— This petition challenges the order dated 17-6-1970 passed by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal in Revenue revision No. Ten-A-478 of 1969. The facts leading to this petition are briefly these: The respondent No. 1 Jagdamba Devi Deosthan is the landholder of field Survey No. 6, area 7.17 acres, assessment Rs. 14/- and Survey No. 1/3, area 1.17 acres, assessment Rs. 3-31, both situated at mouza Kurla, tahsil Hingan-ghat, district Wardha. The petitioners claim to be the tenants of the aforesaid fields. According to the petitioner, the fields were leased out to the petitioners or their predecessors-in-title in the year 1955-56 and they continued to be in possession of those fields in the years 1956-57 and 1957-58. The respondent No. 1 however, challenged the claim of the petitioners of their being tenants of the said fields. The petitioners, therefore, filed, on 3-4-1961 an application purporting to be under Section 100 (2) of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act, 1958, hereinafter called the Tenancy Act, before the Tahsildar for a declaration that they are the tenants of the aforesaid fields and the name of the respondent No. 2 be deleted from the Khasras. By order dated 16-10-1961 this application was dismissed by the Naib Tahsildar. The Special Deputy Collector, however, set aside that order and allowed the appeal by his order dated 16-7-1962. The matter was further taken to the Revenue Tribunal and by order dated 20-6-1963, the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal set aside both these orders and remanded the case to the Naib Tahsildar.

2. While the proceedings were pending before the Naib Tahsildar after remand, Section 107 of the Tenancy Act was amended by inserting Cl. (a-1) at the top in Section 107 (1) of the Tenancy Act by which in the list of appellate orders, an order under Section 6 was inserted by Maharashtra Act No. 17 of 1966. This amendment came into effect from 2-6-1966.

3. The Naib Tahsildar who inquired into the application after remand rejected the application by his order dated 24-1-1967 holding that the petitioners were not the tenants of the fields in question. On appeal by the petitioners, the order of the Naib Tahsildar was set aside by the Special Deputy Collector by his order dated 18-2-1969 holding that the petitioners were the tenants. This order was then challenged by the respondent No. 1 before the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal who by his order dated 17-6-1970 set aside the order of the Deputy Collector holding that the appeal before him was not competent and remanded the case to him with the observation that the order of the Naib Tahsildar could be revised under Section 110 of the Tenancy Act and left it to the Special Deputy Collector to consider whether the appeal memorandum could be treated as a revision application and if he should decide to treat the appeal memorandum as a revision petition, then to decide that revision on merits. In the view it took the Revenue Tribunal did not enter into the merits of the case. This order has been challenged by the petitioners who claim to be the tenants of the fields in question. It is their contention that in view of the amendment to S. 107 (1) of the Tenancy Act, an appeal against the order of the Naib Tahsildar to the Special Deputy Collector was competent since the cause of action for the appeal arose on 24-1-1967 and, therefore, the Revenue Tribunal should have decided the revision application in their favour on merits and ought not to have remanded the same to the Deputy Collector for considering whether the appeal memorandum should be treated as a revision application.

4. The Revenue Tribunal took the view that when the original application under Section 100 (2) was filed on 3-4-1961, an order under Section 100 (2) was not made appealable under Section 107 of the Tenancy Act. The Tribunal took the view that the right of appeal was a substantive right and came into existence on the date the litigation was introduced and since at that time no right of appeal was conferred, the appeal against the original order of the Naib Tahsildar before remand and the subsequent order of the Naib Tahsildar after remand, was not maintainable. It is contended by Mr. Kherdekar on behalf of the petitioners that a right of appeal would be available to a party against any order which has been passed after the date the right of appeal has been conferred by the Act. It is contended that the right of appeal was conferred with effect from 2-6-1966 whereas the order of the Naib Tahsildar was passed on 24-1-1967, i.e. after this amendment and, therefore, the order of the Naib Tahsildar dated 24-1-1967 was appealable before the Special Deputy Collector under Section 107 (1) (a-1) of the Tenancy Act. This Court in Special Civil Appln. No. 1096 of 1968 decided on 19-12-1969, Narayan v. M. R. T. (reported in 1970 Mah LJ Note No. 30) took the view that an appeal against an order under Section 100 of the Tenancy Act passed after 2-6-1966 on which the Cl. (a-1) in Section 107 was introduced by the amendment was maintainable. The Supreme Court in Motiram v. Surajbhan, (AIR 1960 SC 655) relying on its earlier decision in Indira Sohanlal v. Custodian of Evacuee Property Delhi, (AIR 1956 SC 77), held that where an amendment affects vested rights, the amendment would operate prospectively unless it is expressly made retrospective or its retrospective operation follows as a matter of necessary implication. Under the East Punjab Urban Rent Registration Act (3 of 1949), by S. 15 (4) finality was given to the appellate decision. By Act No. 29 of 1956, Section 15 was further amended by introducing Section 15 (5) giving a further right of revision against the order of the appellate authority thereby taking away the finality of the appellate decision under Section 15 (4). It was held that where the amending section had come into force at the time when the appellate authority decided the matter and when the appellate order was actually passed, the appellant could not claim the finality under the earlier provision and the revision petition against the order under the amended S. 15(5) was maintainable. It is, therefore, clear that the order dated 24-1-67 which was after the amendment came into effect was an appealable order. We are not in fact concerned with the order dt. 16-7-62 before remand in this case because, rightly or wrongly, the matter was still before the Naib Tahsildar on remand when the amendment to Section 107 was effected. Mr. Chendke the learned counsel for respondent No. 1 also did not contest this position for the purposes of this petition and an order passed after the date of the amendment could be appealable if otherwise an appeal is provided against such order.

5. The learned counsel for the respondent, however, contended that even under Cl. (a-1) of Section 107 (1) of the Tenancy Act, an order of the kind which has been passed in the present case by the Naib Tahsildar was not made appealable and, therefore, the decision of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal ought to be upheld. It is contended that what is made appealable by the aforesaid amendment is an order which is made under Section 6 of the Tenancy Act which deals with cases of deemed tenants only. It is urged that an order under S. 100 (2) is not made appealable and, therefore, the appeal is restricted only to a particular class of cases. According to him, this was a case not of a deemed tenant but of a contractual tenancy and against an order based on a case of contractual tenancy no appeal has been provided in Section 107 (1) of the Tenancy Act even by way of an amendment. He then contends that it was the plea of the petitioners themselves that the petitioner No. 1 Pandhari, and earlier his father Ramji who is now dead, had cultivated the fields since 1955-56 continuously on the basis of the lease and further in the year 1959 also a lease deed was executed by the landlord in favour of the petitioner No. 1 for the joint family and the petitioner No. 1 had cultivated the suit fields on lease basis for the year 1959-60. He again reiterated in his statement dated 21-4-1966 before the Naib Tahsildar that he and his father Ramji were cultivating the suit fields since 1955 to 1960 continuously on lease basis and they were thus occupancy tenants of the suit fields and as such they were entitled to purchase the rights of the fields on this basis (pages 79 to 81 of the original record). Mr. Chendke contended that a right of appeal is a creature of statute, and, therefore, the provision granting a right of appeal which is a substantive right has to be construed strictly. In the first place, it is alleged that there is no order passed under Section 6 of the Tenancy Act which only states who would be deemed tenants. An order whether a person is a tenant or not is passed only under Section 100 (2) of the Tenancy Act by the Tahsildar whose duty it is to deal with that question and decide the dispute raised before him. It may be said that, strictly speaking, the order is not passed under Section 6 of the Tenancy Act, but the order is under Section 100 (2) which has to consider the ingredients of Sec. 6 for finding out whether a person is a tenant or not or whether a person should be deemed to be a tenant or not. Such an order, therefore, is one under S. 100 (2) read with Section 6 of the Tenancy Act and an order on the question whether a person shall be deemed to be a tenant or not could be said substantially falling within the provisions of Section 6 of the Tenancy Act and it is in this sense that it has been stated in Cl. (a-1) of S. 107 (1) that it is an order under Section 6. By mentioning Section 6 what is intended is to make an order which declares a person to be a tenant or not a tenant, appealable. It is, however, argued that even though it may be accepted that an order declaring a person to be a tenant or not a tenant could be said to fall under Section 6 of the Tenancy Act; still it is restricted only to those categories who can get a declaration of their being deemed tenants by virtue of their lawfully cultivating a land belonging to another person and could not cover cases where a person does not claim to be a deemed tenant but claims to be a contractual tenant. "Tenant" is defined in S. 2 (32) of the Tenancy Act. "Tenant" means a person who holds land on lease and includes a person who is deemed to be a tenant under Sections 6, 7 and 8. In the first part, a person holding a land on a contract of lease is a tenant in fact and is a contractual lessee and to such a person the fiction in Section 6 (1) of the Tenancy Act is not applicable. Besides the contractual lessee, a person who is deemed to be a tenant under Sections 6, 7 or 8 is also included in the definition of the term "tenant." Besides, a person who is a protected lessee or an occupancy tenant is also included in the term "tenant." Thus, there are three categories of tenants under Section 2 (32) of the Tenancy Act: (1) a contractual lessee, (2) a deemed tenant and (3) a protected lessee or occupancy tenant. It is contended that when a specific reference is made to Section 6 only, a right of appeal is conferred only in cases where the dispute is whether a person is or is not deemed to be a tenant and an order in such a dispute is alone appealable. But where the dispute is whether a person is a tenant by virtue of a contract of lease an order arising out of such question is not made appealable by the aforesaid amendment.

6. This Act has been enacted after the Reorganisation of States making it applicable for the Vidarbha Region and bringing it on par with the Tenancy Act which was prevalent in the Western Maharashtra, viz., the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948. The definition of the word "tenant" in this Act has been taken from the Bombay Tenancy Act of 1948. Similarly, Section 6 of the Tenancy Act is also a replica of Section 4 of the Bombay Tenancy Act, 1948. In the Bombay Tenancy Act, 1948, an order under Section 4 thereof was made appealable by Section 74 of that Act. Unfortunately, such a provision was not made in the Tenancy Act (1958) — may be through some inadvertent omission — though all other similar orders have been made appealable, with the result that all orders which are passed under Section 70 of the Bombay Tenancy Act, 1948, including the order deciding whether a person is a tenant or not, were made appealable in the Western Maharashtra, whereas a similar order in the Vidarbha Region was not made appealable. This omission came to be noticed by the Legislature and was keenly felt and with a view to bring the Vidarbha Act on par with the Act prevailing in Western Maharashtra, so far as the rights of appeal are concerned, an amendment to Section 107 (1) of the Tenancy Act was proposed and was subsequently made by Maharashtra Act No. 17 of 1966 by adding Cl. (a-i) to Section 107 (1) and bringing it into effect from 2-6-1966. The reason for making this amendment has been stated in the statement of objects and reasons in these words:—

"It has been brought to the notice of Government that as Section 107 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act, 1958 does not provide any appeal against an order of the Tahsildar deciding whether a person is a tenant or not, the affected party is left with no further remedy under the Act. The Bill is intended to provide an appeal to the Collector against such orders." The question that falls for consideration is whether this right of appeal which has been granted by virtue of this amendment is confined only to the orders arising out of proceedings where only questions of deemed tenancies are raised or it also covers all orders where the question of a person being a tenant or not, including a deemed tenant, is involved.

7. The provision of Cl. (a-i) of Section 107 (1) has to be read not only along with Section 6 but also S. 100 (2) of the Tenancy Act. Whether it is a dispute about the person being a contractual tenant or being a deemed tenant under Sections 6, 7 or 8 or his being a tenant on account of his being a protected lessee or occupancy tenant, such a question is required to be decided by the Tahsildar and Tahsildar alone under Section 100 (2) of the Tenancy Act.

8. Section 100 (2) of the Tenancy Act does not exclude the decisions on contractual tenancies. Previously no order of the Tahsildar under S. 100 (2) was made appealable. This omission was sought to be supplied by the amendment. The Legislature could not have intended that the right of appeal should be given only in cases where the question is about a person being a deemed tenant or a protected lessee or an occupancy tenant and no right should be given where the question is raised about a person being a contractual tenant or not. The Legislature must have intended to give a right of appeal against all orders passed by the Tahsildar under Section 100 (2) which should also cover cases of contractual tenancies. It may be noted that under the tenancy Act whenever a question is raised in a civil suit, which is required to be settled, decided or dealt with by any authority competent to settle, decide or deal with such issues, then such issues have to be referred by the civil court to the competent authority for determination. In a civil suit a question might be raised that a person is either a tenant or not a tenant. Such question may relate not only to deemed tenants but also contractual tenants and all those questions are required to be referred for the determination by the Tahsildar which it is the duty of the Tahsildar to decide under Section 100. If on such a reference a decision is given by the Tahsildar, whether it be in respect of a contractual tenancy or a deemed tenancy, an appeal has been provided against that order under Cl. (zb) of Section 107 (1) of the Tenancy Act. It seems inconceivable that an appeal could be provided in cases arising out of references decided by the same authority involving a question whether a person is a contractual tenant or not but there should be no appeal against an order under Section 100 (2) where a declaration is sought that a person is a tenant or not a tenant. In fact, even on a reference under Section 125 the Tahsildar acts under his powers under S. 100 (2). Both these kinds of order therefore are orders under Section 100 (2) and it could not be contemplated that these orders of a similar nature, though coming through different channels, should be treated differently by providing an appeal in one case and not providing in the other. The provisions should be construed reasonably and due effect to the intent of the Legislature should be given. The background in making the amendment has also to be taken into consideration. An appeal was already provided against an order of the Tahsildar in a proceeding which came to him on a reference from civil court under Section 126; but where proceedings were initiated directly before the Tahsildar under Section 100 (2), no appeal was provided, even though same matters were to be decided by him. A reference under Section 125 comprehended even the case of a contractual tenancy which could also be decided under Section 100 (2). It is but natural that orders under S. 100 (2) on direct application to the Tahsildar should also be made appealable and while making those orders appealable a further distinction could not be between matters arising on a reference under Section 125 and matters directly arising under Section 100. The Legislature could not have intended to make any such distinction for which there was no rhyme or reason. Construed in this light, it would be apparent that by providing an appeal by the newly introduced clause (a-i) appeals against the orders declaring a person to be a tenant or not a tenant, on whatever basis, were made appealable. If any guide is required to ascertain the reasons or the background which induced the Legislature to make this amendment, that could be found in the Statement of Objects and Reasons in the Bill which shows the reason for introducing this amendment. No distinction is made in introducing this amendment between a contractual tenant or a deemed tenant or any other kind of tenant and the right of appeal was given in every case where the question of a person being a tenant or not a tenant was involved. Though it may not be permissible to use Statement of Objects and Reasons accompanying the Bill for determining the true meaning and effect of the substantive provisions of the statute, yet they can be used for the limited purpose of understanding the background and antecedent state of affairs leading up to the legislation. It has been so laid down in State of West Bengal v. Union of India, (AIR 1963 SC 1241), S. C. Prashar v. Vasantsen, (AIR 1963 SC 1356) and several other cases of the Supreme Court. In interpreting a statute the court cannot ignore its aim and object. It appears to me, therefore, that though the amendment is not very happily worded, it also embraces the right of appeal in a case where the question relates to a person being or not being a contractual tenant also as contemplated by the principal part of S. 2 (32).

9. In my view, even on the interpretation of the new Cl. (a-i) of Section 107 (1) an appeal against the order of the Naib Tahsildar in this case was competent and the Special Deputy Collector rightly entertained and decided the appeal. It was, therefore, not necessary for the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal to set aside the order of the Special Deputy Collector on the ground that the appeal was not competent and to remand the matter to him for considering whether the appeal could be treated as a revision application under Section 110. Since the appeal before the Special Deputy Collector was competent, the Revenue Tribunal had to decide the revision application before it on merits which it refrained from doing in the view it took. Since I hold that the appeal before the Special Deputy Collector was competent, the revision application before the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal has to be heard and decided on merits. The order of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal remanding the case to the Special Deputy Collector is, therefore, set aside and the case is remanded to the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal who shall now hear the parties and decide the revision application in accordance with law.

10. The petition, therefore, succeeds and is allowed, but in the circumstances, I make no order as to costs.

Petition allowed.

Tenancy Laws — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act (99 of 1958), S. 98 (b) — Duties of Tribunal — The proper authority to decide the question whether in fact there is any surrender as contemplated by Section 49-A (5) and how the land so surrendered is to be dealt with is the Agricultural Lands Tribunal and not the Tahsildar — (X-Ref:— Section 20) — (X-Ref:— Section 21) — (X-Ref:— Section 49-A (5)) — (X-Ref:— Section 100).

S. N. Kherdekar, for Petitioner; C. S. Dharmadhikari, Addl. Govt. Pleader, for Respondent No. 1.

ORDER:— This petition by the landlord arises out of an application purported to have been filed under Section 36 (2) read with Ss. 43 (14-A) and S. 49-A (5) of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act, 1958, hereinafter referred to as the Tenancy Act. This application came to be filed before the Tenancy Tahsildar, Achalpur. In this application the petitioner had alleged that he was the owner of Survey No. 3, area 35 acres 21 gunthas of Mouza Jamapatki, of taluq Achalpur, which was cultivated by respondent No. 2 Bankatsingh as a tenant. According to the petitioner, Bankatsingh had in his personal cultivation land more than three family holdings and the purchase of the land had thus become ineffective by the statutory provisions. He, therefore, prayed that the land in the possession of the tenant should be put in his possession. The tenant filed a reply admitting that besides field S. N. 3, he had his own cultivation to the extent of three family holdings. The Naib Tahsildar treated the application as one under Section 21 of the Tenancy Act and passed an order purporting to be one under Section 36 (3) of the Tenancy Act that the landlord should be put in possession of the whole field.

2. The Assistant Collector, Achalpur, exercised his revisional jurisdiction quo motu and came to the conclusion that the application which was filed on 26-12-1967 was barred having regard to the provisions of Section 36 (2) of the Tenancy Act as it was not made within two years from 1-4-1963 which was the date for statutory transfer of ownership under Section 49-A of the Tenancy Act. He also held that since in respect of the holding of the tenant proceedings under the Ceiling Act were already pending, the Naib Tahsildar should have stayed the proceedings before him. He, therefore, set aside the order of the Naib Tahsildar. A revision application filed against this order before the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal was rejected. The Tribunal took the view that the proper authority to deal with the question, whether the land was deemed to have been surrendered under Section 49-A (5) of the Tenancy Act, was the Agricultural Lands Tribunal and the Naib Tahsildar had no jurisdiction in entertaining an application under Section 36. An additional finding which the Tribunal gave was that assuming that the Naib Tahsildar had jurisdiction, the application was patently barred by limitation. The revision application thus came to be dismissed. These orders are challenged by the petitioner in this petition.

3. The learned counsel appearing on behalf of the petitioner contends that the application was in substance an application for enforcing the right which had accrued to the landlord by virtue of the statutory surrender which had come into effect by virtue of Section 49-A (5) of the Tenancy Act. But, according to him, since such a surrender as contemplated by Section 49-A (5) was to be treated as if it was a surrender under Section 20 and the provisions of sub-sections (1) and (2) of S. 21 applied to such a statutory surrender also, the jurisdiction to deal with a matter under Sections 20 and 21 of the Tenancy Act being with the Tahsildar, the application was rightly made to the Tahsildar and the Tahsildar had jurisdiction to pass an order for possession.

4. It is difficult to accept the argument that the Tahsildar had any jurisdiction to deal with the claim made by the landlord on the footing that there has been a statutory surrender under Section 49-A (5) of the Tenancy Act. Section 49-A (5) of the Tenancy Act provides that the land the ownership of which is not transferred under Section 49-A (1), shall be deemed to have been surrendered to the landlord, and thereupon the provisions of sub-ss. (1) and (2) of Section 21 and Chapter VII of the Act shall apply in relation to such land as if the land was surrendered by the tenant under Sec. 20. The scheme of Section 49-A indicates that it has to be determined as to in respect of which land held by the tenant ownership is transferred on 1st of April 1963 and then the question whether there is any land of which ownership is not transferred and is deemed to have been surrendered to the landlord is to be determined. The question whether the landlord is entitled to retain the entire land so surrendered is also to be determined. The proceeding contemplated by Section 49-A with regard to the transfer of ownership and the consequent coming into being of the statutory surrender is a composite proceeding. No doubt, sub-section (5) provides that for the limited purpose of dealing with the land which will be statutorily surrendered, the provisions made in sub-sections (1) and (2) of S. 21 will apply, but merely because the manner in which the land with regard to which there is a statutory surrender has to be dealt with is indicated by sub-section (5) of S. 49-A with reference to the provisions of Sections 20 and 21, that does not ipso facto make the surrender as one under Section 20, but it is only deemed to be as if one under Section 20. The nature of the proceedings under Section 49-A (5) in which the land which the tenant is entitled to keep as an owner and the land which he must be deemed to have surrendered is not altered merely because the proceedings have to be determined with reference to the provisions of sub-sections (1) and (2) of S. 21. Section 100 which deals with the powers and duties of the Tahsildar does not make any reference to the matter under Section 49-A of the Tenancy Act. Under Cl. (b) of S. 98, it is the duty of the Agricultural Lands Tribunal to decide any dispute as to the particular area of land to be purchased under Sections 41, and 46 and 49-A. The statutory surrender is a consequence of certain land not being transferred to the tenant as a statutory purchaser and since this statutory surrender follows by way of a consequence, it is not possible to hold that separate proceedings should be initiated by the landlord for having an enquiry with regard to such a surrender to be made. The proper authority, therefore, to decide the question whether in fact there is any surrender as contemplated by Section 49-A (5) and how the land so surrendered is to be dealt with would be the Agricultural Lands Tribunal. There is thus no question in a proceeding under Section 49-A of a landlord being required to apply under Section 36 of the Tenancy Act and the application under Section 36 was wholly misconceived and made to an authority which had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter under Section 49-A. In this view of the matter, it is not necessary to decide the other contentions raised by the learned counsel for the petitioner. The finding given by the Tribunal that the proper authority to deal with the question of the statutory surrender was the Agricultural Lands Tribunal thus cannot be interfered with.

5. The petition must, therefore, fail and is rejected, but in the circumstances, there will be no order as to costs.

Petition dismissed.

CHITALE, J. :— The facts leading to this petition, briefly stated, are as follows: Nilanga Taluqa Co-operative Supervising Union, Nilanga, District Osmanabad, Opponent No. 6, is a Federal Co-operative Society, (hereinafter referred to as the "Federal Society"), deemed to have been registered under the Maharashtra Co-operative Societies Act, 1960 (hereinafter referred to as the Act). 124 Co-operative Societies are affiliated as members to the said Federal Society. The Managing Committee of the Federal Society consists of 8 members (including the Chairman), one of whom is nominated by the Government, one is nominated by Osmanabad District Central Co-operative Bank and the other six are elected. The election to the Managing Committee of the Federal Society was scheduled to be held on 16th September 1967, nominations were to be submitted on or before 2-9-1967, scrutiny of the nomination papers was to be held on 4-9-1967, and after scrutiny the list of the candidates contesting the election was published on 8-9-1967. On 14-9-1967 i.e. two days prior to the date of the election, respondent No. 1 Sheshrao Narayanrao Biradar submitted an application to the District Deputy Registrar, Co-operative Department, Maharashtra State, contending that the procedure preceding the election was not properly followed. One of the grievances raised at the hearing was that although some of the member societies were disqualified, they were allowed to contest the election. This application was heard by the Registrar's nominee and by his order dated 15th April 1968 he granted respondent No. 1's application and rejected the nomination papers of the present petitioner Madhukar Ganpatrao Somvanshi and respondents Nos. 2 to 5. Against this decision, the present petitioner preferred appeal to Maharashtra State Co-operative Tribunal, Bombay. The Tribunal by its decision dated 11th September 1968 held that the dispute in question was not one contemplated by Section 91 of the Act, hence no appeal lay to the Tribunal. The Tribunal recorded no findings on merits. In view of the finding that no appeal lay, the appeal was dismissed. The present petition is preferred against this decision of the Tribunal.

2. Mr. Sawant, who appears for the petitioner, relies on the Supreme Court decision in Dr. Narayan Bhaskar Khare v. Election Commission of India, 13 Ele LR 112 = (AIR 1957 SC 694). Relying on this decision, it is urged that wrong rejection or acceptance of nomination papers cannot form the subject-matter of a dispute contemplated by Section 91 of the Act, if such a dispute is raised before the declaration of result of the election. The Supreme Court in that case observed that although Art. 71 (1) of the Constitution undoubtedly confers jurisdiction on the Supreme Court to inquire into and decide all doubts and disputes arising out of or in connection with the election of the President or Vice-President, the question for consideration before the Court was whether there was anything in the Constitution indicating the time or stage at which and the manner in which such doubts and disputes are to be inquired into and decided. The Supreme Court referred to Articles 327, 329 (b) and Section 80 of the

"It is quite clear from the language of the section that any improper reception or refusal of a vote, or any non-compliance with the provisions of the Constitution or of the Act or of any rules or orders made under the Act or the improper acceptance or rejection of a nomination paper may be made a ground for challenging the election. This means that all doubts and disputes relating to any stage of the entire election process is to be canvassed by an election petition presented to this Court after the election in its wide sense is concluded.

..... The well-recognised principle of election law, Indian and English, is that elections should not be held up and that the person aggrieved should not be permitted to ventilate his individual interest in derogation of the general interest of the people, which requires that elections should be gone through according to the time schedule. It is, therefore, in consonance both with the provisions of Art. 62 and with good sense to hold that the word "election" used in Art. 71 means the entire process of election."

3. It is obvious that the above Supreme Court decision clearly lays down that wrong acceptance or rejection of a nomination paper can be made a ground of attack only after the result of the election is declared, and not at any stage prior to that.

4. We may also refer to the decision of the Supreme Court in N. P. Ponnuswamy v. Returning Officer, Namakkal Constituency, (1952) 3 SCR 218 = (AIR 1952 SC 64). In that case the appellant's nomination paper was rejected by the Returning Officer. He applied to Madras High Court under Art. 226 of the Constitution. The Supreme Court confirmed the decision of Madras High Court that it had no jurisdiction to interfere at that stage in view of the provisions of Article 329 (b) of the Constitution and S. 80 of the Representation of the People Act. In this case, the Supreme Court rejected the contention that the remedy which merely allows a candidate to have an election set aside only after the election is held is not as efficacious as the one which would enable him to stop holding the election. The Supreme Court pointed out that there was another side of the question to be considered, viz. inconvenience to the public administration on account of elections and the administrative business being required to be held up while individuals prosecute their grievances. By this decision the Supreme Court held that questioning the rejection of a nomination paper is questioning the elec-

Hon. hence it could not be done prior to the declaration of results of an election in view of Art. 329 (b) of the Constitution and Section 80 of the Representation of the People Act.

5. In view of the above two decisions of the Supreme Court, it is clear that respondent No. 1's application in effect contending that the nomination papers of the petitioner and respondents Nos. 2 to 5 were wrongly accepted could not be entertained before the declaration of the results of the election. If so, it is urged by Mr. Sawant for the petitioner, the decision of the Registrar's nominee dated 15-4-1968 is without jurisdiction.

6. Dr. Naik, who appears on behalf of respondent No. 1, relies on bye-law 23(8) of the Federal Society and contends that even though the dispute in question may not be a dispute under Section 91, bye-law 23(8) is binding on all the members of the Federal Society, it provides an internal arrangement enabling the member aggrieved to challenge wrong rejection of nomination papers and such arrangement is binding on the members of the Federal Society, hence the decision of the Registrar's nominee is legal and valid. Strictly speaking, bye-law 23(8) does not apply to the facts of the present case, inasmuch as the grievance of respondent No. 1 was not that a nomination paper was wrongly rejected, but his grievance was just the converse of it viz. the nomination papers of some members were wrongly accepted. Thus on the wording of bye-law 23(8) itself, it is clear that the said bye-law does not empower the Registrar's nominee to decide the dispute raised by respondent No. 1. In the alternative, it is urged by Dr. Naik that if the dispute does not come within the scope of bye-law 23(8), it should be treated as a dispute falling under Section 91 of the Act and if so, the Registrar's nominee would have jurisdiction to decide the dispute. In view of the abovementioned Supreme Court decisions, we are unable to accept this contention of Dr. Naik.

7. We may also refer to an unreported decision of this Court in Special Civil Appln. No. 1069 of 1968 decided on 16-10-1968 (Bom). Patel, J., who delivered the judgment, points out that in view of the clear wording of Section 92 which provides a period of limitation for filing election disputes, an election dispute as contemplated by Section 91 could not be filed, nor entertained prior to the declaration of the result of the election. We agree with this view expressed in the said decision. Dr. Naik, however, relies on some of the observations in the said decision. The observations relied upon are:—

".....The Tribunal has rightly held that an appeal provided under the Election Rules of this Bank is as a matter of internal management of the Bank and by a rule it cannot call upon the Registrar or the Deputy Registrar either to treat an appeal as a dispute to which only the Returning Officer apparently is made a party."

8. We are unable to hold that these observations support Dr. Naik's contention. The other observations that follow clearly indicate that this Court held that a rule cannot be regarded as valid, if it elevates a matter which does not strictly fall within the scope of Section 91 of the Act to a dispute under that section. Dr. Naik contends that bye-law 23(8) provides an internal arrangement, the members of the Federal Society agreed to abide by that bye-law, thus that bye-law would be binding on the members, if so, the decision of the Registrar's nominee would be valid and binding on the members of the Federal Society, irrespective of the question whether the dispute falls under Section 91 of the Act or not, and whether an appeal lies to the Tribunal or not. In view of the principle laid down by the Supreme Court, which is mentioned above, we are unable to accept this contention. A bye-law like bye-law 23(8) in this case cannot be said to be a valid bye-law, inasmuch as if such a bye-law is allowed to work, it would give rise to conflict of decisions. Dr. Naik does not dispute that a candidate defeated at the election would be entitled to challenge the election after the declaration thereof on the ground of wrong acceptance or wrong rejection of nomination papers. Thus if the above contention of Dr. Naik is accepted as correct, the same question may be inquired into on two or more occasions by different authorities or tribunals and this may obviously give rise to conflicting decisions. Thus it is in our opinion clear that a bye-law that provides for a challenge to the procedure adopted regarding an election even before the declaration of the result of that election cannot be held to be a valid bye-law in view of the above decisions of the Supreme Court. In effect such a bye-law constitutes an agreement amongst the members of the Society which may defeat relevant provisions or principles of law relating to elections. As pointed out by the Supreme Court, it is very vital for the public administration that elections are held in time according to the schedule notified and they are not delayed on account of individual grievances of a candidate. We, therefore, hold that respondent No. 1's application dated 14-9-1967 was untenable and it was wrongly entertained by the Registrar's nominee.

9. We must mention here that Dr. Naik raised the objection that the only relief claimed in this petition is to have the decision of the Tribunal set aside, there is no prayer seeking the relief that the order passed by the Registrar's nominee on 15-4-1968 is without jurisdiction and respondent No. 1's application dated 14-9-1967 should be rejected holding the same to be untenable. This objection is technically correct although the necessary relief can be said to be implied in the prayer that the Tribunal's decision should be set aside. In order to obviate the technical difficulty, however, we allow the petitioner to amend the petition by adding the necessary prayer.

10. For reasons indicated above, we make the rule absolute and reject respondent No. 1's application dated 14-9-1967 challenging the acceptance of the nomination papers of the petitioner and respondents Nos. 2 to 5. Respondent No. 1 shall pay the petitioner's costs.

Rule made absolute.

MALVANKAR, J.

Raghunath Gopal Daftardar, Appellant v. Sau, Vijaya Raghunath Daftardar, Respondent.

A. F. A. D. No. 1088 of 1969, D/- 15-3-1971 against order of R. K. Joshi, Dist. J., Poona in Appeal No. 646 of 1967.

(A) Hindu Marriage Act (1955), Section 12 (1) (c) — Section 17 of Contract Act does not apply to a case of fraud under S. 12 (1) (c) — (X-Ref:— Contract Act (1872), S. 17).

The Contract Act does not apply to a marriage under the Hindu Marriage Act. Section 12 (1) (c) of the latter Act does not speak of fraud in any general way or of every misrepresentation or concealment which may be fraudulent. A person who freely consents to a solemnization of the marriage under the Hindu Marriage Act with the other party in accordance with customary ceremonies, that is, with knowledge of the nature of the ceremonies and intention to marry, cannot object to the validity of the marriage on the ground of fraudulent representation or concealment. Mere non-disclosure prior to marriage or concealment of curable epilepsy disease of girl and false representation that she was healthy does not amount to fraud within the meaning of that word used in Section 12 (1) (c). AIR 1959 Madh Pra 8, Dissented from. Case law discussed. (Paras 11 to 15)

(B) Hindu Marriage Act (1955), S. 12 (2) (a) (ii) — Bar to entertain petition for annulment of marriage — When attracted.

The expression "the petitioner has, with his full consent, lived with the other party to the marriage as husband" in Section 12 (2) (a) (ii) emphasizes living as husband with full consent for whatever period it may be, provided the alleged fraud is condoned. The condition laid down in Section 12 (2) (a) (ii) does not depend upon the lapse of any time after the discovery of the alleged fraud. If the husband or the wife, as the case may be, after the fraud was discovered, lived together for whatever period as wife and husband with full consent, it would be sufficient for not entertaining the petition for annulling the marriage. M. V. Paranjape with Prakash S. Shah, for Appellant; R. W. Adik, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT:— This is a second appeal against the Judgment and decree passed by the learned District Judge, Poona, in Civil Appeal No. 646 of 1967 on his file from the decree in Marriage Petition No. 18 of 1963 of the Court of the Civil Judge (Senior Division), Poona. It arises this way.

2. The appellant-petitioner was married to the respondent at Poona on 30th March 1962 according to Hindu religious rites. The petitioner alleged that during the negotiations as well as at the time of the solemnization of the marriage the respondent and her parents not only concealed the fact that she was suffering from epilepsy since childhood but also misrepresented to him and his father that she was quite healthy. Within a fortnight after the marriage which was consummated in the first week of April 1962, the respondent started getting epileptic fits. These fits recurred in the months of April, May and June at an interval of about a fortnight. The petitioner further alleged that in the first week of July 1962, he, for the first time, realised that the respondent was suffering from epilepsy which was an incurable disease and, therefore, he took her to the place of her elder sister Mrs. Deshpande in Poona and left her there on 6th July 1962. He also alleged that since after the discovery of this fraud on 2nd July 1962 till he took her to the house of her elder sister Mrs. Deshpande on 6th July 1962, he did not live with her as her husband. From 6th July 1962 the respondent never returned to his house. Alternatively, the petitioner alleged that within a short time after the marriage was consummated, the respondent started behaving in a queer way and also used to insult the petitioner and other members of his family. He, therefore, contended that having regard to the nature of the disease and the strange and unbecoming behaviour of the respondent, he reasonably apprehended that it would be harmful and injurious for him to live with her. He, therefore, prayed for a decree of nullity of the marriage on the ground of fraud, and in the alternative, a decree for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty.

3. The respondent contested the petitioner's claim vehemently. She denied the allegation of fraud and alleged that the fact that the respondent was suffering from epilepsy was brought to the notice of the petitioner's father and the petitioner during the negotiations. She denied that any fraud was practised on the petitioner and contended that he married her with free consent. She also alleged that soon after the marriage, the mother of her mother-in-law discovered a small white spot on her waist while giving her bath, whereupon the members of the family suspected that she was suffering from leucoderma, when in fact it was scar left of an insect-bite. The rest of the contentions in the written-statement are not material for our purpose.

4. On these pleadings, the learned trial Judge framed the necessary issues and on consideration of the evidence adduced by the parties, came to the conclusion that the petitioner had failed to prove that his consent was obtained by fraud or that the respondent was suffering from an incurable disease, and that, therefore, the petitioner was not entitled to a decree of nullity. As regards the alternative plea of the petitioner, the learned trial Judge found that the petitioner had failed to prove the alleged cruelty and, therefore, dismissed his claim on that ground also. The petitioner then filed an appeal in the District Court, Poona. The learned District Judge found that the petitioner or his father was never told at any stage of the marriage either during the course of the negotiations or at the time of the solemnization that the respondent was suffering from epilepsy, that generally there might have been statements made by the parents and the relations of the respondent that she was healthy, that the respondent herself never told either the petitioner or any of his relations that she was healthy, that the type of epilepsy from which the respondent was suffering was not an incurable disease, that the alleged fraud was discovered by the petitioner on 26th June 1962 or at the most on 2nd July 1962, that thereafter till the respondent was taken by the petitioner to the house of the former's sister on 6th July 1962, both of them were living together as husband and wife with free consent of the petitioner, and that the non-disclosure of the disease of epilepsy either during the course of the negotiations or at the time of the solemnization and the alleged misrepresentation that the respondent was healthy did not amount to fraud in law, and that the petitioner had also failed to prove the alleged cruelty. The learned District Judge, therefore, confirmed the decree of the trial Court and dismissed the appeal with costs. Being aggrieved by this judgment and decree, the petitioner has come to this Court in second appeal.

5. On the arguments advanced before me, the first point that arises for consideration is whether the petitioner has been able to prove in this case that the type of epilepsy, from which the respondent is suffering, is an incurable epilepsy. The learned District Judge has recorded a finding against the petitioner on this point. The finding is based on appreciation of evidence and, therefore, ordinarily the appellant-petitioner is not entitled to ask this Court to go into the evidence again and come to its own finding. However, the learned counsel Mr. Paranjape, appearing on behalf of the appellant-petitioner, has argued that though the finding is a finding of fact, the learned Judge having misread the whole evidence, this Court may not accept it and at any rate, for finding out whether or not the learned Judge has misread the evidence, it would be necessary to consider the evidence again in this Court. The learned Counsel Mr. Paranjape, therefore, took me through the evidence on this point and I must say that on going through the evidence, I find that there is no reason why I should differ from the view taken by the learned District Judge.

6. The most important piece of evidence on this point is that of Dr. Sardesai, P. W. 5. The witness is an M. D. of the Bombay University and has also passed M. R. C. P. examination of the Edinburgh Royal College of Physicians. Since February 1959 he is attached to the Sassoon Hospital as an Honorary consulting physician. He is both a physician and neurologist practising as a consulting Physician at Poona since August 1960. He is also practising in Neurology since then. Admittedly, the respondent is being treated by this Doctor since about February 1961 for epilepsy. Now, he says that it would not be correct to say that the type of epilepsy the respondent is suffering from, is incurable. He has prescribed 'Dilantin Sodium' to the respondent for this disease and the Doctor says that he has prescribed it with a view to keep her malady under control. When he was asked whether it could be said that the respondent was cured of the disease, he replied that it would not be possible for him to say whether her epilepsy had been cured, because this could only be said if the drug is withdrawn. Later on, he has stated thus:—

"It would be wrong to say that epilepsy is a disease which cannot be cured. The latest publication on 'Therapeutics' by Goodman and Gillam is the standard book on the Science of Treatment. An older view which believed in the past was that epilepsy was incurable. It would not be correct to say and it is also not to my knowledge that at the present day, there are some authorities in medical science of treatment, who believe that epilepsy is incurable."

It is, therefore, quite clear from his evidence that the disease epilepsy is not an incurable disease. As regards the type of epilepsy from which the respondent is suffering, he has said that if the respondent ceased to get any epileptic fits for a period of three years, he would say that she is cured. He has also said that he was treating the respondent since February 1961 and he could find that for a period of about one year before her marriage, she did not get any epileptic fits. He further says that the drug which he prescribed has worked well. According to him, the respondent is receiving the treatment even today and the disease is well under control. Reliance is then placed on the testimony of Dr. Otturkar, P. W. 3. According to the petitioner the prescription, Ex. 179, dated 2nd June 1962, given by Dr. Sardesai to the respondent, was shown to Dr. Otturkar by his father, Dr. Otturkar being his close friend. Dr. Otturkar asked the petitioner's father whether the respondent was getting any fits and when the latter told him that she was, looking to the prescription, he told the petitioner's father that she was being treated for epilepsy. However, Dr. Otturkar further said that he would get it confirmed from Dr. Sardesai. Now, Dr. Otturkar has given his version of the talk Dr. Sardesai had with him, in his evidence. This version is little different on the point, from the one given by Dr. Sardesai and to which I have already made a reference. Now, according to Dr. Otturkar, what Dr. Sardesai told him was that epilepsy was such a kind of disease which could not be cured but could only be controlled. Dr. Sardesai also told him that the disease could only be kept under control by regular treatment and if the treatment is discontinued, the patient would again start getting epileptic fits. But later on, he admits that Dr. Sardesai also said that the patients suffering from epilepsy were required to take medicines for a very long time and continue the same treatment for about three years after they cease getting any epileptic fits. Now, I have already pointed out that Dr. Sardesai, who was examined by the petitioner himself, nowhere says that epilepsy does not admit of any cure. On the contrary, he says that it is not an incurable disease. But Dr. Otturkar, perhaps to oblige the father of the petitioner, who is his friend, told the Court something different from what the opinion of Dr. Sardesai was. It is material to note that no question was put to Dr. Sardesai regarding the version given by Dr. Otturkar. Coming to the evidence of the petitioner, he says that he came to know from Dr. Otturkar that the disease was incurable and hereditary. There is nothing in the evidence of Dr. Otturkar to show that the disease is hereditary. He only says that what he came to know from Dr. Sardesai was that it was incurable. But I have already pointed out that that was never the opinion of Dr. Sardesai, much less he gave that opinion to Dr. Otturkar. The petitioner's father, who is also examined in this case (P. W. 1), repeats the same story. When the petitioner took the respondent to the house of the latter's sister on 6th July 1962, his father was not at home. He was on tour in Nagpur. He, therefore, contacted the petitioner on telephone and what he came to know from the petitioner was that the opinion of Dr. Sardesai was that the disease was incurable and hereditary. Thus the evidence adduced by the petitioner not only does not show that the disease is incurable, but on the contrary it shows that the disease of epilepsy can be cured.

7. Coming to the evidence of the respondent, she has said that for about a year before her marriage with the petitioner, she was not getting any epileptic fits and that is precisely what Dr. Sardesai has told us in his evidence. It was suggested to her in her cross-examination that she was also told by Dr. Sardesai that the disease was incurable, but she has refuted the suggestion. Her father also says in his evidence (R. W. 2) that after the treatment of Dr. Sardesai was started, the respondent did not get any fits for about one year prior to her marriage. It is no doubt true that after the marriage which took place on 30th March 1962, the respondent had epileptic fits at least once or twice. But the evidence on the record shows that that was perhaps due to the mental worries from which the respondent suffered on account of the treatment given by the members of the petitioner's family to her and her relations. Considering, therefore, the evidence on the record and particularly the testimony of Dr. Sardesai, I have no hesitation in accepting the finding recorded by the learned Judge below on this point. I, therefore, find that the petitioner has failed to prove that the type of epilepsy the respondent is suffering from is an incurable disease.

8. Then the next question that is agitated before me is whether the consent of the petitioner to the marriage was obtained by fraud within the meaning of Section 12 (1) (c) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955. In this connection, the facts found by the learned Judge below and which are not in dispute before me in this appeal are that the respondent was suffering from epilepsy before her marriage, that the petitioner or his father at no stage was told that the respondent was suffering from epilepsy, that the relations of the respondent had made general statements that the respondent was healthy, but that the respondent herself never represented either to the petitioner or to his relations at any stage that she was healthy. These findings of facts recorded by the learned Judge show that the fact that the respondent was suffering from epilepsy was never disclosed either to the petitioner or to his father, and secondly, the petitioner and his father were told that she was healthy. The learned Counsel Mr. Paranjape has, therefore, argued that this is a case where truth was suppressed deliberately and false representation was made to the petitioner that she was healthy. He also argued that if the fact that the respondent was suffering from epilepsy was disclosed to the petitioner or to his father, he would never have consented to this marriage. That being so, the conduct on the part of the respondent and her relations amounts to fraud within the meaning of that word used in Section 12 (1) (c) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955.

9. In support of this argument, the learned Counsel Mr. Paranjape has relied upon Section 25 (iii) of the Special Marriage Act, 1954. It provides that any marriage solemnized under that Act shall be voidable and may, be annulled by a decree of nullity if the consent of either party to the marriage was obtained by coercion or fraud, as defined in the Indian Contract Act, 1872. Now, fraud is defined in Section 17 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, which runs thus:—

"'Fraud' means and includes any of the following acts committed by a party to a contract, or with his connivance, or by his agent, with intent to deceive another party thereto or his agent, or to induce him to enter into the contract:

(1) the suggestion, as a fact, of that which is not true, by one who does not believe it to be true;

(2) the active concealment of a fact by one having knowledge or belief of the fact;

(3) a promise made without any intention of performing it;

(4) any other act fitted to deceive;

(5) any such act or omission as the law specially declares to be fraudulent.

"Explanation:— Mere silence as to facts likely to affect the willingness of a person to enter into a contract is not fraud, unless the circumstances of the case are such that, regard being had to them, it is the duty of the person keeping silence to speak, or unless his silence is, in itself, equivalent to speech."

The learned Counsel Mr. Paranjape argued that the word "Fraud" used in Section 12 (1) (c) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, must also be understood in the sense in which it is defined in Section 17 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. The question, therefore, is whether the provisions of Section 17 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, apply to fraud as understood in Section 12 (1) (c) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955.

10. The difficulty arises because the word "fraud" is not defined in the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955. But in my opinion, the provisions of Section 17 of the Indian Contract Act cannot apply to fraud as understood in Section 12 (1) (c) of the Hindu Marriage Act. It is necessary to bear in mind that there is a difference between the marriage under the Special Marriage Act, 1954, and the marriage under the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955. The Special Marriage Act, 1954 provides a special form of marriage in certain cases. It is permissible to a Hindu, by virtue of this Act, to have his marriage with another Hindu or a person belonging to any other community solemnized in accordance with the requirements of the Act. The rights, obligations and status of the parties to such civil marriage in matters relating to restitution of conjugal rights, judicial separation, nullity of marriage and divorce are regulated by the provisions contained in that Act. The succession to property of two Hindus married under that Act as also to the property of the issues of such marriage is governed by the relevant provisions of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, and not by the Hindu Law of succession. It is significant to notice that no ceremonies are necessary for the marriage being valid under that Act. Obviously, therefore, the marriage under the Special Marriage Act, 1954, is a contract. The position under the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, however, is different. It is needless to say that marriage under the Hindu Law is treated as a samskara or a sacrament. The Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, contemplates a ceremonial marriage which must be solemnized in accordance with the customary rites and ceremonies of one of the two parties. Non-observance of the essential customary rites and ceremonies of at least one of the parties would amount to failure to solemnize the marriage. In other words, a marriage under the Hindu Marriage Act which is not solemnized by performance of the essential ceremonies is, under the Act, no marriage at all. It is true that the conditions laid down in Section 5 of the Hindu Marriage Act must also be fulfilled before a marriage under that Act is gone through. But the non-fulfilment of every one of the conditions and requirements enacted in Section 5 does not ipso facto render the marriage null and void or even voidable. It seems to me, therefore, that under the Hindu Marriage Act, the marriage which is a ceremonial marriage is essentially a sacrament (Samskara).

11. In this connection, I may refer to Boodapati Ankamma v. Boodapati Bamanappa, AIR 1937 Mad 332, in which Vardachariar, J. has observed at page 334 that a Hindu Marriage is a sacrament and not a civil contract and that it will not be permissible to apply to a Hindu marriage all the principles of the Law of Contract. Similarly, in Harbhajan Singh v. Smt. Brij Balab Kaur, AIR 1964 Punj 359, which is a case after the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, came into force, the Punjab High Court has said that the word "fraud" is not used in Section 12 of the Hindu Marriage Act in a general way and on every misrepresentation or concealment, the marriage cannot be dissolved. If the term "fraud" is to be interpreted according to the definition given in the Indian Contract Act, then it would become impossible to maintain the sanctity of the marriage. All sorts of misrepresentations will be alleged by the petitioners in order to break the marriage tie. This obviously could not be the intention of the legislature. In Anath Nath De v. Lajjabati Devi, AIR 1959 Cal 778 also, the case was under the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, and S. Datta, J., who delivered the judgment, has observed at page 779 that the marriage according to Hindu law not being a contract, the consent at the stage of negotiations though obtained by fraud cannot affect the validity of the marriage. It is true that in that case no fraud was alleged at the time of the solemnization of the marriage and, therefore, the petitioner could not be granted any relief. But at the same time, the case was decided on the footing that even under the Hindu Marriage Act, the marriage is a sacrament and not a civil contract. My attention is also drawn to the provisions of Section 19 of the Indian Divorce Act, 1869. That section so far as it is relevant here, reads thus:—

"Nothing in this section shall affect the jurisdiction of the High Court to make decrees of nullity of marriage on the ground that the consent of either party was obtained by force or fraud." This Act also does not define fraud and, therefore, it is of no assistance to us in this case. But it is well settled under the Indian Divorce Act that fraudulent misrepresentation in inducing consent to marriage does not vitiate a marriage. I have not been pointed out any decided case under the Indian Divorce Act, 1869, which lays down that non-disclosure or concealment of a fact and/or misrepresentation of a fact amounts to fraud. It seems to me, therefore, that even under the Indian Divorce Act, 1869, the definition of 'fraud' given in Section 17 of the Indian Contract Act does not appear to apply. It is true that this High Court has held in A. v. B., 54 Bom LR 725 = (AIR 1952 Bom 486) that a Hindu marriage is also a civil contract. But at the same time, the learned Judge (Tendolkar, J.) has held in that case that a Hindu marriage is also a sacrament. The Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, does not depart from this position, under the Hindu Law. I am, therefore, of the opinion that Section 17 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, does not apply to a case of fraud under Section 12 (1) (c) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955.

12. The question still remains what then is the meaning of the word "fraud". D. Tolstoy on the Law and Practice of Divorce, 6th edition, has expressed thus at page 112:—

"The test in all cases is whether there is real consent, not only to marry, but also to marry the particular person. But provided such consent exists, it is immaterial whether it is induced by a fraudulent misrepresentation." Similarly, Rayden on Divorce, 10th edition, at page 98, says that "fraudulent misrepresentation, or concealment, does not affect the validity of a marriage to which the parties freely consented with a knowledge of the nature of the contract. But if a person is induced to go through a ceremony of marriage by threats or duress, or in a state of intoxication, without any real consent to the marriage, it is invalid. In all cases, the test of validity is real consent to the marriage." Latey on Divorce, 14th edition, at p. 19, also observes that "misrepresentation or concealment of facts which if known to one of the parties might have prevented his or her marriage does not invalidate a marriage, providing that there were free consent." Coming to the authors on Hindu Law, Derrett in his Introduction to Modern Hindu Law, 1963 Edition, at page 193, says thus:—

"If in fact the marriage would have been agreed to even had the facts been known, it seems that the marriage cannot be annulled, nor, it seems, in even stronger cases where full disclosures would have prevented the marriage; for fraudulent misrepresentation or concealment does not affect the validity of a marriage to which the parties freely consented with knowledge of its nature and with the clear and distinct intention of entering into the marriage in question." Similarly, in Mulla's Hindu Law, 13th edition, at page 682, we have these observations:—

"A person who freely consents to a solemnization of the marriage with the other party in accordance with customary ceremonies, that is, with knowledge of the nature of the ceremonies and intention to marry, cannot raise an objection to the validity of the marriage on the ground of any fraudulent representation or concealment. The test to be applied is whether there was any real consent to the solemnization of the marriage."

It would thus be seen that the word "fraud" used in Section 12 (1) (c) of the Hindu Marriage Act does not speak of fraud in any general way, nor does it mean every misrepresentation or concealment which may be fraudulent. If the consent given by the parties is a real consent to the solemnization of the marriage, the same cannot be avoided on the ground of fraud. The marriage, therefore, solemnized under the Hindu Marriage Act cannot be avoided by showing that the petitioner was induced to marry the respondent by fraudulent statements relating to her health.

13. Turning to the decided cases on the point, I first propose to refer to the cases decided before the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, came into force. In Emmanuel Singh v. Kamal Saraswati,

AIR 1934 Pat 670 (1) (FB), which was a case under the Indian Divorce Act, the Patna High Court held that the fact that the marriage was induced by some sort of fraud is no ground for divorce under the Indian Divorce Act. In Bai Appibal v. Khimji Cooverji, 38 Bom LR 77 = (AIR 1936 Bom 138) this High Court has held that a fraudulent misrepresentation or concealment does not affect the validity of a marriage to which the parties freely consent with knowledge of its nature and with the clear and distinct intention of entering into the marriage, unless one of the spouses is induced to go through a form of marriage with the other by threats or duress or in a state of intoxication or in an erroneous belief as to the nature of the ceremony and without any real consent to the marriage. That was a case where the plaintiff who was a Naikin or a dancing girl by profession, and was in the keeping of several persons as mistress from time to time, was married to the defendant. The defendant contended that the marriage was null and void and of no legal effect because of certain representations made to him by the plaintiff or on her behalf and with her consent, which according to him were false. The representation were that the plaintiff was the widow of one Ramchandra Kamat, that she was a Brahmin by caste, that she was a person of good character, and that she was willing to live with the defendant at Ujjain. The defendant also alleged in that case that the plaintiff suppressed from him the fact that she was a Naikin by profession, and the fact of her having been in the keeping of more than one person prior to her meeting the defendant in Bombay. Even then, this Court held that such a fraudulent misrepresentation or concealment did not affect the validity of the marriage. Coming to the cases decided after the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, came into force, in AIR 1959 Cal 778, the allegations of the husband was that during the course of the negotiations of the marriage, the respondents represented to him that the wife Lajjabati Devi was of sound health and was not suffering from any disease. However after the marriage it was discovered that she was suffering from Tuberculosis from some time before the marriage was gone through. Though this case was decided also on the point that there was no allegation in the plaint that the alleged fraud was perpetrated at the time of the solemnization of the marriage, the Calcutta High Court observed that the marriage, according to Hindu Law, not being a contract, the consent at the first stage though obtained by fraud cannot affect the validity of the marriage. In AIR 1964 Punj 359, the allegation was that the respondent was of bad character before the solemnization of the marriage. The petitioner alleged in that case that the negotiations for his marriage with the respondent took place between him and his father on the one hand, and the father of the respondent on the other, in the month of February 1955 at Jullundur, and the respondent's father assured him that she was a virgin. He was further assured that the character of the respondent was unblemished. On this assurance, his consent for the marriage was obtained by the respondent. The Punjab High Court held that the fact that the respondent was of bad character before the solemnization of the marriage could not be a ground for the annulment of the marriage, because fraud as a ground for the annulment of the marriage under the Hindu Law is limited only to those cases where the consent of the petitioner at the solemnization of the marriage was obtained by some sort of deception. It is not used in a general way and on every misrepresentation or concealment, the marriage cannot be dissolved. In that case, the Punjab High Court also found that because there was a specific Cl. (d) of Section 12 (1) dealing with such a matter, it indicated that the Legislature did not intend that the past conduct of the respondent, except what is mentioned in Cl. (d), should become a ground for the dissolution of the marriage. Similarly, in Surjit Kumar v. Smt. Raj Kumari, AIR 1967 Punj 172, the allegation was that the girl had an unchaste career and this fact was not disclosed to the husband. On the contrary, it was generally represented to him that the girl was good. The Punjab High Court held that a general observation by the relation of the girl at the time of engagement to the effect that the girl was good did not amount to obtaining consent of the husband by force or fraud within the meaning of Section 12 (1) (c) of the Hindu Marriage Act. They were not obliged to disclose to the husband or his relations, without any enquiry from them about the old unchastity of the girl, even if it was known to them. Merely keeping quiet about such past history would not amount to obtaining the consent of the husband to marriage by fraud. If the husband attached so much value to the past unchastity of his would-be wife, he should have made enquiries on his own or from the girl's relations at the time of the negotiation of the marriage. It is only then he should be able to show that though the relations of the girl were aware of her past unchastity, they misled him. In this case, Rattigan on Divorce was relied upon by the learned Judge and is quoted at page 173. It is in these words:—

spect to traits or defects of character, habits, temper, reputation, bodily health, and the like, is not sufficient ground for avoiding a marriage. The parties must take the burden of informing themselves by acquaintance and satisfactory enquiry before entering into a contract of the first importance to themselves and to society, in general"

These decisions, therefore, before and after the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, came into force, definitely show that the Indian Contract Act, 1872, does not apply to the marriage under the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, and that the word "fraud" used in Section 12 (1) (c) of the Hindu Marriage Act does not mean any fraudulent representation or concealment. The test to be applied is whether there is any real consent to the solemnization of the marriage.

14. The learned Counsel Mr. Paranjape has, however, relied upon Bimla Bai v. Shankerlal, AIR 1959 Madh Pra 8. In that case, the alleged fraudulent misrepresentation was that the father of the bridegroom, who was his illegitimate son, represented that the bridegroom was his son meaning thereby a legitimate son. The Madhya Pradesh High Court held that there was misrepresentation which amounted to fraud and consequently the marriage which was induced by it was liable to be set aside. With respect, I am unable to agree with this view. In the first place, if the parties freely consented with knowledge of the nature of the marriage and with clear and distinct intention of entering into the marriage, the non-disclosure or concealment of caste would not amount to fraud. Moreover, in my opinion, on general considerations of public policy, misrepresentation as to caste should not be held fatal to a marriage under the Hindu Law, much more so when the marriage is under the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, which applies to any person who is a Hindu as defined under Section 2 of that Act.

15. I am, therefore, of the opinion, that the Indian Contract Act, 1872, does not apply to a marriage under the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955. Section 12 (1) (c) of the Hindu Marriage Act does not speak of fraud in any general way or of every misrepresentation or concealment which may be fraudulent. A person who freely consents to a solemnization of the marriage under the Hindu Marriage Act with the other party in accordance with customary ceremonies, that is, with knowledge of the nature of the ceremonies and intention to marry, cannot object to the validity of the marriage on the ground of fraudulent representation or concealment. Moreover, in the present case, the fraud alleged is non-disclosure or concealment of epilepsy from which the respondent was suffering since before her marriage, and false representation that she was healthy. I have found that the type of epilepsy she was suffering from is curable. I am also, therefore, of the opinion that non-disclosure or concealment of such curable epilepsy and false representation that the respondent was healthy does not amount to fraud within the meaning of that word used in Section 12 (1) (c) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955. The petitioner, therefore, has failed to prove that his consent was obtained by the respondent or her relations by fraud.

16. In this view of the case, it is unnecessary to go into the questions whether fraud was discovered on 26th June 1962 or on 2nd July 1962 or thereabout and further whether after the discovery of the alleged fraud, the petitioner with full consent lived with the respondent as her husband. However, both these questions being argued before me, I would briefly discuss them.

17. As regards the discovery of the fraud, the petitioner has said in his evidence that Dr. Otturkar told his father on 26th June 1962 that the respondent was suffering from epilepsy. Dr. Otturkar gave this opinion because the petitioner's father approached him with the prescription, Ex. 179, given by Dr. Sardesai. However, Dr. Otturkar also told the petitioner's father that he would get the opinion confirmed by Dr. Sardesai who was treating the respondent. The evidence of Dr. Otturkar shows that two or three days thereafter, that is to say, on or about 28th or 29th June 1962, Dr. Otturkar discussed the illness of the respondent with Dr. Sardesai, and the latter told him that the respondent was suffering from epilepsy since before her marriage. 2 or 3 days thereafter, Dr. Otturkar met the petitioner and his father in the latter's shop where he reported to them what Dr. Sardesai told him about the illness of the respondent. Thus, according to the petitioner, he discovered the alleged fraud on 1st or 2nd July 1962 when he came to know from Dr. Otturkar that the respondent was suffering from epilepsy since before her marriage. It is contended on behalf of the respondent that in fact the alleged fraud was discovered by the petitioner on 26th June 1962 when Dr. Otturkar went through the prescription, Ex. 179, issued by Dr. Sardesai, and on receiving the information from the petitioner's father that the respondent was getting fits since after the marriage, Dr. Otturkar told the petitioner and his father that it was a case of epilepsy. In my opinion, what was discovered by the petitioner on 26th June 1962 was that the respondent was suffering from epilepsy. Before Dr. Otturkar discussed the illness of the respondent with Dr. Sardesai and learnt from him that the respondent was suffering from epilepsy since before her marriage, there could be no discovery of fraud, because the fraud alleged is that the fact that the respondent was suffering from epilepsy even before her marriage with the petitioner was concealed from the petitioner and his relations at the time of the marriage. Obviously, therefore, the petitioner could come to know that the respondent was suffering from epilepsy since before her marriage only after Dr. Otturkar had a talk about it with Dr. Sardesai and reported the talk to the petitioner and his father on 1st or 2nd July 1962. In my opinion, therefore, the fraud was discovered on 1st or 2nd July 1962 and not on 26th June 1962. The petitioner has also stated in his evidence that he discovered the fraud on 2nd July 1962 after Dr. Otturkar reported the talk he had with Dr. Sardesai to him and his father, which he did on 1st or 2nd July 1962.

18. The question then arises whether after the fraud was discovered on 1st or 2nd July 1962, the petitioner lived with the respondent as her husband with free consent. In this connection, the learned Counsel Mr. Paranjape has drawn my attention to the evidence of the petitioner, where he has said that immediately after he came to know from Dr. Otturkar that the respondent was suffering from epilepsy since before her marriage, he straightway went home and on the very day told her to leave his house. The petitioner wants us to believe that at that time the respondent threatened him. But at the same time, he also says that she kept quiet. He further says that on that day he developed hate and aversion towards the respondent. Further, according to the petitioner, on the very day, that is to say, on 2nd July 1962, he also wrote a letter to the respondent's father accusing him of this fraud. The learned Counsel Mr. Paranjape says this letter is deliberately kept back by the respondent. It seems to me, however, that such a letter was never written by the petitioner to the respondent's father. In the first place, he could have retained a copy thereof as he retained the copy of the telegram which he sent to the respondent's father on 6th July 1962 immediately after he left the respondent at the house of the latter's sister. Secondly, we have on the record a very strong letter written by the respondent's father to the petitioner on 4th July 1962 (Vide Ex. 142). If the petitioner had written any letter on 2nd July 1962, surely the respondent's father would have received it on 4th July 1962. In fact, the grievance of the respondent's father in the letter, Ex. 142, is that he had written so many letters to the petitioner, but he did not give reply even to a single letter. The question, therefore, is whether the petitioner's evidence that he developed hatred and aversion towards the respondent since 1st or 2nd July 1962, and therefore, he did not live with the respondent as her husband with free consent, can be accepted. It is in evidence that since after the marriage the petitioner and the respondent were allotted a separate room in the house. Presumably, both of them used to sleep in that room even after 2nd July 1962. At any rate, the petitioner nowhere says that since 2nd July 1962 he and the respondent started sleeping separately in the same house and not in the same room. Thirdly, the evidence on the record definitely shows, and I agree with the learned Judge, that the petitioner took the respondent to the house of her sister on 6th July 1962 and left her there not because there was any discovery of the alleged fraud, but because the letter, Ex. 142, upset the petitioner. Now, a perusal of the letter would show that any young man in place of the petitioner would get exasperated on receipt of such a letter. Fourthly, it is significant that even the notice, Ex. 137, given by the petitioner to the respondent through his Advocate, shows that the grievance of the petitioner was that the respondent left him and was not prepared to live with him. Lastly, the respondent has said in her evidence that till 6th July 1962 the petitioner had sexual relations with her. It is true that the petitioner has denied this in his evidence and has alleged that since 2nd July 1962 he had no sexual relations with the respondent. However, considering all the facts and circumstances in this case, I am of the opinion that even after the discovery of the alleged fraud on 2nd July 1962, the petitioner lived with the respondent as her husband with full consent. I have no doubt in my mind that if the petitioner had not received the letter, Ex. 142, from the respondent's father, he would not have taken her to the house of her sister and would have continued to live with her as her husband, even though she was suffering from epilepsy. In this connection, the learned Counsel Mr. Paranjape, relying on Rajani Prabhakar Lokur v. Prabhakar Lokur, 59 Bom LR 1169, at p. 1172 = (AIR 1958 Bom 264) has argued that "living as husband" within the meaning of that expression used in Section 12 (2) (a) (ii) of the Hindu Marriage Act, means living continuously for an appreciable period. He points out that the expression "living in adultery" is interpreted in the above case meaning a continuous course of adulterous life as distinguished from one or two lapses from virtue. I cannot agree. In the first place, the expression which the learned Judge were interpreting in the above case was "living in adultery", while the expression used in Section 12 (2) (a) (ii) is "the petitioner has, with his or her full consent, lived with the other party to the marriage as husband or wife." The observations, therefore, in the aforesaid case are of no assistance to us. It seems to me that the expression "the petitioner has, with his full consent, lived with the other party to the marriage as husband" emphasizes living as husband with full consent for whatever period it may be, provided the alleged fraud is condoned. If the husband or the wife as the case may be, overlooks the alleged fraud and condones it, with the result that there is a reconciliation, whatever may be the period, the petitioner can be said to have lived with full consent with the other party to the marriage as husband or wife as the case may be. In other words, the condition laid down in Section 12 (2) (a) (ii) of the Hindu Marriage Act does not depend upon the lapse of any time after the discovery of the alleged fraud. In fact, if the fraud is condoned and there is a reconciliation, such a reconciliation may be called with full consent. If the evidence shows that the husband or the wife, as the case may be, after the fraud was discovered, lived together for whatever period as wife and husband with full consent, it would be sufficient for not entertaining the petition for annulling the marriage. I am, therefore, of the opinion that on this ground also, the petition was rightly dismissed by the lower Courts.

19. The learned Counsel Mr. Paranjape also referred to the petitioner's claim for judicial separation on the ground of alleged cruelty. Now, in the first place, in the original petition, the ground of cruelty was not taken by the petitioner. Even after the amendment by Ex. 101, what the petitioner alleged was that he was treated by the respondent with such cruelty as to cause a reasonable apprehension in his mind that it would be harmful or injurious for the petitioner to live with her. He did not allege in the petition any fact regarding the nature of the cruelty and how he could say that the respondent treated him with any such cruelty. Even in the lower appellate Court, the learned Judge has observed that this ground was not seriously pressed and rightly so, because there is absolutely no evidence in this case to prove any cruelty as required by Section 10 (1) (b) of the Hindu Marriage Act. The learned Counsel Mr.

Paranjape has argued that the fact that the respondent was suffering from epilepsy was sufficient to say that the petitioner was suffering from tremendous mental pain because of the illness of the respondent. Now, in every case when a wife suffers from any serious illness, the husband goes through mental agony, but can it be said that therefore the ailing wife treats her husband with cruelty within the meaning of that word used in Section 10 (1) (b) of the Act? The learned Counsel also pointed out that the allegations made by the father of the respondent in the letter, Ex. 142, also added to this cruelty. Now, I have already pointed out that the petitioner received the letter on 6th July 1962 and on the very day, he took the respondent to the house of her sister and left her there. It is, therefore, impossible to hold that the letter, Ex. 142, also added to the alleged cruelty. In fact, the requirement of Section 10 (1) (b) is that the treatment given by husband or wife as the case may be, to the other party must amount to cruelty, and there is no evidence in this case that the respondent had treated the petitioner with such cruelty, much less can it be said that it caused a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the petitioner that it would be harmful or injurious for him to live with her. I, therefore, do not see any substance in this case either.

20. The result, therefore, is that the decree passed by the lower Court is confirmed and the appeal is dismissed. The appellant-petitioner to pay the costs of this appeal to the respondent and bear his own.

Appeal dismissed.

A. F. A. D. No. 143 of 1962, (with Second Appeal No. 336 of 1962), D/- 17-6-1970, from decision of K. R. Powar, Asst. J., at Kolhapur in Appeal No. 586 of 1959.

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), Section 11 — Res judicata — Applicability to execution proceedings.

The section and its explanations do not apply to execution proceedings but the general principles of res judicata embodied in the section are applicable to execution proceedings. (1884) ILR 6 All 269 (PC) and AIR 1953 SC 65, Rel. on. (Para 11)

(B) Civil P. C. (1908), Section 11 Explanation IV — Execution application — Defence of limitation not raised — Grant of relief — Implied decision — Whether res judicata in subsequent execution proceedings.

When to an execution application the judgment-debtor does not raise a defence of bar of limitation and the executing court grants relief as prayed, it amounts to a decision by executing court that the application is not barred by limitation. That decision becomes binding on the judgment-debtor and operates as res judicata in subsequent execution proceedings and the judgment-debtor cannot plead in those proceedings that the previous application was barred by limitation and could not operate as a step-in-aid. JUDGMENT:— These two companion appeals raise a short point as to whether objection to the execution taken by the respondent-judgment-debtor on the ground of limitation is barred by constructive res judicata.

2. Although the decree-holders in these two cases are different, the Respondent-Judgment-debtor is common to both. The facts on which the above question arises are almost similar. It would be enough therefore, if the facts in the case in which Second Appeal No. 147 of 1962 arises are stated. They are as follows:—

3. A money decree was obtained by the appellant against the respondent on 31-7-1939. The decree made the decretal amount payable by annual instalments and it contained a default clause to the effect that in default of payment of any two instalments, the entire balance due under the decree would be payable at once. The judgment-debtor having committed default in payment of the very first two instalments, the decree-holder filed an application for execution within three years from the date of default to realise the entire decretal amount. That darkhast was infructuous and was disposed of on 12-10-1943. A second darkhast which was filed by the decree-holder on 13-10-1944 also came to be disposed of on 6-4-1945 without any success. In the other case the first darkhast which was filed on 24-1-1952 (sic) by the decree-holder was disposed of on 27-3-1945 as being infructuous. In the meantime the Bombay Agricultural Debtors Relief Act having come into force on 1-5-1945, the decree-holders made an application on 31-10-1945 to the Special Court established under that Act for adjustment of the decretal debt, provided the judgment-debtor was found to be an agriculturist within the meaning of that Act. In both the cases that application was disposed of on 27-2-1954 on the ground that the judgment-debtor was not an agriculturist. Thereafter the decree-holder filed a fresh darkhast on 6-9-1956 in the Civil Judge's Court at Kurandwad for realisation of the decretal debt by arrest and detention of the judgment-debtor in civil prison. It may be mentioned here that under Section 52 of the B. A. D. R. Act, the period during which a proceeding under that Act was pending, has to be excluded in computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit or proceeding. Excluding, therefore, the period from 31-10-1945 to 27-2-1954 (inclusive of both days) during which the B. A. D. R. proceeding was pending, obviously this darkhast was filed beyond three years from 6-4-1945 on which date the last darkhast was disposed of by the Civil Court and was, therefore, barred by limitation under Article 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908.

4. A notice under O. 21, R. 37, Civil Procedure Code was issued to the judgment-debtor in this darkhast to show cause against his detention in civil prison. He raised certain contentions such as that his ordinary place of residence was within the jurisdiction of the Civil Court at Ichalkaranji, and hence the Kurundwad Court had no jurisdiction to execute the decree against him. It may, however, be mentioned here that contention that this darkhast was barred by limitation was not raised by the judgment-debtor. After hearing both sides, the executing court ultimately made an order to issue warrant of arrest against the respondent. It, however, appears that thereafter the decree-holder having informed the court that he did not wish to prosecute the darkhast further, it came to be disposed of on 26-11-1957.

5. The decree-holder thereafter got the decree transferred for execution to the Court of Civil Judge (Junior Division) at Ichalkaranji and on 3-4-1958 filed a fresh darkhast which has given rise to this appeal seeking to realise the decretal amount by attachment and sale of the property of the Judgment-debtor.

6. The Judgment-debtor in response to the notice under Order XXI, Rule 22, Code of Civil Procedure, inter alia, contended that the execution was barred by limitation. In this respect his specific contention was that the previous darkhast which was filed after the disposal of the B. A. D. R. proceeding, having been filed beyond three years after the date of the disposal of the darkhast filed prior to the initiation of the B. A. D. R. proceeding, the first mentioned execution application was barred by limitation, and consequently, it could not be treated as a step-in-aid of execution and therefore, the present darkhast was also barred by limitation.

7. On behalf of the decree-holder, it was contended that this contention not having been raised in the previous darkhast, the same was barred by constructive res judicata in the present darkhast proceeding.

8. Both the courts below having upheld the contention of the judgment-debtor, the decree-holder in each case has preferred these second appeal.

9. It was urged on behalf of the appellants that both the Courts below were in error in holding that the judgment-debtor's plea on the point of limitation was not barred by constructive res judicata. The only question that, therefore, arises in this appeal is whether the objection to execution raised by the judgment-debtor on the ground that the previous darkhast application which was filed immediately before the filing of the present execution application is barred by constructive res judicata.

10. Section 11 along with its explanations embodies the doctrine of res judicata. It provides that no Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title, in a court competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been, subsequently raised, and has been heard and finally decided by such court. Out of the six different explanations which have been appended to this section, only explanation IV is material. Under that explanation any matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of defence or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit. In other words, under this explanation even if a particular matter was not raised in the pleadings by the parties in the former suit, still it would operate as res judicata in the subsequent suit provided such matter ought to have been made ground of defence or attack in such former suit.

11. From the language of the above provision, it cannot be disputed that this section and its explanations do not in terms, apply to execution proceedings. It is however, well settled that the general principles of res judicata as embodied in this section are applicable to execution proceedings as well. In Ram Kirpal v. Rupkuari, (1884) ILR 6 All 269 (PC), it was pointed out that Section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code is not exhaustive and that the principle of res judicata still remains apart from the limited provision of the Code. Prior to that decision courts in India generally held that Section 13 of the Code of 1882 (Corresponding with the present section) was not applicable to execution proceedings. The Judicial Committee, however, in the above decision held that though the section in terms did not apply to execution proceedings, the principle of res judicata did apply to such proceedings. Subsequently, the Supreme Court has also in "Mohanlal Goenka v. Benoy Kishna Mukherjee, (AIR 1953 SC 65) held that the principle of constructive res judicata is applicable to execution proceedings as well. In view of these decisions, Mr. Shrikhande, the learned Advocate for the respondent-Judgment-debtor conceded this position, and he also conceded that the doctrine of constructive res judicata would even extend to a question of limitation. He, however, argued that this principle of constructive res judicata cannot be extended to a case where under the provisions of law an obligation is cast on the Court to dismiss a proceeding which is instituted before it after the prescribed period of limitation even though limitation has not been set up as a defence by the other side. In this connection Mr. Shrikhande referred to Section 3 of the Limitation Act, 1908, which governs to the present case inasmuch as this proceeding was started when that Act was in force. That section provides that subject to the provisions contained in Sections 4 to 25 (inclusive) every suit instituted, appeal preferred and application made, after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the first schedule shall be dismissed although limitation has not been set up as a defence. According to Mr. Shrikhande, even though the judgment-debtor did not plead bar of limitation in the previous darkhast, the executing Court, before which that darkhast was filed, was bound to examine whether the darkhast was filed beyond the period of limitation prescribed under Article 182 of the Limitation Act, and if on examination it was found that it was filed beyond three years from the date on which the previous darkhast application was disposed of, the Court was bound to dismiss it. It was, therefore, submitted by Mr. Shrikhande that in this case even if the judgment-debtor did not raise the plea of limitation, the previous execution application having been on the face of it filed after the expiry of three years from the date of disposal of the execution application filed next before it could not be treated as a step-in-aid. Admittedly, in the previous darkhast application, notice was issued to the judgment-debtor before any order was passed in the proceedings. In response to that notice, the judgment-debtor appeared and did file his contentions and did raise certain contentions. He, however, did not plead bar of limitation. Now, even if under Section 3 of the Limitation Act it was for the court to dismiss the darkhast if it found that it was filed beyond the period of limitation, still if this defect had escaped the notice of the court or its officials it was for the judgment-debtor to point it out to the Court, and if he did not do so, the judgment-debtor must thank himself. Since the court did not detect this defect, it must be said that impliedly the court held that the darkhast application was within limitation. The Court has jurisdiction to decide rightly as well as wrongly and if on the question of law, it gave a wrong finding, none-the-less it would operate as res judicata. It would not be open to the executing court to entertain the contention in the subsequent application and to go behind the order passed in the previous darkhast application and examine whether the previous darkhast was barred by limitation under Article 182, Clause 5, Column 3 of the Limitation Act, 1908. When a darkhast is filed before a Court what the Court would be required to see is whether the darkhast before it had been filed within three years from the date of the final order passed on an application made in accordance with law for execution previously. It need not go into the question as to whether the application next before it was made in time. It, therefore, follows that when the present darkhast was filed, all that the executing Court was required to do was to see whether the present darkhast was filed within three years from the final order passed in the previous darkhast. It is the judgment-debtor who wants to raise this question. But since he had not raised that question in the previous darkhast, as already pointed out, it follows that impliedly it must be held the executing court in that darkhast held that that darkhast was not barred by limitation, and therefore, that finding which was impliedly given by the Court would be binding on the judgment-debtor.

12. The lower Courts appear to have relied on the Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court in: Gendalal v. Hazarilal, ILR 58 All 313 = (AIR 1936 All 21) (FB), but on a careful reading of the entire report of the case, it appears to me that the ratio of this Full Bench decision has not been properly understood by the lower Courts. In that case a money-decree was passed against the applicant before the High Court on the 12th of March 1928. Thereafter the judgment-creditor made an application to the Court under Order XXI, Rule 2 to certify payment of Rs. 50/- by the Judgment-debtor under the decree, which was said to have been made on 11th November 1930. That payment was certified on 29th November 1932 without notice to the judgment-debtor. Thereafter an application for execution of the decree was made on 15th February 1933. This application was obviously barred by limitation, but for the fact that the judgment-debtor was said to have made a payment of Rs. 50/- as stated above. A notice was issued to the judgment-debtor in this execution proceeding under Order XXI, Rule 22, Civil Procedure Code, but the Process-server returned the notice reporting that the judgment-debtor had refused to take it. A note was, therefore, made on the proceeding that the judgment-debtor was duly served and as he did not raise any objection on the score of limitation, the application be deemed to be within time, and registered and put up subsequently before the Court for proper orders. As the relief claimed by the decree-holder was for execution of the decree by arrest of the judgment-debtor, warrant of arrest was ordered to issue and the judgment-debtor was brought under arrest. It was then that he pleaded that the execution application was barred by limitation. His objection was rejected on the ground that he had not taken it after notice under Rule 22 of the Civil Procedure Code was served on him. Then he was committed to prison, but was released within a week on non-payment of the subsistence allowance by the decree-holder. The judgment-debtor then filed petition of objections to the executing court, protesting against the execution proceedings on the ground of limitation. This objection having been rejected, the judgment-debtor went in revision to the High Court in which the Full Bench gave the above decision. It was held that the objection raised by the judgment-debtor on the ground of limitation was maintainable even though he had failed to raise it in reply to notice under Order XXI, Rule 22, Civil Procedure Code. Sulaiman, C. J., who delivered the main Judgment formulated five propositions of which fourth proposition is material for our purpose. That proposition was:—

(4) "Where no objection to the execution is taken but the application becomes partly or wholly fructuous and such fructification necessarily involves the assumption that the application was made within limitation, then after such fructification the judgment-debtor is debarred by the principle of res judicata from raising the question that that application was not within limitation."

This proposition clearly shows that where a judgment-debtor fails to raise any objection to the execution of the decree and the Court proceeds to issue process for execution of the decree and the application for execution partly or wholly fructifies, the judgment-debtor is precluded from raising the question that the application was barred by limitation, because the very fact that the court orders process to issue on the execution application implies that it came to the conclusion on merits that the application was within limitation.

13. Now, Mr. Shrikhande contended that in order that an application for execution can be said to have become partly or wholly fructuous, the decree-holder must realise the fruits of the decree either in part or in whole. According to Mr. Shrikhande, where after the court grants the relief prayed for by the decree-holder, and orders process to issue, if the decree-holder drops execution proceedings without actually realising the fruits of the decree, either partly or wholly, the execution application must be deemed to be infructuous, and therefore, this proposition set out above, would not be applicable and the judgment-debtor would not be precluded from raising a plea of limitation. It is difficult to accept this argument. Application for execution is fructuous when the court grants relief asked for by the judgment-creditor no matter whether actually the decree-holder succeeds in realising the fruits of the decree. In the present case, admittedly in previous darkhast relief claimed by the decree-holder was arrest and detention of the judgment-debtor in civil prison. The executing court granted that relief and ordered process to issue for arrest and detention of the judgment-debtor. It was at that stage that the judgment-creditor, for some reason or the other, thought of dropping the proceeding for the time being. It, therefore, cannot be said that the previous darkhast application was infructuous. As a matter of fact, it was fructuous although the judgment-debtor was not actually put in civil prison.

14. The above argument advanced on behalf of the judgment-debtor appears to have appealed to the lower Courts and they have come to the conclusion that since actually the judgment-debtor was not put in prison in execution of the decree, the previous darkhast was infructuous, and therefore, the judgment-debtor's plea on the point of limitation was not barred by constructive res judicata.

15. This view taken by the lower Court is obviously incorrect. It must, therefore be held that the plea raised by the judgment-debtor in the present proceeding that the previous darkhast was barred by limitation, and consequently it could not be taken as a step-in-aid of execution, and hence the present darkhast, also is barred by limitation is barred by constructive res judicata.

16. Mr. Shrikhande lastly submitted that the judgment-debtors should not be saddled with costs. But, in my opinion, since the decree-holders have succeeded, they are entitled to their costs throughout. Had it not been for the fact that the judgment-debtor took this untenable plea, the decree-holders would not have been required to come to this court for getting the relief to which they were entitled.

17. Both the appeals are, therefore, allowed. Orders passed by the lower Court are set aside and the execution proceedings are sent back to the executing court for proceeding further according to law. The respondent in both these appeals to pay the costs of the appellants throughout.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT:— This is an appeal on behalf of the original defendants 1-A, 1-B and 1-C against the judgment and decree dated June 22, 1967, made by the Principal Judge of the City Civil Court declaring that the gala No. 10 mentioned in the plaint had been validly assigned to the plaintiff under the deed of assignment dated September, 19, 1958, and further declaring that these appellants were trespassers and not entitled to remain in possession of a portion of the above gala No. 10 and granting a decree in ejectment as against these appellants and further granting compensation at the rate of Rs. 20/- per month as from April 19, 1958, till delivery of possession and costs of the suit.

2. The plaintiff's case was that defendants 2 and 3 i.e., Chhotu Balu and Hansu Murat were joint tenants of the above gala No. 10. These two persons resided at and in a portion of the above gala and also carried on their business of gas welding in the gala. These two persons sold to the plaintiff under a deed of assignment dated April 19, 1958, their business of gas welding together with all stock-in-trade, fixtures, furniture and goodwill thereof along with the tenancy rights of the business premises as incidental to the said running concern for the price of Rs. 2,500/-.

3. One Zainullah, the original defendant, was occupying a portion of this gala even prior to the date of the above assignment as licensee of Chhotu Balu and Hansu Murat. The plaintiff granted leave and licence and permission to Zainullah to continue in occupation of the portion already occupied by him in consideration of Rs. 20/- per month payable by Zainullah as licence fee to the plaintiff. In the correspondence that had taken place Zainullah falsely contended that the portion in his occupation had been obtained by him under a deed of assignment dated July 10, 1957, whereby a running business was sold as a going concern to Zainullah by Chhotu Balu. The plaintiff had duly revoked the licence granted by him to Zainullah and he accordingly claimed that Zainullah was a trespasser by reason of the termination of the licence. That was one part of the cause of action mentioned in the suit. The other part was that the assignment relied upon by Zainullah was illegal and in violation of law. For this reason, the plaintiff claimed that Zainullah was a trespasser. The plaintiff claimed compensation at the rate of Rs. 20/- per month aggregating to Rs. 120/- for the period April 19 to October 18, 1958. The plaintiff craved leave to file a further suit against Zainullah for damages for wrongful occupation from and after October 18, 1958. He accordingly claimed declaration about the validity of his assignment and that Zainullah was a trespasser and for a decree in ejectment and for money decree for Rs. 120 and a further sum of Rs. 1320/- and interest and costs.

4. Zainullah had filed his written statement dated February 2, 1959. Before the trial could take place, Zainullah died on October 15, 1965. Fresh writs of summonses were issued and served on the present defendants 1-A, 1-B and 1-C. They were the heirs and legal representatives of Zainullah. These defendants filed their own written statement dated June 22, 1967, and without prejudice to the pleas and defences raised in the written statement of Zainullah further pleaded that "the deceased defendant was deemed to be the sub-tenant in respect of the suit premises and that these defendants are protected under the provisions of the Bombay Rent Act. * * * there had been no privity of contract between the plaintiff and the deceased defendant and the present defendants and that there is no cause of action against these defendants". The pleas taken in the written statement of Zainullah which were adopted by the present defendants were as follows:—

5. That Chhotu Balu and Hansu Murat had executed a valid and legal agreement in favour of the plaintiff for sale of business of gas welding with tenancy rights was denied. The assignment was not registered and had been executed to defraud Zainullah of his rights in the portion of the gala occupied by him. The assignment did not create any right, title and interest in the tenancy rights. Zainullah was not occupying the suit portion of the gala as a licensee and in that connection the allegations of facts made in the plaint were denied. He denied any privity of contract with the plaintiff. He denied that the plaintiff had the ownership of and title to the gala No. 10. He denied that the plaintiff was entitled to eject him from the suit premises. He contended that the assignment in which he relied was a valid assignment and it was binding on the plaintiff. He denied that he was a trespasser. He denied the plaintiff's right to the reliefs claimed in the suit.

6. Hearing of the suit reached before the learned Judge below from June 22, 1967. Advocate Mr. Rajani then appeared for the present defendants and submitted draft issues. The learned Judge appears to have brushed aside the draft as not raising proper issues. He raised the following six issues:—

1. Whether there is any privity of contract between the plaintiff and the original 1st defendant?

2. Whether the original 1st defendant is the licensee of the plaintiff in respect of the suit premises as alleged?

3. If the answer to issue No. 2 is in the affirmative, whether defendants Nos. 1A, 1B and 1C are liable to hand over possession to the plaintiff?

4. Whether the plaintiff is entitled to any compensation and/or damages as claimed?

5. Whether the plaintiff is entitled to any relief? If so, what?

6. Generally?

7. It may at once be stated that it appears from the discussion contained in paragraph 3 of his judgment that during the hearing of the suit and whilst he was delivering his judgment, the learned Judge completely failed to notice that in the written statement filed by the present defendants the plea that Zainullah had become sub-tenant in respect of the suit premises and that accordingly the present defendants were protected under the provisions of the Bombay Rent Act had been raised. He did not formulate any issue in connection with the above plea. He indulged into discussion on the question of Zainullah having become sub-tenant of the suit premises on the footing that the question of sub-tenancy had been orally discussed by Mr. Rajani from the Bar. He observed: "In the absence of any such plea having been made in the written statement (of Zainullah), I am unable to accept the argument of Mr. Rajani that Zainullah was a lawful sub-tenant by reason of the Ordinance promulgated under the Rent Act." The learned Judge was in error in discussing and deciding this question without raising any issue in that connection in the first instance. The learned Judge was patently wrong in this connection in not referring to the written statement filed by the present defendants. The plea had been raised in the written statement of the present defendants and an issue in that connection was liable to be formulated.

8. Mr. Vyas for the plaintiff attempted to contend that since a portion of the tenement consisting of gala No. 10 only had been in occupation of Zainullah and the defendants, it was patent that in law sub-tenancy could not exist. The argument was that sub-tenancies could only be created in respect of an entire tenement. As at present advised, I am not aware that such is the law but I do not find it necessary to decide that question at this stage. Mr. Vyas further submitted that the plea of sub-tenancy was not raised by Zainullah in his written statement. It was, therefore, not permissible for the present defendants to raise such a plea in their written statement. The submission was that legal representatives of Zainullah could not raise this new plea by their written statement. Now, it is quite patent that the declaration, the ejectment and the monetary claim for which decree was claimed in the suit were personal reliefs claimed against the present defendants. It is true that these defendants have been added in the suit in consequence of the death of Zainullah and as his heirs and legal representatives. Even so, it is not true that the reliefs claimed against them are only in the character of their being legal representatives. It requires to be emphasised and repeated that all the reliefs claimed in the suit are claimed personally as against these defendants. I have no doubt that these defendants were entitled to raise by their written statement pleas contrary to and inconsistent with the case made by Zainullah in his written statement. It is well established law that defendants who are brought on the record as legal representatives of one of the defendants before any decree is passed in the suit must have a right to raise such pleas as they desire in defence to the reliefs claimed against them. The decree claimed against them must be personal. Possibly, where decree is not claimed against them personally and relief can only be granted to the extent of the estate come to their hands, there can be an argument that inconsistent defence may not be allowed to be raised. However, of this also I am not quite sure.

9. Now, it is abundantly clear that the learned Judge failed in his ordinary duty to frame an appropriate issue on this plea about sub-tenancy of the portion occupied by Zainullah and the defendants as raised in the written statement of these defendants.

10. As regards the question of licence and a contract having been made between Zainullah and the plaintiff for a licence and Zainullah being the licensee, the learned Judge proceeded to deliver his judgment by totally disregarding the oral evidence tendered on behalf of the parties. It is somewhat abnormal and extraordinary that the learned Judge proceeded to decide the question of existence of the alleged contract of licence without reference to the evidence tendered on behalf of the parties. The learned Judge has made findings in the affirmative on these questions in favour of the plaintiff by proceedings in a manner in which no Court of law should proceed. The findings made on these questions in the above manner are liable to be set aside in this appeal by my discussing the whole of the oral evidence tendered on behalf of the parties. I have however, not thought it appropriate to do so, because, after formulating appropriate issues as arose for decision, I propose to restore the suit for a fresh hearing before the trial Court.

This has become necessary because on the issues which arose the parties should be entitled to lead such further evidence as they desire. The issues framed can thus be finally disposed of only after the parties have the benefit of the opportunity of leading fresh evidence.

11. The learned Judge proceeded to make a finding that Zainullah must be a licensee and must have made a contract to remain in the suit premises as licensee merely on the ground that since the assignment on which Zainullah relied was not a valid and/or sufficient assignment and since the assignment on which the plaintiff relied was valid assignment, Zainullah could not be in occupation of the suit premises except as under a contract of licence made between the plaintiff and Zainullah. It is sufficient to state that the learned Judge has proceeded to decide this question in extremely improper manner and the method adopted by the learned Judge was such as the findings made by him must be set aside. I would have decided this question myself if I was not making an order of remand as already stated above. The learned Judge failed to formulate any issue as regards the defendants being trespassers on the suit premises. Even, so, he proceeded to make a finding that the defendants were trespassers. In spite of the fact that compensation was not claimed in the suit for occupation of the suit premises from and after October 18, 1958, and in that connection leave was claimed, the learned Judge made a decree in favour of the plaintiff for such compensation for the period ending with delivery of possession of the suit premises to the plaintiff. It is difficult to imagine how the learned Judge could proceed to pass such a decree when the claim was in fact not made in the plaint. For the simple reason that the claim was not made in the suit that decree is liable to be set aside.

12. At this stage, Mr. Vyas has intervened and applied that the plaintiff should be allowed to amend his plaint for making claims for further compensation. I have informed him that he must make such an application to the trial Court.

13. The issues which arose for decision in the suit were as follows:—

1. Whether under the assignment dated April 10, 1958, the plaintiff has in law become assignee of the right, title and interest of defendants Chhotu Balu and Hansu Murat as tenants of the gala No. 10 mentioned in the plaint?

2. Whether the above deed of assignment dated April 10, 1958 is for the reasons alleged in the written statement of the defendants 1A to 1C and/or otherwise in law invalid and of no effect?

3. Whether Zainullah was merely a licensee of the portion of gala No. 10 that was in occupation of Zainullah along with defendants 1A to 1C?

4. Whether the defendants 1A to 1C are trespassers in the above portion of gala No. 10?

5. Whether under the assignment dated July 10, 1957 Zainullah during his lifetime and defendants 1A to 1C thereafter were entitled to continue in occupation of the above portion of gala No. 10?

6. Whether, having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case, Zainullah during his lifetime and thereafter the defendants are entitled to continue in occupation of the above portion as sub-tenants?

7. Whether the plaintiff is entitled to the sum of Rs. 120/- claimed in prayer (e) of the plaint?

8. Whether the plaintiff is entitled to a sum of Rs. 1320 as claimed in prayer (f) of the plaint?

9. To what other reliefs is the plaintiff entitled?

10. Generally?

14. The issues as above which had properly arisen on the pleadings of the parties were not framed and have not been properly discussed and decided by the trial Court. The decree passed by the trial Court is set aside. The suit is remanded back to the trial Court with a direction that the trial Court will allow parties to lead such further evidence as they desire and decide the issues as formulated above in due course. The plaintiff must pay costs of this appeal. Since the suit is now of very old date, the trial Court will give necessary directions and will dispose of the same before the end of July 1971.

Case remanded.

ORDER:— This is an application to revise an order passed by the Civil Judge (J. D.) Shahada, dated 8th October 1969, granting an application by the defendant that one Kamalabai be added as a party to this suit.

2. The facts of the plaintiff's case are that the property in question originally belonged to one Dwarkadas Vithaldas, from whom the plaintiff purchased it by a registered sale deed dated 30th March 1964. The defendant was a tenant occupying a part of the ground floor of the said property and the plaintiff by his notice to quit dated 28th September 1967 terminated that tenancy and filed the present suit on the 3rd of January 1968 to eject the defendant. On the 14th of March 1968 the defendant filed a written statement contending, inter alia, that the plaintiff had no title to the said property and that the owner thereof was Kamalabai the wife of the said Dwarkadas from whom the plaintiff claimed to have purchased the property. The defendant thereafter on the 7th of August 1969 made an application that the said Kamalabai be added as a party-defendant to this suit, and the learned Judge by his order dated 8th October 1969 under revision took the view that it was clear from the contention in the pleadings that Kamalabai had "some interest" in the suit property and was, therefore, a necessary party to the suit, that if Kamalabai was added as a party-defendant to the suit no prejudice would be caused to the plaintiff, and that the defendant's application for the addition of Kamlabai as a party-defendant to the suit should, therefore, be granted. It is from that order that the plaintiff has approached this court in revision. The application made by the defendant for the addition of the said Kamlabai is undoubtedly an application under Order 1, Rule 10 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, the terms of which are very wide and empower the court to add any person as a party to a suit, either on the application of one of the parties or even suo motu, if in its opinion that person ought to have been joined or his presence before the court is necessary in order to enable the court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit. The wide terms of Order 1, Rule 10 (2) have given rise to several conflicting decisions of various courts in regard to its interpretation, but having considered the authorities that were cited before me in the course of the hearing of this revision application, I think the following propositions emerge therefrom:—

1. That the question of addition of parties under Order 1, Rule 10, Civil P. C. is generally not one of initial jurisdiction of the Court, but of a judicial discretion which has to be exercised in view of all the facts and circumstances of a particular case (AIR 1958 SC 886 Paras 7, 13 and 14);

2. That in a suit relating to property, like the present one in order that a person may be added as a party, he should be shown to have a direct interest in the subject-matter of the litigation (AIR 1958 SC 886, paras 8 and 13);

3. In exercising its discretion under Order 1, Rule 10, Civil P. C. the court would not "ordinarily" add a party without the concurrence of the plaintiff. (41 Bom LR 249 at p. 256) = (AIR 1939 Bom 188). I am bound by that decision of a Division Bench of this court, and I respectfully agree with the same because the plaintiff is a dominus litis as far as the litigation in question is concerned. From this it would follow that it is only in exceptional cases that a party would be added as a party-defendant to the suit without the concurrence of the plaintiff (AIR 1969 Punj 57 para 9).

4. The court would add a person as a party-defendant to a suit without the concurrence of the plaintiff to that suit only where the party sought to be added is a necessary party as distinguished from a mere proper party. This is the view which a single Judge of the Punjab High Court has taken in the case of Banarasi-das v. Pannalal, AIR 1969 Punj 57, para 9 cited above, after considering the various authorities on the point, and it is a view with which I am in agreement, since a person can be joined as a party-defendant to a suit without the concurrence of the plaintiff only in exceptional cases, the only line that the court can draw to distinguish the ordinary rule from an exceptional case would be to distinguish between a "proper party" and a "necessary party". This distinction has been recognised in Order 1, Rule 10, Civil P. C. itself it has been held by a single judge of this court that a real owner is not a necessary party to a suit by the benamidar, but is only a proper party (1970-72 Bom LR 827).

5. A necessary party is, as has been stated in Order 1, Rule 10 (2), Civil P. C. itself a party whose addition is absolutely necessary in order to enable the court to adjudicate effectually and completely on the matter in controversy between the parties. That has been interpreted, in my opinion rightly, to mean that no decree could be passed in the suit without affecting the rights of the party who is sought to be added and the presence of that party is necessary for an effectual adjudication of the questions involved in the suit. It is only when both those conditions are fulfilled that a party could be said to be a necessary party to a suit (vide AIR 1971 Orissa 44; AIR 1960 Madh Pra 84 & (1956) 1 All ER 273).

6. In all the decisions cited above, the application to be added as a party was made by the party himself who was sought to be added and Mr. More on behalf of the appellant sought to distinguish those cases on that ground. In my opinion, however, if such party is a necessary party, as stated above it makes no difference as to who makes the application for the addition of such party, and indeed, under the very wide terms of Order 1, Rule 10 (2), Civil P. C. the court may even add such party suo motu.

3. Having regard to the legal propositions as formulated above, I must now proceed to consider whether, on the facts of the present case, Kamlabai is a necessary party to this suit in the sense, (1) that any decision in this suit is bound to affect her rights and (2) that her presence is necessary to effectually adjudicate upon the questions involved in this suit. There is nothing before the court, apart from certain bare statements made by the defendant in the written statement filed by him to show that Kamlabai has a direct interest in the subject-matter of this litigation or, for the matter of that, that she has any right at all in the property in question which would be affected by the decision given in this suit. I have had the written statement in this case officially translated and have perused the same carefully, and I find that there is no statement in the written statement that the property stands or has ever stood in the municipal and/or government records in the name of Kamlabai. The written statement only contains vague statements referring to her as "the landlord", and to her having rented out portions of the property and recovered rents. The written statement no doubt contains, in para 3 thereof, an averment that Kamlabai is the owner of the said property by adverse possession because of those acts, and because she has according to the defendant, been in possession of that property but those averments have no value at all when it is remembered that Kamlabai was after all the wife of the said Dwarkadas Vithaldas in whose name, according to the plaintiff, the property stood at all material times, particularly when Kamlabai herself does not say so and has not come forward to assert any right or title to the property in question. It is difficult to conceive of a case in which a third person can set up and prove a title by adverse possession in Kamlabai by reason of the acts alleged. It is significant indeed that not a single receipt given by Kamlabai for the rent alleged to have been recovered by her has been produced to show in whose name and on whose behalf rents were recovered and the receipts given. I, therefore, hold that on these bare and baseless averments in the written statement of the defendant, it has not been shown that Kamlabai has any direct interest, or for the matter of that any interest at all in the property in question, and the lower court has exercised its discretion unreasonably in ordering her to be added as a party to this suit. I am, therefore, entitled to interfere in revision with the exercise of that discretion by the lower court.

4. In the result, I make the rule absolute and set aside the order dated 8th October 1969 passed by the learned Civil Judge (J. D.) Shahada, in this case, and order that the defendant's application for amendment of the plaint by the addition of Kamlabai be dismissed. The defendant must pay the plaintiff's costs in both the courts.

Rule made absolute.

Court-fees Act (1870), Sch. 1, Art. 1
— Counter claim for equitable set-off —
Court-fee must be paid.

The term set-off in the article is not limited to legal set-off only. In S. 2 (c) of Bombay Court-fees Act also the term is not restricted only to legal set-off. A court-fee has, therefore, to be paid on the equitable set-off claimed by the defendant in his written statement. (X-Ref:—Bombay Court-fees Act (36 of 1959), Section 2 (c)). ORDER:— The only question that arises in this Revision Application is whether court-fees are payable in respect of an equitable set-off. The plaintiff has filed this suit as a building contractor for the recovery of over rupees one lakh, interest and costs. In paragraph 23 of the written statement filed on behalf of the defendant, a co-operative society which had entrusted the work of construction of certain buildings in Poona to the Plaintiff, it has been stated that the plaintiff had not done the work according to the contract and that many of the items in the contract had been left undone, and in para 31 of that written statement it is pleaded that loss had been caused to the defendants by reason thereof. It is further pleaded in the said paragraph that, although the loss was much more, the defendants were restricting their claim "by way of equitable set-off" to Rs. 50,000/-. The plaintiff thereafter filed an application dated 11th June 1968 (Ex. No. 11) in which, in addition to asking for particulars of the set-off claimed by the defendants, he prayed that the defendants' claim for set-off should be rejected for want of court-fees. On that the learned Civil Judge (S. D.) at Poona passed an order dated 3rd September 1968 directing the defendants to give particulars and ordering them to pay court-fees on the equitable set-off claimed by them on or before 13th September 1968. It is from that order that the defendants have approached this court in revision.

2. Apart from the fact that the defendants have, in terms, stated that the set-off claimed by them is an equitable set-off, it does sound in damages and, therefore, though they have sought to limit it to a specific amount, in my opinion, it is really a claim for an unascertained sum arising out of the same transaction and is in the nature of an equitable set-off. On behalf of the defendants reliance was placed on the decision of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Madan Garg v. Bohra Ram, AIR 1934 All 115 in which the view taken was that court-fee is not payable on an equitable set-off. The plaintiff in that case had sued for arrears of rent to which the defendant pleaded a set-off for the value of timber supplied by the defendant to the plaintiff as a legal set-off under Order 8, Rule 6, Civil P. C. The trial Court allowed that set-off though no court-fee had been paid thereon. On Revision, a single judge of the High Court, treated it as an equitable set-off and held that the trial court had not acted "illegally" in allowing the set-off observing as follows (at p. 117):—

"If however the set-off could be claimed as an equitable set-off there is no reason why the Court should not have allowed it without payment of a court-fee. A legal set-off requires a court-fee because it is a claim that might be established by a separate suit in which a court-fee would have to be paid. But there is no such fee required in the case of an equitable set-off which is for an amount that may equitably be deducted from the claim of the plaintiff where a court-fee has been paid on the gross amount. An equitable set-off may however only be claimed by the defendant for a claim arising out of the same transaction as the plaintiff's claim."

With respect to the learned judge who decided that case, I am unable to appreciate his reasoning in the passage quoted above. A legal set-off which must be for an ascertained amount may though it need not, arise out of the same transaction as the plaintiff's claim, and be in the nature of a deduction from the claim of the plaintiff. Even so, court-fee would have to be paid on the amount of the legal set-off, so claimed. On the other hand, an equitable set-off, though for an unascertained sum, may also be in respect of a claim that could be established by a separate suit in which court-fee would have to be paid. Neither the fact that an equitable set-off arises out of the same transaction as the plaintiff's claim, nor the fact that an equitable set-off would be for an amount that may be deducted from the claim of the plaintiff, can justify any distinction being made between an equitable set-off and a legal set-off in regard to liability to court-fees. I, therefore, do not agree with the view taken by the Allahabad High Court in Madan Mohan's case. It may be stated that, as against the view of the Allahabad High Court, the Nagpur, Madras and Calcutta High Courts have taken the view that court-fee is payable on an equitable set-off. It is, however, not necessary for me to deal with the decisions of those Courts in view of the fact that the question has been considered by two decisions of this Court, one of a single judge, and the other of a Division Bench approving of the view taken by the single judge, and I am in agreement with the view taken in those two cases. In the case of Wilrow v. Mahadeo Govind, 45 Bom LR 516 = (AIR 1943 Bom 227), the plaintiff sued the defendant for recovery of Rs. 544 in respect of rent, and the defendant claimed to set-off Rs. 800 being the cost of construction of an oven in the house which the plaintiff-landlord had agreed to pay. The question as to whether court-fees were payable on the defendant's set-off having arisen, Macklin, J. took the view that the defendant's claim was not really for an equitable set-off as contended by him, but was for an ascertained sum by way of legal set-off, and court-fees would, therefore, be payable by him thereon. The learned judge, however, also proceeded to consider the question of payment of court-fees on the assumption that the claim was a claim in the nature of an equitable set-off and took the view that, even so, court-fee would be payable by the defendant thereon. He did not agree with the view taken by the Allahabad High Court in the case of AIR 1934 All 115 referred to above, but agreed with the contrary view taken by the Madras High Court in the case of Lakshmanan v. Ramanathan, ILR 58 Mad 338 = (AIR 1935 Mad 115(1)) and rejected the contention of the learned advocate for the defendant that a claim to an equitable set-off does not require payment of court-fees. It does appear that, having regard to the view taken by Macklin, J. that the claim was really one by way of legal set-off, his observations on the question as to whether court-fees are payable on a claim by way of equitable set off are obiter dicta.

3. In the case of B. S. Lokhande v. Kashinath, C. R. A. No 566 of 1949, D/-17-1-1950 (Bom) the same question arose before a Division Bench consisting of Rajadhyaksha and Shah, JJ. The plaintiff in that case claimed a sum of Rupees 700 due at the foot of an account in respect of goods supplied to the defendants from time to time. Several defences were pleaded by the defendants in answer to that claim, one of them being that out of the goods supplied by the plaintiff many had been returned to him, and that those were valued at a sum of Rs. 1008 and the defendants, therefore, claimed a set-off in respect of those goods. In order however to bring the case within the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes at Poona, the defendants had reduced the claim for set-off to a sum of Rs. 1000. The learned Judge of the Court of Small Causes, however, took the view that the defendants were not entitled to plead the set-off without payment of the requisite court-fee as required by Art. 1 of Schedule I of the Court-fees Act, 1870. The matter having come to this Court in revision, Rajadhyaksha, J. delivering the judgment of the Bench distinguished an earlier decision of this Court in the case of Tayaballi v. Atmaram, (ILR 38 Bom 631) = (AIR 1914 Bom 299) on the ground that the said decision was governed by the law as it stood before Art. 1 Schedule I of the Court-fees Act, 1870, was amended, and then proceeded to consider the decision of Macklin, J. in the case of Wilrow v. Mahadeo Govind which has already been dealt with above and, in terms expressed agreement, with the view taken by Macklin, J. therein, observing that that was also the view that had been taken in various decisions by the Nagpur, Madras and Calcutta High Courts. In the course of the judgment, Rajadhyaksha, J., after expressing a doubt as to whether the set-off claimed in the said case by the defendants was an equitable one in so far as they had claimed a definite sum of Rupees 1000, stated that the claim should really be regarded as being a legal set-off and not an equitable one, and that there was no dispute that on a legal set-off court-fees would have to be paid. Thereafter, the learned judge stated that, even assuming that the claim was for an equitable set-off, the question would be whether, under the prevailing law, court-fees would have to be paid thereon. In my opinion, therefore, in the judgment in the case before the Division Bench also, the view taken in regard to payment of court-fees on an equitable set-off was in the nature of an obiter dictum.

4. I agree with the obiter dicta of Macklin, J. in Wilrow's case and of the Division Bench in Lokhande's case. On principle, if the plaintiff filing a suit for an unascertained sum of money by way of damages has to pay court-fees, there is no reason why a defendant who pleads a set-off in respect of an unascertained amount should not be called upon to pay court-fees. In Art. 1 of Sch. I of the Court-fees Act, 1870, it was stated that court-fees at the rate specified in that Article had to be paid on a plaint, written statement pleading a set-off or counter claim, and on certain other documents specified therein. The term "set-off" in that Article was not limited to a legal set-off. Under Section 2 (c) of the Bombay Court-fees Act, 1959, which came into force in this State on 1st August 1959, the term "plaint" is defined as including a written statement pleading a set-off or counterclaim, and there is no reason whatever for restricting the term "set-off" in that definition to a legal set-off. The position has, therefore, remained unchanged after the coming into effect of the Bombay Court-fees Act, 1959, and both on principle as well as on the view taken in the obiter dicta in the two decisions of this court referred to above, which were based on the Court-fees Act, 1870, and with which I am in agreement, I hold that court-fees are payable not merely on a legal set-off, but on an equitable set-off as well. The view taken by the lower court in the present case is, therefore, correct and this Revision Petition must be dismissed with costs. The petitioner must pay the costs of the Government Pleader also. I may, for the sake of clarification, state that no point except the point in regard to the liability to pay court-fees on the equitable set-off claimed by the defendant was argued before me.

Petition dismissed.

Consideration like hardship cannot affect the construction of a statutory provision when the intention of the legislature is manifest from the language used in and the tenor of the enactment. It is a platitude that hard cases make bad law. In such cases, the remedy, if any, lies with the legislature and not with the court which must interpret an enactment as it stands. (Para 4)

Raghavendra A. Jahagirdar, for Appellant; V. N. Gadgil, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT:— The respondent is a minor represented by his mother as his guardian ad litem. Some time in the year 1957, there was a partition as between the members of the joint family of which he was a member till then, in which the land in dispute in the present proceedings came to the share of the respondent. It appears that thereafter it was the mother of the respondent who acted as the natural guardian in respect of his property. On the 7th of February 1962, an agreement for Sale of the land now in dispute was executed in favour of the appellant by the respondent's father as the constituted attorney of the respondent's mother acting as the natural guardian of the respondent for the price of Rs. 6000/-. A fresh agreement for Sale of the said land for a higher price was thereafter executed on 17th July 1962 by the respondent's father, as such constituted attorney, under which it was stipulated that a Sale Deed was to be executed on or before 11th December 1962. Payments aggregating in all to Rs. 4250/- were made by the appellant from time to time towards the price payable in respect of said land. The respondent's father as constituted attorney having failed to execute a Sale Deed, the appellant filed a suit for specific performance on 10th December 1965, being Reg. Civil Suit No. 8 of 1966, in the Court at Wai against the respondent as represented by his father as the guardian-ad-litem. The said court did not grant specific performance, but passed only a decree for refund of the said sum of Rs. 4250/- in favour of the appellant. That decree was, however, set aside on appeal on 9th March 1968 by the Assistant Judge at Satara who remanded the suit to the trial court for rehearing, directing that that the mother of the respondent should be appointed his guardian-ad-litem for the said suit, and not his father. On the 25th of March 1969, the appellant filed an application under Section 8 of the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956, in the Court of the District Judge at Satara against the respondent, as represented by his mother, for permission for the execution of a registered Sale Deed in favour of the appellant on payment of the remaining amount of the price viz., Rs. 1750/-, by the parents of the respondent as constituted attorneys, or by the Court on his behalf. That application was opposed by the respondent both on the ground that, under the provisions of the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, the appellant had no right to make such an application, as well as on merits. A preliminary issue in regard to the maintainability of the application was framed and tried by the Assistant Judge at Satara who, by his judgment dated 30th June 1970, held that under the provisions of Section 8 of the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956, it was for the natural guardian alone to make such an application. He, therefore, dismissed the application, and it is from that Order of dismissal that the present appeal has been preferred by the intending purchaser (original applicant).

2. The material portion of Sec. 8 of the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956, is in the following terms:—

"8. (1) Powers of natural guardian.— The natural guardian of a Hindu minor has power, subject to the provisions of this section to do all acts which are necessary or reasonable and proper for the benefit of the minor or for the realization, protection or benefit of the minor's estate; but the guardian can in no case bind the minor by a personal covenant.

(2) The natural guardian shall not, without the previous permission of the Court:—

(a) mortgage or charge, or transfer by sale, gift, exchange or otherwise, any part of the immoveable property of the minor;

(4) No court shall grant permission to the natural guardian to do any of the acts mentioned in sub-section (2) except in case of necessity or for an evident advantage to the minor.

(5) The Guardians and Wards Act 1890, shall apply to and in respect of an application for obtaining the permission of the court under sub-section (2) in all respects as if it were an application for obtaining the permission of the court under Section 29 of that Act, and in particular:—

(a) proceedings in connection with the application shall be deemed to be proceedings under that Act within the meaning of Section 4-A thereof;

(b) the court shall observe the procedure and have the powers specified in sub-sections (2), (3) and (4) of S. 31 of that Act; and

(c) an appeal shall lie from an order of the court refusing permission to the natural guardian to do any of the acts mentioned in sub-section (2) of this section to the court to which appeals ordinarily lie from the decisions of that court."

Sub-section (2) of S. 8 quoted above, under which the present application was made is almost identical with Section 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, with this difference that the latter section applies only to guardians appointed or declared by the Court. The learned advocates on both sides have assured me that there is not a single reported decision of any Indian Court on the point as to whether any person other than the guardian can maintain an application for permission for the transfer of immovable property under Section 8 (2) of the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956, or under Section 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890. The only decision on the point which was cited before me was that in the case of Tukaram Zipru v. Baban Dhondur, (1965) 67 Bom LR 908 which, however, was a decision under Section 4 (2) of the Bombay Pargana and Kulkarni Watans (Abolition) Act, 1950, which, in my opinion, is very differently worded, and the said decision therefore affords no assistance in the present case. Reference was made in the course of the arguments to Rule (12) of para 271 at page 95 of Vol. I read with Form G in Appendix C at page 431 of Vol. II of the Civil Manual, 1960. The form of the Certificate to be issued by the Court when granting an application for permission under Section 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act, or under Section 8 of the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, clearly shows that an application by the guardian alone is contemplated. The Civil Manual issued by the High Court, however, only contains Rules for the guidance of subordinate courts and officers and cannot be used as an aid to the construction of a statutory provision. The question that arises in this Appeal will, therefore, have to be decided on a plain reading of Section 8 of the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956.

3. Turning to that section, it is important to note at the outset that sub-section (1), thereof lays down the powers of a natural guardian in general terms, to which sub-section (2) proceeds to engraft certain limitations. This scheme intrinsic in the section would itself indicate that the permission contemplated by sub-section (2) must be applied for by the natural guardian himself. The way in which sub-section (2) is worded also points to that conclusion. It enacts that the natural guardian shall not, without the previous permission of the Court, effect a transfer, or a lease of immovable property of long duration. This makes it clear that, in such cases, it is the natural guardian himself who must apply for that permission. Sub-section (4) however lays down that the Court cannot grant that permission except in case of necessity or for evident advantage to the minor. This goes further than the normal requirement of Hindu law under which it is sufficient for a purchaser or mortgagee from the manager of a joint Hindu family to prove that he made a proper and bona fide enquiry as to the existence of legal necessity. Since sub-section (4) requires that it must be proved that there was in fact necessity for or advantage to the minor concerned, no person other than the natural guardian could be expected to prove the same as an applicant under that section. The use of the words "permission to the natural guardian" in sub-section (4) and in Cl (c) of sub-section (5), in regard to the Order to be made by the Court on an application under that section, in my opinion, also shows that the legislature intended that the application contemplated by that section has to be made by the natural guardian. Moreover, those words leave no room for doubt that the permission under that section could be granted to the natural guardian and to none else. In the present case, it could not, therefore, be granted to the respondent's father.

4. It was sought to be contended by Mr. Jahagirdar that such a construction of Section 8 of the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956, would place an innocent purchaser at the mercy of an unscrupulous natural guardian. Such considerations cannot, however, affect the construction of a statutory provision when the intention of the legislature is manifest from the language used in and the tenor of the enactment. It is a platitude that hard cases make bad law. In such cases, the remedy, if any, lies with the legislature and not with the court which must interpret an enactment as it stands.

5. I hold that the appellant was not entitled to maintain the application which he made to the District Court under Section 8 of the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956, and the same was rightly dismissed by that court. This appeal therefore fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Annasaheb Sakham Rajamane,
Petitioner v. T. K. Kamble and others,
Respondents.

Special Civil Appln. No. 1038 of
1967, D/- 11-12-1970.

Maharashtra Municipalities Act (40 of 1965), Section 16 (1) (h) — Disqualification under — When commences. (X-Ref:— Maharashtra Municipalities Act (40 of 1965), Sections 150, 151, 169, 170).

The disqualification mentioned in sub-section (1) (h) and the arrears mentioned therein both commence and come into existence as from the moment of the presentation of the bill for the tax due.
(Para 5)

P. S. Patankar for S. C. Pratap, for Petitioner; S. N. Naik instructed by M/s. Little and Co., Attorneys (for Nos. 1 and 3). P. S. Joshi (for No. 2) and B. N. Naik for Prakash Shah (for No. 5), for Respondents.

K. K. DESAI, J.:— The petitioner was one of the candidates from Ward No. 27 Vakharbhag, Sangli, for the municipal elections to be held on May 10, 1967. The petitioner was the owner of the immovable properties situated in the Municipal area and bearing city survey Nos. 95-A and 253. For the period ending with March 31, 1968, i. e. for the year 1967-68, having regard to the assessment levied and fixed in respect of the above two immovable properties, the petitioner was liable to pay respectively as tax the sum of Rs. 801.75 and Rupees 226.40. The petitioner filed nomination for his candidature prior to May 10, 1967. The scrutiny of the nomination papers was fixed for May 13, 1967. On May 8, 1967 the petitioner was served with a bill dated April 27, 1967 bearing No. 12141 in respect of the immovable property bearing City Survey No. 95-A for the tax of Rs. 801.75 for 1967-68. On May 10, 1967 the petitioner was served with bill dated April 28, 1967 bearing No. 12294 in respect of the property bearing City Survey No. 253 for Rupees 226.40 for 1967-68. At the time of the scrutiny of the petitioner's nomination paper on behalf of the other contesting candidates it was contended that the petitioner was disqualified from becoming a candidate and/or a councillor at the above election on the ground that the petitioner was in arrears of the above two sums due by him to the council after the presentation of the above two bills on him under Section 150 of the Maharashtra Municipalities Act, 1965. The Returning Officer accepted the above contention and rejected the petitioner's nomination paper by his order dated May 13, 1967. The above order of the Returning Officer was challenged before the learned District Judge, who by his appellate Judgment and impugned order dated May 29, 1967 rejected the petitioner's appeal.

2. Mr. Patankar for the petitioner has relied on the provisions in Sections 16 (1) (h), 150, 151, 169, 170 and 327 of the above Act and contended that the above decisions of the Returning Officer as well as the learned District Judge are unwarranted in law. His submission was that in connection with the above dues in respect of the taxes on the above properties default of payment had not been completed by the petitioner for the period of 15 days mentioned in the bills. In that connection he relied on the language used in Sections 150 and 151 and provisions in Sections 167 and 170 where a period of 15 days is mentioned. The substance of his submission was that simple arrears of payment of taxes could never be default in payment, since the bills mentioned a period of 15 days for payment of the dues mentioned in the bills. There was neither default nor arrears in that connection. The reasoning in the decisions of the Returning Officer and the learned District Judge are contrary to the above provisions of law and liable to be set aside.

3. Mr. S. N. Naik for respondents Nos. 1 and 3 as well as Mr. Joshi and Mr. B. N. Naik for respondents Nos. 2 and 5 have strenuously submitted that on a true construction of the provisions in Section 16 (1) (h), the disqualification in respect of a candidate at the election arises immediately upon presentation on him of the bill for the taxes due. The disqualification and the arrears mentioned in that section has no relevance to the period of time mentioned in Sections 150, 151 and the provisions in Sections 169 and 170.

4. The relevant parts of the above Sections run as follows:—

"16 (1) No person shall be qualified to become a Councillor whether by election, co-option or nomination, who—

(h) is in arrears of any sum due by him to the Council after the presentation of a bill therefor to him under Section 150."

"150 (1) When any amount becomes due to the Council, ... the Chief Officer shall, with the least practicable delay, cause to be presented to the person liable for the payment thereof, a bill for the sum claimed as due.

(2) Every such bill shall specify the period for which, and the property, occupation or thing in respect of which the sum is claimed and shall also give notice of the liability incurred in default of payment and of the time within which an appeal may be preferred as hereinafter provided against such claim.

(3) If a person to whom such bill is presented pays, within fifteen days from the presentation thereof, the whole sum claimed as due, then a discount shall be paid by the Council to him."

"151. If the person to whom a bill has been presented as provided under the last preceding section does not, within fifteen days from the presentation thereof, either

(a) pay the sum claimed as due in the bill, or

(b) show cause to the satisfaction of the Chief Officer why he is not liable to pay the same, or

(c) prefer an appeal in accordance with the provisions of Section 169 against the claim the Chief Officer may cause to be served upon the person liable for the payment of the said sum a notice of demand in the form of Schedule IV"

Sections 152 onwards contain a scheme for compulsory payment and recovery of the amounts mentioned in the bill after service of the notice of demand.

5. Sections 160 and 170 provide for the Tribunals of appeals and the procedure in connection with the institution of appeals. Under sub-clause (c) of Section 170 the appeal filed by an assessee is directed not to be entertained unless the amount claimed from is deposited by him in the municipal office. Now, having regard to the provisions in Section 151 relating to the circumstances in which notice of demand can be issued and that the fact that such notice of demand cannot be issued unless there is default in payment within 15 days, Mr. Patankar's submission was that there could be no arrears and default during the period of 15 days from the presentation of the appeal. Similar contention was made having regard to the period of 15 days in connection with the discount to be granted as mentioned in sub-clause (3) of Section 150. There is no doubt that notice of demand contemplated under Section 151 cannot be issued where the assessee makes an application for showing cause to the Chief Officer that he was not liable to pay the amount mentioned in the bill and where he prefers an appeal under Section 169. This provision has the effect of preventing compulsory enforcement of payment of the tax due by machinery mentioned in Section 151 and next following sections. Provision in Section 151 accordingly has no bearing on the question of the assessee being not in arrears during the period of 15 days mentioned in Section 151. The right of discount that is available if payment is made within 15 days, as provided in sub-section (3) of Section 150 only goes to show that even during the period of 15 days mentioned in that sub-section, the amount mentioned in the bill was always payable by the assessee to the Municipal Council. The liability of an appellant-assessee to deposit the amount mentioned in the bill in connection with the appeal that he would file under Sec. 169 does not help in arriving at a true construction of the provisions in Section 16 (1) (h). Same is true of the contents of Sections 150 and 151. The language of sub-clause (h) of sub-section (1) of Section 16 is clear and unambiguous. The scheme of levy of house-tax as contained in Chapter IX, and the language of Section 150 clearly goes to show that the house-tax fixed and levied under Chapter IX becomes payable by each owner of immovable property to the Municipal Council for the ensuing year as from April 1 of the very year. In respect of such tax due from April 1 of the current year, the bills are required to be prepared in accordance with the provisions in sub-section (1) of Section 150.

Apparently the bills must be for the amounts which already have become due. The presentation of the bills has the consequence of making the amounts payable as from the dates of the presentation of the bills. The amounts mentioned in the bills presented accordingly must be held to have become due and payable during the whole of the period of 15 days on which reliance is placed on behalf of the petitioner. The contention that arrears in respect of the amounts mentioned in the bills presented arises only upon expiry of that period of 15 days is prima facie misconceived and erroneous. The arrears grow from the moment of the presentation of the bill and continues in existence from that very moment. This period of 15 days is only relevant in connection with the scheme for compulsory enforcement and recovery contained in Section 151 and next following sections. The period of 15 days mentioned in these sections is entirely irrelevant in connection with the tax which becomes due at a date prior to the issuance of the bills and payable from the date of the presentation of the bills. On a reading of the contents of Section 16 (1) (h) in the light of the above true position, it is clear that the disqualification mentioned in sub-section (h) and the arrears mentioned therein both commence and/or come into existence as from the moment of the presentation of the bill for the tax due. There is no warrant for the submission made by Mr. Patankar that the arrears in respect of the amounts mentioned in the bill do not come into existence at the above moment. There is the result of the scheme for levy of the house-tax for each year with the commencement of April 1 of each year and the scheme in Section 150 onwards for making the house-tax not only due but payable as from the date of the presentation of the bill.

6. Having regard to this position, this petition must fail. Rule is accordingly discharged. There will be no order as to costs.

Petition dismissed.

AIR 1972 BOMBAY 157 (V 59 C 32)

VIMADALAL, J.

In the matter of M/s. R. T. Engineering and Electronics Co., Applicants.

Misc. Petn. No. 58 of 1970, D/- 23-7-1970.

Trade and Merchandise Marks Act (1958), Sections 11, 12, 18, 20 — Mark likely to deceive or cause confusion — It is not obligatory on Registrar before accepting application for registration to advertise and call for evidence of likelihood of deception or confusion in every case — Distinction between Sections 11 (a) and 12 (1) pointed out. (Paras 3, 6)

Whilst, generally speaking, the court would follow the procedure of advertising the mark and deciding the question of confusion or deception only when it is opposed and evidence taken in regard to the same, before it applies the bar of Section 11 (a) of the Act, there is nothing in the said section to deprive the Registrar of the power which he has under Section 18 (4) of the Act in a proper case, to refuse to accept an application for registration without advertising it or calling for evidence of likelihood of deception or confusion. It is not difficult to conceive of case in which the likelihood of confusion or deception may be so patent that to compel the Registrar to advertise and call for evidence would be sheer waste of public time, and it is for that reason that the legislature has advisedly not made it obligatory on the Registrar to do so in every case under Section 11 (a).

The distinction between Sections 11 (a) and 12 (1) of the Act is: (1) whereas under Section 11, Actual user must be taken into account, including the mode of user, or the fact that the goods are known in the market by a particular name, for the purpose of considering the possibility of deception or confusion under Section 12, the court has only to take into account, what may tersely be called, notional fair user on the basis of the similarity of the two marks, though it must no doubt consider not only visual or phonetic similarity, but also the possibility of contextual confusion or confusion or deception as to trade origin, as well as the other surrounding circumstances such as the nature of the goods and the kind of customers who would be likely to buy those goods; (2) whereas Section 12 comes into play only when the opponent's mark is a registered trade mark, there is no such limitation in regard to the applicability of Section 11, and (3) whereas Section 12 applies only when the mark applied for is identical with or deceptively similar to a registered trade mark, there is no such limitation in regard to the nature of the goods in a case under Section 11. In either case, however, the Court has to consider the position from the point of view of an unwary purchaser who is a man of average intelligence and of an imperfect recollection. (Para 6)

Held (considering the instant case in the light of the legal position) that the mark applied for could not be held to be deceptively similar to the competing registered trade mark. Nor were there any exceptional circumstances which would justify the court in directing that the petitioners' (appellants) mark be advertised before acceptance under the proviso to S. 20 (1) of the Act. J. I. Mehta with Shavksha, for Petitioners instructed by M/s. Daruvala & Co.; K. S. Cooper, for Registrar of Trade Marks.

ORDER :— This is an appeal under Section 109 (2) of the Trade and Merchandise Marks Act, 1958 from the decision of the Assistant Registrar of Trade Marks under Section 18 (4) of that Act refusing to register the Petitioners' trade mark on the ground that the same conflicts with registered trade mark No. 213586-B as also with the mark in application No. 253773-B with both of which the Petitioners' mark was held by him to be "deceptively similar". The Petitioners had originally applied to the Trade Marks Registry for the registration of his mark in Part A of the Register in Class 7 in respect of diesel oil engines, but subsequently the same was converted by the Petitioners into one for registration in Part B and the designation of the goods was modified so as to read "Diesel Oil Engines" (not for land vehicles) for sale in the State of Gujarat." The Assistant Registrar, after hearing counsel on behalf of the Petitioners, declined to accept the application and dismissed the same under Section 18 (4) of the Act. In the grounds which were furnished by the Assistant Registrar for arriving at the said decision, it was stated that neither visually nor phonetically was the Petitioners' mark similar to registered mark No. 213586-B or with the mark in application 253773-B. The Assistant Registrar, however, took the view that, though the Petitioners' mark had no visual or phonetical resemblance to the said mark or the said application, confusion was likely to ensue as to trade origin in so far as there was "a definite possibility that a substantial number of purchasers would assume that the two sets of goods sold in the market come from the same trade source." He also held that the Petitioner was not entitled to concurrent registration under Section 12 (3) of the Act. In the result, he refused the Petitioners' application, as stated above, and it is from that the present appeal has been preferred.

2. Learned counsel on behalf of the Petitioners contended that in view of the conclusion arrived at by the Registrar that the Petitioners' mark was neither visually nor phonetically similar to registered mark No. 213586-B or to the mark in application No. 253773-B, it was not open to him to refuse the Petitioners' application summarily under Section 18 (4) without advertising the same in accordance with Section 20 of the Act and taking evidence in regard to the likelihood of confusion on other grounds. In order to deal with that contention of the Petitioners, it is necessary to refer to Sections 11 (a) and 12 (1) of the Act and to compare the scope of those two sections. The relevant portion of Section 11 is in these terms:—

"11. Prohibition of registration of certain marks.—

A Mark:—

(a) The use of which would be likely to deceive or cause confusion; or—shall not be registered as a trade mark."

The relevant portion of Section 12 reads as follows:—

"12. Prohibition of registration of identical or deceptively similar trade marks.— (1) Save as provided in subsection (3) no trade mark shall be registered in respect of any goods or description of goods which is identical with or deceptively similar to a trade mark which is already registered in the name of a different proprietor in respect of the same goods or description of goods."

The expression "deceptively similar" which is to be found in Section 12 (1) is defined in Section 2 (1) (d) in the following terms:—

"(d) "deceptively similar":— A mark shall be deemed to be deceptively similar to another mark if it so nearly resembles that other mark as to be likely to deceive or cause confusion;"

In almost all the English authorities in which any question under either of these sections fell to be decided, the scope of Section 11 was considered in relation to Section 12, or vice versa, and these two sections have been dealt with in a comparative way. It may be mentioned that Section 11 of our Act corresponds to Section 11 of the U. K. Trade Marks Act, 1938, and Section 12 of our act corresponds to Section 12 (1) and (2) of the U. K. Trade Marks Act, 1938.

3. The scope of Sections 11 and 12 was considered in the case of Hans Emanuel Enoch, (1947) 64 RPC 119 which was strongly relied upon by Mr. Mehta on behalf of the Petitioners. The facts of that case were that Enoch applied to register the word mark "Vivicillin" for products of mould metabolism prepared for pharmaceutical purposes. The word "Cyllin" and two other marks incorporating that word, had already been registered by M/s. Jeyes' Sanitary Compounds Co. Ltd., for articles of the same class. The Acting Registrar was of opinion that there might be likelihood of confusion, but offered to allow the application go to an advertisement if the applicant obtained the consent of the said Jeyes' Sanitary Compounds Co. Ltd., for registration of the mark. The applicant was unwilling to apply for such authorization and the application was accordingly refused. The applicant appealed to the court and Cohen, J. allowed the appeal and set aside the order of the Registrar, holding that there was not sufficient similarity between "Vivicillin" and "Cyllin" to render confusion likely. In the course of his judgment Cohen, J. observed (at p. 122) that it was common ground that in dealing with the said case which was a case under Section 12 of the U. K. Act, the court must consider only the marks side by side, when written as well as when spoken and decide whether there was risk of confusion either in sight or in sound. He then stated that he approached the matter with some hesitation because he was hearing an appeal from somebody who was dealing with these matters with great frequency and was a man of great experience in cases of that kind, but in his opinion, the Registrar had gone astray in the said case when for refusing registration he gave the reason as being: "Even if the distinction between the two words be clearly appreciated there will, I think, be many persons who will detect the similarity between them and who will think that "Vivicillin" goods have some connection with the proprietors of the "Cyllin" marks already on the register." The learned judge then went on to observe (at p. 124) that it was admitted that the said passage could not be supported as "it was a matter which would have been relevant under Section 11 and may well become relevant again if this application is opposed after it is advertised." This passage from the judgment of Cohen, J. was strongly relied upon by Mr. Mehta on behalf of the Petitioners before me as supporting his contention that the bar of Section 11 would be attracted only after the mark was advertised and was opposed and evidence taken in regard to the likelihood of confusion or deception. I am not prepared to accept the statement in the passage from the judgment of Cohen, J. quoted above as authority for that proposition, or to accept that proposition itself. Whilst, generally speaking, the court would follow the procedure of advertising the mark and deciding the question of confusion or deception only when it is opposed and evidence taken in regard to the same, before it applies the bar of Section 11 (a) of the Act, there is nothing in the said section to deprive the Registrar of the power which he has under Section 18 (4) of the Act, in proper case, to refuse to accept an application for registration without advertising it or calling for evidence of likelihood of deception or confusion. It is not difficult to conceive of case in which the likelihood of confusion or deception may be so patent that to compel the Registrar to advertise and call for evidence would be sheer waste of public time, and it is for that reason that the Legislature has advisedly not made it obligatory on the Registrar to do so in every case under Section 11 (a). The observation of Cohen, J. quoted above which is relied upon by Mr. Mehta only brings out the possibility of such evidence becoming relevant after the mark is advertised and opposed, but does not, in my opinion, lay down the proposition of law that in every case under Section 11 of the Act the mark must be advertised and evidence considered by the Registrar, if it is opposed. The scope of Sections 11 and 12 again came up for consideration before the Assistant Comptroller in the case of John Fitton and Co. Ltd., (1949) 66 RPC 110 in which the facts were that the application for registration of the mark "Easyjest" for medicated sweets was opposed by Jests Ltd. as proprietors of three registered trade marks consisting of or including the word "Jests". At the hearing, the applications restricted their specifications to medicated boiled sweets, and the evidence established that the applicants and the opponents' goods would normally be made up in different forms and sold through different channels by sweet dealers and chemists respectively. The evidence also established that the applicants had prior use of their mark. It was held by the Assistant Comptroller that, although no actual confusion had been proved, there was a probability of traders and the public being confused as to whether goods under the two marks had a common origin and that that probability would have been sufficient to justify the refusal of the mark if there had been no user. The Assistant Controller, however, then proceeded to register the applicants' mark with the limitation that it was to be in respect of specification of different medicated boiled sweets for sale in England and Wales. In considering the matter under Sections 11 and 12 (1) of the U. K. Trade Marks Act, 1938, the Assistant Comptroller referred to the observations of Cohen, J. in Enoch's case cited above, but declined to follow the same in view of the decision of the Court of Appeal in the Australian Wine Importers' Case, (1889) 6 RPC 311 which, being a decision of the Court of Appeal, was binding upon him. The Assistant Comptroller observed (at p. 113) that the evidence furnished on behalf of the opponents was directed not so much towards showing that the two marks "Jests" and "Easyjests" might themselves be confused either visually or orally, as towards establishing that confusion would result owing to the presence of the common element "Jest" in each mark, in traders and the public being induced to believe that the two sets of goods sold under the marks emanated from one and the same trade source. Following the view taken in the Australian Wine Importers' case, the Assistant Comptroller stated that the issue upon deception of the Character involved in the case before him was one to be dealt with under Section 12 (1) of the U. K. Trade Marks Act, 1938, and he then proceeded to state as follows (at p. 113):—

"Now, under Section 12 (1) of the present Act the Registrar is required to postulate a simultaneous use of the two marks under consideration, whether or not one is already in use, and to assess to the best of his ability the likelihood of ensuring confusion or deception, and no limitation is, to my mind, placed upon the nature of the confusion or deception so envisaged, whether it be visual or phonetic confusion of the marks themselves, or what is termed contextual confusion, or confusion or deception as to the trade provenance of the goods." He then took the view that on the facts of the case and the evidence before him, there was likelihood that a substantial number of persons would assume that the two sets of goods sold under the trade marks emanated from the same trade source and that, though he would not describe that likelihood as very considerable, it was sufficient to constitute a bar to the registration of the mark "Easyjest" as a new mark. Contrary to the view expressed in Enoch's case, (1947) 64 RPC 119 (at p. 122), the law as laid down by the Court of Appeal in the Australian Wine Importers' case, (1889) 6 RPC 311 which was followed by the Assistant Comptroller in John Fitton and Co.'s case, (1949) 66 RPC 110 was that in dealing with a case under Section 12 the Court was not confined to considering visual or phonetic confusion of the marks themselves, but could also take into account contextual confusion or confusion or deception as to the trade origin of the goods. The relative scope of Sections 11 and 12 was laid down by the Court of Appeal in England in the case of Harker Staggs Limited's Trade Mark, ((1954) 71 RPC 136). It is not necessary for me to go into the facts of the said case but in regard to the scope of Sections 11 and 12 of the Act, Evershed M. R. stated the legal position as follows (at p. 141):—

"As Mr. Mould pointed out, Section 11 may be invoked by a person who has not got a registered mark at all, but, whether he has or whether he has not got a registered mark, the question under Section 11 is, as I myself stated in the "Hevis" case, whether, having regard to the use made of the objector's or applicant's mark and the inferences to be drawn from its use, confusion is likely, under Section 12, which is only available to a registered proprietor of a mark, the question of confusion has to be considered with regard to any possible user by the registered objector or applicant of his mark in regard to any of the subjects in respect of which it is registered. Prima facie, therefore, it must follow that the scope for possible confusion under Section 12 is wider than the scope for confusion under Section 11, so that if the Court concludes adversely to the present applicants, or an applicant in a similar situation, under Section 12, such applicants must also fall under Section 11."

It is important to note that whereas the Court has under Section 11 to consider the actual user of the mark in question, under Section 12 the question of confusion has to be considered with regard to any possible or notional user. Mr. Cooper who appeared for the Registrar of Trade Marks whom I had directed to appear in the present case, relied on the decision in the case of Bulova Accutron Trade Mark, (1969 RPC 102) as being very similar to the present case as far as facts are concerned. The facts of that case were that the High Court dismissed the appeal from the decision of the Assistant Registrar and confirmed his Order refusing registration of the applicant's mark "Bulova Accutron" on the ground that it so nearly resembled the opponent's mark "Accurist" as to be likely to cause deception and confusion. Though the mark sought to be registered in that case was a combination mark, a part of which resembled a mark already on the register as in the present case, I am afraid, as far as facts are concerned, one case cannot be regarded as authority for another, and I am unable to derive any assistance from the decision in Bulova Accutron's case. The distinction between Sections 11 and 12 of the Act has, however, been very carefully considered by the House of Lords in the recent case relating to the "Bali" Trade Mark, (1969 RPC 472). The facts of that case were that, in 1938, a trade mark of the word "Bali" in respect of the brassieres, in script set in a device, had been registered. In 1959 the Bali Company applied for registration of the word "BALI" in block capitals and the said application was opposed by another company named Berlei Co. which had previously sold brassieres in the U. K. under a registered trade mark, and the Berlei company also applied for rectification of the register by the removal therefrom of the 1938 Bali registration, inter alia, as offending Section 11 of the Act, in that the mark was likely to cause deception or confusion having regard to the Berlei Company's reputation in their own mark. The Registrar found in favour of the Berlei Company, rectified the existing 1938 Bali registration and also refused the 1959 application of the Bali Co. to register the mark. After intermediate proceedings by way of appeal to the Court of Appeal, the House of Lords upheld the decision of the Registrar that to establish that a mark offended against Section 11 it was necessary only to show the likelihood of deception or confusion, and not necessary to show something further, such as possible, probable or certain success in a passing off action. Lord Upjohn, after tracing the legislative history of Section 11 stated (at p. 495) that the said section was designed not so much for the protection of other traders in the use of their marks or their reputation as for the protection of the public. He then formulated the distinction between Section 11 and Section 12 in the following terms (at p. 496).

"Section 12 is principally a weapon in the hands of a registered proprietor though it is not necessary that he personally should object. Here no user by the registered proprietor need be shown: it is purely a question of similarity. Section 11 is, as I have said, for the protection of the public and anyone may object, but if he relies only on similarity he must prove the practical likelihood of confusion to the public and this he can only do, for the purposes of the section, by proving the existing user by another, not necessarily by himself, which is likely to cause deception or confusion; but if he does not establish likelihood of confusion by some present user of a similar mark likely to cause deception or confusion the court would not treat that as sufficient to disentitle the mark in suit to protection."

Lord Upjohn then proceeded to clarify that, under Section 11, what the court had to consider was whether, having regard to the user of the opponents' marks, the court was satisfied that the mark applied for, if used in a normal and fair manner in connection with any goods covered by the registration proposed, would not be reasonably likely to cause deception and confusion amongst a substantial number of persons. The view taken in the Ball Trade Mark's case, therefore, is that since the Court is not concerned in considering a case under Section 12 with actual user, the question was purely one of similarity of marks; whereas in a case under Section 11 the Court was concerned with the practical likelihood of confusion to the public by reason of the existing user by another which was likely to cause deception or confusion. The legal position in regard to the scope of Sections 11 and 12 of the Act emerging from the decisions of English Courts discussed above, has been set out in Kerly's Law of Trade Marks and Trade Names (9th Edition) at pp. 169-171, where it is pointed out that if an opposition is based upon a registered trade mark, the inquiry under Section 12, embracing as it does, notional and fair use upon any of the goods concerned, is wider than that under Section 11 under which the earlier mark must be considered precisely as it has in fact been used. In considering the question of deception under Section 12 (1) of the U. K. Trade Marks Act, 1938 a passage from a judgment of Parker, J. in the Pianotist Co. Ltd.'s case (23 RPC 774 at p. 777) has been quoted by Kerly (at p. 453) and adopted as laying down the correct rule. Passage is as follows:—

"You must take the two words. You must judge them, both by their look and by their sound. You must consider the goods to which they are to be applied. You must consider the nature and kind of customer who would be likely to buy those goods. In fact you must consider all the surrounding circumstances; and you must further consider what is likely to happen if each of those trade marks is used in a normal way as a trade mark for the goods of the respective owners of the marks." In further considering the rules of comparison it is stated in Kerly (at pp. 465-466) that the marks ought not to be merely looked at as they stand side by side, because from the very nature of the case they would not be so put before any customer when it was sought to deceive by means of either of them, and the question would be whether a person who sees the proposed trade mark in the absence of the other trade mark of which he has an imperfect recollection was liable to be deceived.

4. As far as Indian cases are concerned, reference may be made to the case of N. S. Thread Co. v. James Chadwick & Bros. Ltd. (AIR 1953 SC 357). The facts of that case were that the appellants before the Supreme Court carried on the business of manufacturing cotton sewing thread, and the respondents were a company registered in England who were also manufacturing sewing thread. One of the trade marks used by the English company consisted of the device of an eagle with outspread wings and was known as the "Eagle Mark", and that mark was first advertised in the Gazette on 5th June 1896 and goods bearing the said mark had since then been regularly imported into and sold in India on an extensive scale. Some time in the year 1940, the applicant started selling cotton sewing thread under a mark consisting of the device of a bird with wings fully spread out perched on a cylinder of cotton sewing thread with the words "Eagle Brand" and the name of the appellant company printed on the mark. On the respondent company objecting to the mark, the appellant substituted the words "Vulture Brand" in place of the words "Eagle Brand", but the mark remained the same in all other respects. A passing off action filed by the respondent failed on the ground of want of evidence. Thereafter, in the year 1942, the appellants applied to register their trade mark, whereupon the respondents gave notice of their opposition to that application. The Registrar of Trade Marks allowed the opposition and rejected the application of the appellants for registration of their mark on the ground that the mark applied for so closely resembled the respondents' mark as to be likely to deceive or cause confusion. On appeal to this Court, Shah, J. allowed the appeal, set aside the order of the Registrar and directed the Registrar to register the appellants' mark. On a Letters Patent Appeal, however, the decision of Shah, J. was set aside and the order of the Registrar restored. The matter was thereafter taken to the Supreme Court in further appeal, and the Supreme Court in dismissing that appeal held (para 23) that the appellants had failed to discharge the onus that rested heavily on them to prove that the trade mark which they wanted the Registrar to register was not likely to deceive or cause confusion, within the terms of Section 8 of the Indian Trade Marks Act, 1940, which it may be stated, corresponds to Section 11 of the present Act. In arriving at that decision, the Supreme Court observed (para 21) that, under the said Section 8, an application to register a trade mark which was likely to deceive or to cause confusion had to be refused notwithstanding the fact that the mark might have no identity or close resemblance with any other trade mark and that the Registrar had to come to a conclusion on that point independently of making a mere comparison of the mark applied for with any other registered trade mark. It was further laid down in the judgment of the Supreme Court that what the Registrar had to see under that section was whether, looking at the circumstance of the case, a particular trade mark was likely to deceive or to cause confusion. Mahajan, J., in delivering the judgment of the court, further observed (para 22) that the real question to decide in such cases was to see as to how a purchaser, who must be looked upon as an average man of ordinary intelligence would react to a particular trade mark, what association he would form by looking at the trade mark and in what respect he would connect the trade mark with the goods which he would be purchasing.

5. There is another and a later decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Amritdhara Pharmacy v. Satya Deo Gupta, (AIR 1963 SC 449) in which Section 8 of the Trade Marks Act, 1940, which corresponds to Section 11 of the present Act, and Section 10 of the Act of 1940 which corresponds to Section 12 of the present Act, came up for consideration. The facts of that case were that an application for the Registration of the trade name "Lakshmandhara" in respect of a medicinal preparation for the alleviation of various ailments was opposed by the proprietors of the trade name "Amritdhara" which was already registered as a trade name in respect of a similar medicinal preparation of the opponents. The Supreme Court held that, on a consideration of all the circumstances, the overall similarity of the two names in respect of the same description of goods was likely to cause deception or confusion within the meaning of Section 10 (1) of the Trade Marks Act, 1940. It was observed in the judgment of the Supreme Court (para 7) that the Act did not lay down any criteria for determining what was likely to deceive or cause confusion, and that every case must depend on its own particular facts and the value of the authorities lies not so much in the actual decision as in the test applied for determining what was likely to deceive or cause confusion. It was then laid down that, for deceptive resemblance, two important questions arise viz. (1) who are the persons whom the resemblance must be likely to deceive or confuse; and (2) what rules of comparison are to be adopted in judging whether such resemblance exists. The Supreme Court then took into account (para 8) the fact that the medicinal preparations of the nature in question before them would be purchased mostly by people who, instead of going to a doctor, wish to purchase a medicine for the quick alleviation of their suffering, both villagers and townfolk, literate as well as illiterate, and laid down (para 9) that the question had to be approached from the point of view of "an unwary purchaser of average intelligence and imperfect recollection." It was then observed (para 11) that what degree of resemblance was necessary to deceive or cause confusion must, in the nature of things be incapable of definition a priori, and (para 12) that the question had to be determined as a case of first impression and irrespective of earlier decisions. The Supreme Court however, took the view that the circumstances of the case before them established the plea of acquiescence on the part of the appellant in the use of "Lakshmandhara" in the State of Uttar Pradesh so as to bring the case within sub-section (2) of S. 10 of the Trade Marks Act, 1940 (corresponding to Section 12 (2) of the present Act), and that the Registrar was, therefore, right in imposing the limitation allowing registration of "Lakshmandhara" for sale in the State of Uttar Pradesh.

6. The distinction between Sections 11 (a) and 12 (1) of the Act therefore, is (1) whereas, under Section 11, Actual user must be taken into account.

including the mode of user, or the fact that the goods are known in the market by a particular name, for the purpose of considering the possibility of deception or confusion, under Section 12, the court has only to take into account, what may tersely be called, notional fair user on the basis of the similarity of the two marks, though it must no doubt consider not only visual or phonetic similarity, but also the possibility of contextual confusion or confusion or deception as to trade origin, as well as the other surrounding circumstances such as the nature of the goods and the kind of customers who would be likely to buy those goods. (2) whereas Section 12 comes into play only when the opponent's mark is a registered trade mark, there is no such limitation in regard to the applicability of Section 11; and (3) whereas Section 12 applies only when the mark applied for is identical with or deceptively similar to a registered trade mark, there is no such limitation in regard to the nature of the goods in a case under Section 11. In either case, however, the Court has to consider the position from the point of view of an unwary purchaser who is a man of average intelligence and of an imperfect recollection.

7. I must now proceed to consider the Assistant Registrar's judgment under appeal in the present case in the light of the legal position formulated in the preceding paragraph. The first question that arises is whether the Assistant Registrar has in refusing registration acted under Section 11 (a) or under Section 12 (1) of the Act. Though the Assistant Registrar has not specifically mentioned the section, in my opinion, reading the grounds of his decision as a whole, having regard particularly to the fact that he has also proceeded to consider the case under Section 12 (3) of the Act in the concluding part of his judgment, it is clear that he has proceeded under Section 12 (1) of the Act. That position was not disputed by the learned counsel appearing on his behalf before me. In view, however, of the fact that Section 12 can come into play only when the competing mark is a registered trade mark, the Assistant Registrar is clearly wrong in applying it to the mark in Application No. 253773B which was not yet registered. It, therefore, remains for me to consider whether his decision is correct in regard to registered trade mark No. 213586B. The Assistant Registrar has, in terms, decided that, visually and phonetically, the applicant's mark and the registered trade mark No. 213586B are not similar and, in my opinion, he is right in arriving at that conclusion. He was also right in holding that, both by reason of the shortness of the period of user of the applicant's mark as well as by reason of that user not having been shown to be honest as far as the adoption of the word "Master" therein was concerned, the petitioner's case did not come within the ambit of S. 12 (3) of the Act. The Assistant Registrar has held, as the Assistant Comptroller did in John Fitton & Co. Ltd.'s case, (1949) 66 RPC 110 (at pp. 113-114) cited above, that there was likelihood of contextual confusion or confusion as to trade provenance in respect of the goods to which the applicant's mark related and the goods to which registered trade mark No. 213586B related. The Assistant Registrar has, in the present case stated, "There may be likelihood of confusion as to trade origin if the competing marks are likely to be understood by the public as complementary marks, because of the presence of the word "MASTER" in them." He also took the view that since the word "MASTER" appeared in the applicant's mark as a separate word "with the letter 'M' in capital", it had not lost its identity by association with the coined word "Rece". In doing so, the Assistant Registrar has, in my opinion, completely disregarded the nature of the goods and the kind of customers who would buy them which, as stated in Kerly (at p. 453) and by our Supreme Court in Amritdhara's case, AIR 1963 SC 449 (para 7), he was bound to consider in comparing the marks in question for the purpose of determining whether they were "deceptively similar" within the terms of Sec. 12 (1). Diesel oil engines or engines are not goods which are bought and sold over the counter, and persons who buy them would not be illiterate persons. They would be persons who would know what they have come to buy or, at any rate, would be accompanied by persons who are mechanically knowledgeable. These are factors which the Assistant Registrar has completely overlooked and, having regard to the same, I am afraid, I am unable to agree with the conclusion at which he has arrived when he held that the mark applied for is deceptively similar to the competing registered trade mark No. 213586B within the terms of Sec. 12 (1). This appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the decision of the Assistant Registrar set aside. There are no "exceptional circumstances" which would justify me in directing that the Petitioners' mark be advertised before acceptance under the [proviso to Section 20 (1) of the Act. I accordingly direct that the Assistant Registrar do accept the Petitioners' application for registration of their mark and advertise the same and proceed in accordance with law. He should bear his own costs in this Court,

Appeal allowed.

N. D. Hombalkar, for Appellants; K. J. Abhyankar, for Respondent No. 1.

NATHWANI, J.:— This appeal raises the question whether an illegitimate son (dasiputra) of a Hindu Shudra can claim against a legitimate son of his father partition of property which was ancestral in his father's hands.

2. The facts in so far as they are material for this appeal are as under: One Babaji Wani, a Shudra, died in 1915 leaving him surviving his widow Tara, a son Shankar by her, and two illegitimate sons and a daughter by his mistress Savu, namely, Bala the plaintiff Satappa defendant No. 1 and Kondibai. Babaji also left lands and other immovable properties which were ancestral in his hands. After Babaji's death the plaintiff along with Shankar and other members of the family formed a joint Hindu family and Shankar as the Karta thereof managed the joint family property. Shankar died leaving three sons, viz., Dadu, Sadashiv-defendant No. 2, and Madhav-defendant No. 3. Dadu managed the joint family property till 1949 when he died leaving his widow Hirabai and a minor son Ananda-defendant No. 4. Since then defendant No. 2 was in management of the joint family property. The plaintiff demanded partition and separate possession of his share in the said property but as defendant No. 1 and others refused to do so he filed on April 11, 1961 the present suit against the defendants for partition and possession of his one-sixth share in the joint family property. Defendants contested the suit, inter alia, on the ground that the plaintiff as the illegitimate son (Dasiputra) could not claim partition or any interest in the suit property which was ancestral in the hands of Babaji. The trial Court upheld defendants' above contention and dismissed the suit. On appeal by the plaintiff the learned Assistant Judge considered the ratio of the Nagpur case in Shamrao Fakirro Hatkar v. Mt. Munnabai Fakirrao, AIR 1949 Nag 43; as binding on him and held that the plaintiff was entitled to partition of the ancestral property and decreed partition and possession of plaintiff's share in the said property. Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 have preferred this appeal against the said decision.

3. Mr. Hombalkar, the learned Advocate for the appellants contends that the right of an illegitimate son of a Shudra to claim a share in his father's property extends only to his self-acquired or separate property and not to property which was ancestral in his hands. He submits that there is no text of smriti or Mitakshara or any direct authority of this Court or of the Supreme Court applicable to the case and that the decisions of other High Courts taking a contrary view, apart from being not binding on this Court, should not be followed as they are contrary to the view of the relevant text taken by this Court in Hiralal v. Meghraj, 40 Bom LR 937 =

(AIR 1938 Bom 433). On the other hand Mr. Abhyankar for the respondent disputes the correctness of the above contentions and supports the decision of the lower appellate Court.

4. Now, the source of right of inheritance and partition of an illegitimate son is a verse of Yagnavalkya as expounded in the Mitakshara. The relevant text of Mitakshara, i. e., Chapter 1, Section 12, as translated by Colebrooke, is as follows:—

"1. The authority next delivers a special rule concerning the partition of a Sudhra's goods. Even a son begotten by a Sudra on a female slave may take a share by the father's choice. But, if the father be dead, the brethren should make him partaker of the moiety of a share; and one, who has no brother, may inherit the whole property, in default of daughter's sons."

"2. The son, begotten by a Sudra on a female slave, obtains a share by the father's choice, or at his pleasure. But, after (the demise of) the father, if there be sons of a wedded wife let these brothers allow the son of the female slave to participate for half a share; that is, let them give him half (as much as is the amount of one brother's) allotment.

However, should there be no sons of a wedded wife, the son of the female slave takes the whole estate, provided there be no daughters of a wife nor sons of daughters. But, there be such, the son of the female slave participates for half a share only."

"3. From the mention of a Sudra in this place (it follows that) as son begotten by a man of a regenerate tribe on a female slave does not obtain a share even by the father's choice, nor the whole estate after his demise. But if he be docile, he, receives a simple maintenance." (Stoke's Hindu Law Books page 426) (vide also page 72 Book I of the Digest Hindu Law by West and Buhler).

5. There are decisions by the Privy Council and Courts in India on the interpretation of the above text and it is necessary to refer to some of these authorities cited at the Bar by the parties. The first case in order of date is a Full Bench decision of this Court in Sadu v. Baiza, (1880) ILR 4 Bom 37 (FB). In this case the legal status of an illegitimate son of a Shudra as a son was recognised and it was held that after the death of his father such a son along with a legitimate son succeeded as a coparcener with right of survivorship to the property in his father's hand, he, however, taking only half a share. Mr. Hombalkar contends that in that case the point was not raised whether an illegitimate son can succeed to ancestral property in his father's hands and there is nothing in the Full Bench judgment delivered by Westropp C. J. to indicate that the suit property was ancestral and not self acquired in the hands of the putative father and, therefore, the case does not help the present plaintiff. Now it is true that the issue was not raised and it seems that in the said judgment it is nowhere stated that the suit property was ancestral property in father's hands. But from the statement of facts given at page 38 it appears that when after his father's death the plaintiff, started living separately from his brother, the legitimate son, the latter had allowed the plaintiff five compartments of the family house and 7½ bighas of ancestral land under an agreement in writing. This shows that the estate left by the father comprised property which was ancestral in his hands and thus though the question which arises here was not judicially decided, the actual decision was that the plaintiff as an illegitimate son succeeded as a coparcener to the suit property which was ancestral in his father's hands. In the next case of Raja Jogendra Bhupati v. Nityanand Mansingh, (1890) 17 Ind App 128 (PC) the Rajah who had succeeded to an impartible Raj as the only legitimate son of the last holder died without leaving any male issue, and the plaintiff, who was an illegitimate son of the same father filed the suit to establish his title to the Raj. The Privy Council approved Sadu's case and held that the plaintiff was entitled by right of survivorship to succeed to the impartible Raj. It is apparent from the fact of this case that the property in the hands of the deceased Raja was ancestral property though as in Sadu's case the question was not raised whether the plaintiff could succeed to property which was ancestral in father's hands. It would be observed that if in the Privy Council case the right of an illegitimate son extended to ancestral property of the nature of impartible Raj, the rule will apply with greater force to ordinary property as in the present case.

6. The next important case is the Privy Council case of Vellaiyappa Chetty v. Natarajan, 33 Bom. LR 1526 = 58 IA 402 = (AIR 1931 PC 294). The main question that arose for determination in that case was whether the plaintiffs who were illegitimate sons of a Sudra by a concubine were entitled after their putative father's death to maintenance out of the joint family property in the hands of their father's uncles and uncles' sons as his surviving coparceners. The father died joint in estate with his said collateral coparceners leaving considerable joint family property but no separate property of his own. The learned Single Judge of the Madras High Court decreed plaintiffs' claim for maintenance for life, and on appeal the Division Bench of the High Court confirmed the decree. From that decree the defendants collaterals of plaintiffs' father, filed an appeal to the Privy Council. Sir Dinsha Mulla who delivered the judgment of the board pointed out that there was no text of Smriti or Mitakshara which covered the point in question but relying on the principle of Hindu Law that where a person is excluded from inheritance to property or from a share on partition of joint family property he is entitled to maintenance out of that property and on certain Indian cases on the subject held that an illegitimate son of a Shudra by a continuous concubine has the status of a son and is a member of the family, that the share of inheritance given to him is not merely in lieu of maintenance but in recognition of his status as a son, and therefore the plaintiffs were entitled to maintenance out of the joint family property. In the course of judgment, His Lordship after referring to the three verses in Mitakshara quoted above said: (1528)

"It has been held in India that the text of Yagnavalkya cited in verse 1 and the commentary on the text refer to the estate of a separated householder. The view so taken has not been contested before their Lordships."

7. In support of the above rule, His Lordship cited four Madras High Court cases, the first of which is Ranoji v. Kandoji, (1885) ILR 8 Mad 557, at p. 561. Now, in (1885) ILR 8 Mad 557, the facts were as follows:—two of the three brothers of Shudra caste who formed a joint Hindu family died leaving legitimate sons and the third an illegitimate son, and the latter brought a suit for partition of joint family estate against his father's brothers' sons. Muttu Sami Ayyar J. held that the illegitimate son was not entitled to a share but only to maintenance on the ground that all the texts dealing with the right of an illegitimate son to succeed and claim share on partition related to the estate of separate householders. The learned Judge further observed: (p. 561)

"Where his (illegitimate son's) father has died 'Vibhakta' or separated, there can be no question that the right of the illegitimate son extends not only to his father's acquisitions, but to ancestral property which may have come to the father's hands."

Now, the Privy Council no doubt overruled the view expressed by Muttu Sami Ayyar, J., that the share of inheritance given to an illegitimate son was in lieu of maintenance and held that he had the status of a son though with limited rights as compared with a legitimate son. But what is of importance to note here is that His Lordship cited with approval Ranoji's case in support of the view that the Text of Mitakshara quoted above refers to the estate of a separated householder; and such estate, as pointed out by Muttu Sami Ayyar, J., comprised not only father's self acquired or separate property but only ancestral property which came to his hands. Thus it would be seen that the estate of a separated householder in which an illegitimate son is entitled to have a share includes ancestral property, or as a matter of fact, any other joint family property, come to his father's share at the time of separating from his collateral coparceners. Further on principle it can make no difference if the father got ancestral property by way of his share in partition or he succeeded to it as a sole surviving co-parcener.

8. Now, the rule or law based upon the Privy Council case of Vellaiyappa Chetty is stated in Mulla's Hindu Law (1970) Reprint, 13th Edition, p. 365 paragraph 362) as follows:—

"If the father was joint at his death with his collaterals, e. g. his brothers or their sons, or his uncles or his sons, the illegitimate son is not entitled to demand a partition of the joint family property, but he is entitled as a member of the family to maintenance out of such property, provided his father left no separate estate."

9. Mr. Hombalkar seized upon the expression "his uncles or his sons" in the above proposition and contends that the words "or his sons" therein mean father's sons as the words 'his uncles' mean father's uncles, he therefore argues that as in the present case Babaji, was joint at the time of his death with his legitimate son Shankar the plaintiff is not entitled to demand partition of the ancestral property in the hands of Babaji but is merely entitled to maintenance out of such property. There is no merit whatsoever in this argument. On a plain reading of the said proposition it is obvious that the example of a father dying undivided with "his uncle or his sons" is given as an illustration of the father being joint with his collaterals, and therefore, the words "his sons" therein appear to be used in the sense of "their sons", i. e. uncles' sons. In this connection it will be recalled that in the Privy Council case of Vallaiyappa Chetty plaintiff's father had died joint with his (father's) uncles and uncles' (their) sons. Further none of the other cases cited in the foot-note (n) to the said proposition in paragraph 363 deal with a father of an illegitimate son dying joint only with his legitimate son or sons and the illegitimate son therefore (held to be) being barred from demanding a partition of ancestral or other joint family property in his father's hands. Thus there is no basis for defendant's above argument.

10. Mr. Hombalkar also sought to derive support from the observations made by Mr. Justice Broomfield and Mr. Justice Macklin in the Division Bench case of this court in Hiralal v. Meghraj. In that case the plaintiff, an illegitimate son of a Jain father, filed the suit for maintenance against his father's brother on whom his father's interest in the joint family property had devolved by survivorship. The trial Court decreed plaintiff's claim, and the appeal filed by the defendant to this Court was dismissed. It would have been seen from the above facts that the claim for maintenance in the suit was by a Jain, a member of a regenerate class. In the course of Judgment Macklin J. observed that the statement of law as to the right of an illegitimate son of a Shudra in Mitakshara Ch. I Section 12 referred to father's separate property (page 949). Broomfield J. also said that the said texts apply proprio vigore only in the case of separate property (P. 943). (underlinings by us). Mr. Hombalkar relying upon the said words "separate property" in the judgments argues that they mean only self-acquired property as distinguished from ancestral property in the hands of putative father. This argument is devoid of any substance. Both the learned Judges have referred to the case of Vellaiyappa Chetty in support of their statements. Now, in the passage quoted from the said case, the Privy Council said that the text of Yagnavalkya relates to the property of a "separated householder." It is thus evident that both the learned Judges used the expression "separate property" of a father in the sense of property of a father who had "separated" from other collateral coparceners and not as meaning the self-acquired property of the father.

11. Next, our attention was invited to two Supreme Court cases, viz. Gur Narain Das v. Gur Tahal Das, AIR 1952 SC 225 and Singhai Ajit Kumar v. Ujagar Singh, AIR 1961 SC 1334. In the first case the material facts were these: One Ramlu, a Shudra had 2 sons, Budparkash and Nandkishore. After the death of Ramlu, Budprasad died leaving one Kuldeep, his daughter's son, as his heir. Then died Nandkishore leaving his widow and two legitimate sons and two illegitimate sons. The plaintiff an illegitimate son of Nandkishore, brought a suit against the widow and other sons of Nandkishore for partition of the property left by Nandkishore. He contended that Budparkash and Nandkishore formed a joint Hindu family and Budprakash died without any male issue in a state of jointness with Nandkishore and thereupon the entire joint family property devolved on Nandkishore by survivorship and claimed his share therein by partition. Kuldeep, who was joined as party defendant to the suit contended that Budparkash had separated from Nandkishore and as Budparkash's heir he was entitled to a moiety in the family property. The Supreme Court (Fazalalli and Bose, JJ.) held that Budparkash had separated in status from Nandkishore each of them having a moiety of the joint family property and following the rule laid down in Vellaiyappa Chetty's case held that the plaintiff succeeded as a coparcener to one-half share of Nandkishore in the joint family property. From the above facts it is apparent that after the severance of joint family status between Budparkash and Nandkishore, the latter's moiety in the joint family property formed his estate to which the plaintiff succeeded as a coparcener with the legitimate sons of his father Nandkishore. In that case the point that arises before us was not disputed because it seems to have been thought that in view of the earlier decisions in Sadu v. Baiza, Jogendra Bhupatti v. Nityanand Mansingh and Vellaiyappa Chetty v. Natrajan it was settled at least inferentially, that an illegitimate son of a Shudra had a right to succeed to his father's property even though it may be ancestral in his hands. We may incidentally note that in this case also the expression "separate estate of plaintiff's father" in paragraph 8 of the judgment is used in the sense of property belonging to the father who had separated in status from his collateral-coparceners.

12. In the other Supreme Court case of Singhai Ajit Kumar, the property to which the illegitimate son claimed to succeed was self-acquired property of the deceased father and it has therefore, no bearing on the point.

13. Mr. Abhyankar for the respondent-plaintiff relied upon a decision of this court in Sakharam Satu v. Shamrao Maruti, AIR 1932 Bom 234, and two decisions of Madras and Andhra Pradesh High Courts respectively in Raju Thambiran v. Arunagiri Thambiran, AIR 1933 Mad 397 and China Apparao v. Narasimha Rao, AIR 1962 Andh Pra 515. In the Bombay case the facts were: One Satu, a Shudra, died in 1913 leaving three sons by a married wife and three illegitimate sons by his mistress Rakhma. In 1903, prior to his death Satu had executed a gift deed in favour of Rakhma and his illegitimate son conveying two lands and a house, described as his self-acquired property. Sakharam, an illegitimate son, filed the suit in 1925 against the legitimate sons of Satu to recover his share in the property held by them. The trial court decreed the suit but on an appeal by the defendants the District Court set aside the decree and dismissed the suit holding that the transaction of gift was as a matter of fact a giving of share in the property by Satu, and, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to claim partition. On appeal by the plaintiff the Division Bench of this court on a consideration of the gift-deed itself and other surrounding circumstances reversed the finding of the District court and held that by making the said gift Satu did not intend to extinguish any further claim of his illegitimate sons to the property and restored the trial court's decree. Now, from a perusal of the judgment it appears that the suit property was ancestral in the hands of plaintiff's father Satu. However, it is to be noticed that in the District Court the defendants-legitimate sons, conceded that the plaintiff and his two brothers were "dasiputras" and also agreed that they were entitled as illegitimate sons to the share in the father's property if the claim had not been disposed of in some other way. Thus it is clear that the parties had not joined an issue on the point whether an illegitimate son is entitled to claim partition of ancestral property in the hands of his father, but the controversy centred only round the question whether by the gift transaction the father had during his lifetime given a share of property to his illegitimate sons. Having regard to the concession made by the defendants the Division Bench case cannot be said to be an authority for the right of an illegitimate son to have a share in property which was ancestral in his father's hands.

14. As regards the other two cases of Raju Thambiran v. Arunagiri Thambiran and China Apparao v. Narasimha they are no doubt direct authorities on the point before us. In these cases it was held that an illegitimate son of a Shudra is entitled to claim partition of property irrespective of the fact whether the property left by the father was ancestral or self acquired. We may, however, point out that in Raju Thambiran's case the Madras High Court, besides relying on its earlier case of Ranoji v. Kandoji also relied on two Bombay cases of Sadu v. Baiza and Sakharam v. Shamrao. However as already seen in neither of these two cases the question here directly arose but the right of an illegitimate son to a share in ancestral property was not questioned.

15. It now remains to refer to the Nagpur case of Shamrao v. Munnabai, which the lower appellate court followed as binding upon it. In that case the facts were as follows: One Fakirrao, a Shudra, died leaving two sons, i.e. the original minor plaintiff an illegitimate son by his mistress, and Shamrao a legitimate son.

After his father's death the plaintiff filed the suit against Shamrao for partition and possession of his share of the property left by Fakirrao. The plaintiff succeeded in both the lower courts and Shamrao's appeal to the High Court was also dismissed by Mr. Justice Bose (as he then was). In that case there was no dispute that the suit property was ancestral in the hands of Fakirrao who at the time of his death was joint in estate only with Shamrao or that after Fakirrao's death a new coparcenery consisting of the plaintiff and Shamrao was created. But the question directly arose: what property this coparcenery can claim to hold? the father's self-acquired property? — the property which was ancestral in the father's hand? — or both? (See para 18 at page 45) Bose, J. on a construction of the text of Mitakshara, i.e. chapter I, Section 12, verse 2, in the light of J. R. Gharpure's Treatise on the Mitakshara held that every member of the fresh-coparcenery created after father's death obtains right in all the family property including that which was ancestral. The learned Judge also based his decision on the rulings in Satu v. Baiza and Jogendra Bhupati v. Nityanand. Now, Mr. Hombalkar is right in his contention that this authority was not binding on the learned appellate Judge, as assumed by him. However, a decision of another High Court deserves respect and that too by an eminent Judge has great persuasive value. Mr. Hombalkar, however, pointed out that in the Nagpur case there is no reference to Vellaiyappa Chetty's case and he says that the interpretation of the said verse 2 by Bose, J. goes beyond the ruling in that case. Now as mentioned earlier the Privy Council in that case held that the text of Yagnavalkya regarding the right of an illegitimate son relates to the estate of a separated householder. But it would have been seen that in the Nagpur case there was no question of the father having died undivided with any collateral-coparcener and the learned Judge was dealing only with a case of fresh coparcenery consisting of a legitimate son or sons and an illegitimate son or sons after their father's death which could happen if the father was at the time of death either separated from his collateral-coparceners or was a sole surviving coparcener. Thus, so far as the present point is concerned decision was in consonance with the above rule in Vellaiyappa Chetty's case and with the decisions in Satu v. Baiza, Jogendra Bhupati v. Nityanand Mansingh.

16. From the foregoing review of the case law it would have been seen that it is well settled proposition that an illegitimate son of a Shudra is entitled to succeed to his separated father's property whether ancestral or separate in his hands. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CHANDURKAR, J.

Govinda Zibla Doye, Petitioner v. Udhao Dharmaji Nikhade and others, Respondents.

Special Civil Applns. Nos. 2 and 3 of 1970, D/- 17-8-1971 against order of Y. G. Shirke, Member, Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, Nagpur, D/- 26-9-1969.

(A) Tenancy Laws — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act (99 of 1958), S. 50 — Tenant failing to exercise his right of purchase under S. 50 — Effect — (X-Ref:— Section 43 (14-A)).

The intention of the legislature as disclosed in Section 50 and S. 43(14A) was that land in respect of which the tenant has failed to exercise his right of purchase is either to be retained by the landlord if he is so entitled to retain having regard to the provisions of Section 21 (1) or the land was to be treated as surplus land of which management was deemed to have been assumed for a public purpose. If that was the intention of the legislature and if sub-section (14A) of S. 43 contemplated that fictionally a surrender has taken place in favour of the landlord and consequently how the land was to be dealt with was to be decided with reference to Section 21, it cannot be said that because the tenant continues to be in possession after the end of the agricultural year for which the lease was taken and after the tenant had failed to exercise his right of purchase the landlord must be deemed to have granted a second lease for the subsequent year. The statute itself has laid down what consequences follow on the failure of the tenant to exercise his right of purchase under Section 50. These consequences follow irrespective of inaction on the part of the landlord in not taking any steps to take possession of the land from the tenant who has failed to exercise his right of purchase. (Para 14)

(B) Tenancy Laws — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act (99 of 1958), S. 43 (14A) — Landlord cannot create tenancy after the statutory surrender — Mere lawful possession after such surrender will not clothe person in possession with the right of a tenant — (X-Ref:— Section 50).

The commencement of the tenancy which is referred to in Section 50 is the tenancy which is created by a landlord and it does not deal with any deemed tenancy under Section 6. The provisions of Section 43(14A) make it impossible for the landlord to deal with the land in any manner other than the one provided by Section 43(14A) read with Section 21 of the Tenancy Act and he is incompetent to create any tenancy for a subsequent period of time after the statutory surrender as provided by Section 43 (14A) has come into operation. Even the concept of holding over by a tenant is ruled out by the scheme of Section 50 read with Section 43(14A) of the Tenancy Act.

(C) Tenancy Laws — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act (99 of 1958), S. 50 — Limitation for exercise of right of purchase.

The right of purchase can be exercised under Sec. 43 (1) (a) and the tenant under Section 50 must within one year from the commencement of the tenancy serve a notice as contemplated by Section 43 (1) (a). Where the tenancy was created by the landlord for the first time from the agricultural year 1964-65 the tenant should have exercised his right of purchase as required by S. 43 (1) (a) within the period of one year from the commencement of tenancy and an application made on 17-11-1965 was obviously beyond the prescribed period. The tenant in such a case was clearly not entitled to statutory ownership as contemplated by Section 50. (Para 16)

(D) Tenancy Laws — Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act (99 of 1958), S. 36 (1) — Application for restoration of possession — Maintainability.

Though the effect of the fiction introduced in sub-section (14A) of S. 43 is that the land must be said to have been surrendered to the landlord by the tenant and the landlord must be said to have accepted the surrender, merely on this it does not necessarily follow that the person in possession is a trespasser. The Landlord cannot dispossess him except under an order of Tahsildar under Section 36(2). (Para 19)

Where he is dispossessed without an order of Tahsildar he is entitled to maintain an application for restoration of possession though his tenancy stands terminated by virtue of S. 43(14A). (Para 22)

B. R. Mandlekar, for Petitioner; P. N. Karekar, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 3, 5 and 6. S. N. Kherdekar, for intervener, for Petitioner-tenant; B. N. Deshpande, intervener, for Respondents Landlords.

ORDER: This judgment shall govern Special Civil Applications Nos. 2 and 3 of 1970. The questions involved in these petitions relate to the construction of Section 50 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act, 1958, hereinafter referred to as the Tenancy Act. The petitioner in both these petitions is the tenant and the respondents are the legal representatives of one Dharmaji who was the owner of Khasra No. 63/1, area 6.76 acres, and Khasra No. 63/3, area 0.52 acre, both situated at village Pitichuwa, Tahsil Warora, District Chandrapur. Petitioner Govinda had filed an application on 17-11-1965 claiming that he was entitled to purchase both the fields which he cultivated as a tenant since the year 1964-65 and that he should, therefore, be declared to be the owner of these fields. This application was registered as Revenue Case No. 1/59(14)/65-66. Landlord Dharmaji denied that the petitioner was the tenant and according to him the petitioner was a close relative of his and since he owned land adjacent to the fields in dispute he got his name recorded as a tenant in collusion with the Patwari. It was the landlord's case that both the fields were cultivated by him personally throughout. He also contested the application of the tenant on the grounds that he has no right to purchase the fields.

2. It appears that during the pendency of this application the tenant was dispossessed by the landlord on 13-3-1966 and the tenant, therefore filed an application on 13-6-1966 claiming restoration of possession under Section 36(1) of the Tenancy Act. Both these applications were dealt with by the Additional Tahsildar who was also functioning as the Agricultural Lands Tribunal.

3. On evidence the Agricultural Lands Tribunal held that the application made on 17-11-1965 was within the period provided by Section 50 of the Tenancy Act, because, according to him, the tenant had cultivated the fields for the period 1-4-1965 to 31-3-1966 also and the application was filed within one year from 1-4-1965 when the tenancy for the second year was created. The Agricultural Lands Tribunal also determined the price payable by the tenant. Dealing with the application of the tenant under S. 36(1) of the Tenancy Act the Lands Tribunal held that the tenant was entitled to restoration of possession.

4. Against this common order the legal representatives of the landlord filed two separate appeals which were also decided by a common order passed by the Special Deputy Collector, Land Reforms, Chandrapur. The Deputy Collector also took the view that the application filed on 17-11-1965 was within time and that the tenant was entitled to restoration of possession. He, however, set aside the order of the Agricultural Lands Tribunal determining the purchase price because he found that if the tenant so desired he may exercise the right conferred by Section 41 subject to the provisions of Section 43 (1) of the Tenancy Act. Subject to the modification of the order regarding determination of purchase price the order of the Agricultural Lands Tribunal was upheld.

5. The respondents then filed two revision applications before the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal. The Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal accepted the finding given by the Revenue authorities that the tenancy had initially commenced in the year 1964-65, but on a construction of provisions of Section 50 of the Tenancy Act it held that the application for exercising the right of purchase should have been made within one year from 1-4-1964 and the application made on 17-11-1965 was, therefore, barred by limitation. So far as the claim for restoration of possession was concerned, the Tribunal found that since the provisions of Sections 41 to 44 were not complied with within one year from the commencement of the tenancy in view of the provisions of Section 43 (14-A) of the Tenancy Act, the tenancy must be deemed to have been surrendered and the tenant was not entitled to continue in possession. Thus according to the Tribunal the application under Section 36 (1) was liable to be rejected. The Tribunal, therefore, allowed both the revisions and set aside the orders of the Deputy Collector and the Additional Tahsildar and the Agricultural Lands Tribunal. The petitioner tenant has now filed these two petitions. Special Civil Application No. 2 of 1970 arises out of the application made under Section 50, while Special Civil Application No. 3 of 1970 arises out of the application made under Section 36 (1) of the Tenancy Act.

6. As the questions involved in these two petitions were of general importance and would affect large number of cases arising under Section 50 of the Tenancy Act, I permitted Shri R. N. Deshpande and Shri S. N. Kherdekar Advocates to intervene. Shri R. N. Deshpande supported the contentions raised on behalf of the Landlord and Shri S. N. Kherdekar supported the contentions raised on behalf of the tenant.

7. The learned counsel appearing on behalf of the petitioner contended that even though the tenancy commenced on 1-4-1964 the tenant continued to be in cultivating possession in the year 1965-66 and a fresh lease must be taken to have been granted by the landlord which commenced on 1-4-1965 and the period of one year provided by Section 50 of the Tenancy Act must be reckoned with reference to the commencement of the lease from 1965-66 and not from the commencement of the lease from 1964-65. It was contended that the tenant must be held to be holding over after the end of the lease for the year 1964-65 and the application filed on 17-11-1965 could not be rejected as barred by limitation.

8. Shri Kherdekar supported these contentions and contended that the lease for the year 1964-65 stood terminated at the end of that year by virtue of the provisions of Section 43 (14-A) of the Tenancy Act and since the landlord had not taken any steps for obtaining possession the continued possession of the tenant must be traceable to a fresh tenancy which must be presumed to have been created by the landlord. Even otherwise, according to the learned counsel, since the landlord had not taken steps for obtaining possession the tenant was entitled in law to continue in possession and was, therefore, in lawful possession of the fields with the result that he would become a deemed tenant under Section 6 of the Tenancy Act. This state of circumstances according to the learned counsel, would continue for every year in succession and there will be commencement of a fresh lease at the beginning of every agricultural year and the tenant would be entitled to exercise his right of purchase under S. 50 every year.

9. It is, however, contended on behalf of the respondents by Shri Karekar that the right to purchase the land which is cultivated by a tenant by virtue of a lease granted after 1-4-1963 is given to him by Section 41 which creates a right of purchase in favour of all tenants and that Section 50 prescribes the limitation for the exercise of the right under Section 41 of the Tenancy Act. According to the learned counsel, where this right of purchase is not exercised within limitation prescribed by Section 50 the right of the tenant to continue in possession comes to an end by virtue of the provisions of Section 43 (14-A) and since in the instant case the tenant had failed to exercise his right of purchase within the limitation prescribed in Section 50 within one year from 1-4-1964 on which date the tenancy commenced on the findings of the Revenue authorities, the land must be deemed to have been surrendered to the landlord in view of the provisions of Section 43 (14-A) and the possession of the tenant thereafter must be deemed to be the possession of a trespasser who could be evicted under Section 120 (c) of the Tenancy Act.

10. Shri R. N. Deshpande who supported the contentions raised by Shri Karekar also contended that the deeming fiction created in sub-section (14-A) of S. 43 must be given its full effect and according to him where the tenant failed to exercise his right of purchase for all purposes the land must be deemed to be placed in possession of the landlord and the tenant was not, therefore, entitled to continue in possession and his possession was that of a trespasser who was liable to be evicted under Section 120 (c). It was contended by him that merely because the landlord did not take any steps to obtain possession an inference of a new tenancy being created again could not be drawn and there could not be a fresh commencement of tenancy every year even though the tenant continued in possession.

11. In order to appreciate these rival contentions it is necessary to refer to the material provisions of the Tenancy Act. Section 50 of the Tenancy Act, as it is found to-day, was not in the same form when the Act was first enacted in December 1958.

12. The original provisions of Section 50 of the Tenancy Act were as follows:—

"50. Right of tenant holding land under tenancy created after specified date to purchase land:— In the case of a tenancy created in any area after the date specified in sub-section (1) of S. 46, every tenant holding land under such tenancy and cultivating it personally shall be entitled to purchase within one year from the commencement of the tenancy so much of such land as he may be entitled to purchase under Section 41 and the provisions of Sections 41 to 44 (both inclusive) shall mutatis mutandis apply to such purchase".

In its original form the tenancies which were covered by Section 50 were those which were created after 1-4-1961 because that was the date on which there was a statutory transfer of ownership in favour of certain tenants who were entitled to purchase land under Section 41 of the Tenancy Act. It may be stated that Section 43 did not contain sub-section (14-A) initially and the concept of a deemed surrender of land which is contained in Section 43 (14-A) did not become relevant prior to 12-2-1962 when sub-section (14-A) was for the first time put on the Statute book by Act No. 2 of 1962. The next amendment of Section 50 was when Maharashtra Act 5 of 1961 was enacted and sub-section (2) was added to that section. It is not necessary to consider the effect of this amendment firstly because it dealt with creation of tenancies after 1-4-1961 by a serving member of the armed forces and secondly because this sub-section (2) is now deleted from Section 50. Section 50 was then again amended by Act No. 2 of 1962 and it is as a result of this amendment that the section is in its present form, except a small part of it which was the result of an amendment by Maharashtra Act No. 39 of 1964. The section which falls for consideration in the present proceedings is as follows:—

"50. Where a tenancy is restored under Section 7, 10, 21, 52 or 128-A or is created by a landlord not being a landlord within the meaning of Chapter III-A in any area after the date specified in sub-section (1) of S. 49-A, every tenant holding land under such tenancy and cultivating it personally shall be entitled to purchase within one year from the commencement or as the case may be, the restoration of the tenancy so much of such land as he may be entitled to purchase under Section 41 and the provisions of Sections 41 to 44 (both inclusive) shall mutatis mutandis apply to such purchase."

The material amendment in this section was obviously the result of the enactment of Section 49-A in the Tenancy Act by Maharashtra Act No. 2 of 1962. By enactment of Section 49-A the legislature provided for a statutory transfer of ownership of all land held by a tenant being land which is not transferred to the tenant under Section 46 or which was not purchased by him under Section 41 or Section 50 with effect from 1-4-1963, if such land was cultivated personally by the tenant and if certain conditions which are set out in Section 49-A were satisfied. Section 49-A operated notwithstanding anything contained in Section 41 or 46, or any custom, usage, decree, contract or grant to the contrary. Having provided for a statutory transfer of ownership with effect from 1-4-1963 in respect of lands held by a tenant on that day Section 50 was made applicable in respect of tenancies created after 1-4-1963. Section 50 did not provide only for tenancies which were created after 1-4-1963 but it also dealt with tenancies which were restored either under Section 7 or 10 or 52 or 28 or 128-A of the Tenancy Act. This section provided that every tenant holding land under such tenancy, that is to say, a tenancy which was restored under any one of the sections referred to in that section, or under a tenancy created after 1-4-1963, by a landlord not being a landlord within the meaning of Chapter III-A of the Tenancy Act, if he was cultivating the land held by him under such tenancy personally he shall be entitled to purchase that land within one year from the commencement or from the restoration of the tenancy as the case may be. The section then provides that the provisions of Sections 41 to 44, both inclusive, shall mutatis mutandis apply to such purchase.

13. Now, it is difficult to accept the argument of Shri Karekar that when Section 50 refers to Section 41 the entitlement to purchase is found in Section 41

while Section 50 only lays down the period of limitation. Such a construction appears to be contrary to the tenor of the section. Section 50 refers to Sec. 41 twice. The first reference has been made in order to indicate the extent of the land which the tenant is entitled to purchase under Section 50 of the Tenancy Act. The material words of the section minus all the adjectival clauses would be "every tenant holding land under such tenancy and cultivating it personally shall be entitled to purchase so much of such land as he may be entitled to purchase under Section 41". The words "such land" refers to the land which he holds under tenancy and which he cultivates personally. When it is to be decided whether the tenant is entitled to purchase the entire land which he holds under tenancy and which he cultivates personally, the reference to Section 41 becomes material. The section says that the tenant is entitled to purchase only so much land as he may be entitled to purchase under Section 41. Section 41 deals with the right of a tenant to purchase land and this right is subject to the provisions of Section 42 in which the extent of the land which the tenant may purchase under Section 41 is set out. The words "which the tenant may be entitled to purchase under Section 41" has obvious reference to the restriction in Section 42. The reference to Section 41 thus is for a specific purpose, namely, to find out the extent of land which the tenant is entitled to purchase. Section 42 is as follows:—

"42. The right of a tenant under Section 41 to purchase from his landlord the land held by him as a tenant shall be subject to the following conditions, namely:—

(a) if the tenant does not hold and cultivate personally any land, as a tenure-holder, the purchase of the land by him shall be limited to the extent of three family holdings;

(b) if the tenant holds and cultivates personally any land as a tenure-holder the purchase of the land by him shall be limited to such area as will be sufficient to make up the area of the land held by him as a tenure-holder to the extent of three family holdings."

These restrictions are thus imported by reference into Section 50 of the Tenancy Act. The effect is that Section 50 not only gives right to the tenant of the kind specified therein a right to purchase land, but with reference to Sections 41 and 42 the extent of the land which the tenant is entitled to purchase is also specified. Section 50 also refers to other conditions, namely, that a tenant must be a tenant who is holding land under a tenancy created after 1-4-1963 or which is restored to him and he must also be cultivating that land personally. Section 50 is thus a self contained provision dealing with the kinds of tenancies referred to therein, namely, tenancies created after 1-4-1963 and tenancies restored under any of the provisions mentioned therein. It also deals with the extent of the land which the tenant is entitled to purchase and it also deals with the time within which this right to purchase given by Section 50 must be exercised. As indicated in the section the tenant is entitled to purchase the land within one year from the commencement of the tenancy.

14. It is at this stage that it is contended that there cannot be only one commencement of tenancy, but there could be commencement of tenancy every year if the landlord permits the tenant to continue in possession and does not take immediate steps to obtain possession from a tenant, who has failed to exercise his right within one year. Whether Sec. 50 contemplates repeated commencement of tenancy or not will depend on what is the effect of the tenant failing to exercise his right of purchase within the specified period. It is here that the concluding part of Section 50 becomes material. The concluding part of Section 50 provides that the provisions of Sections 41 to 44 shall mutatis mutandis apply to such purchase. Where a tenant desires to exercise his right of purchase it cannot be disputed that he has to comply with the requirement of Section 43 of the Tenancy Act. Section 43 deals with the manner in which the tenant has to act if he desires to exercise his right. As it is, Section 43 (1) (a) no doubt refers to the right conferred by Section 41, but in view of the provision in Section 50 that provisions of Sections 41 to 44 shall apply mutatis mutandis even in a case where a tenant is exercising his right of purchase under Sec. 50 the provisions of Sec. 43 will be attracted and S. 43 (1) (a) must be read as dealing with a tenant who desires to exercise the right conferred by S. 50. Under sub-cl. (a) of sub-sec. (1) of S. 43 such a tenant has to make an offer to the landlord stating the price at which he is prepared to purchase the land, such price not exceeding twelve times the rent payable by him and the depreciated value of any structures, wells and embankments constructed and permanent fixtures made and the value of any trees planted on the land by the landlord after the period of the last Settlement or where no such Settlement is made during the period of thirty years before the commencement of the Act and the amount of the arrears of rent, if any, lawfully due on the day on which the offer is made. Under sub-clause (b) of Section 43(i) where the tenant is entitled to purchase a part of the land then he has to choose the area and location of the land to be purchased from the landlord and state in the offer the part which he has so chosen for being purchased. Under sub-section (2) of S. 43 if the landlord refuses or fails to accept the offer and to execute the sale deed within three months from the date of the offer, the tenant has to apply to the Tribunal for the determination of the reasonable price of the land. The further provisions deal with the determination of the purchase price by the Tribunal and under sub-section (8) of S. 43 when the purchase price is deposited in lump sum or the last instalment of the purchase price is deposited the Tribunal is required to issue a certificate of purchase in the prescribed form to the tenant in respect of the land and such certificate is made conclusive evidence of the purchase. Sub-section (9) provides that where the tenant fails to pay the entire purchase price within the period fixed under sub-s. (4) or (7) or is in arrears of four instalments under sub-section (4) or (7) the amount of the purchase price remaining unpaid and the amount of the interest thereon, if any, is recoverable as arrears of land revenue and on such recovery the Tribunal is to issue the certificate contemplated by sub-section (8). Sub-section (10) provides for the purchase becoming ineffective and sub-section (12) provides for the consequences of the purchase becoming ineffective. A reference to these provisions will be necessary at the later stage and these provisions are, therefore, being reproduced:—

43 (10). In the event of failure of recovery as arrears of land revenue under sub-section (9) the purchase shall not be effective and the amount deposited by the tenant shall be refunded to him after deducting the rent due from him for the period:

Provided that if the land is situated in a scheduled area the tenant shall also be refunded the amounts of land revenue and the cesses referred to in clauses (c) and (d) of sub-section (1) of S. 17 paid by him.

(12) Where any purchase of land becomes ineffective, the landlord shall be entitled to recover from the tenant the rent of the land as if the land had not been purchased and the rent due, if not paid within the period or extended period referred to in sub-section (13), shall be recovered from the tenant as an arrear of land revenue and paid to the landlord. The amount of rent so recoverable shall be deducted from the amount if any to be refunded to the tenant".

Under sub-section (14) of S. 43 after the issue of the certificate under sub-s. (8) the tenant is to be declared Bhumiswami or Bhumidhari by the Tribunal with effect from the agricultural year next following the date of issue of the certificate. Then we come to the material provisions of sub-section (14-A) which are as follows:

"43 (14-A). If a tenant fails to exercise his right of purchase under Sec. 41 in respect of any land or the purchase of any land becomes ineffective, the land shall be deemed to have been surrendered to the landlord, and thereupon the provisions of sub-sections (1) and (2) of S. 21 and Chapter VII shall apply to such land as if the land was surrendered by the tenant under Section 20."

This sub-section sets out the consequences of the tenant failing to exercise the right of purchase under Section 41, which, in view of the provisions of Section 50, must also follow where a tenant fails to exercise his right of purchase under Section 50 and it also provides for the consequences of the purchase of any land becoming ineffective. The consequences are that the land shall be deemed to have been surrendered to the landlord and thereupon the provisions of sub-sections (1) and (2) of S. 21 shall apply to such land as if the land was surrendered by the tenant under Section 20. The consequence which is set out in this section is that the land is deemed to have been surrendered to the landlord and after such surrender an enquiry is required to be made having regard to the provisions of Section 21 (1) and (2) about the extent of the land which the landlord is entitled to retain with him. Section 21 of the Act provides that where a tenancy is terminated by surrender under sub-section (1) of S. 21, the landlord is entitled to retain only so much of land as will prevent the total area which he cultivates personally, whether as tenure-holder or tenant, or both from exceeding three family holdings. Under sub-section (2) if it is found that the landlord is not entitled to retain either the whole or any part of the surrendered land then that land has to be declared as surplus land. Under Sec. 81 of the Tenancy Act where any land is declared to be surplus land under any of the provisions of the Tenancy Act, the State Government is deemed to have assumed the management of such land for a public purpose from the date of the declaration. Reading the provisions of Section 50 and S. 43 (14-A) together it is clear that the intention of the legislature as disclosed in these two provisions was that land in respect of which the tenant has failed to exercise his right of purchase is either to be retained by the landlord if he is so entitled to retain having regard to the provisions of Section 21(1), or the land was to be treated as surplus land of which management was deemed to have been assumed for a public purpose. If that was the intention of the legislature and if sub-section (14-A) of Section 43 contemplated that fictionally a surrender has taken place in favour of landlord and consequently how the land was to be dealt with was to be decided with reference to Section 21, it is difficult to accept the contention that because the tenant continues to be in possession after the end of the agricultural year for which the lease was taken and after the tenant had failed to exercise his right of purchase the landlord must be deemed to have granted a second lease for the subsequent year. The statute itself had laid down what consequences follow on the failure of the tenant to exercise his right of purchase under S. 50. These consequences follow irrespective of inaction on the part of the landlord in not taking any steps to take possession of the land from the tenant who has failed to exercise his right of purchase.

15. It is difficult to see how the provisions of Section 6 of the Tenancy Act which were sought to be invoked by Shri Kherdekar were attracted. No doubt until the landlord obtains possession from the tenant the tenant continues in possession but that continuance is contemplated by the provisions of the Tenancy Act itself. It is difficult to read in the provisions of Section 50 and Section 43 (14-A) the intention of the legislature that when the statutory surrender comes into effect merely because the possession was lawful the person in possession should again be clothed with the right of a tenant by Section 6 of the Tenancy Act. The commencement of the tenancy which is referred to in Section 50 is the tenancy which is created by a landlord and it does not deal with any deemed tenancy under Section 6. The provisions of Section 43 (14-A) make it impossible for the landlord to deal with the land in any manner other than the one provided by Section 43 (14-A) read with Section 21 of the Tenancy Act and he is incompetent to create any tenancy for a subsequent period of time after the statutory surrender as provided by Section 43 (14-A) has come into operation. Even the concept of holding over by a tenant on which reliance was sought to be placed by Shri Mandlekar is ruled out by the scheme of Section 50 read with Section 43 (14-A) of the Tenancy Act.

16. The consequences contemplated by Section 43 (14-A) of the Tenancy Act so far as the present kind of case is concerned arise only if a tenant fails to exercise his right of purchase. In a case covered by Section 50 of the Tenancy Act these consequences must, therefore, arise where the tenant fails to exercise his right of purchase within one year from the commencement of tenancy.

The words "shall be entitled to purchase within one year" in Section 50 must, therefore, be read in the light of the provisions of Section 43 (14-A) which refer to the tenant's failure to exercise his right of purchase. How the right of purchase is to be exercised is dealt with in Section 43 (1) (a) and in my view what the tenant is required to do within one year when Section 50 refers to the tenant being entitled to purchase the land within one year is that the tenant must within one year from the commencement of the tenancy serve a notice as contemplated by Section 43 (1) (a) of the Tenancy Act. In case a tenant invokes the provisions of Section 43 (1) (a) within a period of one year then, in my view, the tenant could be said to have exercised his right of purchase within one year as contemplated by Section 50. By the very nature of the proceedings which is contemplated by Section 43, it is impossible that the entire proceedings or even making of an application could in certain cases be made within a period of one year from the commencement of the tenancy. It would be enough if the first step to exercise the right of purchase, namely, the serving of a notice under Section 43 (1) (a) is served within one year in case a tenant wants to exercise the right which is given to him under Section 50 of the Tenancy Act.

Since the tenancy was created by the landlord for the first time from the agricultural year 1964-65 then as found by the Revenue Tribunal the tenant should have exercised his right of purchase as required by Section 43 (1) (a) within the period of one year and the application made on 17-11-1965 was also obviously beyond the prescribed period. The tenant was, therefore, clearly not entitled to statutory ownership as contemplated by Section 50 of the Tenancy Act. Special Civil Application No. 2 of 1970 must, therefore, stand rejected.

17. It is now necessary to decide whether the Tribunal was justified in holding that the tenant was not entitled to make an application under Section 36 (1). The Tribunal has taken the view that the tenant having forfeited his right under Section 50 had no right to continue in possession and consequently he was not entitled to make an application seeking restoration of possession. This view is sought to be supported both by Mr. Karekar and Mr. Deshpande and as already stated it is their contention that since the land is deemed to have been surrendered fictionally under Section 43 (14-A) the tenant became a trespasser and he could be ousted under Section 120 (c) of the Tenancy Act, and since he ceased to be a tenant neither was any application by the landlord under Section 36 (2) necessary nor was the ex-tenant, according to them, entitled to apply for restoration of possession under Section 36 (1) of the Tenancy Act.

18. It is difficult to accept the argument that as a result of the operation of sub-section (14-A) of S. 43 the tenant was intended to be treated as a trespasser by the provisions of the Tenancy Act. It cannot be disputed that where a tenancy was created after 1-4-1963 there was no express provision in the Act which enabled the landlord to terminate the tenancy of the tenant. The provisions of Section 9 of the Tenancy Act provide that no tenancy of any land shall be terminated merely on the ground that the period fixed for its duration whether by agreement or otherwise has expired. The effect of the provisions of Section 9 and the absence of any provisions enabling the landlord to terminate the tenancy would have been that the tenant would have continued indefinitely in the capacity of a tenant in possession of the land with no remedy to the landlord to obtain possession or to terminate his tenancy. The scheme of Chapter III of the Tenancy Act appears to be that except for some exempted tenants statutory rights of ownership had to be vested in the tenants at some point of time or the other. Under Section 46 this date was 1st April 1961; under Section 49-A this date was put as 1st April 1963 and in case of tenants to whom Sections 46 and 49-A applied and where certain proceedings for termination of tenancy were pending these dates of statutory ownership were postponed. But one object which is apparent in the provisions of Chapter III is that either the landlord exercises his right of resumption and takes possession of land or in cases where he fails to exercise such a right or becomes unsuccessful in terminating the lease prior to 1-4-1963 the ownership is transferred to the tenant. Generally the Tenancy Act does not contemplate that the relationship of the landlord and tenant will continue to exist for an indefinite period of time. In the case of a tenancy created or restored after 1-4-1963 the legislature did not contemplate continuance of relationship of landlord and tenant beyond one year from the commencement or restoration of tenancy as the case may be. It is in the light of this scheme of the Act that the applicability of Section 43 (14-A) to a case covered by Section 50 will have to be considered. If there was no provision enabling the landlord to terminate the tenancy whether on the ground of personal cultivation or otherwise in the case of a tenant whose tenancy is created after 1-4-1963 and if one of the objects of Section 50 of the Tenancy Act was not to permit landlord-tenant relationship to continue beyond a year in the case of a tenancy created or restored after 1-4-1963 then the legislature had provided by making the provisions of S. 43 (14A) applicable to a case covered by Sec. 50 to bring about termination of tenancy by providing for a fictional surrender. Surrender is one of the recognised modes of termination of tenancy, but it contemplates acceptance of possession by the landlord when the tenant surrenders it. A mere yielding up of an interest by the tenant in favour of the landlord unless the landlord accepts possession does not bring about termination of tenancy. A voluntary surrender of land by the tenant was obviously impossible in each case at the end of one year of tenancy and it was, therefore, that the legislature introduced a deeming fiction by which on the failure of the tenant to exercise his right of purchase the land was deemed to have been surrendered to the landlord. The purpose of the deeming fiction obviously was to bring about the effect of termination of tenancy by deeming that a tenant had surrendered the land. Beyond bringing about this result of termination of tenancy by a fictional surrender though actually the land continues to be in possession of the tenant there does not appear to be any other purpose of introducing the fiction that land must be deemed to have been surrendered to the landlord. But for this there could not be any other way of bringing about an end to the relationship of landlord and tenant. The question is whether on account of this fiction it necessarily follows that the tenant becomes a trespasser. Shri Deshpande contended that when the legislature has provided that the land must be deemed to have been surrendered to the landlord it must be held that the land must be deemed to be in possession of the landlord, the tenant was not entitled to be in possession, and therefore, the tenant was a trespasser.

19. Now, there is no doubt that the effect of the fiction introduced in sub-section (14-A) of Section 43 is that the land must be said to have been surrendered to the landlord by the tenant and the landlord must be said to have accepted the surrender, but merely on this it does not necessarily follow that the person in possession becomes a trespasser. There are several provisions in the Tenancy Act which refer to the tenant whose tenancy has been terminated as a 'tenant'. These provisions were considered by a Full Bench of this court in Madhao v. Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, Nagpur, 1970 Mah LJ 991 = (AIR 1971 Bom 106) (FB). In paragraph 17 of the judgment the Full Bench has referred to the provisions of Sections 19, 29, 36, 57-B (2) and 36 (2) of the Tenancy Act. The Full Bench was considering the question whether in a case where a tenant has surrendered his tenancy under Section 20 of the Tenancy Act, an order under Section 36 as contemplated by Section 36 (2) was necessary, to be obtained before the landlord took possession. A similar argument was advanced in that case and it was contended that where tenancy is terminated by surrender and it is verified then the person who was holding the land ceased to be a tenant, and therefore, possession can be taken from him without an order of Tahsildar. This argument was repelled and it was held that even in a case where a tenancy was terminated an order of a Tahsildar was necessary because the person was still referred to as a tenant by the Tenancy Act. There is no reason to take a different view with regard to the provisions of Section 43 (14-A) because it will appear from the provisions of sub-section (10) of Section 43 that even after the purchase has become ineffective the person in possession has been referred to as the tenant in the Act. Sub-section (10) of Section 43 provides that in the event of failure of recovery as arrears of land revenue under sub-section (9) the purchase shall not be effective and the amount deposited by the tenant shall be refunded to him after deducting the rent due from him for the period. Then there is sub-section (12) which says that where any purchase of land becomes ineffective the landlord shall be entitled to recover from the tenant the rent of the land as if the land had not been purchased and the rent due, if not paid within the period or extended period referred to in sub-section (13), shall be recovered from the tenant as an arrear of land revenue and paid to the landlord. Thus even in a case where a purchase becomes ineffective the person in possession is referred to as the tenant and there is an express liability on him to pay rent. In sub-section (14-A) itself a person failing to exercise his right of purchase is referred to as a tenant. Sub-section (14-A) comes into operation after the tenant has failed to exercise his right of purchase, and therefore, provides for a set of events subsequent to the last day before which he must exercise his right of purchase. Even in such a provision the person is referred to as a tenant.

20. The purpose of the fiction in Section 43 (14-A) was only to bring about termination of tenancy by surrender for which otherwise actual delivery of possession would have become necessary, but in view of the fiction it was no longer necessary. The person who continued to be in possession would still continue to be lawfully in possession until he is dispossessed by an order of the Tahsildar under Section 36 (2) of the Tenancy Act. The landlord does not cease to be a landlord and the tenant whose tenancy was terminated was still described by the Tenancy Act as a tenant and in view of the plenary provision in Section 36 (2) that save as otherwise provided in sub-section (3-A), no landlord shall obtain possession of any land, dwelling house or site used for any allied pursuit held by a tenant except under an order of the Tahsildar the landlord has no right to obtain possession privately.

21. There is another reason why it should be improper to hold that the landlord need not approach the Tahsildar for an order for possession. In a given case a landlord may not be entitled to the whole or any part of the land in respect of which the statutory surrender had operated. An enquiry is required to be made whether any part of the land becomes surplus land. The proper forum for making such an enquiry is the Tahsildar and the proceeding in which such an enquiry could be made is the proceeding initiated by the landlord asking for possession. The provisions of Section 120 (C) are by themselves of a summary nature and if a detailed enquiry is contemplated by provisions of Section 21 (1) and (2) then that enquiry could only be made by the Tahsildar. If the construction canvassed on behalf of the landlord is accepted then there will be no forum in which the enquiry contemplated by Section 21 (1) and (2) could be made. It is not, therefore, possible for me to accept the contention that because of the fiction in sub-section (14A) of Section 43 the tenant becomes a trespasser and no order for possession is necessary under Sec. 36 (2) of the Tenancy Act.

22. In the instant case the landlord has admittedly taken possession without an order of a Tahsildar. The tenant has, therefore, been evicted in contravention of sub-section (2) of Section 36 because he was entitled to continue in possession till he was evicted by an order of the Tahsildar under sub-section (2) of Section 36. He was, therefore, clearly entitled to maintain his application for restoration of possession though his tenancy stood surrendered by virtue of Section 43 (14-A) of the Tenancy Act. It is not, therefore, possible to sustain the view taken by the Tribunal that merely because he had failed to exercise his right of purchase within the period of one year as prescribed by Section 50 he had lost the right to continue in possession. The order of the Tribunal rejecting the application under Section 36 (1) must, therefore, be quashed and it must be held that the tenant having been dispossessed in contravention of Section 36 (2) of the Tenancy Act was entitled to restoration of possession. Special Civil Application No. 3 of 1970 which arose out of the application for restoration of possession is, therefore, allowed.

23. In the circumstances of the case there will be no order as to costs in both the Special Civil Applications.

Appeal allowed.

MODY AND KHAN, JJ.

Ajitsingh, Petitioner v. The State of Maharashtra and others, Respondents.
Special Civil Appln. No. 377 of 1969,
D/- 16-11-1970.

(A) Land Acquisition Act (1894), Sections 4, 6 and 55 — Maharashtra Rules under Section 55, Rule 1 — Publication of Notice under Section 4 (1) — Rule 1 directing individual service of such notice is mandatory — Non-service of such notice renders notification under Sec. 6 invalid.

Service of individual notice contemplated by Rule 1 must stand on the same footing as the other two modes of publication mentioned in Section 4 (1) and it is therefore, mandatory and not merely directory. All the said three forms of publishing the notification under Section 4 are a pre-condition to the issue of a notification under Section 6. The non-service of an individual notice as contemplated by Rule 1 would render the notification issued under Section 6 invalid because it would not give proper opportunity to the person interested to urge his objections as contemplated by Section 5-A. (Para 7)

The correct stage at which the objections under the provisions of Sec. 5-A are to be urged is before the notification under Section 6 is issued. The petitioner had no opportunity to do so for want of service of an individual notice upon him. The mere fact that the petitioner did urge those objections and was heard after the notification was issued under Section 6 would not prevent the notification under Section 6 being held invalid. (Para 8)

(B) Land Acquisition Act (1894), Sections 4 and 6 — Notification under Section 6 vis-a-vis petitioner's land declared invalid for non-service of individual notice under Section 4 — Efficacy of Section 4 notification as regards that land is exhausted and no further notification under Section 6 can be issued on its basis.  C. G. Madkholkar, for Petitioner; P.
 G. Palshikar, Asstt. Govt. Pleader, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 4.

MODY, J.:— This is a petition praying for a writ under Article 226 of the Constitution of India quashing certain notifications issued under Sections 4 and 6 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 (hereinafter referred to as the Act). The State of Maharashtra the Commissioner, Nagpur Division, the Collector, Chanda and the Special Land Acquisition Officer, Chanda are the respondents.

2. The petitioner by a purchase-deed purchased a land khasra No. 198/1 of Ballarpur, taluka and district Chanda admeasuring 2.45 acres from one Sadasshiv Krishnaji Khanke. The deed is dated 29th January 1966 and it was registered on the same day. On the same day, the petitioner gave intimation of his purchase to the Patwari of Ballarpur to effect mutation entries. It is stated in the petition and not denied in the counter-affidavit that such a mutation entry was made towards the end of 1967, the exact date is not mentioned, but we are informed across the Bar was 16th November 1967.

3. A notification under Section 4 of the Act was published in the Maharashtra Government Gazette dated 1-2-1968 for acquisition for the public purposes mentioned in the notification. Amongst the lands sought to be acquired by the notification were 47,250 sq. ft. out of the petitioner's said land bearing khasra No. 198/1. On 22nd August, 1968, a notification was published in the Maharashtra Government Gazette under Section 6 of the Act and amongst the lands acquired thereunder and the lands mentioned therein were 47,045 sq. ft. out of the petitioner's land bearing khasra No. 198/1. In the second week of November 1968, the petitioner received a notice from the Special Land Acquisition Officer, respondent No. 4, which states that it is a notice under clause (8) of Section 9 of the Act. The notice bears no date. It gave notice to the petitioner to appear before the fourth respondent on 26th November 1968. It is the petitioner's case that it was from this notice that the petitioner came to know for the first time about the said acquisition proceedings in respect of his said land. The petitioner appeared before the fourth respondent in pursuance of the said notice and raised various contentions. One of such contentions was that he had received no notice or an individual notice after the notification under Section 4 was issued and he had therefore been unable to raise objections as contemplated by Section 5-A of the Act and that the notification under Section 6 having been issued in such circumstances was invalid.

4. The petitioner has raised several contentions in the petition in support of his case that the notifications under Sections 4 and 6 are invalid. At the hearing, the petitioner has, however, confined his case to one argument. That argument is that it is compulsory that an individual notice should have been served on the petitioner, that no such notice was served on him, that the petitioner, therefore, got no opportunity whatsoever to raise objections as contemplated by Section 5-A, that, therefore, the notification under Section 6-A has not been validly issued and lastly that not only the notification under Section 6 in so far as his land is concerned be set aside but that the notification under Section 4 also in so far as it affects his land should be quashed and set aside. In view of the fact that only this contention has been urged by the petitioner, it is unnecessary for us to refer, and we, therefore, do not refer, to the other facts and contentions contained in the petition and in the counter-affidavit filed on behalf of the respondents. It is stated in the counter-affidavit that the petitioner had urged all his contentions before the fourth respondent when he appeared in answer to the said notice under Sec. 9. It is, however, not disputed on behalf of the respondents that the objections which the petitioner can urge under Section 5-A could not in law have been urged at the stage when the petitioner appeared in answer to that notice under Section 9, that is, after the Section 6 notification was issued. It is not disputed that an opportunity to urge objections under Section 5-A must precede the publication of a notification under Section 6 and that they cannot be urged after such a notification is issued. It is clear that the mere fact that the petitioner attempted to urge or in fact urged objections which could have been urged under Section 5-A at the later stage after the Section 6 notification was issued, cannot prejudice the petitioner's present contention about invalidity of the notification under Section 6 on the ground of want of individual notice before the notification under Section 6 was issued. But what has to be decided is whether it was obligatory to serve the individual notice on the petitioner as canvassed by the petitioner (1) before the notification under Section 6 was issued.

5. In paragraph 9 of the counter-affidavit, it has been stated:

"It is submitted that the record-of-right was not corrected till 28-8-1967, on which date, its copy was supplied by Patwari. Notice was then issued to the petitioner and his objections were duly considered by respondent No. 4, as stated hereinbefore."

It may be noted that an extract from the relevant record-of-rights as annexed as annexure R-1 to the counter-affidavit shows the name of the petitioner's vendor Sadashiv Krishnaji and not that of the petitioner against the land with which we are concerned in this petition. It should, however, be noted that under the signature of the Patwari "S. S. Dhakate" who certified the extract, there appears the date "28-8-1967", which is the date on which the Patwari issued the certified copy of the extract and it is this date which is referred to in paragraph 9 of the counter-affidavit. The words "notice was then issued to the petitioner" are capable of creating a little misunderstanding because of the use of word "then". The notice here referred to was not issued shortly after 28th August, 1967. Mr. Palshikar, the learned counsel for the respondents, stated that the reference to the notice here was to the said notice under Section 9, which was received by the petitioner in the second week of November 1968. The mutation entry was already made as stated earlier, towards the end of 1967.

6. The contentions urged on behalf of the petitioner divide themselves into three groups as under:

(i) to give an effective opportunity to the petitioner to be heard under Section 5-A of the Act, service on the petitioner of an individual notice of the notification under Section 4 was mandatory but that in this case, although the said purchase-deed in favour of the petitioner was not only registered but the necessary mutation was effected in the record-of-rights long prior to the issue of the notification under Section 4, no such individual notice of the Notification under Section 4 was served on the petitioner.

(ii) service of such individual notice on the owner of the land sought to be acquired being a pre-requisite to the issue of a notification under Section 6, the result is that if such individual notice is not served, the notification under Section 6 is invalid.

(iii) if the notification under Sec. 6 is invalid, the efficacy of the notification under Section 4 on which the former is based gets exhausted, and no second or further notification under Section 6 can be issued on the basis of the same notification under Section 4.

Sub-section (1) of Section 4 provides:

"Whenever it appears to the (appropriate Government) (or the Commissioner) that land in any locality (is needed or) is likely to be needed for any public purpose, a notification to that effect shall be published in the Official Gazette, and the Collector shall cause public notice of the substance of such notification to be given at convenient places in the said locality."

It is clear that what sub-section (1) of Section 4 requires is that the notification under the sub-section must, firstly be published in the Official Gazette and, secondly, the Collector must cause public notice of the substance of such notice to be given at convenient places in the locality in which the land intended to be acquired is situate.

Sub-section (1) of Section 5-A provides:

"Any person interested in any land which has been notified under Section 4, sub-section (1), as being needed or likely to be needed for a public purpose or for a Company may, within thirty days after the issue of the notification, object to the acquisition of the land or of any land in the locality, as the case may be."

Neither Section 4 nor Section 5-A contains any provision for the service of an individual notice on any person interested in the land sought to be acquired by a notification issued under Section 4. However, the relevant part of sub-section (1) of Section 55 of the Act provides:

"The (appropriate Government) shall have power to make rules consistent with this Act for the guidance of officers in all matters connected with its enforcement and may from time to time alter and add to the rules so made."

As appearing from the Manual of Land Acquisition for State of Bombay, written by F. G. Hartnell Anderson and published by the Government of Maharashtra in the edition of 1970, the State Government has framed certain Rules in respect of Section 5-A in exercise of the powers so conferred by Section 55. Rule No. 1 of those Rules provides as under:

"Whenever any notification under Section 4 has been published but the provisions of Section 17 have not been applied; and the Collector has, under Section 4 (1) issued notice to the parties interested; and on or before the last day fixed by the Collector in those notices in this behalf any objection is lodged under Section 5-A (2): Firstly, the Collector shall record the objection in his proceedings; secondly, the Collector shall consider whether the objection is admissible according to these rules."

7. This R. 1 forms part of the statutory Rules made by the State Government in exercise of the statutory power delegated to it under Section 55 (1). The Rules are framed for the guidance of the officers as stated in Section 55 (1). The Rules, therefore, have the force of law. The provision in the said Rule 1 that "the Collector has under Section 4 (1) issued notices to the parties interested" clearly indicates that for the purpose of giving an adequate opportunity to the owner of land in respect of which a notification under Section 4 (1) has been issued notice must be given to him as a "party interested" in that land. In other words, this provision for giving an individual notice to the owner or other party interested in the land, contained in Rule 1 is by the Rule made an additional mode of publishing the notification under Section 4. It is in addition to the publication in the Official Gazette and the publication by the Collector as required under sub-section (1) of Section 4 and all these three kinds of publications stand on an equal footing. The additional provision of publication as required by R. 1 is obviously required to be made for obvious reasons. Acquisition of land under the Act is for public good and in the public interest and the owner of land even if unwilling to part with it, is compelled by legislation to part with it. It is to provide him a fair opportunity to urge his objections under Section 5-A. Rule 1 provides that an individual notice must be given because a general public notice as provided under Section 4 (1), though it would amount to a constructive notice to the owner, was not thought to be enough or fair as it may not in fact come to the notice of the owner. Mr. Palshikar, the learned counsel for the respondents, did not dispute that this rule does require individual notices to be served on all persons interested in the land covered by the notification under Section 4 at the date of such notification. He, however, contended that this provision is only directory and not mandatory with the result that even if a person interested in the land happens not to have been served with such an individual notice, it would not invalidate the notification under Section 6 issued thereafter. He did not dispute that the non-publication in the Official Gazette and by the Collector as required under sub-section (1) of Section 4 would render the notification under Section 6 invalid. In our view, because the effect of the publication of the notifications under Sections 4 and 6 would be to compulsorily deprive the owner of his land even against his will, the requirement of the Rule of service of individual notice contemplated by the said Rule 1 must stand on the same footing as the other two modes of publication mentioned in sub-sec. (1) of Section 4 and it is, therefore, mandatory and not merely directory. All the said three forms of publishing the notication under Section 4 are a pre-condition to the issue of a notification under Section 6. The non-service of an individual notice as contemplated by Rule 1 would render the notification issued under Section 6 invalid because it would not give proper opportunity to the person interested to urge his objections as contemplated by Section 5-A.

8. In the case before us, it is common ground that no individual notice as contemplated by Rule 1 was served upon the petitioner before the notification under Section 6 was issued. Considerable time prior to the issue of the notification under Section 4 the purchase-deed in favour of the petitioner was not only registered but a mutation entry was made in the record-of-rights against the land with which we are concerned in this petition. What appears to have happened is that for a considerable time after the mutation entry was effected, it was not brought to the notice of the authority concerned and that for want of inquiry in that behalf the officer who issued the notification under Section 4 did not know that the petitioner had purchased the land. The result was that an individual notice was in fact served as required by Rule 1 but it was served on the vendor who was no longer interested in the land after he effected the sale-deed in favour of the petitioner. As a matter of fact at the date of such service the vendor himself was dead and the notice was accepted by the son of the vendor. But whatever be the reason why such an individual notice was not served on the petitioner, the fact remains that he was not served. Mr. Palshikar pointed out that as a matter of fact, after the notification under Section 6 was issued, the petitioner did come to know of the acquisition proceedings and did urge all his objections including those objections which he could have urged under Section 5-A and that he was heard. In our opinion, the correct stage at which the objections under the provisions of S. 5-A are to be urged is before the notification under S. 6 is issued. The petitioner had no opportunity to do so for want of service of an individual notice upon him. The mere fact that the petitioner did urge those objections and was heard after the notification was issued under Section 6 would not prevent the notification under Section 6 being held invalid. We, therefore, hold that the impugned notification under Section 6 was invalid for want of individual notice contemplated by Rule 1 having been served upon the petitioner before such notification was issued.

9. The last contention of the petitioner is that if the notification under Section 6 is held to be invalid, it must be declared that the notification under Section 4 has exhausted itself and is not available for the issue of any second or subsequent notification under Section 6 based upon the same notification under Section 4. In this connection, reliance has been placed by Mr. Madkholkar, the learned counsel for the petitioner, on the judgment of the Supreme Court in the State of Madhya Pradesh v. Vishnu Prasad Sharma, AIR 1966 SC 1593. In that case after a notification was issued under Section 4 of the Act, successive notifications were issued from time to time under S. 6 in respect of different pieces of lands covered by that notification under Section 4 and the validity of the notifications under Section 6 subsequent to the first notification under Section 6 was under challenge. The Supreme Court in its judgment considered various relevant provisions of the Act and a majority of the Court held that after the first notification was issued under Section 6, the efficiency of the notification under Section 4 was exhausted and no subsequent notification could be issued under Section 6 in respect of any land although it may fall under the notification issued under Section 4 and that such further and subsequent notifications were invalid. We reproduce below some material portions from that judgment of the majority of the Bench.

"It seems to us clear that once a declaration under Section 6 is made, the notification under Section 4 (1) must be exhausted for it has served its purpose. There is nothing in Sections 4, 5-A and 6 to suggest that Section 4 (1) is a kind of reservoir from which the Government may from time to time draw out land and make declaration with respect to it successively. If that was the intention behind Sections 4, 5-A and 6 we would have found some indication of it in the language used therein. But as we read these three sections together we can only find that the scheme is that Section 4 specifies the locality, then there may be survey and drawing of maps of the land and the consideration whether the land is adopted for the purpose for which it has to be acquired, followed by objections and making up of its mind by the Government what particular land out of that locality it needs. This is followed by a declaration under Section 6 specifying the particular land needed and that in our opinion completes the process and the notification under Section 4(1) cannot be further used thereafter. At the stage of Section 4 the land is not particularised but only the locality is mentioned; at the stage of Section 6 the land in the locality is particularised and thereafter it seems to us that the notification under Section 4(1) having served its purpose exhausts itself. The sequence of events from a notification of the intention to acquire [Section 4(1)] to the declaration under S. 6 unmistakably leads one to the reasonable conclusion that when once a declaration under Section 6 particularising the area out of the area in the locality specified in the notification under Section 4 (1) is issued, the remaining non-particularised area stands automatically released. In effect the scheme of these three sections is that there should be first a notification under Section 4(1) followed by one notification under Section 6 after the Government has made up its mind which land out of the locality it requires."

In that case it was contended that where the land is required for a small project and the area is not large, the Government may be able to make up its mind once for all what land it needs, but whereas in that case the land was required for a large project requiring large area of land, the Government may not be able to make up its mind all at once and it should, therefore, be held that issuance of successive notification under Section 6 based on the same notification under Section 4 was not invalid. The Supreme Court, however, observed as under:

"It is urged however that where the land is required for a small project and the area is not large the Government may be able to make up its mind once for all what land it needs, but whereas in the present case land is required for a large project requiring a large area of land Government may not be able to make up its mind all at once. Even if it be so there is nothing to prevent the Government from issuing another notification under Section 4 followed by a notification under Section 6. As we have said before, the Government's power to acquire land in a particular locality is not exhausted by issuing one notification under Section 4(1) followed by a notification under Section 6. The interpretation which has commended itself to us therefore does not deprive the Government of the power to acquire more land from the same locality if later on it thinks that more land than what has been declared under Section 6 is needed. It can proceed to do so by a fresh declaration under Section 6. Such a procedure would in our opinion be fair to all concerned; it will be fair to Government where the prices have fallen and it will be fair to those whose land is being acquired where the prices have risen. Therefore as we read these three sections we are of opinion that they are integrally and intimately connected and the intention of the legislature was that one notification under Section 4(1) should be followed by survey under Section 4(2) and objections under Section 5-A and thereafter one declaration under Section 6. There is nothing in Sections 4, 5-A and 6 which supports the construction urged on behalf of the appellant and in any case it seems to us that the construction which commends itself to us and which has been accepted by the High Court is a fair construction keeping in view the background to which we have referred. Even if two constructions were possible, which we think is not so, we would be inclined to the construction which has commended itself to us because that construction does not restrict the power of the Government to acquire land at any time it deems fit to do and at the same time works fairly towards persons whose land is to be acquired compulsorily".

These observations have been made by the Supreme Court in a case which concerns issuance of successive notifications from time to time under Section 6 based upon the same notification under Sec. 4. The judgment is, therefore, of necessity concerning such a state of facts. In the case before us, only one notification under Section 6 was issued based upon the notification under Section 4. We have held the notification under Section 6 to be invalid but the above observations made by the Supreme Court in respect of successive notifications under Section 6 do, in our opinion, apply with equal force to the facts as existing in the case before us because the reasoning and the ratio appearing in this judgment of the Supreme Court can apply to the facts before us. Even an invalid notification under Section 6 would exhaust the efficacy of the notification under Section 4 on which it is based. We, therefore, uphold the petitioner's contention and hold and declare that as the notification under Section 6 had in fact been issued, though it has been held by us to be invalid, the efficacy of the notification under Sec. 4 has been exhausted and no second or further notification can be issued on the basis of the said notification under Section 4. We, however, want to make one thing clear. The notification under Section 6 relates to lands other than the land of the petitioner with which this petition is concerned. Our judgment and declaration is confined only to the land of the petitioner and our judgment and declaration in no way relates to or concerns the other lands mentioned in the said notification under Section 4.

10. We, therefore, declare the notification under Section 6 in so far as it relates to the petitioner's land khasra No. 198/1 of Ballarpur to be illegal and set it aside to that extent. We further declare that the efficacy of the notification under Section 4 in so far as it relates to the petitioner's said land has been exhausted and no further or subsequent notification under Section 6 can be issued on the basis of the said notification under Section 4. As the costs must follow the event, we order the respondents to pay the petitioner's costs of this petition.

Ratnaprabhabai, Applicant v. Sheshrao Shankarrao Bhore, Opponent.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 32 of 1968, D/- 15-11-1971, from order of S. R. Phatak, Civil J., Sr. Division, Achalpur, D/- 19-12-1967.

Hindu Marriage Act (1955), S. 9 — Restitution of conjugal rights — Petition for — Burden of proof.

The initial burden to prove the allegation on the basis of which a decree for restitution of conjugal right is sought is on the petitioner who comes to the Court. (Para 4)

If the petitioner were not to lead any evidence, then the petitioner would not be in a position to get any relief from the Court because the Court has to be satisfied of the truth of the statements made in the petition and he cannot be satisfied of the truth of the statements in the petition, unless the petitioner leads some evidence to show that the statements made by him are truthful. Section 23 makes it further clear that the Court has to be satisfied that the ground for granting the relief exists and this is so whether the proceeding is defended or not. (Para 4)

The initial burden thereafter will shift to the opponent who shall have to establish that it was not that party who has withdrawn from the society of the other and that if he or she has so withdrawn, it was for reasonable excuse, which again, may be rebutted by the petitioner. A mere admission by the opponent that he or she is living away from the petitioner would not entitle the petitioner to get a decree straightway, as mere staying away would not amount to withdrawal from the society. (Para 4)

R. N. Deshpande, for Opponent.

ORDER:— The opponent had filed a petition in the Lower Court under Section 9 of the Hindu Marriage Act for restitution of conjugal rights alleging that the applicant had without reasonable excuse withdrawn from the society of the opponent. The applicant opposed the said petition and filed her written statement alleging, inter alia, that she was treated cruelly by the opponent and was driven out of the house and was deserted. On these pleadings, the learned trial Judge initially framed the following issue:

"Whether the petitioner proves that the respondent has withdrawn from the society of the petitioner without reasonable excuse."

The parties went to trial on this issue and the case was fixed for evidence on 20-12-1967. Before the commencement of the evidence the opponent filed an application for recasting the aforesaid issue and wanted the issue to be framed in these terms:

"Whether the respondent proves that she had reasonable excuse to withdraw from the Society of the petitioner?"

This application was granted by the learned trial Judge, as according to him, the petitioner-opponent could not prove a negative fact and it was for the applicant-respondent to prove a positive fact, namely, that there was reasonable excuse for her for withdrawing herself from the society of the opponent-petitioner. He thus allowed the application of the opponent and directed the applicant-respondent to prove her case. This order is challenged in this revision application.

2. The application for restitution of conjugal rights has to be made under Section 9 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955. It enables either the husband or the wife to make an application for restitution of conjugal rights who alleges that the other party without reasonable excuse has withdrawn from the society of the other. On such an application being made, the Court has to be satisfied of the truth of the statements made in such petition and on further finding that there is no legal ground why the application should not be granted, has to make a decree for restitution of conjugal rights. Sub-section (2) of S. 9 limits the defences to be raised by the other side in answer to a petition for restitution of conjugal rights. These defences are limited to the grounds which can be urged for judicial separation under Section 10, or for nullity of marriage under Section 11, or for divorce under Section 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act. Section 23 enjoins on the Court to pass a decree if the Court is satisfied that any of the grounds for granting the relief exists and the petitioner is not in any way taking advantage of his or her own wrong or disability for the purpose of such relief and satisfies the other conditions given in Section 23 and it is only in such a case, the Court can decree the claim, whether the proceeding is defended or not.

3. Ordinarily, when a litigant comes to Court with certain allegations and claims a relief on the basis of these allegations, it is for him to substantiate those allegations, before he can get a decree. Normally, therefore, the initial burden is on the plaintiff or the applicant who initiates the proceedings and the evidence given on behalf of the plaintiff or the applicant has then to be rebutted by the opponent. There may be cases where the burden may lie with respect to certain issues on the opponent and then the plaintiff or applicant will have to rebut the evidence given on behalf of the opponent. There may be other cases where the burden may shift from one party to the other from time to time and there may also be cases where the initial burden, however slight it may be, rests on a particular party and then shifts to the opposite party. To me, the test to find out on whom the burden of proof lies will be to see as to which party would fail if no evidence is let by other party.

4. To me, it appears that this is a case where the initial burden, however slight, rests on the petitioner who comes to Court. If the petitioner were not to lead any evidence, then the petitioner would not be in a position to get any relief from the Court because the Court has to be satisfied of the truth of the statements made in the petition and he cannot be satisfied of the truth of the statements in the petition, unless the petitioner leads some evidence to show that the statements made by him are truthful. Section 23 makes it further clear that the Court has to be satisfied that the ground for granting the relief exists and this is so whether the proceeding is defended or not. We may contemplate a case where the petitioner comes to the Court with the allegation that the other party has without reasonable excuse withdrawn from his or her society and the other party is not represented. In such a case without anything more, no decree could be passed in favour of the petitioner because merely by making the allegations in the petition, the Court will not be able to satisfy itself of the truth of the statement made in such application. Some prima facie evidence will have to be given by the petitioner to show, in the first place, that the other side has withdrawn from the society and in the second place, there was no reasonable excuse for the same. No doubt this initial burden, in the first instance, is light inasmuch as the petitioner has only to show that the other side is not residing with him or her for no fault of his or her and that there was no apparent reason for the other party to withdraw himself or herself from the society of the petitioner. This is the minimum which will have to be established by the petitioner in a case whether the proceeding is defended or not. Unless that is done, there will be no material for the Court to get itself satisfied of the truth of the statements made in the petition. This is why I say that the initial burden will lie on the petitioner and thereafter it will shift to the opponent who shall have to establish that it was not that party who has withdrawn from the society of the other and that if he or she has so withdrawn, it was for reasonable excuse, which again, may be rebutted by the petitioner. A mere admission by the opponent that he or she is living away from the petitioner would not entitle the petitioner to get a decree straightway, as mere staying away would not amount to withdrawal from the society. In this view the initial burden being on the petitioner, the issue as originally framed putting the initial burden on the petitioner was proper and the learned trial Judge was in error in recasting the issue as proposed by the opponent and throwing the initial burden on the applicant-respondent.

5. The order of the lower Court dated 19-12-1967 is, therefore, set aside and the issue as originally framed will be restored and the trial will proceed as if the initial burden was on the petitioner-opponent to prove his case. The revision thus succeeds and is allowed. The opponent will pay the costs of the applicant.

Revision allowed.

Having regard to the fact that sub-section (3) of S. 18 in terms deals with an agreement to grant a lease, the word 'let' in Section 6 cannot be so construed as to nullify sub-section (3) of S. 18 altogether. The only way to arrive at a harmonious construction of Section 6 and sub-section (3) of S. 18 which occurs in Part II with which Section 6 deals, is to construe the words 'premises let' in Section 6 as including premises agreed to be let for the purposes specified therein.

JUDGMENT:— This is an appeal filed by a former landlord against his conviction under Section 18(4) of the Bombay Rent Act, 1947, for contravention of the provisions of Section 18(3) thereof, though he had been acquitted of the offence under Section 18(1) of the same Act, with which also he had been charged in the trial Court. The facts of the prosecution case are that complainant K. S. Ghaswalla agreed to pay to the accused, through a firm of booking agents employed by the accused, a sum of Rs. 5001/- as and by way of a construction loan in respect of a building proposed to be constructed by the accused at Kandivli in Bombay. Under the said agreement the said Ghaswalla was to be given the tenancy of Flat No. 36 on the first floor of building No. 3 in the housing colony of which the same was a part. The said Ghaswalla paid to the accused various sums aggregating to Rs. 4000/- towards the said sum of Rupees 5001/- payable by him. The agreement between the said Ghaswalla and the accused was reduced into writing, (Exh. F.) and was dated 16th of September 1966, but was not registered as required by Section 18 (3) of the Bombay Rent Act, 1947. Under the said agreement, it was by necessary implication, though not in express terms, provided that the said building was to be completed on or before 30th December 1967, but the said agreement did not contain any provision creating a charge on the said Building No. 3 and the interest of the accused in the land on which the said building was erected as required by sub-section (3) of S. 18 of the Bombay Rent Act, 1947. The said agreement also contained certain other conditions to which, however, it is not necessary to refer, but it may be stated that the said agreement clearly showed that the loan of Rs. 5001/-, which Ghaswalla was to give to the accused, was to be given for the purpose of financing the erection of building No. 3 which was to be constructed by the accused. The prosecution case is that the accused, however, failed to complete the said building by the stipulated date viz. 30th December 1967 and that he has in fact not yet completed the same and given possession to Ghaswalla of the flat allotted to him. The accused was, therefore, charged under Section 18(1) and Section 18(4) of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947, and was tried for the said offences by the learned Presidency Magistrate, 23rd Court, Esplanade, Bombay, who convicted him of the offence under Section 18(4) of the said Act and sentenced him to a fine of Rs. 500/-, but acquitted him of the offence under Section 18(1) of the said Act in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Tolaram v. State of Bombay. (56 Bom LR 1206) = (AIR 1954 SC 496). It is from the order convicting him of the offence under Section 18(4), that the accused has preferred the present appeal.

2. Several interesting questions relating to the construction of Section 18 of the Bombay Rent Act, 1947, arise in this appeal and it would, therefore, be convenient at the outset to set out the substance of that section. Sub-section (1) of S. 18 makes it an offence for a landlord to receive any fine, premium or other like sum or deposit or any consideration other than standard rent or the permitted increases in respect of the grant, renewal or continuance of a lease of any premises or for the transfer of a lease". Sub-section (2) of that section provides for the recovery of any fine, premium or other sum or deposit paid by the tenant to the landlord in violation of sub-section (1). Then come sub-sections (3) and (4), with which I am directly concerned in this appeal and I would, therefore, prefer to quote the same verbatim. These sub-sections are in the following terms:

"(3) Nothing in this section shall apply to any payment made under any agreement entered into before the first day of September 1940 or to any payment made by any person to a landlord by way of a loan, for the purpose of financing the erection of the whole or part of a residential building or a residential section of a building on the land held by him as an owner, a lessee or in any other capacity entitling him to build on such land, under an agreement which shall be in writing and shall notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Registration Act, 1908, be registered. Such agreement shall inter alia include the following conditions, namely:—

(1) that the landlord is to let to such person the whole or part of the building when completed for the use of such person or any member of his family;

(2) that the rate of interest on such loan shall not be less than four per cent., per annum;

(3) that such loan shall be repayable by the landlord within a period of ten years from the date of the execution of the agreement or within a period of six months from the date of the termination of the tenancy by the landlord, whichever period expires earlier;

(4) that the amount of the loan shall be a charge on the entire building and the entire interest of the landlord in the land on which such building is erected; provided that if the loan has been advanced by more than one person, all such persons shall, notwithstanding anything contained in any law for the time being in force, be entitled to a charge on the entire building and the entire interest of the landlord in such land rateably according to the amount of the loan advanced by each of such persons;

(5) that the landlord shall use the amount of the loan for the purpose of erecting the whole or part, as the case may be, of the residential building and for no other purpose; and

(6) (a) that the erection of the building shall be completed within a period of two years from the date of the execution of the agreement or if the agreements executed are more than one, from the date of the execution of the first of such agreements: Provided that the said period of two years may be extended to a further period not exceeding one year with the sanction of the Collector;

(b) that if the erection of the building is not completed within the period of two years or within the extended period specified in the proviso to clause (a) the loan shall be repayable forthwith to the person advancing the same with interest at the rate of four per cent. per annum.

(4) If any landlord who has received a loan under an agreement in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (3), contravenes, without any reasonable excuse any of the conditions specified in sub-section (3), such landlord shall, on conviction, be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months or with fine or with both".

It is not necessary for me to set the explanation to sub-section (4) of the said section. The prosecution case is that the accused has contravened sub-section (3) of S. 18 of the said Act in three respects, viz. (1) by failing to register the agreement dated 16th September 1966 (Exh. F) (2) by not creating a charge in respect of the said loan on building No. 3 in which the said Ghaswalla was allotted a flat and on the land on which it was to be erected; and (3) by not completing the said building within the period of two years from the date of the execution of the said agreement dated 16th September 1966. Mr. N. A. Mody, who appeared on behalf of the accused, has contended that the conviction of the accused is erroneous on the following grounds:

(1) As the Supreme Court has now laid in Tolaram's case (56 Bom LR 1206) = (AIR 1954 SC 496) that sub-section (1) of S. 18 does not apply to an agreement to grant a lease, but only applies to a present demise, and as sub-section (3) of that Section is worded only so as to be an exception to sub-section (1) thereof, there is nothing to which sub-section (3) can possibly apply;

(2) Sub-section (3) of Sec. 18 cannot apply to an agreement to grant a lease because of the controlling provisions of Section 6 of the Act that Part II in which Section 18 occurs applies only to premises "let" for the purpose specified therein, which must mean a present demise and not a mere agreement to let, and also because of the definition of the word "landlord" in Section 5 (3) thereof which is to the same effect;

(3) Even if the view taken is that sub-section (3) applies to an agreement to grant a lease, the offence made punishable by sub-section (4) is only for contravention without reasonable excuse of any of the conditions specified in sub-section (3), but no offence is created by sub-section (4), or by any other provision of the said Act, for not including the conditions of sub-section (3) in the agreement under which a construction loan is given to the landlord, or for not reducing that agreement into writing, or for not registering the same.

3. I shall now proceed to consider the first contention of Mr. Mody and, in that connection, I must immediately refer to the decision of the Supreme Court in Tolaram's case, 56 Bom LR 1206 = (AIR 1954 SC 496) referred to above. The facts of that case were that the appellants before the Supreme Court, who were landlords, were charged under Section 18(1) of the Bombay Rent Act, 1947, for receiving a sum of Rs. 2,400/- as premium or Pegree in respect of an agreement of a lease of Block No. 15 in a building under construction. The trial Magistrate found the appellants guilty and sentenced each of them to imprisonment and fine. The appeal by the convicted accused came up before a Division Bench of this Court, which referred it to a Full Bench and the Full Bench (55 Bom LR 366) = (AIR 1953 Bom 347) (FB) took the view that the receipt of consideration for an executory agreement was within the mischief of Section 18 of the Act, and the appeal by the convicted accused was dismissed by the Division Bench in consequence of that view. The accused having filed an appeal to the Supreme Court, the Supreme Court allowed that appeal and held that the language of Section 18 (1) envisaged the existence of a lease and payment of an amount in respect of that lease, and that the receipt of money by the appellant from the complainant in that case at the time of the oral executory agreement of lease was not made punishable under Section 18 (1) of the Act and was outside its mischief. The conviction of the appellants was, therefore, set aside and they were ordered to be acquitted. In my opinion, sub-sec. (3) of S. 18 is couched in the form of a Proviso to sub-section (1), for, though sub-section (3) does not start with the words "Provided that", it would read perfectly well if those words are prefixed to it. In my opinion, those words should be necessarily implied and must be read into sub-section (3) by reason of the way, in which it has been framed by the legislature. A Proviso to a section, however, is not always an exception to the main part of it. It may be a saving clause or in exceptional cases even a substantive provision itself, as when the substantive provision to which it is appended as a Proviso deals with a different subject altogether. A reference may be made in this connection to two decisions of the Supreme Court in regard to the way in which a Proviso should be construed. The first of them is the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of S. B. K. Oil Mills v. Subhash Chandra, (AIR 1961 SC 1596), in which the question of the construction of the Proviso to Section 50 of the Bombay Rent Act itself arose for consideration. The Supreme Court observed (paragraph 9) that the law with regard to provisos was well-settled and well-understood, that, as a general rule, a Proviso was added to an enactment to qualify or create an exception to what was in the enactment, and that, ordinarily, a Proviso was not interpreted as stating a general rule. The Supreme Court, however, proceeded to lay down that Provisos were, however, often added not as an exceptions or qualifications to the main enactment but as saving clauses, in which cases they would not be construed as controlled by the section. After setting out the contentions of either side on this point, the Supreme Court, however, stated that, in the view which they took on another point, it was not necessary for them to pronounce upon the proper construction of Section 50 of the Bombay Rent Act in the said case (para 10). The second decision of the Supreme Court in regard to the construction of Provisos is to be found in the case of Commr. of Commercial Taxes, Board of Revenue Madras v. R. S. Jhaver, (AIR 1968 SC 59). The question which arose in that case was in regard to the proper construction of the proviso to sub-section (2) of S. 41 of the Madras General Sales Tax Act, 1959, Sec. 41(2) dealt with inspection of the accounts, registers, records and other documents maintained by dealers, while the proviso thereto dealt with search of residential accommodation. The Supreme Court in its judgment dealt with an argument very similar to the argument which Mr. Mody has advanced before me on the point I am now considering viz., that a Proviso carves out something which is already contained in the main provision, and that since the main provision in sub-section (2) of S. 41 of the Madras General Sales Tax Act did not provide for search of purely residential accommodation the Proviso was otiose. In regard to that contention, the Supreme Court observed (paragraph 8) that, generally speaking, it was true that a Proviso was an exception to the main part of the section, but it was recognised "that in exceptional cases a Proviso may be substantive provision itself". The Supreme Court in that judgment itself referred to three decisions on the point and stated (paragraph 11) that the said cases showed that "in exceptional circumstances a proviso may not be really a Proviso in accepted sense but may be a substantive provision itself". The Supreme Court then held that the proviso under consideration by it was of that exceptional nature, because the main part of the sub-section did not provide for search of purely residential premises, and that, therefore, when the proviso provided for such search, it was providing for something independent of the main part of the sub-section. Now, if one turns to sub-section (3) of S. 18 of the Bombay Rent Act with which I am concerned in the present case and which in the view taken by me above, is framed in the form of a Proviso to sub-section (1) thereto it is clear that it deals only with a stage prior to the stage of the actual demise with which alone sub-section (1) deals, viz. the stage of an executory agreement to grant a lease and, therefore, deals with a totally different subject-matter. I must construe sub-section (3), which is in the nature of a Proviso to sub-section (1) as already stated above, in the same manner in which the Supreme Court has in the case of AIR 1968 SC 59 construed the Proviso to sub-section (2) of S. 41 of the Madras General Sales Tax Act and held that sub-section (3) is a Proviso of an exceptional nature, in so far as it is not really any Proviso to sub-section (1) in accepted sense, but is a substantive provision itself. This view taken by me is supported by the fact that non-compliance with the provisions of sub-sec. (3) has been provided for, independently of sub-section (1) as an offence in sub-section (4) of S. 18. It appears that sub-section (3) has been framed in the form of a proviso to sub-section (i) ex majore cautela for the purpose of clarification as indicated by the Supreme Court itself in Tolaram's case (at p. 1210) (of 56 Bom LR 1206) = (AIR 1954 SC 496) or is in the nature of an explanation and is not an exception as held by Bal. J. in the case of Sulochana Ganpat v. Madan Dattatraya, (72 Bom LR 351 at p. 356). There is, therefore, no substance in the first contention advanced before me by Mr. Mody and the same must be rejected.

4. As far as the second contention of Mr. Mody is concerned, in my opinion, having regard to the fact that sub-section (3) of S. 18 in terms deals with an agreement to grant a lease, the word 'let' in Section 6 of the Act cannot be so construed as to nullify sub-section (3) of S. 18 altogether. The only way of arriving at a harmonious construction of Section 6, and sub-section (3) of S. 18 which occurs in Part II with which Section 6 deals, is to construe the words 'premises let' in Section 6 as including premises agreed to be let for the purposes specified therein. In fact, the object of Section 6 appears to be to designate the purposes for which the premises must have been let or agreed to be let in order to make the provisions of Part II of the Act applicable. As far as the definition of the term 'landlord' in Section 5(3) of the Act is concerned, the said section starts with the words "Unless there is anything repugnant to the subject or context" and, in my opinion, there cannot be the least doubt that sub-section (3) of S. 18 of the Act is in terms repugnant to giving to the terms 'landlord' used therein a meaning which would restrict it to a person who has created a present demise. Moreover, the words 'or who would so receive the rent' in Section 5(3) in my opinion, clearly include a person who has agreed to let the premises and receive the rent in respect thereof. The second contention of Mr. Mody must, therefore, also be rejected.

5. That brings me to the third contention of Mr. Mody on behalf of the accused. The same raises the following three questions: (a) Does sub-section (4) apply to breach of the conditions specified in sub-section (3) only when they are in fact included in a construction loan agreement or the conditions of sub-section (3) incorporated by operation of law in all construction loan agreements by reason of sub-section (3)? (b) Does the term 'conditions' in sub-sec. (4) connote only those which are listed as (i) to (vi) in sub-section (3) or also the provision in the substantive part of sub-section (3) that the agreement should be in writing and registered? And (c) Do the conditions listed as (i) to (vi) in sub-section (3) apply (i) only if the agreement is in writing and registered; (ii) if the agreement is in writing, but is not registered; (iii) even if the agreement is oral?

6. Mr. Mody has contended that sub-section (4) of Section 18 applies to breach of the conditions specified in sub-section (3) only when they are in fact included in a construction loan agreement, because that, according to him is the only meaning of the plain terms of sub-section (3) which should be construed as it stands without adding words to it so as to read 'shall be deemed to include.' Alternatively, he has contended that, even if the view taken is that the words 'shall include' in sub-sec. (3) are capable of two constructions the one which is more favourable to the accused should be adopted. In support of these contentions, Mr. Mody has relied upon the dictionary meanings of the word 'include' as being comprise as a part, and of the word 'comprise' as being contain (Chambers's Dictionary), and that is also the meaning to be found in the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary (Third Edition). Mr. Mody has also relied upon a passage in Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 12th Edition, page 239, that, in a penal Statute, the Court must always see that the person to be penalised comes fairly and squarely within the plain words of the enactment, and that it is not enough that what he has done comes substantially within the mischief aimed at by the statute. Two of the main dictionary meanings of the word 'incorporate', however, are 'to include in the body of something else' or 'to include as a part or parts of itself' (Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, Third Edition). Even as a matter of plain language, therefore, the words 'include' and 'incorporate' are interchangeable as far as their meaning goes, depending of course on the context. In my opinion, the words 'shall include' in sub-sec. (3) are capable of being construed as meaning 'shall be incorporated' without adding any words, merely as a matter of their fair and ordinary meaning, and the passage from Maxwell relied upon by Mr. Mody is, therefore, of no avail to him. The first limb of the argument of Mr. Mody is, therefore, of no avail to him. The first limb of the argument of Mr. Mody on the point I am now considering must be rejected.

7. As far as the second and alternative limb of his argument is concerned, Mr. Mody has relied upon another rule of construction stated in Maxwell (also at page 239) that if there are two reasonable constructions the Court must give the more lenient one which will avoid the penalty in any particular case. That rule of construction does not, however, lay down that if any two constructions are possible in regard to a penal statute, the more lenient one must be adopted, but what it lays down is that if the words of a statute are capable of two reasonable constructions, the Court must adopt the more lenient one which will avoid the penalty. That, indeed, is the rule of construction which the Supreme Court itself has formulated and adopted in regard to the construction of Section 18 of the Bombay Rent Act itself in Tolaram's case already cited above. The Supreme Court has stated (at page 1209):—

"It may be here observed that the provisions of Section 18 (1) are penal in nature, and it is a well settled rule of construction of penal statutes that if two possible and reasonable constructions can be put upon a penal provision, the Court must lean towards that construction which exempts the subject from penalty rather than the one which imposes penalty. It is not competent to the Court to stretch the meaning of an expression used by the legislature in order to carry out the intention of the legislature."

In Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes it is, however, stated (at p. 45) that if the choice is between two interpretations the narrower of which would fail to achieve the manifest purpose of the legislation, the Court should avoid a construction which would reduce the legislation to futility and should accept the bolder construction based on the view that the legislature would legislate only for the purpose of bringing about an effective result. Maxwell states that there are many examples of words in penal statutes being given a wide construction (page 247). Maxwell also cites another rule of construction (at page 137), and it is, that to carry out effectually the object of statute, it must be so construed as to defeat all attempts to do, or avoid doing, in an indirect or circuitous manner that which it has prohibited or enjoined. Several decisions of English Courts are cited by Maxwell in support of that rule, including a decision in a criminal case in which that rule has been applied (p. 139). The same rule has been cited in another way by Maxwell (p. 199) when it is stated that where to apply words literally would defeat the obvious intention of the legislation and produce a wholly unreasonable result, the Court must do some violence to the words and so achieve that obvious intention and produce a rational construction. These, in my opinion, are merely different facets of the rule of construction based on futility mentioned earlier in the judgment. It was, however, sought to be contended by Mr. Mody that the argument of futility which is based upon the decision of the House of Lords in the case of Nokes v. Doncaster Amalgamated Collieries Ltd. (1940 AC 1014 at p. 1022) has been rejected by the Full Bench of this Court in Tolaram's case in regard to the construction of penal statutes (55 Bom LR 366 at p. 376) — (AIR 1953 Bom 347 FB). In the judgment of the Supreme Court on appeal from the Full Bench judgment in the said case, however, I do not find any express rejection of that rule of construction by the Supreme Court, or even a reference to Nokes' case though there can be no doubt that the Supreme Court has (at p. 1209) based its own judgment primarily on the observations of Lord Macmillan in the case of London and North Eastern Railway Co. v. Berriman, (1946 AC 278 at p. 295). Even if one were to disregard the rule of construction based on futility, the position in regard to the construction of a penal section is that if the only reasonable way of construing such a section, without stretching its language, is one which goes against the accused, to so construe it would not violate the rule of strict construction of penal statutes.

8. Proceeding to examine sub-sections (3) and (4) of Section 18 in the light of these principles, the words, "shall include" in sub-section (3) are, no doubt, theoretically capable of two constructions, viz. (a) that the conditions specified in sub-section (3) must, in fact, be included in the construction loan agreement in question; or (b) that they must be incorporated in all construction loan agreements by operation of law. As a matter of plain language, both are equally correct without any stretching of language or addition of words. However, though these two constructions are possible in a theoretical sense, the only construction which in my opinion is reasonable is the second one, because I fail to see how the legislature could have intended merely to say "you must include these conditions in your agreement," without providing for the consequences of or penalty for their non-inclusion. The manifest objects of the legislation embodied in the Bombay Rent Act, 1947, are to be found stated in the preamble to that Act, and have also been stated by Bal. J. in the course of his judgment in the case of (72 Bom LR 351 at pp. 353-354). These objects are, to provide protection to tenants against exorbitant charges by landlords and against eviction except on proof of certain specified circumstances. To give to the words 'shall include' in sub-section (3) of Section 18 the narrower construction of physical inclusion in the construction loan agreement in question would not merely fail to achieve those objects, but would totally defeat them; for a landlord would only have to omit those terms from his written agreement and do with impunity what the law intended to forbid. That could never have been the intention of the legislature and, in my opinion, therefore, that would not be a reasonable construction of those words at all. In this connection, it is also important to bear in mind that the conditions of sub-section (3) have not been made 'subject to contract to the contrary', which would indicate that the legislature intended them to be included in all construction loan agreements of the nature contemplated by that sub-section. I hold that the conditions of sub-section (3) of Section 18 of the Bombay Rent Act, 1947, are incorporated by operation of law in all construction loan agreements, whether they be oral or in writing.

9. It was, however, sought to be contended by Mr. Mody that the view which I am taking on this point is in conflict with the judgment of Bal J. in Sulochana Ganpat's case (1970) 72 Bom. LR 351 to which I have already referred in another context, in so far as that very argument was advanced before that learned Judge and rejected by him (at page 357). The observations of Bal J. in regard to the point of incorporation by operation of law, which I am now considering, are clearly obiter dicta, for the simple reason that the view which he took was (at p. 357) that S. 49 of the Registration Act only provides for the consequences of non-registration of a document required to be registered either under Section 17 of the Registration Act or under any provision of the Transfer of Property Act. He, therefore, held that non-registration of a loan agreement, though it may amount to non-compliance by the landlord with the requirement of Section 18 (3) will not make the document inadmissible in evidence. His decision on the question of the admissibility of the document before him would have been the same, whichever view he took in regard to the argument that the conditions laid down in sub-section (3) are to be incorporated in every construction loan agreement. The observations of Bal J. on the point which I am now considering being obiter dicta, I do not consider myself bound to follow the view taken by him in regard to the same. It may be mentioned that the decision of the Supreme Court in Tolaram's case, 56 Bom LR 1206 = (AIR 1954 SC 496) does not appear to have been cited before Bal J. in the said case.

10. It was next sought to be contended by Mr. Mody that the view which I am taking on this point is also in conflict with an unreported judgment of Patel J., D/- 7-9-1960 in A. O. No. 170 of 1959 (Bom). The question before the learned Judge in that case was whether the rights created by the construction loan agreement before him could be said to be rights arising out of the Bombay Rent Act, or de hors the Bombay Rent Act.

Patel J. took the view that Section 18 (3) created "an exception in favour of validity provided the terms of contract were as those mentioned", that Section 18 (3) does not purport to create any right either in the tenant or in the landlord, and that "the rights would be the creation of the agreement between the parties de hors the Rent Act and cannot be said to arise out of the Act." The sentence last quoted has been relied upon strongly by Mr. Mody as negating the view that the legislature intended to incorporate the conditions mentioned in sub-section (3) in all construction loan agreements. With respect to the learned Judge, in proceeding on the basis that Section 18 (3) is an exception to Section 18 (1), he has proceeded on a basis which cannot stand in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in Tolaram's case which does not appear to have been cited before him holding that Section 18 (1) applied only to cases of a present demise. In view of the said decision of the Supreme Court, I do not consider myself bound by the view taken by Patel J. in regard to the interpretation of the provisions of Section 18(3).

11. I now turn to the second question which arises for my consideration, viz. whether the word 'conditions' in sub-section (4) of Section 18 connotes only those conditions which are listed as (i) to (vi) in sub-section (3) or includes also the provision therein that the agreement should be in writing and registered. In my opinion, the provision that is to be found in sub-section (3) that the agreement should be in writing and registered is equally one of the conditions specified in sub-section (3) as there is no reason for excluding the same from the natural meaning of the term 'conditions'. The condition in regard to writing and registration is stated separately only because from its very nature and as a matter of plain grammatical construction it could not have been included in the conditions which are to be found listed as (i) to (vi) in that very sub-section.

12. That brings me to the third question that arises, viz. whether the conditions listed as (i) to (vi) in sub-section (3) apply (i) only if the agreement is in writing and registered; (ii) if the agreement is in writing but is not registered; (iii) even if the agreement is oral. From the view taken by me in the preceding paragraphs it does not follow that because the conditions in regard to writing and registration are separately stated in the substantive part of sub-section (3), the other conditions which are to be found listed in the sub-section need not be complied with if the agreement is not in writing or is not registered. The requirement of the agreement being in writing and being registered is as much a conditions as the other conditions listed in sub-section (3), no more and no less. If, therefore, the agreement under which a construction loan is taken by a landlord is not in writing, or is in writing but is not registered, the landlord commits an offence under sub-section (4), unless of course he can make out 'any reasonable excuse' for not reducing the agreement into writing or not registering the same, in which case, as the language of sub-section (4) clearly shows, he commits no offence. However, even if the landlord has a reasonable excuse for the agreement not being in writing or not being registered, he would still commit an offence if he committed breach of any of the conditions that are to be found listed as (i) to (vi) in sub-section (3), unless he can prove a reasonable excuse for breach of such listed condition also. I, therefore, take the view that the conditions listed in sub-section (3) must be complied with and breach thereof is an offence under sub-section (4) of Section 18, in all the three cases mentioned above unless of course reasonable excuse for non-compliance be proved.

13. I will now turn to the facts of the present case in the light of the construction which I have placed on sub-sections (3) and (4) of the Bombay Rent Act, 1947. The prosecution case is that the accused has committed breach of sub-section (3) of Section 18 by (1) not registering the agreement dated 16th September 1966 (Ex. F); (2) by not completing the building within the period of two years from the date of execution of that agreement; and (3) by not providing in the said agreement that the amount of the loan is to be a charge on the said building and the entire interest of the accused in the land on which that building was to be erected. In his evidence, the complainant Ghaswalla has deposed that the agreement (Ex. F) has not been registered, though it was intended to be registered immediately after it was executed. The accused has not elicited or led any evidence, nor has he, either in his statement under Section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code or in the written statement which he has filed in the trial court, said anything which would show that he had any reasonable excuse for not registering that agreement as required by the provisions of sub-section (3) of Section 18 of the Bombay Rent Act. I, therefore, hold that the accused has committed an offence under sub-section (4) of the said Section 18 and has rightly been convicted of the same by the learned Magistrate. In that view of the matter, it is not really necessary for me to consider whether the accused has committed breach of any of the other conditions specified in sub-section (3) of the said Section 18. Since, however, the matter has been argued at great length before me, I feel I must also deal with the alleged breach of the other two conditions mentioned above.

14. The complainant Ghaswalla has deposed in clear terms that the construction of the building in question "is yet not complete" which must mean that it had not been completed at the date when he gave evidence in the trial court, by which time the statutory period of two years from the date of execution of the agreement dated 16th September 1966 (Ex. F) had long since expired. He has stated later on in his evidence once again that the flat allotted to him had not been completed at the time when he gave evidence in the trial court. It is true that the said agreement (Ex. F), by clear implication, provides for the completion of the building on or before 30th December 1967. However having regard to the provisions of clause (vi) (a) of sub-section (3) of Section 18, even if the building is not completed by the said date the accused would not, in my opinion, commit the offence under sub-section (4) of Section 18 unless the erection of the building transgresses the statutory period of two years provided in clause (vi) (a) of sub-section (3) of that section. It was sought to be contended by Mr. Mody that this evidence should not be accepted in view of the fact that Ghaswalla has stated at another place in his evidence that the last time he went to the site was only in June, 1967, with the result that the statements made earlier by him were not based on his own personal knowledge but were in the nature of hearsay evidence. The record of the proceedings in the trial court, however, shows that no objection has been taken at any time to the admissibility of the statements made by Ghaswalla and, under those circumstances, it is now too late in the day to raise that objection in the appellate Court. Moreover, that is not the only evidence on the point. Witness A. S. Narayan has also deposed in clear terms that the flat in question which it appears, has been re-allotted by the accused to the said Narayan from whom the accused has taken another construction loan, was not ready at the date when he gave evidence in the trial court, which was the 24th of Nov. 1969, and that he had not been able to get possession of the same. There is, therefore, no need to remand the case to the trial Court for taking evidence on the point as to whether or not the building has been completed within the statutory period of two years from the date of agreement (Ex. F), as Mr. Mody sought to urge before me. There was definite and clear evidence before the trial court on which it has arrived at its finding and I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that that finding is correct. Here again, the accused has not elicited or led any evidence, nor has he made any statement either under Section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code or in the written statement filed by him in the trial court, which would make out any reasonable excuse for not completing the building within the statutory period of two years from the date of the agreement. In the course of his arguments, Mr. Mody has relied on a statement that is to be found in the evidence of the complainant Ghaswalla himself that one Edulji, who was the President of the Tenants' Association of the said building, and was authorized to act on behalf of the tenants in the matter of the formation of a society, has signed the agreements dated 31-5-1969 and 23-5-1969 under which the rights and liabilities of the accused were taken over by the society. I am afraid that fact, however, cannot be of any assistance to the accused in making out a reasonable excuse for non-completion of the building in question, for the simple reason that by the time the said agreements were executed, the statutory period of two years from the date of the agreement (Ex. F) had already expired on the 16th of September 1968 and the offence under sub-section (4) was already complete as far as the accused was concerned, and no subsequent act of the accused could possibly wipe out that offence. I, therefore, hold that the accused has also rightly been convicted under sub-section (4) of Section 18 for breach of the condition in regard to the non-completion of the said building within the statutory period of two years.

15. In the view which I have taken above, viz. that the conditions set out in sub-section (3) of Section 18 of the Bombay Rent Act are statutorily incorporated in every construction loan agreement, an accused person, in my opinion, does not commit any offence merely by failing to provide expressly in the agreement under which a construction loan is taken for a charge on the building and on his interest in the land. The view taken by the trial Magistrate that the accused has also committed an offence under sub-section (4) of Section 18 of the Bombay Rent Act in regard to the same is, therefore, not correct.

16. In the result, I hold that the accused has rightly been convicted by the trial court of the offence under sub-section (4) of Section 18 of the Bombay Rent Act, 1947, by reason of his having failed to register the agreement dated 16th September 1966 (Ex. F), and by reason of his having failed to complete the erection of the building within the statutory period of two years from the date of execution of that agreement. This appeal must, therefore, be dismissed.

17. As far as sentence is concerned, the trial court has passed a sentence of fine of Rs. 500/- and has ordered that, in default of payment of the fine, the accused should undergo rigorous imprisonment for four months. It has been pointed to me that the complainant Ghaswalla has, in fact, not suffered the loss of a single rupee, and it has been contended that the offence is, therefore, a technical one. It was stated to me that the complainant Ghaswalla has agreed to treat the amount of Rupees 4000/- paid by him as transferred to the credit of the Society which has already been formed in respect of the building in question, and to take the same flat from that Society on what is popularly known as ownership basis. In view of these facts I do not think the accused deserves any substantial sentence by way of fine. I, therefore, order that the sentence passed upon the accused be reduced to a fine of Rupees 100/- in default of payment of which, the accused should suffer simple imprisonment for one month. The surplus fine, if paid, should be refunded to the accused.

Appeal dismissed.

AIR 1972 BOMBAY 192 (V 59 C 33)

K. K. DESAI, J.

Gulabchand Hiralal, Applicant v. Hakimchand Chothmal and others, Opponents.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 948 of 1963, D/- 18-3-1971, to set aside order passed by N. A. Athalye, Dist. J., at Jalgaon. D/- 31-12-1962.

Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), Section 43 (1) — Annulment of adjudication — Creditor cannot apply to the court under section against deceased insolvent.

An application for annulment of an adjudication order can never be made against a deceased insolvent. In law the right to apply for annulment of an adjudication order cannot survive against the heirs of a deceased insolvent.

(Para 4)

The right to apply for and obtain discharge is for personal benefit of the insolvent and has no relation whatever with the heirs of a deceased insolvent. The compulsion for application for discharge as contained in Section 41 is a personal liability inflicted against an insolvent debtor and has no relevance to the heirs surviving him upon his death.

The penalty of annulment of adjudication order is visited on an insolvent debtor under Section 43 (1) upon his failure to apply for discharge. This penalty and/or liability is also intended by the Legislature to be personal and has nothing to do with the heirs of a deceased insolvent. (Para 4)

V. B. Patwardhan and V. V. Divekar for Applicant, K. J. Abhyankar for Opponents 1 to 3, 4 (1) and 4 (2) and 5 and 6.

ORDER:— This is a revisional application on behalf of the original petitioner in application Ex. 413 in Insolvency Petitions Nos. 12 and 14 of 1935. The petitioner had obtained a decree for Rupees 27,000/- in Special Suit No. 349 of 1930 against Chhaganlal Hardee in February, 1935. He then filed Insolvency Petition No. 12 of 1935 on March 14, 1935, for adjudication of the judgment-debtor Chhaganlal Hardee. Another Insolvency Petition No. 14 of 1935 was filed by other two creditors of Chhaganlal. The petitions were consolidated and by an order of adjudication dated July 30, 1936, Chhaganlal was adjudicated an insolvent. The order of adjudication provided that Chhaganlal should make an application for his discharge from insolvency within one year. This time expired on July 30, 1937. Chhaganlal's appeals against the order of adjudication were dismissed in 1938. Chhaganlal died in December 1942 without making an application for his discharge. Several intervening litigations are referred to in the judgment of the trial Court and the District Court with which I am not concerned in this revision application. About 18/20 years after the death of Chhaganlal the petitioner filed the above application Ex. 413 for annulment of adjudication of Chhaganlal under the provisions of Sec. 43 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act (hereinafter referred to as "the Act"). Now, this section, inter alia, provides that if the debtor does not apply for an order of discharge within the period specified by the Court, the Court may annul the order of adjudication or make such order as it may think fit, and if the adjudication is so annulled, the provisions of Section 37 shall apply. The petitioner's case was that since Chhaganlal had failed to make any application within the time fixed by the above order and/or otherwise, the adjudication order must be set aside (annulled). The trial Court held that this was a fit case in which the order of adjudication was liable to be annulled and thus granted the petition of the petitioner. Whilst annulling the adjudication it directed that the properties of the insolvent comprised in Municipal No. 2412 do vest under Section 37 in the receivers-trustees for three of the proving creditors.

2. Some of the creditors of Chhaganlal who had not proved the debts due to them by Chhaganlal in the above insolvency filed Civil Appeal No. 1 of 1962 and the District Judge, Jalgaon, by his appellate order of remand dated December 31, 1962, set aside the order of the trial Court and directed that the application Ex. 13 in the appellate Court made on behalf of the receivers in insolvency on July 21, 1962, for leave to receivers to apply for discharge should be considered by the trial Court. The District Judge remanded the whole matter once again for further consideration by the trial Court. Whilst making the above order, the learned District Judge negatived the submission made on behalf of the petitioner that the creditors who had not proved their claims in insolvency had no locus standi in preferring the appeal. The learned Judge was of the view that it was open to the receivers to have the time for applying for discharge extended.

3. Mr. Divekar for the petitioner has submitted that the learned Judge should have held that the receivers had no right to apply for extension of time to make an application for discharge and further that the appellants (in the District Court) had no locus standi to institute the appeal, because they had not proved their claims for debts in insolvency. He, therefore, submitted that the learned Judge's order should be set aside in this revisional application.

4. Whilst Mr. Divekar made the above arguments, I called upon him to explain to me how the provisions in Section 43(1) were applicable to the facts of the present case. I asked him to satisfy me that the liability to make an application for discharge survived against the heirs of the insolvent Chhaganlal on his death in 1942. I asked him to explain to me how the failure of a deceased insolvent to apply for discharge can entitle his creditors to have the insolvency annulled. Mr. Divekar has pointed out to me that he has not found any such case in the books. But he insists that a creditor of an insolvent is given a right under Section 43 (1) of the Act to have insolvency of a debtor annulled upon proof that the debtor had failed to make an application for discharge within the time fixed for the purpose. It appears to me that the application for annulment of adjudication order can never be made against a deceased insolvent. In law the right to apply for annulment of an adjudication order cannot survive against the heirs of a deceased insolvent. Now, in this connection, it is important to notice that ordinarily an order of adjudication is made in connection with a debtor and his estate for the protection of his creditors and the society. Ordinarily, the order of adjudication is made, at the instance of one or more creditors. The purpose and effect of the law of insolvency is to have the estate of insolvents delivered in possession of representatives of Court and to have it distributed pro rata amongst the ordinary creditors. The disability that is inflicted against an insolvent under this law is that he cannot freely trade during the continuance of his insolvency until he obtains an order of discharge as is provided under Section 41. A debtor is compelled to apply for an order of discharge from insolvency so that the circumstances in which he involved himself in debts are made evident to the Insolvency Court. A debtor who might have incurred unreasonable speculative debts and/or unreasonable commercial debts can be held to be unworthy of discharge and the discharge order may be refused from time to time for a considerable number of years. The refusal to grant an order of discharge is for the purpose of continuing disabilities of an insolvent from trading freely and/or otherwise so as to cause injury and harm to unwary dealers and the society. When an insolvent debtor obtains an order of discharge, he becomes free from his previous debts and free from his disabilities which he incurs under the Act and thus is free to trade once again without any restrictions and disabilities. The right to apply for and obtain discharge is thus for personal benefit of the insolvent and has no relation whatsoever with the heirs of a deceased insolvent. The compulsion for application for discharge as contained in Section 41 is a personal liability inflicted against an insolvent debtor and has no relevance to the heirs surviving him upon his death. The penalty of annulment of adjudication order is visited on an insolvent debtor under Section 43(1) upon his failure to apply for discharge. This penalty and/or liability is also intended by the Legislature to be personal and has nothing to do with the heirs of a deceased insolvent. Now, it is a well recognised and established maxim of law "Actio personallis moritur cum persona" that personal causes of action and/or personal liabilities die with a deceased person. In my view, the right to apply for discharge is a personal right of an insolvent debtor which cannot survive in favour of any one upon his death. Similarly, the punishment of annulment of order of adjudication upon failure of application for discharge under Section 43(1) cannot be inflicted on the receivers in insolvency and/or creditors and/or heirs of a deceased insolvent. The right to inflict this penalty does not survive against any of these parties. Having regard to the above situation, in my view, the application Ex. 413 instituted by the petitioner in Insolvency Court was entirely misconceived and not maintainable. The order of adjudication made against Chhaganlal was not liable to be annulled by the trial Court for the reasons mentioned above.

5. As I have come to the above conclusion, I do not find it necessary to deal with the contentions made by Mr. Divekar relating to the locus standi of the creditors who had not proved their debts to institute the Civil Appeal No. 1 of 1962 in the District Court. Now, it requires to be stated that the application made by the receivers in the appellate Court for extension of time to apply for discharge was also entirely misconceived. Receivers in insolvency and/or heirs of a deceased insolvent can have no right of any kind to make an application for order of discharge under Section 41. The application Exh. 13 was also misconceived.

6. Under the circumstances, the petition for annulment of adjudication order being Ex. 413 in Insolvency Nos. 12 and 14 of 1935 that was originally filed by the petitioner is dismissed. There will be no order as to costs throughout. Receivers will be entitled to recover costs from the estate.

Application dismissed.

Purnabai w/o Babu Jawale and others, Petitioners v. The State of Maharashtra and another, Opponents.

Special Civil Appln. No. 1695 of 1968, D/- 3-3-1971, to set aside the order passed by Addl. Commr., Poona Division at Poona, D/- 20-3-1968.

Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act (27 of 1961), S. 19 — Resumption of land under, whether permissible.

The Ceiling Act does not provide for and/or prescribe any ceiling as to the area which could be restored in possession of the landlord. The Ceiling Act in fact is not enacted for restoration of possession of lands let out by him to a landlord. The ceiling of area for restoration of possession to the landlord must be found in and in fact is as prescribed by the Tenancy Act. This is so in spite of the phrase "notwithstanding anything contained in that tenancy law" as appearing in the last part of Section 19.

Dr. B. R. Naik, for Petitioners; S. C. Pratap, Asst. Govt. Pleader, for Opponents Nos. 1 and 2.

DESHPANDE, J.:— Two lands bearing Survey Nos. 139 and 140 measuring in all 33 acres 11 gunthas of village

CP/CP/B566/72/SSG

Chandekasare belonged to Bapu and Pandu, nephew and uncle respectively. Major portions of these lands were irrigated and were in possession of one Bahiru Zagade as tenant. In the course of inquiry in the holdings of the said tenant under Section 14 of the Maharashtra Agricultural Lands (Ceiling on Holdings) Act, 1961, hereinafter referred to as "the Ceiling Act", the tenant was found to be a surplus landholder. Before, however, his surplus lands were finally delimited, both Bapu and Pandu, appeared before the Deputy Collector in response to notices under Section 20 to claim resumption of these lands under Section 19 for personal cultivation. Bapu alone claimed entire two lands, alleging that on partition with Pandu in the year 1955-56 these lands were given to Bapu and he was entitled to claim so much more area of land as would make up the total of 108 acres which is the ceiling area for his Taluka under the Ceiling Act. Pandu supported Bapu's claim of partition and alternately claimed resumption of his share for himself. The Deputy Collector, by his order dated 30-9-1965 rejected their case of partition for want of any evidence and held that Bapu and Pandu had each eight annas shares in the lands. Pandu himself was already declared a surplus landholder, and as such was found disentitled to claim resumption of any area out of these lands. Bapu was found already to have been in possession of 37 acres 38 gunthas of Jirayat land. The Deputy Collector ordered restoration of land in favour of Pandu to the extent of 2 acres 20 gunthas out of his eight annas share in survey No. 140. This area of 2 acres 20 gunthas is perennially irrigated land and the same is admittedly equivalent to 10 acres 2 gunthas of Jirayat land. Upon restoration of land as ordered, the total area possessed by Bapu for personal cultivation came to 48 acres of Jirayat land which is the prescribed ceiling area under Section 5 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Land Act of 1948 hereinafter referred to as "the Tenancy Act". Claim of Bapu to resume land to the extent of ceiling of 108 acres fixed by the Ceiling Act was rejected on the ground that the same would be contrary to the ceiling of 48 acres fixed under the Tenancy Act. Bapu having died, his four heirs and Pandu challenged this order in revision to the Commissioner but without success. The petitioners Nos. 1 to 4 being the heirs of Bapu, and petitioner No. 5 Pandu challenge the validity and the legality of the order of the Additional Commissioner, Poona, dated 20-3-1968, in this special Civil Application under Art. 227 of the Constitution.

2. Dr. B. R. Naik, the learned advocate appearing for the petitioners, relies on the non obstante clause in Section 19(b) of the Ceiling Act and contends that the provisions in the Tenancy Act fixing the ceiling for the area that could be resumed by a landlord are irrelevant in the matter of resumption of land by a landlord under the Ceilings Act. Relevant parts of Section 19 may be conveniently quoted here:—

"Where, during any inquiry into the holding of any person x x x x x under the last preceding section, it appears that—

(a) the whole or any part of the surplus land delimited under the foregoing provisions, is held by that person from a landlord, and

(b) the landlord has a right of resumption for personal cultivation in respect of that land (or a part thereof) under the relevant tenancy law applicable to such land, the Collector shall x x x notwithstanding anything containing in that tenancy law restore possession to the landlord of so much only of the surplus land, as he is entitled to resume; and the balance, if any, shall be surplus land".

3. Towards ascertaining the true meaning and effect of the above provisions, it is convenient to notice the following.

4. As appears from the preamble, the other scheme and particularly Section 3 thereof, the Ceiling Act was enacted for securing equitable distribution of agricultural lands to landless persons for personal cultivation and the ceiling and/or the maximum area to be continued in possession of the holders—whether landlords or tenants—was fixed, so that the surplus land held by the holders could be acquired and distributed. Apparently, the main scheme of this law was not for enacting any provisions for resumption of lands from tenants-holders for redistribution thereof amongst any landlords. Towards fulfilment of the above purpose, ceiling area was fixed under Sections 4 to 7 and inquiries were directed to be held against landholders, whether landlords or tenants in respect of the lands in their possession and under Section 27 a scheme for distribution of the surplus land amongst parties mentioned therein in order of, the priority fixed thereby was enacted. Under subsection (2) of S. 27, land resumed by a landlord under the Tenancy Act was directed to be redistributed amongst his tenants. The ceiling area fixed under this Act was entirely irrelevant to the purpose and object of the Tenancy Act. As appears from the preamble and different sections thereof, the Tenancy Act was enacted with the main purpose of improving the economic and social conditions of peasants and in that connection to assume management of estates held by landholders. Towards that object, provisions relating to ceiling area and economic holding were enacted in Sections 5 to 7. The normal rights of landlord to terminate tenancy were curtailed by provisions in Sections 14 and 15. Right of pre-emption was conferred on tenant under Section 31. Under Section 32, from appointed day, the protected tenants were deemed to have purchased the lands in their possession. The Chapter III enacted provisions conferring special rights and privileges of tenants, and for distribution of land for personal cultivation. It requires to be noticed that apart from certain special provisions in Chapter III-A and Chapter III-AA, the Sections in Chapter III are the only sections providing for the rights of a landlord for resumption of lands let to tenants for personal cultivation by landlords. Apparently, the provisions in this Chapter III are the only permanent provisions that the Legislature intended to enact for conditions on and in which landlords should be entitled to resume possession of lands let out to an agriculturist tenant. One of the conditions mentioned in S. 31-A(b) is "x x x, the landlord shall be entitled to take possession of so much area of the land leased as will be sufficient to make up the area in his possession to the extent of a ceiling area". The substance of the contention made by the petitioners is that the provisions in Section 19 of the Ceiling Act have rendered the above condition in Section 31-A(b) of the Tenancy Act nugatory. Some of the other conditions prescribed by Chapter III are: The landlord must require the land in question for cultivating personally. Notice of termination should have been given before December 31, 1956. At the date of the above notice, the landlord should not be in possession of lands to the extent of the prescribed ceiling area. The income by cultivation must be the principal source of income for a landlord's maintenance. Under Section 32, in cases in which notice of termination of tenancy was not served under Section 31, which must be before December 31, 1956, the tenant became deemed purchaser of lands in his possession. Under Section 32-P, in cases in which purchase of any land by tenant became ineffective, the Tribunal prescribed was empowered to resume the land and dispose of the same in accordance with the scheme of priorities prescribed in sub-section (2). It is significant that lands were not allowed to be resumed by and/or to continue in ownership of the landlord and were directed to be distributed amongst third parties mentioned in the section. It is essential to remember what is discussed above whilst reading the provisions of Section 19 of the Ceilings Act on which reliance is placed by the petitioners.

5. In connection with the inquiries for resumption of surplus land under Section 18 of the Ceilings Act, the Collector is directed to consider matters mentioned in clauses (a) to (l) of the section. The clauses (h) and (k) run as follows:—

"(h) whether any land is held by the person as tenant, and if so, whether, his landlord has a subsisting right of resumption of the land for personal cultivation, under the relevant tenancy law, applicable thereto?"

"(k) which particular lands out of the total land held by him, should be delimited as surplus land?"

6. The clause (a) of sub-section (3) of S. 20 runs as follows:—

"(3) x x x, the Collector shall, after hearing the landlord or his agent and any other person interested in the surplus land x x x, ascertain—

(a) whether the landlord is entitled to restoration of the possession of the whole or any part of such surplus land, and if so, the area and other particulars of such lands; and

x x x x x x"

Apparently, the contents of clause (h) in Section 18 and clause (a) of sub-sec. (3) of S. 20 have reference to the right of resumption of land by the landlord that is referred to in Section 19. In that connection, under the above clause (h), the inquiry is directed to ascertain if the right of resumption which must be for personal cultivation is subsisting under the Tenancy Act. The result of that inquiry must be declared in the order to be passed in accordance with the contents of clause (a) of sub-section (3) of S. 20. All that is discussed above throws considerable light for ascertaining the true meaning of the provisions in Section 19. For the Collector to exercise power under the last part of Section 19 for restoration of possession of any surplus delimited land to the original owner landlord, the first essential finding required in Cl. (h) of Section 19 is that "the landlord has a right of resumption for personal cultivation in respect of that land (or a part thereof) under the relevant tenancy law x x x". If an affirmative finding can be made as regards the above matter, the second part of the section provides that "the Collector shall x x x notwithstanding anything contained in that tenancy law x x x, restore possession to the landlord of so much only of the surplus land, as he is entitled to resume; and the balance, if any, shall be surplus land". The language in the above part of the section is unambiguous and clear. The landlord is entitled to restoration of possession of so much of the land as he is entitled to resume. The question is, under what law and/or in what right?

The limitation is apparently as regards the area. That is clarified by the use of the phrase "so much". The Ceiling Act does not provide for and/or prescribe any ceiling as to the area which could be restored in possession of the landlord. The Ceiling Act in fact is not enacted for restoration of possession of lands let out by him to a landlord. It is absolutely clear that the ceiling of area for restoration of possession to the landlord must be found in and in fact is as prescribed by the Tenancy Act. This is so in spite of the phrase "notwithstanding anything contained in that tenancy law" as appearing in the last part of Section 19.

7. It is not in this connection necessary for us exhaustively to find out why the non obstante clause is included in Section 19. Possibly, this clause has the effect of nullifying some of the conditions necessary to be fulfilled for granting restoration of possession to the landlord of his land under the scheme of Chapter III of the Tenancy Act contained in Sections 31 to 43 as also in Chapters III-A, III-AA and III-B. We do not find it necessary to ascertain and/or specify the conditions which were intended to be nullified.

7-A. The contentions of Dr. Naik thus fail.

8. Rule is, therefore, discharged. In the circumstances of the case, there will be no order as to costs.

Rule discharged.

Jaysing Ratilal Kotak, Appellant v. Municipal Commissioner for Greater Bombay and another, Respondents.

A. F. O. D. No. 274 of 1967. D/- 1-3-1971, from order of N. M. Shah, Chief Judge, Sm. C. C., Bombay in Appeal No. M/229 of 1966.

Bombay Municipal Corporation Act (3 of 1888), S. 217(1) and (2) — Appeal against valuation — Appeal is maintainable not only against fixation of rateable value under the Act but also against the rejection of representation under S. 167 — (X-Ref:— Section 167).

(Paras 2, 3, 4)

When a representation made to the Commissioner under Section 167 for reducing the amount of rateable value is wholly rejected by him, in effect, he fixes the rateable value at the same figure as that at which it is entered in the Assessment Book. (Para 4)

Sub-section (2) of S. 217 cannot limit the right of appeal conferred by sub-section

(1) of S. 217. Sub-section (2) only provides that the appeal is not to be 'heard' by the Chief Judge unless certain conditions specified therein are fulfilled. If those conditions, or the appropriate condition, is not fulfilled, the remedy may be postponed or even barred, but the right of appeal conferred by sub-sec. (1) of S. 217 is not taken away thereby. Merely because a particular case may not fall under one or other of the clauses of sub-section (2) of S. 217, or under S. 218 which is consequential thereto, one is not led to the conclusion that no appeal would lie to the Chief Judge of the court of small causes in such a case.

The use of the expression "conclusive evidence" in sub-section (2) of Section 166 cannot have any bearing on the question as to whether an appeal is or is not maintainable under Section 217 of the Act, but has a bearing only on the question of proof of rateable value as and when it arises. C. V. Sheth, for Appellant; K. K. Singhavi with K. K. Desai i/b M/s. A. M. Desai, Attorneys, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT:— This is an appeal against an order of Mr. N. M. Shah, Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes, dated 28th January 1967 dismissing an appeal filed before him under Section 217 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act, 1888, (hereinafter referred to as the Act) on the ground that the same fell outside the purview of the said section and was, therefore, not maintainable. The appellant who purchased a flat on ownership basis some time in June 1966 made a representation to the Municipal Commissioner under Section 167 of the Act for reducing the amount of rateable value in respect of the said flat. The Municipal Commissioner, however, rejected that representation, and it is from that rejection that the present appellant sought to file an appeal to the Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes under Section 217 of the Act. The learned Chief Judge took the view that as under clause (c) of sub-section (2) of S. 217 an appeal against any amendment made in the Assessment Book under Section 167 during final year could not be heard unless a complaint made by the aggrieved person within 15 days after he first received the notice of the amendment had been disposed of, an appeal was competent only if the Assessment Book was amended during an official year. He held that as in the present case such an amendment was not made, but had been refused, no appeal lay from the same. The learned Judge also relied on clauses (a) and (d) of sub-clause (2) of S. 217, as well as on Section 218, and came to the conclusion that the appeal filed before him in the present case fell outside the purview of Section 217 and was not maintainable and he, therefore, dismissed the same. It is from that order that the present appeal has been preferred under S. 218-D(1)(b) of the Act.

2. I do not agree with the way in which Section 217 of the Act has been construed by the learned Chief Judge. In my opinion, sub-section (2) cannot limit the right of appeal conferred by sub-section (1) of S. 217 of the Act. Sub-section (2) only provides that the appeal is not to be 'heard' by the Chief Judge unless certain conditions specified therein are fulfilled. If those conditions, or the appropriate condition, is not fulfilled, the remedy may be postponed or even barred, but the right of appeal conferred by sub-section (1) of S. 217 is not taken away thereby. To take just one illustration, if clause (d) of sub-clause (2) of Sec. 217 is not fulfilled by reason of the fact that that deposit required thereby is not made by the appellant with the Commissioner, the appeal cannot be heard till that deposit is made, but that has nothing to do with the maintainability of the appeal as such, nor does it constitute a limitation on the right of appeal conferred by sub-section (1) of S. 217. It follows that merely because a particular case may not fall under one or other of the clauses of sub-section (2) of S. 217, or under Section 218 which is consequential thereto, one is not led to the conclusion that no appeal would lie to the Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes in such a case. If the facts of a particular case do not bring it within one or other of the clauses of sub-section (2) of Section 217, or within S. 218, the only result would be that the right of appeal conferred by Section 217 would stand unfettered by any condition or limitation. I am, therefore, unable to agree with the reasoning of the learned Chief Judge, and under the circumstances, the conclusion at which he has arrived must be held to be erroneous.

3. Mr. Singavi on behalf of the Corporation has attempted to support the order of the learned Chief Judge on two new grounds which are not to be found in that Order, and he is entitled to do so. The first ground is that under sub-section (2) of S. 166 an entry in regard to rateable value in the Assessment Book is stated to be "conclusive evidence" in regard to the same, subject to "such alterations" as may be made on a representation made under Section 167 of the Act. Mr. Singavi has, therefore, contended that when, on a representation made under Section 167, no alteration is made in regard to the rateable value entered in the Assessment Book, that rateable value becomes conclusive and no appeal lies from the same to the Chief Judge under Section 217 of the Act. I am unable to accept that argument of Mr. Singavi. The expression "conclusive evidence" has been construed by the Supreme Court in the case of Smt. Somavanti v. State of Punjab, (AIR 1963 SC 151 para 19). In that judgment, the Supreme Court has laid down that there is no difference between the expressions "conclusive evidence" and "conclusive proof". The Supreme Court has further laid down that once the law says that certain evidence is conclusive, it shuts out any other evidence which would detract from the conclusiveness of that evidence and the aim in such a case is to give finality to the establishment of the existence of a fact from the proof of another fact. It is, therefore, clear that the use of the expression "conclusive evidence" in sub-section (2) of S. 166 only means that no other evidence can be led to detract from the finality of the evidence in regard to rateable value that is to be found in the Assessment Book. It cannot however, mean that the rateable value so entered in the Assessment Book cannot be changed by appropriate procedure as provided in the Act. In other words, the use of the expression "conclusive evidence" in sub-section (2) of S. 166 cannot have any bearing on the question as to whether an appeal is or is not maintainable under Section 217 of the Act, but has a bearing only on the question of proof of rateable value as and when it arises. The argument of Mr. Singavi based on sub-section (2) of Section 166 must, therefore, be rejected.

4. The second ground on which Mr. Singavi sought to support the Order of the learned Chief Judge was that sub-section (1) of S. 217 provides for an appeal only against any rateable value "fixed or charged" under the Act, and that when a representation under Sec. 167 of the Act is rejected by the Commissioner, it cannot be said that he fixes any rateable value under that section. Mr. Singavi has rightly contended that the word "charge" has no application to the present case. The only question, therefore, is whether the word "fixed" as used in sub-section (1) of S. 217 should be construed in the manner contended for by Mr. Singavi. First and foremost, it must be pointed out that though Section 217 uses the word "fixed" in sub-section (1) thereof, that word does not occur in the earlier provisions relating to rateable value, except in Section 154 of the Act. The statutory provisions relating to the procedure for disputing the rateable value entered in the Assessment Book by the filing of a complaint under Section 162

do not use the word "fixed" in regard to the result of the proceeding that ensues upon such a complaint. If Mr. Singhavi's contention were to be right, the result would, therefore, be that even when such an application is dismissed, no appeal would lie from that dismissal under Section 217 of the Act. The result of placing this construction would be that the right of appeal conferred by Section 217 would be limited to the very few cases in which, on such a complaint being filed, the complaint is not wholly dismissed but the rateable value is reduced to a figure which is higher than that which the complainant had prayed for. I do not think there is any reason to place such a limited construction on Section 217 which confers the right of appeal. On principle, there is no reason why, if an appeal should lie from an alteration of a single rupee in the rateable value by the Commissioner acting on a representation made to him under Section 167 of the Act, no appeal should lie from a total rejection of that representation by the Commissioner. If any alteration effected by the Commissioner upon a representation made to him under Section 167 amounts to "fixing" of rateable value, I see no reason why the rejection of that representation by him should not amount to fixing the rateable value at the very figure at which it stands in the Assessment Book. I, therefore, hold that when a representation made to the Commissioner under Sec. 167 is wholly rejected by him, in effect, he fixes the rateable value at the same figure as that at which it is entered in the Assessment Book. Any other construction would unduly restrict the right of appeal conferred by sub-section (1) of S. 217 of the Act and lead to unreasonable results.

5. I, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the order of the learned Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes and remand the matter back to him to be disposed of in accordance with law. Costs of the appeal will be costs in the cause.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 297 of 1970, D/- 21-1-1971 to set aside order of A. R. Shimpli Judge City Civil Court, Bombay, D/- 16-2-1970.

(A) Bombay Public Trusts Act (29 of 1950), Ss. 79 and 80 — Effect of — Jurisdiction of Civil Court — Exclusion of.

CP/CP/B564/72/KSB

Section 79 is mandatory and the question whether particular property is trust property must be decided by the Charity Commissioner or his assistants and their decision is made final and conclusive. The jurisdiction of civil court to determine that question is barred by Section 80 unless the jurisdiction is saved by any other provision of the Act.

(Para 9)

(B) Bombay Public Trusts Act (29 of 1950), S. 50 — Essential condition for maintainability of suit under S. 50 — Suit property must be property belonging to or registered in name of trust.

While construing Section 50 the mandatory provisions of Section 79(1) cannot be lost sight of. The suit permitted under Section 50 must necessarily be a suit where it is not left to the Court to decide whether a particular property does or does not belong to a public charitable trust. It is only when the Charity Commissioner or his Assistants discharge their obligation of deciding the question as enjoined by Section 79 that a suit could be instituted by the Charity Commissioner or by two or more persons having an interest in the trust for the recovery of possession of such property or the proceeds thereof. The essential important condition for maintainability of suit under Section 50 is that the property in respect of which the suit is instituted must be a property belonging to a public trust. A mere allegation that the property belongs to a public trust would not be sufficient to sustain the suit.

(Para 10)

A suit by the trustees of a public trust registered under the Act, for a declaration that the suit properties belonged to the trust and for possession of the same with mesne profits even though instituted in pursuance of a direction of the charity Commissioner who refused to inquire into ownership of the trust property under Sec. 22-A, is not competent under Section 50. But in view of the fact that the suit was pending for the last 10 years, the High Court did not dismiss it in view of the bar under Section 80 but stayed it until declaration under S. 22-A that the properties belonged to the trust was obtained by the plaintiffs from the charity Commissioner.

(Para 17)

(C) Bombay Public Trusts Act (29 of 1950), S. 22-A — Provisions of Ss. 19 to 22 apply to inquiry under S. 22-A — Question whether property belongs to trust — Charity authorities cannot refuse to determine it and refer trustee to a civil suit.

The provisions of Sections 19, 20, 21 and 22 are applicable to the inquiry under Section 22-A also. It may be that the Deputy or Assistant Charity Commissioner has a discretion to inquire into certain particulars in regard to the Trust, but those particulars clearly must not be particulars about the inquiry of which an imperative duty has been cast under Sections 18 and 19. Under Section 19(ii) an imperative duty has been cast on the Charity authorities to determine whether any property is the property of such trust, and whenever an inquiry for this purpose is sought, it is certainly not open to the Charity authorities to avoid their responsibility and to say that the matter is too complicated and the parties could, therefore, seek their relief in a regular suit. (Para 14)

(D) Bombay Public Trusts Act (29 of 1950), S. 31(1) — Bar under is not to institution of suit but to its being heard and decided. (Para 17)

(E) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 2, R. 4 — Leave of Court — Suit for possession and mesne profits — Claim for recovery of money received by defendant by wrongful sale of some property cannot properly be joined under O. 2, R. 4 unless leave of court is obtained — It cannot also be justified under O. 1, R. 3 or O. 2, R. 3 — Leave was granted at stage of revision to get over the bar of technical objection — (X-Ref:— O. 1, R. 3 and O. 2, R. 3). ORDER:— This civil revision application has been directed against the judgment and order passed by the learned Judge of the City Civil Court at Bombay on 16-2-1970 in Suit No. 1362 of 1960 on his file.

2. The suit in question was filed by two plaintiffs, who happen to be the trustees of the Bhagoji Balooji Keer Public Religious and Charitable Trust.

This trust was created under a Deed of Trust made by Bhagoji Balooji Keer on 15-5-1930. This Trust has been duly registered under the provisions of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950. The properties included in this Trust admittedly include the property bearing Cadastral City Survey No. 657 situate at Mahim. Shortly after this Trust was made—in fact within seven days thereafter Bhagoji Keer acquired another property bearing Cadastral City Survey No. 656. This property is adjacent to the property bearing Cadastral City Survey No. 657 and some structures have been constructed thereon. One of them is "Dnyan Mandir" now known as Shree Cinema. It appears that this structure has been constructed on 922 sq. yds. out of City Survey No. 657 and partly on a portion of Cadastral City Survey No. 656.

3. Under the Deed of Trust, Bhagoji Balooji Keer and two others were the trustees. After Bhagoji's death on 24-2-1944 his son Bhalchandra (defendant No. 1) came to be appointed as a trustee in place of his deceased father along with the two other trustees appointed under the Trust. On 23-5-1946 this Bhalchandra was adjudicated insolvent with the result that his estate vested in the Official Assignee and his place as a trustee was taken by Bhagoji's other son Anant (Defendant No. 3). In 1947, the Official Assignee filed a suit for the administration of the personal estate belonging to Bhagoji in which insolvent Bhalchandra was entitled to a share. That suit was Suit No. 807 of 1947 and the same was filed in the High Court. In that suit, the Court Receiver was appointed as a Receiver of the property on 16-6-1947. The Official Assignee, in due course took possession of Bhalchandra's personal property. On 27-4-1954, new trustees were appointed in the proceeding of Civil Suit No. 625 of 1949 and some time thereafter the two plaintiffs along with defendant No. 3 came to be appointed as the trustees of the Trust. Under orders of the Court passed in the administration suit, the property known as Shree Cinema came to be sold by auction and was purchased by defendant No. 12 on 1-10-1958. Bhalchandra, it appears, had mortgaged his share in all the suit properties in favour of defendant No. 9 and his right, title and interest in those properties were subsequently purchased by defendant No. 9.

4. In 1958, the trustees moved the Charity Commissioner to include some more properties, which form the subject-matter of this suit, as properties belonging to the Trust. That apparently was done under Section 22-A of the Bombay Public Trusts Act 1950 but the Charity Commissioner by his order dated 29-9-

1958, held that the inquiry involved complicated questions of law and fact and the matter was, therefore, one which ought to be decided by a competent Civil Court. He, therefore, directed that the trustees may, after obtaining the Charity Commissioner's sanction under Section 51, institute the necessary suit under the provisions of Section 50 of the Bombay Public Trusts Act. The plaintiffs thereafter moved the Charity Commissioner for the necessary sanction under Section 51 and that sanction was accorded on 20-4-1959. Thereafter the suit giving rise to this litigation was instituted by the two plaintiffs on 30-1-1960. In this suit the plaintiffs claimed a declaration that the suit properties belonged to the Trust made by Bhagoji Keer on 15-5-1930. They further claimed possession of those properties, including the properties purchased by defendants 9 and 12. Certain other reliefs, like mesne profits, etc., were also claimed in the suit.

5. As has already been mentioned, defendant No. 3 happens to be one of the trustees appointed along with the two plaintiffs, but on account of his refusal to join as a plaintiff, he was impleaded as defendant No. 3. Bhalchandra, who was impleaded as defendant No. 1 died during the pendency of the suit and defendants 5 to 8 happen to be his heirs. Defendant No. 2 happens to be the widow of Bhagoji and defendant No. 4 happens to be her daughter. The Official Assignee was impleaded in the suit as defendant No. 10 and the Court Receiver as defendant No. 11 and the Charity Commissioner as defendant No. 13.

6. The suit was resisted by the defendants and on a perusal of the pleadings the following issues were framed and heard as preliminary issues:—

(1) "Whether this Court has pecuniary jurisdiction to try this suit.

(2) Whether this Court has no jurisdiction and the Charity Commissioner alone has jurisdiction to determine whether the property in question is a Public Charity Trust.

(3) Whether the plaint discloses any cause of action against the defendants.

(4) Whether the suit, as framed is maintainable without leave of the Court in view of the provisions of O. 2, R. 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

(5) Whether the suit as framed is not maintainable for reasons mentioned in paragraph 5 or 7 of the written statement of defendant No. 12.

(6) Whether the plaintiffs have given valid and proper notices under Section 80 of the Civil P. C. and whether proper notices have been served on defendants 10 and 11.

(7) If the answer to the preceding issue be in the negative whether the plaintiffs are entitled to maintain the suit.

(8) Whether the suit as framed is bad for multifariousness as alleged in para 8 of the written statement of defendant No. 12".

On the first issue, the finding of the learned Judge was in the affirmative, on the second he held that the Court had jurisdiction; on the 3rd and 4th issues also he found in the affirmative and on the 5th he held that the suit was maintainable. Finding on issue No. 6 also was recorded in the affirmative and hence on issue No. 7, it was held that the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the suit. Finding on issue No. 8 was recorded in the negative. After recording these findings, the suit was directed to be proceeded with for further hearing on the remaining issues and was fixed for hearing on 16-3-1970. Defendant No. 12 feeling aggrieved by these findings and the order directing the suit to proceed for hearing on the remaining issues, has come up to this court in revision.

7. In the course of the arguments at the Bar, only two points, were canvassed for my decision. The first is whether the learned Judge was right in taking the view that he had jurisdiction to entertain the present suit and the second is whether the suit is defective for want of the necessary permission of the Court under Order 2, Rule 4 of the Civil P. C. So far as the first point is concerned, the submission of Mr. Daji, appearing on behalf of defendant No. 12, was that the question whether a particular property belongs to a Public Trust is a question which the Charity Commissioner or his Assistant alone was empowered to decide under the provisions of the Bombay Public Trusts Act and the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to decide that question is, therefore, expressly barred by the provisions of Section 80 of the Act. In support of this submission my attention was drawn to the provisions of Sections 18, 19, 79 and 80 of the Bombay Public Trusts Act.

8. Section 18 deals with registration of public trusts. Sub-section (1) of S. 18 provides that it shall be the duty of the trustee of a public trust to which this Act has been applied to make an application for the registration of the public trust. Sub-section (2) says that such application shall be made to the Deputy or Assistant Charity Commissioner of the region or sub-region within the limits of which the trustee has an office for the administration of the trust or the trust property or substantial portion of the trust property is situate. Sub-section (4) prescribes the time limit for making such an application and sub-section (5) provides the particulars which have to be furnished in the application in question. Sub-section (6) provides that every application made under sub-section (1) shall be signed and verified in the prescribed manner by the trustee or his agent specially authorised by him in this behalf and shall be accompanied by a copy of an instrument of trust. Section 19 provides for inquiry for registration of the trust. It says that on the receipt of an application under Section 18, or upon an application made by any person having interest in a public trust or on his own motion, the Deputy or Assistant Charity Commissioner shall make an inquiry in the prescribed manner and the facts to be ascertained have been enumerated thereafter. The first fact to be ascertained is whether a trust exists and whether such trust is a public trust and the second fact is whether any property is the property of such trust. It is not necessary to enumerate the remaining facts for the purpose of this proceeding. The order passed by the Charity Commissioner or his Assistants is subject to appeals as provided in the Act. Then comes Section 79 and it lays down:—

"79(1) Any question, whether or not a trust exists and such trust is a public trust or particular property is the property of such trust, shall be decided by the Deputy or Assistant Charity Commissioner or the Charity Commissioner in appeal as provided by this Act.

(2) The decision of the Deputy or Assistant Charity Commissioner or the Charity Commissioner in appeal, as the case may be, shall, unless set aside by the decision of the court on application or of the High Court, in appeal, be final and conclusive".

Section 80, which follows provides that save as expressly provided in the Act, no Civil Court shall have jurisdiction to decide or deal with any question which is by or under the Act to be decided or dealt with by any officer or authority under the Act, or in respect of which the decision or order of such officer or authority has been made final and conclusive.

9. The combined effect of Sections 79 and 80 is that if a particular question is under Section 79 to be decided by the Charity Commissioner or his Assistant or by the Courts in appeal, the jurisdiction of a civil court to decide that question is expressly ousted by Section 80, unless there is a provision to the contrary contained in the Bombay Public Trusts Act. From the provisions of Section 79 it is clear that the question whether a particular property is the property of the trust is required to be decided by the Charity Commissioner or his Assistants. The words used are "shall be decided by" and the provision contained in Section 79 is, therefore clearly mandatory. Now if under the mandatory provision of Section 79 the question whether a particular property is a trust property is required to be decided by the Charity Commissioner or his Assistants, Section 80 would clearly preclude the civil court from deciding that question, unless the plaintiffs are in a position to show that the jurisdiction of the civil court is saved by any other provisions contained in the Bombay Public Trusts Act.

10. On the side of the plaintiffs an attempt was made to say that the suit in question would fall within the purview of Section 50 of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950 and that being a provision to the contrary, the bar under Section 80 could not possibly arise. The question therefore is whether the present suit could properly be regarded as a suit falling within the purview of Section 50. Section 50, in so far as is material for this proceeding, provides:—

"In any case—

(i)

(ii) where a direction is required to recover possession of a property belonging to a public trust or the proceeds thereof or for an account of such property or proceeds from any person including a person holding adversely to the public trust, or

(iii)

The Charity Commissioner after making such enquiry as he thinks necessary or two or more persons having an interest in the trust and having obtained the consent in writing of the Charity Commissioner as provided in Section 51, may institute a suit whether contentious or not in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the whole or part of the subject-matter of the trust is situate, to obtain a decree for any of the following reliefs:—

(a) an order for the recovery of the possession of such property or proceeds thereof".

There are certain provisos to Section 50, but with those provisos we are not concerned in this proceeding. From the provisions quoted above, it is clear that a suit for the recovery of possession of property or proceeds thereof can be filed by the Charity Commissioner or two or more persons having an interest in the trust after having obtained the Charity Commissioner's consent in writing as provided in Section 51, but the important condition is that the suit must be a suit where a direction is required to recover possession of a property belonging to a public trust or the proceeds thereof, that is to say, that the property in respect of which the suit is instituted must be a property belonging to a public trust. A mere allegation that the property belongs to a public trust would not be sufficient to sustain the suit. The suit must in effect be a suit for the recovery of possession of a property which is shown to belong to a public trust. The submission that the provisions of this section should be liberally construed so as not to defeat the suit of the trustees ignores the plain fact that while construing Section 50 the mandatory provisions of Section 79 cannot possibly be lost sight of and Section 79(1), as I have already indicated, clearly provides that any question, whether or not a trust exists and such trust is a public trust or particular property is the property of such trust, shall be decided by the Deputy or Assistant Charity Commissioner or the Charity Commissioner in appeal as provided by this Act and sub-section (2) makes it clear that the decision of the Deputy or Assistant Charity Commissioner or the Charity Commissioner in appeal, as the case may be shall unless set aside by the decision of the Court on application or of the High Court, in appeal be final and conclusive. Since it is made obligatory on the part of the Deputy or Assistant Charity Commissioner or the Charity Commissioner in appeal to decide whether a particular property is the property of a public charitable trust and since such decision is under sub-section (2) made final and conclusive, it is plain that the suit permitted under Section 50 must necessarily be a suit where it is not left to the court to decide whether a particular property does or does not belong to a public charitable trust. It is only when the Charity Commissioner or his Assistants discharge their obligation of deciding the question as enjoined by Section 79 that a suit could be instituted by the Charity Commissioner or by two or more persons having an interest in the trust for the recovery of possession of such property. On the side of the plaintiffs, it is argued that to adopt such a construction would drive the plaintiffs to multiplicity of proceedings. They would in the first place, be required to approach the Deputy Charity Commr. or the Charity Commissioner, as the case may be for the purpose of obtaining a finding that the properties in dispute belong to the public charitable trust in this case and thereafter they would be allowed to proceed with this suit. But it is difficult to see how such a course can be avoided in the face of the plain provisions to which a reference has been made.

11. In Taraben Baldevdas v. Charity Commr., (1955) 57 Bom. LR 1069 = (AIR 1957 Bom 42) the facts were that the plaintiff filed a suit in a civil court against the defendants for a declaration that she was the owner of a certain sum of money lying in deposit with the defendants and no one else had any right, title and interest in that sum. In that suit a preliminary issue was raised whether the suit was barred by the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950. During the pendency of the suit the defendants submitted an application before the Deputy Charity Commissioner under Section 19 of the Act inter alia to make inquiries and determine whether the sum lying in deposit with them constituted a trust and whether the trust was a public trust within the meaning of the Act. A preliminary contention raised by the plaintiff that the Deputy Charity Commissioner had no jurisdiction to entertain the application as the question relating to the existence of a trust was involved in the suit, was rejected. Thereafter the plaintiff applied for stay of the proceedings before the Deputy Charity Commissioner under Section 10 of the Civil P. C., 1908 contending that as the same issues fell to be determined in two different proceedings before two different tribunals simultaneously, and the suit instituted by the plaintiff was prior to the institution of the application by the defendants, the proceedings before the Deputy Charity Commissioner were liable to be stayed. On these facts, the Division Bench of this Court held that under the Bombay Public Trusts Act the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to decide the question whether the sum in the hands of the defendant was the property of a public trust and the application before the Deputy Charity Commissioner could not be stayed. This decision does, therefore, support the view that the question whether a particular property belongs to a public trust is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the charity authorities and the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to decide that question. On the side of the plaintiffs reliance was sought to be placed on the observations appearing at page 1073 of the Report. The observations are to the following effect:—

"It was submitted that if jurisdiction of the civil court to decide, whether a particular property is the property of a public trust, is excluded the civil court would have no jurisdiction, even at the instance of the charity Commissioner, or two or more persons who have obtained his consent in writing, to entertain a suit for declaration that a particular property belongs to a public trust and for consequential reliefs. But it has to be noted that the exclusion of jurisdiction of the civil court is made subject to any provision expressly made, and Section 50 being such a provision, jurisdiction of the Civil Court to entertain suits which fall within the description of suits mentioned therein may not be regarded as excluded".

These observations only support the conclusion that if a suit properly falls with-

In the purview of Section 50, it is saved from the bar arising under Section 80, but, for reasons already indicated the present suit cannot properly be regarded as a suit falling within the purview of Section 50. These observations cannot, therefore, further the case of the plaintiffs.

12. In Kuberbfai v. Purshottamdas, (1961) 2 Guj LR 564, the facts were that on 6-8-1952 the 1st defendant applied to the Assistant Charity Commissioner for registration of the trust pertaining to the temple of Shri Ramji at Detroj, of which the 1st defendant claimed to be the Mahant. The Assistant Charity Commissioner held an inquiry and ascertained that the 1st defendant was the Mahant and manager of the temple and made an entry in the register kept under Section 17 of the Bombay Public Trusts Act 1950, of the name of the 1st defendant as the Mahant and manager and also an entry to the effect that the mode of succession to the office of the Mahant was from the Guru to the Chela. Against these findings, the plaintiffs filed an application before the Deputy Charity Commissioner who rejected that application. Aggrieved by the order of the Deputy Charity Commissioner, the plaintiffs preferred an appeal before the Charity Commissioner but that appeal also met with the same fate and the appeal was dismissed on 17-9-1955. The plaintiffs did not challenge that order under Section 72 of the Act which entitles any person aggrieved by the decision of the Charity Commissioner inter alia under Sec. 70 to apply to set aside the said decision. The entries made by the Assistant Charity Commr. and confirmed by the Deputy Charity Commissioner and the Charity Commissioner consequently became final and conclusive. The plaintiffs thereafter filed the suit after obtaining the sanction of the Charity Commissioner as provided by Section 51 of the Act. The plaintiffs asked for a declaration that the three houses and the plot in suit and other movable properties belonged to the public trust, that Survey No. 141 of Detroj also belonged to the trust and that its alienation by the 1st defendant was void. The plaintiffs also prayed for possession of those properties and the question was whether the Court had jurisdiction to decide whether the particular properties did or did not belong to a public trust. Shelat, J. as he then was ruled that a complete Code is provided in the Bombay Public Trusts Act for dealing with matters set out in Sections 18 and 19 and recourse must be had to the procedure laid down in the Act. The provisions of Section 80 of the Act bar the jurisdiction of a Civil Court in the two categories of matters, viz. (1) those questions left under the Act to be decided by the Assistant or the Deputy Charity Commissioner under Sections 18 and 19 and (2) those which the Act has made final and conclusive under Section 79(1) and S. 21(2) of the Act. It was further ruled that the plaintiffs having had recourse to Section 70 and not having followed up their remedy under Section 72 are bound by the decision of the Charity Commissioner in their appeal before him. This decision also is therefore another authority in support of the view that the Civil Court is by Section 80 precluded from deciding the questions which it is the duty and function of the Charity Authorities to decide under the provisions of Section 79. On the side of the plaintiffs, an attempt was made to distinguish the decision by pointing out that the plaintiffs in that case had already appeared before the charity authorities. That, however, does not make any difference in principle. What is important is that the High Court of Gujarat has come to the conclusion that the duty and function to decide whether a particular property does or does not belong to a public trust are by Section 79 entrusted to the Charity authorities and the decision of those authorities is made final under sub-section (2) of S. 79 and the Civil Court is consequently precluded from deciding that question under Section 80 of the Act.

13. In Rajgopal Raghunathdas v. Ramchandra, (1967) 69 Bom LR 472 a Division Bench of this Court consisting of the Hon'ble the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Bal was dealing with a case where plaintiffs in their capacity as trustees had sued a trespasser for possession of property belonging to the trust and the contention was that the suit under Section 50 of the Bombay Public Trusts Act was not maintainable for want of the Charity Commissioner's sanction. That contention was overruled by the Division Bench, and the learned Chief Justice, speaking for the Division Bench, pointed out that the trustee who is in the position of a legal owner of property can sue to recover the property from persons, who are without any right, title or interest in themselves, without obtaining any previous sanction of the Charity Commissioner. In that case, the property was already declared to be a property belonging to the trust and it was therefore, held that the trustees without recourse to Section 50 could institute a suit in their own right. In that very case it has been pointed out that Section 50 of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950 is not restrictive but cumulative in its effect. It only enables persons having an interest to sue and does not prohibit any suits being filed by trustees of public trusts. Relying on these observations, Mr. Desai appearing on behalf of the plaintiffs, submitted that right to bring a suit under Sec. 50 was only one of the rights available to a trustee and that did not take away his ordinary right to file a suit for possession of trust property independently of Section 50. This no doubt is so, but the point is that the suit in the aforesaid case was a suit in respect of property which was already declared to be a property belonging to a trust and therefore, whether a suit was brought under Section 50 or whether it was brought independently of Section 50, the Civil Court was not going to decide the question which by Section 79 is required to be decided by the Charity authorities. Therefore merely by pointing out that Sec. 50 is not restrictive but cumulative, the plaintiffs cannot get over the provisions of Section 79 and say that their suit as prayed is maintainable under Section 50.

14. On the side of the plaintiffs, it was pointed out that they had in fact approached the charity authorities for getting an order that the properties in dispute are properties belonging to the trust but the Deputy Charity Commissioner by his order dated 29-9-1958 held that the matter was too complicated for him to decide and the best course, therefore, was to refer the parties to a suit under Section 50 after obtaining the Charity Commissioner's sanction under Section 51. The submission was that in passing such an order the Deputy Charity Commissioner was within his own rights, because while the words used in Sections 18 and 19 are "shall" the word used in Section 22-A is "may". But if Section 22-A is read as a whole it is abundantly clear that the provisions of Sections 19, 20 and 21 and 22 are applicable to the inquiry under Section 22-A also. It may be that the Deputy or Assistant Charity Commissioner has a discretion to inquire into certain particulars in regard to the Trust, but those particulars clearly must not be particulars about the inquiry of which an imperative duty has been cast under Sections 18 and 19. As I have already pointed out, under Section 19(ii) an imperative duty has been cast on the Charity authorities to determine whether any property is the property of such trust, and whenever an inquiry for this purpose is sought, it is certainly not open to the Charity authorities to avoid their responsibility and to say that the matter is too complicated and the parties could, therefore, seek their relief in a regular suit.

15. The ruling in Shri Adinath Tirthankar Jain Mandir v. Shantappa, 67 Bom LR 49 = (AIR 1967 Bom 86), to which a reference was made by Mr. Desai in the course of his submissions at the Bar cannot possibly make any difference to the view I am taking. In that case, the facts were that a person, who was not a party to the proceedings under the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950, found that his property had been registered as trust property pursuant to the said proceedings and it was held that he was not precluded under Sections 79 and 80 of the Act from filing a suit for declaration of his title to such property in a Civil Court. In taking that view the learned Judge seems to have relied on the following observations of a Division Bench of this Court consisting of Patel and K. K. Desai, JJ. made in First Appeal No. 353 of 1959 decided on 19-11-1962 (Bom). Those observations are to the following effect:—

"..... It is difficult, however, to assert that the Charity Commissioners have got exclusive jurisdiction where titles of third parties may be involved. While requiring them to decide statutory issues, if finality were to be attached to certain matters, we would be permitting them indirectly to decide very complicated and important questions of facts of heredity and legitimacy as well, which in all probability, in view of the wording of Section 19, may not have been intended. Even apart from this, the procedure prescribed is also a summary procedure, which is highly unsuited to any inquiry about the titles of third persons....."

These observations cannot, however, have any application to the facts of the present case. We are not here dealing with a case where a person, who was not a party to the proceedings under the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950 finds that his property is registered as trust property pursuant to the said proceedings. We are dealing with a suit instituted by the trustees themselves and the trustees at any rate cannot say that it was not necessary for them to approach the charity authorities in accordance with the provisions of Sections 18, 19 and 79. Section 18(2) enjoins that it shall be the duty of the trustees of a public trust to which this act has been applied to make an application for the registration of the public trust and once this imperative obligation is required to be discharged, it naturally follows that they must also take care to get all the trust properties entered in the register of trusts. If they do so, the charity authorities naturally have got to discharge their own obligations imposed by Section 79 and once they pass their order, that order is made final and conclusive and a civil court is by Section 80 clearly precluded from deciding those questions.

16. Mr. Desai, appearing on behalf of the plaintiffs, made a final attempt to save the situation by pointing out that in any case, one of the trust properties was involved in this suit. He pointed out that the property "Dnyan Mandir" alias Shree Cinema purchased at the Court auction by defendant No. 12 has in fact been constructed partly on Cadastral City Survey No. 657, although a part of it is constructed on the adjoining plot bearing Cadastral City Survey No. 656 also. The argument, therefore, was that the plot bearing Cadastral City Survey No. 657 at any rate is a property belonging to the Trust and if that is the position there is no reason why the plaintiffs cannot come to Court under Section 50. But while the plaintiffs could come to Court for relief in respect of Cadastral City Survey No. 657, which is already declared to be a trust property, they could not possibly claim any relief in respect of the other property bearing Cadastral City Survey No. 656, which is not yet declared to be a property belonging to the trust. The decision of the Supreme Court in Sugra Bibi v. Haji Kummur, AIR 1969 SC 884, to which a reference was made by Mr. Desai can possibly have no application to the facts of this case. What has been held there is that where in a Wakf deed there were certain provisions in favour of the family members of the founder along with some other provisions in favour of the public and the suit was brought for removal of Mutwalli and appointment of plaintiff's son in his place, the mere fact that there were certain provisions in favour of the family members of the founder along with some other provisions in favour of the public, would not take the case out of the provisions of Sec. 92 of the Civil P. C. as there was a substantial portion of the income of the Wakf properties to be spent for purposes of charitable and religious nature. These observations cannot certainly support the submission that the trustees can come to Court under Section 50 even in respect of property which is not held by the charity authorities to be a property belonging to the trust.

17. In the view I have taken, the learned Judge was in error in taking the view that the suit of the plaintiffs did fall within the purview of Section 50 and the bar under Section 80 of the Bombay Public Trusts Act could not consequently arise. But even though I have taken the view that the suit under Section 50 is not competent, it seems to me that it would hardly be in the interest of justice to throw away the suit on the basis of this finding. The suit has been instituted by the trustees in respect of property alleged to be of the ownership of the Trust as far back as 30-1-1960 and now in 1971 it would hardly be fair to dismiss the suit and drive the plaintiffs to a separate proceeding under Sections 18, 19 and 22 of the Bombay Public Trusts Act. The fairest course in this case would, I think be to direct that the proceedings of this suit shall be stayed and in the meantime the plaintiffs would approach the charity authorities to obtain a declaration under Section 22-A that the properties in suit belong to the Trust made by the late Bhagoji Keer. In this connection, it may be useful to note the provisions of Section 31(1) of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950. That sub-section only says:—

"No suit to enforce a right on behalf of a public trust which has not been registered under this Act shall be heard or decided in any Court".

The bar, therefore, is to the suit being heard and decided and not to the suit being instituted. In the present case so far as certain properties are concerned, they are not registered as properties belonging to the Trust and as soon as that defect is overcome, the bar under Section 31(1) would no longer arise. It is to be hoped that after the plaintiffs approach the charity authorities they would deal with the matter as expeditiously as possible.

18. That leaves the other contention of Mr. Daji that the suit is bad for want of the necessary leave to the Court under the provisions of O. 2, R. 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That Rule provides:—

"No cause of action shall unless with the leave of the Court, be joined with a suit for the recovery of immovable property, except

(a) claims for mesne profits or arrears of rent in respect of the property claimed or any part thereof.

(b) claims for damages for breach of any contract under which the property or any part thereof is held.

Provided that nothing in this rule shall be deemed to prevent any party in a suit for foreclosure or redemption from asking to be put into possession of the mortgaged property".

The submission founded on this Rule was that the only causes of action which could be joined without the leave of the Court were the three enumerated in Rule 4, but in the present case, besides claiming mesne profits, the plaintiffs had also made certain prayers not covered by Rule 4. In that connection, my attention was particularly drawn to the relief claimed in clause H of paragraph 22 of the plaint. That clause says that defendants 1 to 8 and 10 and 11 or any of them may be ordered to pay to the plaintiffs Rs. 4,973.80 p. or any other sum being the price of 125 sq. yds. wrongfully sold out of Trust C. S. No. 657 and received by the said defendants or any of them by sale of plot No. 1 & Plot No. 2 mentioned in particulars and conditions of sale in suit No. 807 of 1947. It must, I think be conceded that this is not a claim which could properly be joined in a suit for possession without the leave of the Court in the face of the express provisions of O. 2, R. 4 of the Civil P. C. Order 2, Rule 3, to which the learned Judge has referred, merely says which causes of action could be joined. That Rule says:—

"Save as otherwise provided, a plaintiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendant, or the same defendants jointly, and any plaintiffs having causes of action in which they are jointly interested against the same defendant or the same defendants jointly may unite such causes of action in the same suit".

This Rule cannot, however, justify the inclusion of the relief claimed in clause H of paragraph 22 of the plaint. The learned Judge has further referred to Order 1, Rule 3 of the Civil P. C. What that rule provides is that all persons may be joined as defendants against whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, where if separate suits were brought against such persons, any common question of law or fact would arise. While this Rule may enable the plaintiffs to get over the objection of multifariousness, it cannot certainly enable them to successfully meet the objection founded on R. 4 of O. 2, but the objection in this behalf is at best a technical objection and the same can, I think be without any difficulty removed by granting to the plaintiffs the necessary leave as contemplated by the Rule. I am told that such a request was made in the trial Court itself, but there was no occasion for that Court to grant that prayer because of the view that the joinder of causes of action was held not to offend the provisions of O. 2, R. 4. Although I have taken the view that it does offend the provisions of Order 2, Rule 4 of the Civil P. C. I propose to get over the objection by granting to the plaintiffs the leave in question at this stage. The second objection does not therefore, survive.

19. In the view I have taken, the Civil revision application is partly allowed and the suit shall be returned to the trial Court for being proceeded with and disposed of according to law in the light of this judgment. The costs of this Civil Revision Application shall abide and follow the final result of the suit.

Revision partly allowed.

Vishnu Shantaram Desai, Petitioner v. Smt. Indira Anant Patkar and another, Opponents.

Special Civil Applns. Nos. 2198 of 1966, 1916 of 1965 and 2137 of 1967, D/- 19-3-1971 to set aside order of Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, at Kolhapur, D/- 27-7-1966.

Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (67 of 1948), S. 32-F — Scope and interpretation of — Section 32-F does not create any independent right to purchase land in a tenant apart from S. 32 — Section 32 is subject to S. 32-F which prescribes a special procedure for exercise of such right — (X-Ref:— Ss. 32 to 32-F and Ss. 32-G to 32-R) — (X-Ref:— Interpretation of Statutes—Marginal note to section).

Section 32 provides for automatic statutory transfer of ownership to the tenant by operation of law on the tillers' day or on the postponed date. The right of a tenant to be deemed to have purchased land under Section 32(1) is, however, subject to the other provisions of this section and the provisions of the next succeeding sections including S. 32-F.

Section 32-F, Cl. (a) deals with a case where the landlord is under a disability and Cl. (b) deals with a case where the tenant is under a disability. Each of these clauses is complete by itself and can apply independently of each other. A case may, however, arise when both a landlord and a tenant are simultaneously under disability. In such a case, if the period during which the landlord's right to terminate the tenancy under Sec. 31 has expired before a tenant's right to purchase land may be exercised, right of the tenant to purchase land has to be exercised in accordance with the provisions of clause (b) within the time therein specified. If, however, the period during which such a landlord is entitled to terminate the tenancy under Section 31 has not expired when a tenant under such disability has become entitled to exercise his right of purchase under clause (b), the provisions of clause (a) will prevail over those of clause (b) because clause (b) inter alia contains the words "subject to the provisions of clause (a)".

(Paras 18, 19)

A marginal note may sometimes be an aid to interpretation but the use of the word "etc." in the marginal note to Section 32-F does not restrict the operation of Section 32-F only to a case where a landlord is under disability. (Para 20)

Sections 32 and 32-F do not confer independent rights or opportunities to purchase land upon a tenant. Section 32-F prescribes a special procedure for exercise of a right to purchase land conferred upon a tenant by Section 32 when either a landlord or a tenant or both of them are under disability. Such a tenant has only one right to purchase. He has to give an intimation under S. 32-F (1) (a) and then the provisions of Ss. 32 to 32-F (both inclusive) and 32-G to 32-R (both inclusive) apply to such purchase. The mere use of the word "any" is insufficient to conclude that Section 32-F (1) (b) gives an additional rights. (1969) 71 Bom LR 402 (407, 408). Overruled. Case law discussed.

The cumulative effect of the provisions of Section 32-F read with those of Section 32-P is that in a case where a landlord or a tenant or both of them are under disability a tenant shall be deemed to be a purchaser of the land held by him as a tenant only if he gives an intimation of his desire to purchase land to the landlord and the Tribunal in the manner prescribed and within the time specified in Section 32-F. The Judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by KANTAWALA, J.:— These three special civil applications are referred to a Full Bench as they involve a question as to proper construction of the provisions of Section 32-F of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948 (Bombay Act No. LXVII of 1948)

(hereinafter referred to as "the Act"). The petitioner in each of these applications is either a landlord or a tenant belonging to the category specified in the said Section 32-F.

2. In Special Civil Application No. 2198 of 1966 proceedings under Section 32-G of the Act were initiated by the Additional Mahalkari and Agricultural Lands Tribunal No. IV, Kudal, for determining the price payable by the tenant in respect of Survey No. 5, Pot Hissa No. 3, admeasuring 25½ gunthas situate at Village Pat, Mahal Kudal, on the Tillers' Day i.e. on April 1, 1957 respondent No. 1 Shrimati Indira Anant Patkar and her two minor sons were the tenants of the land. Landlord Vishnu Shantaram Desai contended before the Tribunal that the tenant was not entitled to purchase the land held by her as she was a widow. The Tribunal took the view that in case of tenants under disability they had to exercise the right of purchase after their disability ceased but law did not forbid them from becoming owners on the tillers' day if they did not wish to postpone the purchase in their favour to any future date. The Tribunal accordingly held that the widow was entitled to purchase the land held by her as a tenant on the tillers' day. The order of the Tribunal also made a reference to one of the minor sons who had become major before the proceedings were commenced. Such a minor son, after attaining majority had not given any intimation expressing his desire to exercise his right to purchase land under S. 32, within one year of his attaining majority. The Tribunal, however, took the view that as proceedings were not initiated till then under Section 32-G failure to give such intimation by such a son after attaining majority did not debar the widow from exercising her right to purchase. The Tribunal also fixed the price that was payable by the tenant to the landlord and directed it to be paid by two annual instalments. These findings of the Agricultural Lands Tribunal were confirmed in appeal by the District Deputy Collector, Savantwadi, and in revision by the President, Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, Bombay. The Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal in its order inter alia observed that the provisions of Section 32-F related only to a case where a landlord is a disabled person; there was nothing in Section 32 to suggest that a tenant, who is disabled, is prevented from becoming a statutory purchaser either on 1st April 1957, i.e. the tillers' day or on the postponed date. Landlord Vishnu has filed Special Civil Application under Art. 227 of the Constitution to challenge the validity of this order passed by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, Bombay.

3. In Special Civil Application No. 1916 of 1965 Survey No. 56 admeasuring 18 acres (and 5 acres 10 gunthas Pot Kharab) situate at Village Kaudane, Taluka Karjat, belonged to Lahanubai Maruti Gangarde, a widow, on the tillers' day. She died on April 30, 1959. One Ganu Rama Khore was a tenant of this land on the tillers' day. He too died in the year 1960, leaving his two sons, Rangnath and Babu, who cultivated the land as tenants thereafter. Disputes existed as regards the claim as successor-in-title of widow Lahanubai between Ganpat Saradu Gangarde and one Yeshwant Kondiba. Ultimately, the name of Ganpat Gangarde was entered in the record of rights on October 9, 1961, as a successor-in-title of widow Lahanubai. On October 14, 1961, Ganpat Gangarde gave a notice to Rangnath and Babu terminating their tenancy on the ground that he required the land for personal cultivation and ultimately made an application through his constituted attorney Namdeo on December 18, 1961, for possession under Section 29 of the Act. In these proceedings, ignoring the objections of the tenants, the Tenancy Aval Karkun passed an order for delivery of possession of half the survey number in favour of the landlord. An appeal preferred by the tenants Rangnath and Babu was allowed by the Assistant Collector, Parner, on the ground that the application made on behalf of the landlord was barred by limitation. The decision of the Assistant Collector was confirmed in Revision by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal on November 29, 1962. In the year 1964, proceedings were initiated under Section 32-G read with Section 32-F of the Act for determination of the price payable by the tenants. The tenants, however, had not given any notice as provided by S. 32-F intimating their desire to exercise their right to purchase the land. The Agricultural Lands Tribunal took the view that as no such intimation was given by the tenants, the purchase of the tenants became ineffective. This decision was confirmed in appeal by the Assistant Collector, Parner, and in revision by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, Poona. The tenants, Rangnath and Babu have filed this Special Civil Application under Art. 227 of the Constitution to challenge the validity of these orders.

4. In Special Civil Application No. 2137 of 1967 Survey No. 74 admeasuring 8 acres 25 gunthas situate at Mouze Rotvad, Taluka Jamner, District Jalgaon was owned by two brothers, Waman and Jagannath and their widowed mother Shrimati Parvatibai. On the tillers' day, respondent No. 1, Adhar Chango Padgham was a tenant, but he was then a minor, he having been born on February 23, 1945. Proceedings initiated by landlord

Waman under Section 29 read with Section 31 of the Act for possession of this survey number on the ground that he required the same for personal cultivation, were ultimately dismissed by the Prant Officer, in the year 1959. Proceedings adopted by landlord Waman for an Exemption Certificate under S. 88-C of the Act were ultimately dismissed by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal in June 1960 and similar proceedings adopted by landlords Jagannath and Shrimati Parvatibai for exemption certificate were ultimately dismissed by the High Court in January 1964. After attaining majority on July 30, 1964 the tenant Adhar made an application to the Mamlatdar and the Agricultural Lands Tribunal for fixation of price to be paid by him. On October 3, 1964 he gave an intimation to landlord Waman and Agricultural Lands Tribunal in respect of his desire to exercise the right of purchase conferred by Section 32. The Tribunal took the view that as the tenant had failed to give intimation in respect of his desire to exercise the right to purchase within the time specified by Section 32-F, he had no right then to purchase the land and that the land had to be disposed of in accordance with the provisions of Section 32-P. In an appeal by the tenant, this finding of the Agricultural Lands Tribunal was confirmed by the District Deputy Collector, Chalisgaon. He, however, took the view that as one of the landlords was a widow, it was necessary to inquire whether the share of any of the petitioners was separated by metes and bounds as contemplated in proviso to clause (a) of subsection (1) of S. 32-F. To make this enquiry, he passed an order of remand. In a revision application by the landlords, the President of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal took the view that Section 32-F had no application; that the case was governed by Section 32 of the Act; that the tenant had become the purchaser under Section 32 of the Act and the Agricultural Lands Tribunal should determine the purchase price payable by the tenant. The landlords have filed this Special Civil Application under Art. 227 of the Constitution against the decision of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal.

5. For sake of brevity and convenience, a landlord who is a minor or a widow or a person subject to any mental or physical disability is hereinafter referred to as "a disabled landlord" or "a landlord under disability", and a tenant who is a minor or a widow or a person subject to any mental or physical disability or a serving member of the armed forces is hereinafter referred to as "a disabled tenant" or "a tenant under disability".

6. The contention on behalf of the landlord in these applications is that when either a landlord or a tenant is under disability, or when both of them are under disability, a tenant has a right to purchase the land by him as tenant only in the manner and within the time prescribed by Section 32-F of the Act; that in such a case there is no statutory transfer of ownership under Section 32 of the land held by the tenant on the tillers' day or on the postponed date; that in such a case, the tenant has to exercise the right to purchase the said land by giving an intimation in that behalf to the landlord and the Agricultural Lands Tribunal in the prescribed manner within the time specified in Section 32-F; that in default of such intimation within the time specified or in the manner prescribed, the tenant is not deemed to be a purchaser of the land held by him as the tenant and the land may be disposed of by the Agricultural Lands Tribunal as provided in Section 32-P of the Act. On behalf of the tenants in these applications, arguments were presented in two different ways. It was said that S. 32-F of the Act is only an enabling provision; that a tenant under disability has not only a right of statutory purchase under Section 32 but he has also an additional right to purchase land held by him as tenant within the time specified in Section 32-F; that Section 32-F does not curtail the right given to every tenant including a disabled tenant to become a deemed statutory purchaser under Section 32. This line of submission was presented on the footing that Section 32-F is attracted where either a landlord or a tenant or both of them are under disability.

7. Mr. Warke, who intervened on behalf of one of the tenants, on the other hand, contended that Section 32-F applies only when a landlord is under disability but a tenant may or may not be under disability; where a landlord is not under any disability, but a tenant alone is under disability, Section 32-F is not at all attracted and the case is then governed by Section 32 only.

8. Substantial modifications in respect of the rights of a landlord and a tenant in relation to agricultural land were effected by amendments made in the Act by Bombay Act No. XIII of 1956 and by subsequent amending Acts. Chapter III of the Act after these amendments deals with special rights and privileges of tenants and provisions for distribution of land for personal cultivation. This Chapter is divided into four parts. The first part thereof deals with termination of tenancy for personal cultivation and non-agricultural use and is comprised of Sections 31 and 31-A to Section 31-D. The second part thereof deals with purchase of land by tenants and is comprised of Sections 32, S. 32-A to S. 32-R and S. 33. Part IIA deals with termination of tenancy by landlords and purchase by tenants of lands to which Section 88-C applies. It is comprised of Sections 33-A to 33-C. Part III thereof provides for restrictions upon holding land in excess of ceiling area.

9. The general right of a landlord to terminate the tenancy of any land on the ground of bona fide personal cultivation or for any non-agricultural purpose is laid down in sub-sections (1) and (2) of S. 31. He is required to give a notice terminating the tenancy and stating the purpose for which the land is required. This notice is required to be served on the tenant on or before 31st Day of December 1956 and a copy of such notice is required to be forwarded to the Mamlatdar. An application for possession under Section 29 is thereafter to be made to the Mamlatdar on or before March 31, 1957. In case of landlords under disability, the time for giving such notice for termination of tenancy and making an application for possession under Section 29 is extended by sub-section (3) of S. 31. It is as under:—

"31. (3) Where a landlord is a minor, or a widow, or a person subject to mental or physical disability then such notice may be given and an application for possession under Section 29 may be made,

(i) by the minor within one year from the date on which he attains majority;

(ii) by the successor-in-title of a widow within one year from the date on which her interest in the land ceases to exist;

(iii) within one year from the date on which mental or physical disability ceases to exist;

Provided that where a person of such category is a member of a joint family, the provisions of this sub-section shall not apply if at least one member of the joint family is outside the categories mentioned in this sub-section unless before the 31st Day of March 1958 the share of such person in the joint family has been separated by metes and bounds and the Mamlatdar on enquiry is satisfied that the share of such person in the land is separated having regard to the area, assessment, classification and value of the land, in the same proportion as the share of that person in the entire joint family property, and not in a larger proportion."

10. In Bai Jiviben v. Bombay Revenue Tribunal (1959) 61 Bom LR 1475 the Division Bench of this Court has taken the view that under Section 31 of the Act, a widow can terminate the tenancy of her land and can apply for possession of the land under Section 29 of the Act. The object of sub-section (3) of

S. 31 is to protect the rights of the successor-in-title of the widow and to ensure that he does not suffer owing to negligence or inaction on the part of the widow. There are no words either in sub-section (3) or any other part of the section which deprive a widow of the right conferred upon every landlord under sub-section (1). It could not have been the intention of the legislature that even though the widow may require additional income from her land for her maintenance, she shall not be able to obtain possession of the land throughout her life time and that this right should be available to her successor-in-title.

11. Section 31-A to S. 31-D relate to other conditions, terms and consequences of termination of tenancy.

12. Section 32 of the Act provides that the tenant shall be deemed to have purchased the land on tillers' day. The material part of this section is as under:

"32(1). On the first day of April 1957 (hereinafter referred to as "the tillers' day") every tenant shall subject to the other provisions of this section and the provisions of the next succeeding sections, be deemed to have purchased from his landlord, free of all encumbrances subsisting thereon on the said day, the land held by him as tenant, if

(a) such tenant is a permanent tenant thereof and cultivates land personally;

(b) such tenant is not a permanent tenant but cultivates the land leased personally; and

(i) the landlord has not given notice of termination of the tenancy under Section 31; or

(ii) notice has been given under Section 31, but the landlord has not applied to the Mamlatdar on or before the 31st day of March 1957 under Section 29 for obtaining possession of the land; or

(iii) the landlord has not terminated this tenancy on any of the grounds specified in Section 14, or has so terminated the tenancy but has not applied to the Mamlatdar on or before the 31st day of March 1957 under Section 29 for obtaining possession of the lands;

Provided that if an application made by the landlord under Section 29 for obtaining possession of the land has been rejected by the Mamlatdar or by the Collector in appeal or in revision by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal under the provisions of this Act, the tenant shall be deemed to have purchased the land on the date on which the final order of rejection is passed. The date on which the final order of rejection is passed is hereinafter referred to as "the postponed date":

Provided further that the tenant of a landlord who is entitled to the benefit of the proviso to sub-section (3) of Section 31 shall be deemed to have purchased the land on the 1st day of April 1958, if no separation of his share has been effected before the date mentioned in that proviso.

(3) In respect of the land deemed to have been purchased by a tenant under sub-section (1)(a) the tenant-purchaser shall be liable to pay to the former landlord compensation for the use and occupation of the land, a sum equal to the rent of such land every year, and (b) the former landlord shall continue to be liable to pay to the State Government the dues, if any, referred to in clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) of sub-section (1) of S. 10-A, where the tenant-purchaser is not liable to pay such dues under sub-section (3) of that section, until the amount of the purchase price payable by the tenant-purchaser to the former landlord is determined under Section 32-H.

(The other sub-sections are not very relevant for the present purpose).

13. Section 32 provides for automatic statutory transfer of ownership to the tenant by operation of law on the tillers' day or on the postponed date. Under this section, a tenant is deemed to have purchased from his landlord land held by him as tenant if the conditions of this section are fulfilled. Such a tenant is not required to do any act or to give any intimation before he is deemed to have purchased such land. To achieve this result, neither the consent of the landlord nor of the tenant is required or contemplated. It is by a deeming provision that such a tenant is made a statutory purchaser of the land held by him as a tenant.

14. The right of a tenant to be deemed to have purchased land under Section 32(1) is, however, "subject to the other provisions of this section and the provisions of the next succeeding sections". Section 32-G prescribes the procedure to be followed for determining the price of land to be paid by the tenants. Under sub-section (1) thereof, as soon as may be after the tillers' day, the Agricultural Lands Tribunal shall publish or cause to be published a public notice in the prescribed form in each village within its jurisdiction calling upon (a) all tenants who under Section 32 are deemed to have purchased the lands; (b) all landlords of such lands and (c) all other persons interested therein to appear before it on the date specified in the notice. The Tribunal is enjoined to record in a prescribed manner the statement of the tenant whether he is or is not willing to purchase the land held by him as a tenant. Consequences of failure to appear by the tenant or of his unwillingness to purchase the land are provided in sub-section (3) thereof. Under that sub-section where any tenant fails to appear or makes a statement that he is not willing to purchase the land, the Tribunal shall by an order in writing declare that such tenant is not willing to purchase the land and that the purchase is ineffective. A proviso to this sub-section provides that if such order is passed in default of the appearance of any party, the Tribunal shall communicate such order to the parties and any party on whose default the order was passed, may within 60 days from the date, on which the order was communicated to him, apply for the review of the same. Sub-section (4) provides for determination of the purchase price payable by a tenant after holding an enquiry when a tenant is willing to purchase. Sub-section (5) requires that in the case of a tenant, who is deemed to have purchased the land on the postponed date, the Tribunal shall as soon as may be, after such date determine the price of the land. Under Section 32-K(3) arrears of instalments of purchase price are recoverable by the Tribunal as an arrear of land revenue. Section 32-M of the Act inter alia makes the purchase to be ineffective on tenant-purchaser's failure to pay purchase price. Under sub-section (1) thereof, a tenant who has paid the price in a lump sum or the last instalment of such price, is entitled to a certificate of purchase in the prescribed form. Such a certificate is made conclusive evidence of his purchase. This sub-section further provides that in the event of failure of recovery of purchase price as arrears of land revenue, the purchase shall be ineffective and the land shall be at the disposal of the Tribunal under Section 32-P and any amount deposited by such tenant-purchaser towards the price of the land shall be refunded to him. It is implicit in the scheme of Sections 32, 32-G and 32-M that in a case governed by Section 32 a tenant is deemed to have purchased the land on the tillers' day or on the postponed date. If, however, later on he fails to appear before the Tribunal when a notice is served upon him under Section 32-G or if he expresses his unwillingness to purchase the land or if the purchase price is not recovered from him as provided under Section 32-K read with Section 32 then the purchase becomes ineffective. Under Section 32-P when the purchase of a land by a tenant becomes ineffective inter alia under Section 32-G or 32-M, the Tribunal may after holding a formal enquiry, direct that the land shall be disposed of in the manner prescribed in sub-section (2). Under sub-section (2) such a direction may inter alia provide for the summary eviction of the tenant or for the surrender of the land to the former landlord.

15. The effect of these provisions is generally summed up by the Supreme Court in Sri Ram Ram Narain v. State of Bombay, (1959) 61 Bom LR 811 at p. 824 = (AIR 1959 SC 459) as under:

"The title of the landlord to the land passes immediately to the tenant on the tillers' day and there is a completed purchase or sale thereof as between the landlord and the tenant. The tenant is no doubt given a locus penitentie and an option of declaring whether he is or is not willing to purchase the land held by him as a tenant. If he fails to appear or makes a statement that he is not willing to purchase the land the Tribunal shall, by an order in writing declare that such tenant is not willing to purchase the land and that the purchase is ineffective. It is only by such a declaration by the tribunal that the purchase becomes ineffective. If no such declaration is made by the Tribunal, the purchase would stand as statutorily effected on the tillers' day and will continue to be operative, the only obligation on the tenant then being the payment of price in the mode determined by the Tribunal. If the tenant commits default in the payment of such price either in lump or by instalments as determined by the Tribunal, Section 32-M declares the purchase to be ineffective, but in that event the land shall then be at the disposal of the Collector to be disposed of by him in the manner provided therein. Here also the purchase continues to be effective as from the tillers' day until such default is committed and there is no question of a conditional purchase or sale, taking place between the landlord and tenant. The title to the land, which was vested originally in the landlord, passes to the tenant on the tillers' day or the alternative period prescribed in that behalf. This title is defeasible only in the event of the tenant failing to appear or making a statement that he is not willing to purchase the land or committing default in payment of the price thereof as determined by the Tribunal. The tenant gets a vested interest in the land defeasible only in either of those cases and it cannot, therefore, be said that the title of landlord to the land is suspended for any period definite or indefinite".

16. The right of a tenant to be deemed to have purchased the land under Section 32 is also subject to Section 32-F. That section is as under:—

"32-F. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in the preceding sections—

(a) where the landlord is a minor, or a widow, or a person subject to any mental or physical disability the tenant shall have the right to purchase land under Section 32 within one year from the expiry of the period during which such landlord is entitled to terminate the tenancy under Section 31 and for enabling the tenant to exercise the right of purchase, the landlord shall send an intimation to the tenant of the fact that he has attained majority before the expiry of the period during which such landlord is entitled to terminate the tenancy under Section 31:

Provided that where a person of such category is a member of a joint family, the provisions of this sub-section shall not apply if at least one member of the joint family is outside the categories mentioned in this sub-section unless before the 31st day of March 1958 the share of such person in the joint family has been separated by metes and bounds and the Mamlatdar on inquiry is satisfied that the share of such person in the land is separated, having regard to the area, assessment, classification and value of the land, in the same proportion as the share of that person in the entire joint family property and not in a larger proportion;

(b) where the tenant is a minor, or a widow or a person subject to any mental or physical disability or a serving member of the armed forces, then subject to the provisions of Cl. (a) the right to purchase land under Sec. 32 may be exercised:—

(i) by the minor within one year from the date on which he attained majority;

(ii) by the successor-in-title of the widow within one year from the date on which her interest in the land ceases to exist;

(iii) within one year from the date on which the mental or physical disability of the tenant ceases to exist;

(iv) within one year from the date on which the tenant ceases to be a serving member of the armed forces:

Provided that where a person of such category is a member of a joint family, the provisions of this sub-section shall not apply if at least one member of the joint family is outside the categories mentioned in this sub-section unless before the 31st day of March 1958 the share of such person in the joint family has been separated by metes and bounds and the Mamlatdar on inquiry is satisfied that the share of such person in the land is separated having regard to the area, assessment, classification and value of the land, in the same proportion as the share of that person in the entire joint family property and not in a larger proportion.

(1A) A tenant desirous of exercising the right conferred on him under sub-section (1) shall give an intimation in that behalf to the landlord and the Tribunal in the prescribed manner within the period specified in that sub-section:

Provided that, if a tenant holding land from a landlord (who was a minor and has attained majority before the commencement of the Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Laws (Amendment) Act, 1969) has not given intimation as required by this sub-section but being in possession of the land on such commencement is desirous of exercising the right conferred upon him under sub-section (1), he may give such intimation within a period of two years from the commencement of that Act.

(2) The provisions of Ss. 32 to 32-E (both inclusive) and Ss. 32-G to 32-R (both inclusive) shall so far as may be applicable, apply to such purchase”.

17. In view of the rival contentions, question arises when are the provisions of this section attracted? Do they apply when either a landlord or a tenant or both of them are under disability or whether its provisions cannot be attracted unless at least a landlord is under disability, but a tenant may or may not be under such disability?

18. Sub-section (1) of this section starts with a non-obstante clause “Notwithstanding anything contained in the preceding sections”. After this non-obstante clause, follow two clauses, namely, clause (a) and clause (b). The non-obstante clause is common for both these clauses. In between these two clauses (a) and (b) there is neither a conjunction “and” nor “or”. The clauses are separated by a mere semicolon. The place where the non-obstante clause appears, shows that it goes with each of the clauses (a) and (b). Clause (a) deals with a case where the landlord is under disability, namely, where the landlord is a minor or a widow or a person subject to any mental or physical disability. In such a case, the tenant shall have the right to purchase such land within one year from the expiry of the period during which such landlord is entitled to terminate the tenancy under Section 31. Proviso to this clause makes a special provision when such a landlord is a member of a joint family. Under this proviso, where a person of such category is a member of a joint family, the provisions of this clause (a) shall not apply if at least one member of the joint family is outside the categories mentioned in the sub-section, unless before 31st day of March 1958 the share of such person in the joint family has been separated by metes and bounds in accordance with and subject to the terms of the proviso. This clause, therefore, specifies the period within which a tenant has to exercise his right to purchase the land under Section 32 when a landlord is under disability. The provisions thereof are complete by themselves.

19. Clause (b) of this sub-section prescribes the period within which a tenant under disability has to exercise his right to purchase land under Section 32. The right to purchase land under Section 32 under this clause has to be exercised by the minor within one year from the date on which he attains majority, by the successor-in-title of the widow within one year from the date on which her interest in the land ceases to exist, by a person subject to any mental or physical disability within one year from the date on which the mental or physical disability of the tenant ceases to exist and by a serving member of the armed forces within one year from the date on which the tenant ceases to be a serving member of the armed forces. This clause contains a proviso which is similar to the one under clause (a). Clause (b) is also complete by itself. There is nothing in the language of Cl. (b) to suggest that it is in the nature of a proviso to clause (a). It is an independent provision which can apply even when the tenant alone is under disability. It is not possible to take the view that its provisions will not be attracted unless a landlord is also under disability. Each of clauses (a) and (b) is complete by itself and can apply independently of each other. A case may, however, arise when both a landlord and a tenant are simultaneously under disability. In such a case, if the period during which the landlord's right to terminate the tenancy under Section 31 has expired before a tenant's right to purchase land may be exercised, right of the tenant to purchase land has to be exercised in accordance with the provisions of clause (b) within the time therein specified. If, however, the period during which such a landlord is entitled to terminate the tenancy under Section 31 has not expired when a tenant under such disability has become entitled to exercise his right of purchase under clause (b) the provisions of Cl. (a) will prevail over those of clause (b) because clause (b) inter alia contains the words "subject to the provisions of clause (a)".

20. Reliance was placed by Mr. Warke upon the marginal note of Section 32-F. It contains the words "right of tenant to purchase where landlord is minor, etc." A marginal note may sometimes be an aid to interpretation but the use of the word "etc." does not restrict the operation of Section 32-F only to a case where a landlord is under disability. On a plain reading of clauses (a) and (b) of sub-section (1), the provisions thereof will apply when either a landlord or a tenant is under disability or when both of them are under such disability.

21. In the order of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, which is challenged in Special Civil Application No. 2198 of 1966, the President of the Tribunal has observed that "the provisions of Section 32-F relate only to a case where a landlord is a disabled person. There certain procedure is provided for to enable the tenant to purchase the land. It is entirely wrong to contend that sub-section (1)(b) of S. 32-F of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948 should be read as an independent provision qualifying the provisions of S. 32-F and is not restricted to a case where the landlord himself is a disabled person falling under sub-section (1) of S. 32-F of the Act. Similar view has been taken by the Tribunal in Tenancy Appeal No. 1769 of 1964 decided on February 1, 1965, Banubai Naru Chaugule v. Manorama-bai Yeshwant, 13 Tenancy LR 133".

22. In Banubai's case relied upon by the Tribunal, the point that arose for decision was whether a tenant who is a widow is entitled to become a statutory purchaser. The Tribunal pointed out that in Section 32-F(1)(b) the Legislature has used the word "may" and that clearly showed that the right which the tenant got under S. 32 or sub-section (1) of S. 31 was not in any way affected. The provisions in clause (b) of S. 32-F(1) is an enabling provision and this is in accordance with the interpretation put by the High Court in regard to Section 31 of the Act. Later on the Tribunal observed that the provision contained in clause (b) of Section 32-F(1) is merely an enabling provision and it does not affect the right of a tenant who may be a minor or a widow, to exercise the right of purchase, which is given to it by Section 32 and also recognised by clause (a) of S. 32-F(1). This Tribunal has recently taken the above view in Ten. A. 904 of 1964 decided on 27-1-1965 in Yestwant Baram Owalekar v. Smt. S. H. Patil. Consequently the Tribunal took the view that a widow who is a tenant is entitled to purchase land.

23. It is clear from the above decision of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal in the case of 13 Tenancy LR 133 that there is no observation, much less a finding, to the effect that to attract the provisions of Section 32-F of the Act, the landlord must in any event be a disabled person. Nor is such a view taken in Ten. A. No. 904 of 1964. In that case, the only question that arose for consideration was whether a widow who is a tenant is entitled to purchase land under Section 32 or whether the right to purchase land in her case was only given to a successor-in-title. The view taken was that there was no reason why a widow when she was a tenant, was not entitled to purchase the land. It was said that if she chose to continue to be a tenant her successor would be entitled after her death to purchase land but that did not mean that she was not entitled to purchase the land under Section 32-F(1).

24. Our attention has not been invited to any other decision of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal where clearly the view taken is that the provisions of Section 32-F will be attracted only if a landlord is at least a person under disability. We are also unable to concur with the view taken by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal about the right of a widow as a tenant to purchase the land.

25. Section 32-F does create a right to purchase land in a tenant independently of the provisions of Section 32. It is explicit from the language of Cls. (a) and (b) of sub-section (1) that it provides for the period within which a tenant has to exercise his right to purchase conferred upon him by Section 32. Clause (a) inter alia states: "The tenant shall have the right to purchase such land under Section 32, ..." Clause (b) inter alia states "..... the right to purchase land under Section 32 may be exercised" In a case covered by Section 32-F there also results a statutory transfer of ownership in favour of a tenant, but such transfer of ownership is not automatic. Sub-section (1-A) of this section enjoins upon a tenant desirous of exercising the right conferred on him under sub-section (1) to give an intimation in that behalf to a landlord and the Tribunal in the prescribed manner within the period specified in that sub-section. A proviso has been added to this sub-section by the Maharashtra Act No. 49 of 1969, but it is unnecessary to refer to the same. This sub-section, therefore, prescribes the time within which and the manner in which a tenant desirous of exercising his right to purchase has to give an intimation. When such an intimation is given, he is deemed to have purchased the land because by sub-section (2) thereof, provisions of Sections 32 to 32-E (both inclusive) and Sections 32-G to 32-R (both inclusive) shall, so far as may be applicable, apply to such purchase. The words "such purchase" connote a purchase by a tenant who has given an intimation in respect of his desire to purchase land within the time specified and in the manner prescribed by this section.

26. Consequences of failure on the part of a tenant to give intimation of his desire to purchase land within the time specified or in the manner prescribed by Section 32-F are provided in Sec. 32-P. That section inter alia states that where a tenant fails to exercise the right to purchase the land held by him within the specified period under Section 32-F, the Tribunal may after holding a formal enquiry direct that the land shall be disposed of in the manner provided in sub-section (2). The cumulative effect of the provisions of Section 32-F read with those of Section 32-P is that in a case where a landlord or a tenant or both of them are under disability a tenant shall be deemed to be a purchaser of the land held by him as a tenant only if he gives an intimation of his desire to purchase land to the landlord and the Tribunal in the manner prescribed and within the time specified in Section 32-F.

27. Provisions of the Act which provide for automatic statutory transfer of ownership in favour of the tenant may be contrasted with those where the statutory transfer takes effect upon some act being done or intimation being given by the tenant. Section 32 and S. 33-C(1) of the Act provide for automatic statutory transfer of ownership in favour of the tenant. Under these sections respectively, a tenant and an excluded tenant shall be deemed to have purchased from landlord land held by him as tenant. Under Section 32 such a statutory purchase is generally effected on the tillers' day or on the postponed date. While under Section 33-C(1) it is effected on April 1, 1962. In these cases, the statutory purchase in favour of the tenant is automatic. It does not require any act to be done or any intimation to be given by the tenant. These provisions have to be contrasted with those of Section 32-F sub-sections (3) and (4) of S. 33-C and Section 43-1D. In each of these cases, a tenant has to give an intimation or a notice to the landlord and Tribunal as therein respectively provided. It is only on giving such an intimation or a notice within the time specified in the prescribed manner that a statutory purchase becomes effective in favour of the tenant.

28. Question then arises whether Section 32-F confers a right to purchase the land upon a tenant in addition to the right conferred by Section 32. Such a question has to be answered in the negative. When conditions laid down in Section 32-F exist, there is no automatic statutory purchase of land by a tenant under Section 32. Under Section 32 a tenant is deemed to have purchased from the landlord the land held by him as a tenant without giving him any intimation or doing any other act. Where a tenant is under disability if he is deemed to have purchased land under Section 32 on the tillers' day or on the postponed date, then a question of exercise of a right by a tenant to purchase land under Section 32-F cannot possibly arise. There is no question of exercising a right to purchase land by a tenant under Section 32-F, if he is already deemed to have purchased the land under Section 32. But in a case covered by Section 32-F, provisions of Section 32 apply only after an intimation is given as contemplated by Section 32-F(1A) and this is evident from the language of sub-section (2) of the said section.

29. The argument on behalf of the tenant then was that just as under Section 31 a landlord under disability has two opportunities to terminate the tenancy, so also a tenant under disability has two opportunities to exercise the right to purchase land held by him as a tenant—one under Section 32 and the other under Section 32-F. To support this contention emphasis was laid upon the use of the word "may" in Section 32-F(1)(b) which states "the right to purchase land under Section 32 may be exercised....." and upon the decision of this Court in Bai Jiviben's case, (1959) 61 Bom LR 1475. As pointed out earlier in Bai Jiviben's case, this Court has taken the view that under Section 31 of the Act, a widow can terminate the tenancy of a land and can apply for possession under Section 29. But the provisions of Sections 31 and 32 are not in pari materia. Even by analogy such a decision cannot be helpful in interpreting the provisions of Section 32 read with those of Section 32-F. Under Section 32(1) the right to purchase land is generally given to every tenant. But its provisions are made subject to the other provisions of the section and the provisions of the next succeeding sections. Section 32-F(1) which is one of the next succeeding sections starts with a non-obstante clause — "notwithstanding anything contained in the preceding sections." The effect of these two provisions therefore is that the right conferred upon a tenant under Section 32 is subject to the provisions of Section 32-F. The two sections do not confer independent rights or opportunities to purchase land upon a tenant. Section 32-F prescribes a special procedure for exercise of a right to purchase land conferred upon a tenant by Section 32 when either a landlord or a tenant or both of them are under disability. Such a tenant has only one right to purchase. He has to give an intimation under Section 32-F (1A) and then the provisions of Sections 32 to 32-E (both inclusive) and 32-G to 32-R (both inclusive) apply to such purchase. The mere use of the word "may" is insufficient to conclude that Section 32-F(1)(b) gives an additional right.

30. There are four classes of tenants under disability considered under Section 32-F(1)(b). These are a widow, a minor, a person subject to any mental or physical disability or a serving member of the armed forces. If by reason of the provisions of Section 32 such a tenant is deemed to have purchased the land, the question of exercising his right to purchase the land under Section 32-F can never arise. But Section 32-F prescribes procedure for exercise of right to purchase the land by tenant under Sec. 32.

It is therefore implicit that but for such exercise of right by a tenant under Section 32-F he is not deemed to be a purchaser under Section 32. In Bapu Dnyanu v. Sadashiv Ramchandra, (1969) 71 Bom LR 402 at pp. 407-408 while considering the scheme of Sections 32 and 32-F of the Act, this Court overlooked the fact that Section 32-F prescribes the manner in which and the time within which a right to purchase under Section 32 has to be exercised by a tenant when a landlord or a tenant or both of them are under disability, and that Section 32-F does not create any independent right to purchase land in a tenant apart from that conferred by Section 32.

31. In Special Civil Application No. 2198 of 1966, on the tillers' day the tenants of the land were a widow and two minor sons, but none of the sons is made a party to the proceedings. Counsel on behalf of the Petitioner and respondent No. 1 under the circumstances wanted the matter to be decided on the footing that a widow alone is a tenant and that this decision should not affect the right, if any, of any of the two sons. Such a case is governed by Section 32-F(1)(b) as the tenant is a widow. In view of the provisions of clause (b) the right to purchase under Section 32 can be exercised by the successor-in-title of the widow within one year from the date on which her interest in the land ceases to exist. In such a case, a tenant-widow cannot be deemed to have purchased the land under Section 32. Under the circumstances, Special Civil Application No. 2198 of 1966 is allowed, the rule is made absolute and the order passed by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, District Deputy Collector, Savantwadi and the Additional Mamlatdar and the Agricultural Lands Tribunal No. IV, Kudal, declaring respondent No. 1 to be a purchaser is set aside. The proceedings initiated by the Agricultural Lands Tribunal under Section 32-G of the Act for determining the purchase price payable by respondent No. 1 are quashed.

32. In Special Civil Application 1916 of 1965 widow Lahanubai (landlord) died in the year 1960. Her successor-in-title could have terminated the tenancy under Section 31 of the Act before the expiry of the period of one year from the date of her death. The period so prescribed for termination of tenancy by the successor-in-title cannot be extended merely because there existed a dispute as regards who is her successor-in-title. Under sub-section (1-A) read with Section 32-F(1)(a) it was obligatory upon Rangnath and Babu (sons of deceased tenant Ganu) to give intimation of their desire to purchase land to the landlord and the Tribunal within a period of one year from the expiry of the period during which the successor-in-title of widow Lahanubai could have terminated the tenancy under Section 31. Such an intimation they failed to give and they thus failed to exercise their right to purchase. The Agricultural Lands Tribunal, the Assistant Collector and the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal were, therefore, right in taking the view that the tenants failed to exercise their right to purchase and the land had to be disposed of in accordance with the provisions of Section 32-P of the Act. In the result, Special Civil Application No. 1916 of 1965 is dismissed and the rule is discharged.

33. In Special Civil Application No. 2137 of 1967 the tenant was under disability, being a minor on the tillers' day. The Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal was in error in taking the view that Section 32-F did not apply in this case and that under Section 32 the tenant, though a minor, had become the owner of the land and the price payable by him had to be determined. It was obligatory upon the tenant to give intimation as prescribed by Section 32-F (1-A). As the tenant had not given such an intimation within the time prescribed, he had failed to exercise his right to purchase the land held by him as a tenant. In the result, Special Civil Application No. 2137 of 1967 is allowed and the rule is made absolute. The order passed by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal is set aside. It is unnecessary in the present case to remand the matter to the Agricultural Lands Tribunal as directed by the District Deputy Collector, Chalisgaon, as the tenant has failed to exercise his right to purchase under Section 32-F and the land has to be disposed of in accordance with the provisions of Section 32-P as directed by the Agricultural Lands Tribunal.

34. In the circumstances of these cases, we order that each party will bear its costs of these Special Civil Applications.

Ordered accordingly.

AIR 1972 BOMBAY 217 (V 59 C 43)

DESHMUKH AND DESHPANDE, JJ.

Mohammad Akil Khan, Appellant v. Premraj Jawanmal Surana and another, Respondents.

A. F. O. D. No. 209 of 1969, D/- 27-9-1971 against order of M. R. Ektare, Civil J. Sr. Division at Aurangabad in Land Ref. Case No. 2 of 1966.

Land Acquisition Act (1894). Ss. 30, 3(b), 9(1), 23 — Contract for sale of land frustrated due to acquisition of the land by State — Nature of buyer's right in the land — Extent of buyer's claim in the compensation payable under the Act — (X-Ref:— T. P. Act (1882), S. 55(6)(b).

A contract for the sale of immovable property is a contract that a sale of such property shall take place on terms settled between the parties. It does not, of itself, create any interest in or charge on such property. When the seller and buyer are both willing to perform their respective parts of the contract but the specific performance of the contract has become impossible by the unexpected interference by the State in acquiring the property, the buyer will be entitled to recover from the seller any purchase money properly paid together with interest and also earnest with interest and to that extent he would have had under Section 55(6)(b) of T. P. Act a charge on the land. However, as the land is no more available to the parties as the State has acquired it and by deciding its compensation has converted the property into a sum certain, the buyer would be entitled to claim from the compensation amount, which represents the converted form of property, his purchase money and earnest together with interest. It is in this sense that the buyer whose contract is frustrated has a claim or share in the compensation which becomes payable to the owner of the property by reason of the acquisition thereof.

Section 3(b) does not require that a person for being interested, must have an interest in the compensation which has become payable on account of the acquisition of the land. Under the definition of Section 3(b) such buyer would be undoubtedly a person interested as he can claim the amount advanced by him together with interest from the land and in the absence of the land, from the money which represents the converted value of that land. When Section 9 calls upon all person to put in claims to compensation for all interests in such land, an interest of the type held by buyer is also intended to be covered. There need not be a transfer of immovable property in favour of a person before he could be described as a person entitled to claim for an interest in the land. The language of Section 9(1) of the Land Acquisition Act appears to be broad enough to include interest and claim for charge on land which would amount to an interest in the land for the purpose of S. 9(1).

However such buyer who has only contracted to purchase the property and whose contract is frustrated cannot claim any share in the solatium payable under sub-section (2) of S. 23. His interest is a limited interest as indicated by S. 55(6)(b) of the T. P. Act—to the extent of a definite amount, as what is acquired is the land and not the interest of such claimant separately as such. This right is a limited one to recover a sum certain and nothing beyond. This right which arises as a result of the compulsory acquisition cannot be considered to be an interest in the land which is acquired as such by the State. Fifteen per cent. solatium payable under sub-section (2) of Section 23 represents the payment for compulsory acquisition of land and as there is no compulsory acquisition of the interest of buyer at all he cannot resort to the provisions of sub-section (2) of S. 23 for claiming any additional amount. DESHMUKH, J.:—This appeal raises a question of some importance relating to the apportionment of compensation on compulsory acquisition of land between the intending vendor and the intending vendee whose contract has been frustrated by the act of acquisition by the State.

2. The facts of this litigation are not in dispute except for the amount which has flowed from the purchaser to the buyer. We will give appropriate direction in respect of that dispute in due course. The undisputed position is that claimant No. 1 Mohammad Akil Khan was the owner of S. No. 4 measuring 34 Acres 35 Gunthas situate at village Garkheda in Aurangabad. He executed an agreement of sale relating to 30 acres out of this land in favour of claimant No. 2 Premraj Jawanmal Surana, who is respondent No. 1 in the present appeal. Under this agreement of sale, Ex. 57, admittedly Rs. 10,000/- have been received by the vendor-claimant No. 1. Under the contract the price fixed was Rupees 4,000/- per acre totalling upto Rupees 1,20,000/- for the 30 acres agreed to be sold. The balance amount of Rs. 1,10,000/- was to be paid at the time of the execution of the sale-deed. It is the case of claimant No. 2 that he has advanced a further sum of Rs. 14,000/- from time to time towards the purchase price of the land. However, no dates are specified either in the claim before the Collector or in the claim statement before the Civil Court when reference under Section 30 of the Land Acquisition Act came to be made. As we have indicated above, specific directions will be given in due course regarding the alleged payment of Rs. 14,000/-. It is admitted that a third person named Gesudarey Khan had filed a Civil Suit against the vendor claimant No. 1 in respect of S. No. 4. The agreement, Ex. 57, recites that this was a suit without any substance whatsoever and was sure to be dismissed. An important term of the contract is that after the disposal of that Civil Suit the sale-deed was to be executed within four months. The agreement of sale also states that possession was temporarily being transferred to the purchaser-claimant No. 2 and at the time of the execution of the sale-deed he will have the final possession as the owner of the land.

3. While the Civil Suit filed by the third person was pending, both the parties, it appears, were willing to perform their respective part of the contract. However, Government notified S. No. 4 for acquisition for what is known as Jayakwadi Project by its notification under Section 4(1) of the Land Acquisition Act dated March 25, 1965. This was followed by another notification under Section 6 dated April 6, 1965. Urgency clause under Section 17 was applied and possession was taken by the State of Maharashtra on October 9, 1965. It may be noted that the Civil Suit filed by the third person came to be dismissed on November 3, 1965. In view of the terms of the agreement the sale-deed was executable on payment of the balance of the amount on or before March 3, 1966. However, even before the Civil Suit came to be dismissed and even before the third of four months contemplated by the parties for executing the sale-deed commenced, the State stepped in and acquired the land for a public purpose. All private ownership came to an end free from all encumbrances, if any, on the 9th of October 1965 when the State claimed and recovered possession under Section 17 of the Land Acquisition Act.

4. When this happened and when the Collector issued notice under Sec. 9 of the Land Acquisition Act requiring the parties to put in their claims to compensation for all interests in the land acquired. Claimant No. 1 appeared and put in his claim for the entire compensation. He claimed amount at the rate of Rs. 4,000/- per acre and further added that he had not lost his title at all, though a contract of sale was executed in favour of claimant No. 2. He was still the owner of the land and as such entitled to the entire compensation that may be determined by the Land Acquisition Officer. In the same proceedings, claimant No. 2 who had the contract of sale in his favour and which was frustrated due to the acquisition appeared and put in a claim to the entire compensation amount. According to him, not only there was a contract in his favour for the sale of the property acquired but he was put in possession thereof in part performance of the contract. He was ready and willing to perform his part of the contract. In the circumstances his possession was protected under Section 53-A of the Transfer of Property Act and the vendor could not displace him from the property. This right of possession together with the right to obtain the sale-deed should be considered as amounting to almost full title and as such the entire amount of compensation should be paid to him.

5. So far as the Inquiry under Section 9 of the Land Acquisition Act and the further making up of the award under Section 11 were concerned, the Land Acquisition Officer heard the parties and declared the true area of the land acquired and the total compensation which in his opinion was allowable for the land in terms of the provisions of Section 23. So far as the apportionment was concerned, as there was dispute between the claimants and the Land Acquisition Officer had no option but to refer the dispute to the court under Section 30 of the Act. He accordingly made a reference.

6. In the reference before the Civil Court, the two claimants who are now appellants and respondent No. 1 put in their claims in writing. They urged the same grounds which we have summarised above. Each one of them claimed the entire amount of compensation. It also appears that an application for reference under Section 18 was also made by claimant No. 1 before the Collector. We were told that the Collector rejected the application for reference under Section 18 made by claimant No. 1 on the ground that it was a belated application which was barred by limitation. We were also told that a revision application has been filed by claimant No. 1 in this Court against that order and that the matter is still pending. If at all that revision application succeeds and a reference under Section 18 is directed to be made to the Civil Court, the only result will be enhancement of compensation, if any. However, the apportionment of compensation under Section 30 is a distinct and different matter and need not wait till the disposal of the reference under Section 18. The principle which will be laid down in this application and the method of apportionment that would be proposed between the parties would govern not only the amount of compensation which is now awarded but also the additional amount, if any, which may be in due course awarded by the Civil Court.

7. The learned trial Judge after hearing the parties came to the conclusion that claimant No. 2 is 'a person interested' under Section 3(b) of the Land Acquisition Act and was entitled to make an application under Section 9 for compensation. The learned trial Judge further assumed, which we are told is an error, that claimant No. 2 had filed a suit for specific performance of the contract covered by Exh. 57 in the Civil Court at Aurangabad and that that suit was pending. On that assumption the learned trial Judge concluded that claimant No. 2 must be deemed to be as if an owner, if not an actual owner of the property. On that footing the entire amount of compensation is directed to be paid to claimant No. 2 alone. Being aggrieved by this order of apportionment passed by the trial Court, claimant No. 1 has filed this appeal.

8. The first point that was raised before us by Mr. Vaishnav on behalf of claimant No. 1 was that this was a case of contingent contract and would give no right whatsoever to claimant No. 2. He based his argument on the wording of the agreement, Ex. 57. He also argued that not only this was a contingent contract but possession was not delivered to claimant No. 2 in part performance of the contract. Since claimant No. 1 as vendor had obtained an amount of Rs. 10,000/- which would be locked up for quite some time in view of the pending litigation instituted by Gesudarey Khan, possession was delivered to cover the interest that claimant No. 2 might have otherwise earned on this amount. He, therefore, argued that this was not a completed contract where possession was delivered in part performance of the contract. We find no substance in both these points.

9. Having gone through the entire wording of the contract, Ex. 57, in its original we find that the contracting parties have first described the property that was agreed to be sold together with its boundaries. The price is then indicated as being Rs. 4,000/- per acre totalling upto Rs. 1,20,000/-. The pertinent wording relating to the contract is that the vendor having agreed to sell the property at Rs. 4,000/- per acre has received under this contract Rs. 10,000/- as earnest money. It then recites that after the frivolous litigation of Gasudarey Khan comes to an end the sale-deed will be executed and the balance amount will be paid before the Sub-Registrar. At that stage claimant No. 2 will be not only made owner of the property but will be placed in possession thereof as such. The further recital shows that an advance of Rs. 10,000/- has been made to claimant No. 1 by claimant No. 2 and that the amount was likely to be locked up for some time. In order that the purchaser may not be put to loss in pursuance of this contract, possession is being handed over to claimant No. 2 for the time being. These are all the relevant recitals so far as the questions raised before us are concerned. A plain reading of this contract does not indicate that the agreement itself depended upon the successful termination of the litigation started by Gasudarey Khan. A contract was made forthwith with all the terms being settled, but the execution of the document was postponed till the termination of that litigation. Simply because the time for performance of the contract is deferred, it does not make it a contingent contract. In the same manner even though the intention is to cover up the loss which may be occasioned to claimant No. 2 by payment of Rs. 10,000/- the recitals show that the possession was handed over in pursuance of this document Ex. 57. There is therefore no doubt that the description of the possession is a temporary possession or possession for the time being. The other recitals show that at the time of the execution of the contract, the possession was to be converted on the basis of full ownership. In a contract of sale, even though possession is delivered in part performance it does not become possession of an owner, as the contract by itself does not create any right in the land. We are, therefore, of the view that neither of the points raised by Mr. Vaishnav has any substance.

10. The next point argued before us is that if this is a complete contract and possession has been transferred to claimant No. 2 under this contract, then the rights of the parties should be determined, in view of the provisions of Section 53-A of the Transfer of Property Act. Possession of claimant No. 2 would be protected under the principles of part performance incorporated in Section 53-A of the Transfer of Property Act. Mr. Vaishnav added that this is a peculiar case when both the sides were willing to perform its part of the contract. Claimant No. 1 was willing to accept the price at the rate of Rs. 4,000/- per acre and deliver possession as well as execute a registered document in due course as provided by the agreement. They are now prevented by the intervention of the State which has acquired the entire property. If the claimant No. 1 was a willing seller and claimant No. 2 was a willing buyer, but their contract cannot proceed to the execution of the document for no fault of either of them, both of them must be made to share the effects of the acquisition by the State in proportion to their respective rights. What is argued is that the price privately fixed was Rs. 1,20,000/- and the compensation awarded by the Land Acquisition Officer is only Rs. 34,500/-. Out of the agreed price of Rs. 1,20,000/- only Rs. 10,000/- have been advanced by claimant No. 2 to claimant No. 1. This amount bears the proportion of 1/12th to the total price. That being so, the interest of the purchaser-claimant No. 2 would be 1/12th in the compensation amount and that of the vendor 11/12th. We are unable to appreciate the logic of this argument.

11. Provisions of Section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act provide that a mere contract of sale does not of itself create any interest in or charge on such property. What has happened between the parties is that a contract of sale was executed and Rs. 10,000/- were advanced as earnest under this contract. What is the effect of payment of earnest amount will be separately considered. However, mere execution of contract of sale does not of itself create any right, interest or charge in the property proposed to be demised. We cannot therefore treat claimants Nos. 1 and 2 as if they are sharers in losses and gains as if co-owners of the property. The ownership continued to vest in claimant No. 1 alone until all private rights were extinguished by the process of acquisition. That being so, the procedure suggested and the calculations made by Shri Vaishnav do not appear to be logical. We would therefore reject them.

12. Third alternate argument of Mr. Vaishnav was that the contract between the parties has now been frustrated and it has become impossible of performance by either side because of fortuitous circumstances of acquisition by the State. He therefore wishes to draw upon the principle incorporated in Section 65 of the Contract Act. According to him, the agreement is now discovered to be void or has now become void for no fault of either of the party. In the circumstances a person who has received any advance on agreement or contract is bound to restore or make compensation for it to the person from whom he received it. In this view, he says that claimant No. 2 may at best be paid Rs. 10,000/- which he has advanced and the rest of the compensation amount should be paid to claimant No. 1. The result which is proposed by Mr. Vaishnav is acceptable to us but it does not appear that the reasoning on which he has based his claim can be accepted.

13. The trial Court has assumed that claimant No. 2 has filed a suit for specific performance of the contract, viz. Ex. 57, itself. It is admitted before us that this was an erroneous assumption and no such suit has been filed by claimant No. 2. There is undoubtedly some other litigation between claimant No. 1 and claimant No. 2 but that does not relate to S. No. 4, which was the subject-matter of acquisition. On the assumption that claimant No. 2 being ready and willing to perform his part of the contract and further assumption that he has filed a suit for specific performance of the contract, which it is further assumed might result in a decree for specific performance of the contract, the trial Court has treated claimant No. 2 as entitled to recover the entire amount of compensation. Since this conclusion is based on erroneous assumption of facts it must at once be set aside.

14. The learned trial Judge has further relied upon a judgment of this Court in Dossibai Nanabhoy v. P. M. Bharucha, (1958) 60 Bom LR 1208. We are of the view that the reasoning in that report and the conclusions drawn by the learned Judges are of very limited assistance to us in deciding the disputed question before us. In that case claimant No. 2 had in his favour an agreement to lease of certain plots of land for a period of 99 years at a certain rent per annum with option to renew the lease for a further period of 99 years. There were two such contracts. Though the lease money varied the period for which the leases were contemplated were the same, viz. 99 years in the first instance with an option to renew for a further period of 99 years. Out of the two properties separately demised, one was further agreed to be leased by claimant No. 2 to claimant No. 3 for the purpose of co-operative housing. There were written agreements to lease. They were not registered nor any registered lease-deed executed. However, claimant No. 2 the lessee from the original owner was handed over possession in pursuance of the agreement to lease. Claimant Nos. 2 and 3 put in claims before the Collector along with the original owner lessor, who was claimant No. 1. One of the questions raised was that claimants Nos. 2 and 3 had no right to apply either under Section 9 of the Land Acquisition Act and had no further right to claim any share in the compensation. The learned Judges have examined several reported cases and have come to the conclusion that so far as the lease is concerned where it is accompanied by delivery of possession and the period for which the lease was to be executed was a very long period like 99 years with an option for further 99 years, the possession of the intending lessee must be treated as if it was a possession of the lessee. It is on that reasoning that the learned Judges accepted the right of claimants Nos. 2 and 3 to apply under Section 9 read with Section 3(b) of the Land Acquisition Act. The interest of claimants Nos. 2 and 3 was treated as interest in the land and apportionment was made on a certain basis. In the course of their discussion reference was made to judgment of the Punjab High Court in Chuttan Lal v. Mul Chand, AIR 1917 Lah 40. That was a case where an agreement to sell was executed but was not yet rescinded when acquisition took place. Mr. Justice Shadilal who delivered the judgment of the Bench of the Court observed that the expression 'person interested' has been defined in Section 3(b) of the Land Acquisition Act as including all persons claiming interest in compensation awarded on account of the acquisition of land under the Act and this definition in their opinion was wide enough to include the equitable interest that Mulchand claimed in that case. It may be pointed out that the judgment of the Punjab High Court was delivered where the Transfer of Property Act was not applicable. The learned trial Judge has been influenced by this judgment to hold that the case of an intending purchaser could be equated with the case of a person having a contract of lease for a long period in his favour which contract is accompanied by possession. We are of the view that it would not be possible to equate the rights and liabilities of a vendor and vendee under an agreement of sale with those of intending lessor and lessee, as their rights and liabilities are governed by different statutory provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. Where specific statutory provisions exist they must be given effect to when the rights and liabilities of the parties are to be determined. We would therefore prefer to consider the relevant provisions which govern the rights and liabilities of vendors and vendees when their contract is unable to reach fulfilment without there being any fault of either of them. We would also then examine the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act for the purpose of determining whether there is any specific provision to settle such rights of vendors and vendees when their contract has become impossible of performance due to a fortuitous circumstance like acquisition of land by the State.

15. We have hardly any doubt that it must be assumed in the present case that the vendor and the vendee, viz. claimant Nos. 1 and 2 were willing to perform their respective part. Before, however, occasion arose to proceed further with the agreement, the State notified the property for acquisition on March 25, 1965. Not only that but after completing all formalities the possession was obtained on October 9, 1965. This determines all the private rights and completes the vesting of the property in the State for a public purpose. We have already pointed out earlier that the Civil Suit which was then pending came to a successful termination on November 3, 1965, whereby the rights to execute the sale-deed was exercisable within four months thereafter upto March 3, 1966. All this became impossible because the private ownership of the land came to be terminated on October 10, 1965. Undoubtedly, therefore, the contract of sale has been frustrated as it became impossible of performance. We have already pointed out that a contract for the sale of immovable property is a contract that a sale of such property shall take place on terms settled between the parties. It does not, of itself, create any interest in or charge on such property. Claimant No. 2 had while making this contract of sale also advanced a sum of Rs. 10,000/- by way of earnest. When the contract became frustrated due to the acquisition by the State, a situation arose where the mutual rights of the parties must be determined and settled. In our view, to a situation like this the provisions of Section 55 and more particularly sub-section (6) Cl. (b) would be attracted. Claimant No. 2 is undoubtedly a buyer and the expression 'buyer' as used in sub-section (6) of Section 55 also includes a person who has agreed to buy. So far as the buyer is concerned, sub-section (6) conceives of both the positions where the ownership is transferred to a buyer and where the ownership is yet to be transferred to him. Sub-clause (a) deals with a situation where the ownership of the property is passed to a buyer. As soon as that happens that buyer is entitled to the benefit of any improvement in, or increase in value of the property, and to the rents and profits thereof. In other words, he is entitled to all the attributes of full ownership of the property. However, where the agreement is yet to culminate into transfer of ownership but where the buyer is willing to perform his part of the contract, his rights are indicated in sub-clause (b) of sub-section (6) of S. 55. The relevant sub-clause is as follows:—

"55 (6) (b): Unless he has improperly declined to accept delivery of the property, to a charge on the property, as against the seller and all persons claiming under him, to the extent of the seller's interest in the property, for the amount of any purchase-money properly paid by the buyer in anticipation of the delivery and for interest on such amount and, when he properly declines to accept the delivery, also for the earnest (if any) and for the costs (if any) awarded to him of a suit to compel specific performance of the contract or to obtain a decree for its rescission".

The clause quoted above, contemplated a case that a buyer shall not decline to accept delivery improperly. If he is willing to accept delivery of the property then he is entitled to charge on the property as against the seller and all persons claiming against him to the extent of seller's interest in the property for the amount of any purchase money properly paid by the buyer in anticipation of the delivery and for interest on such amount. Where, however, there is good ground why the buyer should deliver (decline?) to accept delivery, he is also entitled for the earnest (if any) and for the costs (if any) awarded to him of a suit compel

(sic) specific performance of the contract or to obtain a decree for its rescission. This statutory charge is created as soon as the buyer advances any part of the sale price or earnest to the seller. This charge is against the seller and all persons claiming under him to the extent of the interests of the seller in the property and also for the amount of purchase money properly paid. The property and the interest of the seller therein is in the nature of security for the purchase money properly paid, as also for the earnest amount. In the circumstances indicated in the above specific clause, the extent of the charge is not only confined to the purchase money properly paid and the earnest but also extends to the interest upon this amount. What is the nature of this charge and how will it operate when the subject-matter of the contract has been acquired by the State and is no more available for going ahead with the contract? It appears that when the seller and buyer are both willing to perform their respective parts of the contract but the specific performance of the contract has become impossible by the unexpected interference by the State in acquiring the property, the relative rights between the parties would continue to be the same as under the T. P. Act. In other words due to the impossibility of the performance of the contract, the buyer will be entitled to recover from the seller any purchase money properly paid together with interest and also earnest with interest and to that extent he would have had under the statutory provisions quoted above a charge on the land. However, the land or the property is no more available to the parties as the State has acquired it and by deciding its compensation has converted the property into a sum certain. The property is in a sense transformed into the sum certain and the rights of respective parties would continue to be the same, in respect of this sum or the amount of compensation, which they had or which they would have had against the property. In other words the buyer would be entitled to claim from the compensation amount, which represents the converted form of property, his purchase money and earnest together with interest. It is in this sense that the buyer whose contract is now frustrated appears to have a claim or share in the compensation which becomes payable to the owner of the property by reason of the acquisition thereof.

16. At this stage we may consider the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act for the purposes of finding out whether the buyer of this type, whose contract is frustrated, is in a position to make a claim before the Land Acquisition Officer. The first definition in this behalf that must be seen is that 'person interested' contained in Section 3 (b) of the Land Acquisition Act. According to this definition, 'person interested' includes all persons claiming an interest in compensation to be made on account of the acquisition of land under this Act, and it further provides that a person shall be deemed to be interested in land if he is interested in an easement affecting the land. In this inclusive definition a person interested includes a person claiming an interest in compensation. This claim to an interest in the compensation, must arise out of acquisition of the land. A plain reading of the wording of Section 3 (b) does not require that a person for being interested, must have an interest in the land which is acquired as such. It is enough that he has an interest in the compensation which has become payable on account of the acquisition of the land. In other words the occasion for claiming the interest in the compensation is the acquisition of the land. The claim or interest in compensation made is not necessarily dependent upon the interest in the land itself. Under Section 9 of the Land Acquisition Act, the Land Acquisition Officer or Collector has to issue notice that the Government intends to take possession of the land and that claims to compensation for all interests in such land may be made to him. A question arises for consideration as to whether a claimant like claimant No. 2 who is undoubtedly interested in the compensation payable for the acquisition of the land, could be described as a person having claim to compensation for any interest in the land. A charge extending to the recovery of the purchase money and earnest paid together with interest would not be described as an interest in the land in the sense of right in the immovable property. According to Section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, where immovable property of one person is by act of parties or operation of law made security for the payment of money to another and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, the latter person is said to have a charge on the property and all the provisions hereinbefore contained which apply to a simple mortgage shall, so far as may be, apply to such charge. The difference between a mortgage and a charge is that in a charge there is no transfer of an interest in the property but the creation of a right of payment out of the property is specified, and as such it cannot be enforced against a bona fide purchaser for value. A broad distinction between the two would be that whereas a charge only gives right to payment out of a particular fund or particular property without transferring that fund or property, a mortgage is in essence a transfer of an interest in specific immovable property. Even though therefore a buyer like claimant No. 2 may have charge for the recovery of certain amount, he would not be said to be a transferee of an interest in the immovable property. However, the intention of the Land Acquisition Act is to acquire property for a public purpose by extinguishing all private rights, by awarding compensation at the same time for all interests in the land, which are required to be reckoned with at the time of the acquisition. We have already pointed out that under the definition of Section 3 (b) a buyer like claimant No. 2 would be undoubtedly a person interested as he can claim the amount advanced by him together with interest from the land and in the absence of the land from the money, which represents the converted value of that land. When Section 9 calls upon all person to put in claims to compensation for all interests in such land, we are of the view that an interest of the present type held by claimant No. 2 is also intended to be covered. There need not be a transfer of immovable property in favour of a person before he could be described as a person entitled to claim for an interest in the land. The language of Section 9 (1) of the Land Acquisition Act appears to us to be broad enough to include interest and claim for charge on land which would amount to an interest in the land for the purpose of Section 9 (1). This being so claimant No. 2 had undoubtedly right to apply under the Land Acquisition Act to the Collector for apportionment of the compensation amount.

17. Once it is held that claimant No. 2 was entitled to apply and a dispute has arisen between the two rival claims, the Collector and the Land Acquisition Officer had no option but to refer that dispute to a Court under Section 30 of the Land Acquisition Act. Shri Paranjpe, appearing for claimant No. 2 made a claim only on the basis of Section 55 (6) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act. He, however, added that the amount for which his client makes claim is not only Rs. 10,000/- but the disputed payment of Rs. 14,000/- together with interest on both these amounts. He further argued that not only these two amounts together with interest must be paid to claimant No. 2 but he is also entitled to claim solatium at the rate of 15% on these two items of Rs. 10,000/- and Rs. 14,000/- under the provisions of sub-section (2) of Section 23. So far as the claim of Rs. 14,000/- is concerned, an issue was also framed in the trial Court. Unfortunately it was deleted and the parties were not permitted to lead evidence on the same. Shri Vaishnav attacked that claim on the ground that no dates of payment have been mentioned in the claim before the Collector as also in the claim petition before the Civil Court. Since no evidence has been permitted to be led it would not be possible to express any view on the disputed alleged payment. It will be enough to point out that in the claim petition put in by claimant No. 2 before the Civil Court he has alleged in para 2 that Rs. 10,000/- were advanced as earnest under the agreement dated 7-4-1964. Thereafter subsequently from time to time claimant No. 2 has paid an amount of Rs. 14,000/- towards the sale consideration of the property agreed to be purchased. Since this is the pleading of claimant No. 2 he must be permitted to prove whether he really advanced Rs. 14,000/- from time to time as pleaded towards the consideration of the property. Not only he will be entitled to this amount but from the date of payment of the various items which go to make Rs. 14,000/- he will be entitled to claim interest. To the extent of deciding that dispute whether Rs. 14,000/- were really advanced at all and whether they were towards the consideration of the property the matter will have to be remanded to the trial Court for disposal according to law in the light of the directions which we propose to give in this judgment. For the present we are disposing of this appeal on the footing that Rs. 10,000/- have been paid as earnest at the time of the execution of the agreement of sale.

18. Since we are taking the view that claim of claimant No. 2 is awardable to him under the provisions of Section 55 (6) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act, we would agree with Mr. Paranjpe that his client will be entitled to claim reasonable interest. We think that interest should be allowed at the rate of 6 per cent. We will also indicate a little ahead as to how we made calculations and what the trial Court need do, if it finds that Rs. 14,000/- or any portion thereof are found to have been advanced towards the purchase money. In this regard Shri Vaishnav also argued that it should be open to his client to press all points of fact as well as law against the alleged payment before the trial Court. For instance, he argues, that the notification under Section 4(1) was issued on March 25, 1965. From that date onwards the performance of the contract became impossible. Claimant No. 2 has not given any dates in his pleadings as to when he advanced Rs. 14,000/- or the various items which go to make up Rs. 14,000/- Shri Vaishnav argued that as soon as notification under Section 4(1) was published, it became known to the parties that the contract was impossible of performance. If any advances are made by claimant No. 2 to claimant No. 1 after that date it would be for the Court to see whether it could be purchase money and if so whether it was properly paid by the buyer as contemplated by S. 55(6)(b). He suggested that this is one of the points which claimant No. 1 would be taking up and if advised he might resist the claim on such other grounds as are available in fact and in law. So far as the claim for Rs. 14,000/- is concerned, nothing at all is yet decided and the entire matter is at large for being decided by the trial Court. It would be open to both the sides to lead further evidence to prove and disprove the payment as also to urge all points of law in support of or against the claim. It is for the trial Court to find out whether Rs. 14,000/- or any part thereof are really advanced to claimant No. 1 by claimant No. 2 towards the purchase price. Since that issue was not dealt at all by the trial Court and all the grounds that both the sides may be inclined to urge before the trial Court are at large, it is permissible for both of them to plead them before that Court.

19. However, as indicated earlier we are disposing of this appeal on the footing that the admitted amount which is paid by claimant No. 2 to claimant No. 1 is Rs. 10,000/-. The calculation which we have made and the final order which we have passed would obviously be subject to such variations as become necessary by the findings, which the trial Court might give in respect of the additional claim of Rs. 14,000/- for which the matter is being specifically remanded. The calculations which we have made would in that sense be provisional but if no further amount is found by the trial court as due to claimant No. 2 then the calculations would be final and would represent the apportionment of the total compensation.

20. The above discussion leads to the conclusion that because of the frustration of the contract by unforeseen event of acquisition by the State, claimant No. 2 has acquired a right to enforce his charge to the extent of Rs. 10,000/- and interest thereof under Section 55(6) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act. Can he add to this charge the solatium of 15 per cent, which is awarded under sub-section (2) of S. 23 of the Land Acquisition Act? Shri Paranjpe argued that in the view which we have taken of the provisions of Section 3(b), claimant No. 2 is a person who is now interested in the land and that interest has been acquired by the State at the time of the acquisition of the land S. No. 4. The definition of 'land' in clause (a) of Section 3 is again inclusive and is therefore a broad definition. The expression 'land' includes benefits to arise out of land, and things attached to the earth or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth. This being an inclusive definition Shri Paranjpe argued that the expression 'land' would also include an interest in the land. When Government acquired land it acquired all interests and such interests must be valued in terms of the provisions of Section 23(2). With this premise he wanted us to read the provisions of Section 23. Sub-section (1) thereof indicates that while awarding the amount of compensation for the land acquired, the Court is required to take into consideration clauses first to sixth which fall thereafter. Clauses secondly to sixthly are not relevant for the present purpose. The first clause says that the Court shall take into consideration the market value of the land at the date of the publication of the notification under Section 4, sub-section (1). Shri Paranjpe therefore argued that the market value of the interest of claimant No. 2 in the land, with reference to the expression 'land' within the meaning of that expression contained in clause 3(a) would be that value which the Land Acquisition Officer has fixed for the land or which the Court might ultimately fix for the land. Sub-section (2) thereof says that in addition to the market value of the land, as above provided, the Court shall in every case award a sum of fifteen per centum of such market value in consideration of the compulsory nature of the acquisition. This payment which is known as solatium is made because of the compulsory nature of the acquisition. It is not the market value or the value which is otherwise payable for the damages under the various clauses firstly to sixthly of Section 23. Under Section 6(1) an unwilling person is made to part with his land and therefore an additional payment of 15 per cent. is given to him. This, according to Mr. Paranjpe must also be made available to claimant No. 2 whose interest in the land has been compulsorily acquired.

21. We are unable to agree with this reason as it contains an obvious fallacy. What is acquired is land or property which has been described by the inclusive definition of land in clause (a) of Section 3. What is payable under the Act is compensation for the compulsory acquisition. Now, compensation is not merely confined to market value. Shri Paranjpe seems to assume that compensation is market value besides which 15 per cent. is an additional payment. Section 23 as a whole deals with matters which must be considered by the Court in determining the compensation payable. While awarding compensation, the first items that must be taken into consideration is the market value of the land. While the land is being acquired with the standing crop, damages are to be paid for that purpose which are included in clause secondly of Section 23(1). If the acquisition results in severing the land from other portion and that results in damages, they must be made good. In this manner each of the clauses of sub-section (1) of S. 23 deals with a separate item which has to be valued and added up together. To this amount be added an amount of 15 per cent. over the market value. When a sum total of all these items is made, the ultimate sum represents the compensation payable for the compulsory acquisition of the land. It is this amount which is now payable for the land. To whom to pay, and how much to pay each, is a matter of apportionment or distribution. In drawing support to this argument Shri Paranjpe referred us to the provisions of Sec. 11, which relate to the inquiry to be made by the Land Acquisition Officer and the award to be ultimately passed. He points out that the award must contain three items: (i) the true area of land, (ii) the compensation which in the opinion of the Land Acquisition Officer should be allowed for the land; and (iii) the apportionment of the compensation among all the persons known or believed to be interested in the land, or whom, or of whose claim, he has information, whether or not they have respectively appeared before him. Mr. Paranjpe therefore submits that claimant No. 2 is having interest in the land and as such a person to whom the compensation must be apportioned by the Collector under Section 11 while making the award.

22. Here again we do not think that the reference to Section 11 can be of any assistance. The Collector is not in a position to make an award relating to the apportionment since there is a dispute. The third item under Section 11 is payable only when clause falls in Section 29 contained in Part IV of the Land Acquisition Act. Section 29 says that where there are several persons interested, if such persons agree in the apportionment of the compensation, the particulars of such apportionment shall be specified in the award and as between such persons the award shall be conclusive evidence of the correctness of the apportionment. Clause (iii) of Section 11 can come into operation only when there is an agreement between the parties who claim apportionment and to the extent there is an agreement the Collector can record the apportionment. Section 30 says that when the amount of compensation has been settled under Section 11, if any dispute arises as to the apportionment of same or any part thereof, or as to the persons to whom the same or any part thereof is payable, the Collector may refer such dispute to the decision of the Court. Since dispute is raised by the claimants regarding apportionment there is no power in the Collector to decide the dispute but he has to refer it to the decision of the Court. In the present case where there were only two claimants and the apportionment was a matter of dispute there could be no pronouncement under item (iii) of Section 11 in the award, but having made his declaration under items (i) and (ii) the Land Acquisition Officer has no option but to refer the dispute to the Court. That is what he has done.

23. When the matter is referred to the Civil Court under Section 30, it is important to note that the Land Acquisition Act has not made any provision for the purpose of apportionment or distribution of the compensation. The Act provides for the persons interested in the land or persons interested in the compensation payable for the land to apply for both the purposes, viz. for the purpose of claiming an enhanced compensation for the land acquired, as also for the purpose of claiming apportionment. The dispute relating to the adequate payment of compensation is referable to the Civil Court under Section 18, but that dispute is referred after the Land Acquisition Officer makes his award with respect to the final amount as regards compensation. Further enhancement of the compensation is a matter of inquiry by the Civil Court under a reference under S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act. That claim is to be decided in terms of S. 23 of the Act. So far as Section 30 is concerned, the Collector or the Land Acquisition Officer has no right to entertain the dispute or to decide it but has only a right to refer the dispute to a Civil Court.

24. A Division Bench of this Court in the case of (1958) 60 Bom LR 1208 had an occasion to consider the implication of Section 30 and the rights of the Civil Court to decide the dispute relating to apportionment. The learned Judge observed as follows.—

"Section 30 of the Land Acquisition Act merely provides that the Collector may make a reference to the District Court on a dispute as to the apportionment of the amount of compensation or any part thereof or as to the persons to whom the same or any part thereof is payable. But the Legislature has not laid down the principles by reference to which the dispute relating to apportionment has to be decided. The reason is obvious. When a dispute relating to apportionment arises, the Court is trying a dispute as to the civil rights between the parties relating to their interest in the money into which the land is transformed."

We are in respectful agreement with these observations. Having permitted those persons to apply who had interest in the compensation or who had claim to the compensation or who had also interest in the land, the enquiry, as we had stated earlier, takes two different directions. One is the fixation of the compensation payable and the other is dispute relating to apportionment which is referred to the Court under Section 30. Since it has been so received in the Civil Court it becomes a matter to decide the civil rights of the parties and to make valuation in terms of money, of those civil rights which the parties have. There the rights of the parties are like those of two brothers who have equal motties in the land itself, it would be easy for the Civil Court to pronounce that in the total compensation payable including solatium, the interest of each one will be half. However, apart from the simple case of this kind, there are various civil interests which are required to be valued when the dispute between the claimants is to be resolved. For instance there may be an attaching creditor who had attached the land of his debtor for the purpose of recovering the decretal dues. If before he succeeds in enforcing his decree against the property attached, the land is acquired by the State, what would happen? He would undoubtedly have a claim towards the compensation which would be awarded, as the compensation would represent the converted pool of money of the land itself. The interest of such an attaching creditor could never exceed the decretal amount. Thus his interest will have to be independently valued and a fixed compensation to the extent of his decree would be payable to such a claimant. He would not be a general sharer in the general compensation in terms of certain percentage or proportion. In the same way if there is a mortgagee who has his mortgage debt against the property and the property comes to be acquired, what would happen to the mortgaged amount? Sub-section (2) of S. 73 of the Transfer of Property Act provides that where the immovable property, which was mortgaged, has been compulsorily acquired, the mortgagee shall be entitled to claim payment of the mortgage-money, in whole or in part, out of the amount due to the mortgagor as compensation. The mortgage under the Transfer of Property Act is a transfer of an interest in the property. However, the Legislature being aware of the nature of this interest has provided for the payment of only that amount to the mortgagee which would be due under his mortgage. In other words, if the total compensation paid is much more than the mortgage amount as found due it will not be permissible for the mortgagee to say that his interest in the land was compulsorily acquired and as such he should be paid solatium of 15 per cent. under sub-section (2) of S. 23. If that is so, even when the interest was in the nature of transfer of property, or transfer of interest in the land itself, we fail to understand how a claimant like claimant No. 2, who had only contracted to purchase the property and whose contract is now frustrated can claim any share in the solatium payable under sub-section (2) of Section 23. His interest, which is now a limited interest as indicated by Section 66 (55?) (6) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act is a definite amount as described in that clause. Purchase money properly paid with interest and earnest, if any, together with interest would be the only amount which he can claim and to the extent of this amount he would have a charge on the property. He has therefore a limited interest to the extent of a definite amount, as what was acquired was the land and not the interest of this claimant separately as such. In fact if the acquisition was not there, the only right available to claimant No. 2 was to obtain a sale-deed by paying the full consideration under the agreement of sale. He could not have independently exercised the right to enforce the charge under Section 55 (6) (b). Since that right of claiming sale-deed is not available to him because of the compulsory acquisition by the State, he is required to fall back upon the alternate right available to him to enforce the charge under S. 55 (6) (b). This was a dormant right which became available to him because of the compulsory acquisition. Though therefore such a right continues to be a charge on the amount of compensation payable representing the land, it must always be remembered that this right is a limited one to recover a sum certain and nothing beyond. This right which arises as a result of the compulsory acquisition could not be considered to be an interest in the land which was acquired as such by the State. Fifteen per cent solatium payable under sub-section (2) of S. 23 represents the payment for compulsory acquisition of land and as we have indicated above, there was no compulsory acquisition of the interest of this claimant at all, he could not resort to the provisions of sub-section (2) of S. 23 for claiming any additional amount.

25. We are therefore of the view that what claimant No. 2 will claim is only Rs. 10,000/-, the earnest money claimed under the agreement of sale, Ex. 57. We are inclined to allow 6 per cent. interest as reasonable. However, in this case, certain developments have taken place with regard to the payment of compensation, which was deposited by the Collector in the Court and cognizance must be taken of these facts. It is also necessary to remember that possession was handed over to claimant No. 2 under agreement, Exh. 57, in view of a loss which he may sustain for the advance of Rs. 10,000/-. So long as, therefore, claimant No. 2 was in possession he could not claim any compensation by way of interest on the advance of Rs. 10,000/-. He was deprived of the possession on the 9th of October 1965. The Land Acquisition Officer deposited the amount of Rs. 34,500/- which represented the compensation in respect of the 30 Acres of the land acquired and also referred the dispute under Section 30 of the Court. The money was lying in the Court till 17-2-1969 on which date it came to be paid to claimant No. 2. From 9-10-1965 or 10-10-1965 to 17-2-1969 claimant No. 1 was liable to pay claimant No. 2 6 per cent interest on Rs. 10,000/-. It may be borne in mind that in view of this judgment the claimant No. 2 was not entitled to keep anything more than Rs. 10,000/- with him. The payment of Rs. 24,500/- was an excess payment to him on that date. However, he was directed by the appellate Court to repay the amount in Court and he paid Rs. 10,000/- on 10-10-1969 and Rs. 24,500/- on 25-10-1969. During this period, claimant No. 1 was entitled to recover 6 per cent. interest from claimant No. 2 on Rs. 24,500/- upto 10-10-1969 and on Rs. 14,500/- upto 25-10-1969. Since we have held that Rs. 10,000/- were legitimately due to claimant No. 2 he could have retained that amount during the entire period and he need not pay interest to claimant No. 1 for that amount. It then appears that the entire amount of Rs. 34,500/- was repaid to claimant No. 2 on 3rd June 1970. Before this payment for the intervening period from 25-10-1969 to 3rd June 1970 he was entitled to recover interest on Rs. 10,000/- at 6 per cent. Thereafter claimant No. 2 deposited Rs. 10,000/- in Court on 1-6-1971 and Rs. 14,500/- on 1-8-1971. So far as this period is concerned, from 3rd June 1970 to 1st June 1971 claimant No. 2 will have to pay interest at 6 per cent on Rupees 24,500/ and for the remaining period upto 1-8-1971 on 14,500/-. Having made an account of interest which are respectively payable by one party to the other it has been found by the learned Advocates on both the sides that claimant No. 2, has to pay Rs. 325.50 to claimant No. 1. On the compensation that there is no further payment it would appear that out of the total compensation of Rupees 34,500/-, Rs. 9,675/- are payable to claimant No. 2, this is because he is entitled to Rs. 10,000/- and interest thereof but for the intervening period described above, he becomes liable to interest amounting to Rs. 325.50 to claimant No. 1.

In this manner his claim of Rs. 10,000/- is reduced by Rs. 325/- and the claim now works out at Rs. 9,675/-. He has already retained with him Rs. 10,000/- and he will have to pay back Rs. 325/- to claimant No. 1. The balance of amount of Rs. 24,500/- is lying in the Court. In addition he is entitled to recover Rupees 325/- from claimant No. 2 by execution of this order.

26. At this stage we may point out that the dispute cannot be finally disposed of because the claimant No. 2 has alleged further payment of Rupees 14,000/- towards the purchase money. This claim having been disputed, as we have pointed out earlier, the matter will go back to the trial Court for finding out whether claimant No. 2 proves the payment of Rs. 14,000/- or any part thereof to claimant No. 1 towards the purchase price of the acquired land S. No. 4. We have already indicated that the parties are at liberty to lead further evidence and take up all defences to which they are entitled to in law and fact. After hearing the parties in this manner, if the trial Court comes to the conclusion that some amount or the entire amount is not only paid towards the purchase price but is recoverable in view of the legal position under Sec. 55 (6) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act, he will award that much amount together with interest at 6 per cent from the date of payment to claimant No. 2 from claimant No. 1 and that would be a claim against the compensation amount. In the meanwhile we give liberty to claimant No. 1 to withdraw the amount of Rs. 24,500/- from the Court on furnishing security to the satisfaction of the trial Court.

27. So far as the costs are concerned, we are inclined to award costs to the parties in proportion to their success in both the Courts. However, the claim of Rs. 14,000/- is yet to be decided on merits. After it is so decided by the trial Court, it will award proportionate costs to either side depending upon their success in this litigation.

28. Since the acquisition proceedings are fairly old we direct that the learned trial Judge will dispose of the matter as early as possible and it will be appreciated, if he could dispose of the same within two months, after receipt of record.

29. There will be no order as to costs for the State throughout.

Order accordingly.

H. G. Vaishnav with A. H. Vaishnav, for Appellant; B. N. Deshmukh, for Opponent.

ORDER:— There is no substance in this revisional application on behalf of the original plaintiff from the order dated September 8, 1969, made by the trial Court, whereby findings were made in favour of the plaintiff on issues 1, 2 and 6 and directions were given that the trial of the issues 4 and 5 should be proceeded with after the decision of the Rent Controller in the application made by the original defendant for fixation of reasonable and/or standard rent.

2. Prior to the present suit No. 127 of 1968, the plaintiff had instituted a previous Suit No. 258 of 1967. That suit was for recovery of rent at the rate of Rs. 125/- per month for a period of one year from November 13, 1966, to November 12, 1967. In that suit the defendant made three contentions as follows:—

3. Prior to the lease in suit, an agreement was made between the parties that the plaintiff would construct two rooms and a latrine and a bath room and the rent of Rs. 125/- was agreed on the promise made by the plaintiff to make the above further constructions. The parties had agreed that in default of the plaintiff making the further constructions the rent was to be Rs. 50/- per month. The third contention was that until the question of reasonable and/or standard rent was decided by the Rent Controller the further hearing of the suit for rent should be stayed. Issues were framed on the above contentions made by the defendant. These issues were answered against him and decree as prayed in the previous suit was passed. The plaintiff thereafter filed the present suit No. 127 of 1968 for recovering rent of 7 months at the rate of Rs. 125/- per month. The defendant made selfsame and/or similar contentions by his written statement in the present suit. The plaintiff by his application Ex. 17 submitted that additional issue be framed as follows:—

"Whether the defendant is barred by principles of res judicata to raise the contentions decided in the previous suit?"

The plaintiff further applied that a finding be made on the above additional issue in his favour and accordingly without recording any further evidence a decree as prayed be passed in the present suit. The learned Judge below by the above order dated September 8, 1969, held that the questions of merits raised by the defendant had been adjudicated upon in the previous suit and were res judicata. He, then referred to the plaintiff's application before the Rent Controller for fixation of standard and/or reasonable rent. He held that the decision of Court in the previous suit that the hearing should not be stayed till the Rent Controller decided the defendant's application was not res judicata. That decision was not disposal of any question on merits. He, therefore, held that the suit should be stayed till the disposal by the Rent Controller of the defendant's application for fixation of the standard and/or reasonable rent. He accordingly held that issues 4 and 5, viz. "(4) Whether the plaintiff is entitled to the relief claimed?" and "(5) What decree and order?", should be decided after the Rent Controller disposed of the defendant's application for fixation of standard rent.

4. Mr. Vaishnav for the plaintiff contends that the learned Judge below was wrong in holding that the issue whether the suit should be stayed till the Rent Controller decided and fixed the monthly rent was not barred by principles of res judicata. It is extremely difficult to understand this argument of Mr. Vaishnav. The question of stay and/or adjournment of a suit for certain purpose must be altogether different in two suits. It is quite clear that refusal to adjourn a previous suit can never be res judicata in connection with an application for adjournment of another suit, though the application may be based on same and/or similar grounds. This contention made by Mr. Vaishnav appears to be frivolous. The revisional application itself is accordingly entirely frivolous. The learned Judge below was right in adjourning the suit till the Rent Controller had disposed of the question of reasonable rent.

5. It requires to be recorded that the question of res judicata that may be raised on behalf of any party in a suit should not ordinarily be disposed of as a preliminary issue as has been done in the present case. This question should normally be tried and disposed of at the final hearing of the suit; when all the issues can be adjudicated upon by Court at the same continuous hearing. The learned Judge below has not borne this principle in mind when he disposed of three issues as preliminary issues and adjourned the trial of two issues for decision on merits.

6. The rule is discharged with costs.

Rule discharged.

The Charity Commissioner, Maharashtra State, Bombay, Appellant v. Hirjibhoy Mancherji Kavarana and others, Respondents.

A. F. O. D. No. 290 of 1967, D/- 25-3-1971, against order of A. T. Zambre, J., City Civil Court, Bombay, D/- 17-12-1965.

Bombay Public Trusts Act (29 of 1950), Section 50-A — Power of Charity Commissioner to frame a scheme includes power to appoint trustees — (X-Ref:— Section 50).

The provisions in Section 50-A are notwithstanding anything contained in Section 50 which means an alternative independent power of framing of the Scheme has been created in favour of the Charity Commissioner and this power must be parallel and similar in all respects to the power of the Court to frame a scheme under Section 50. Hence the power of the Charity Commissioner to frame a scheme for the management or administration of a trust must include power altogether to amend and nullify the previously existing scheme of appointment, removal etc. of the trustees. The power must be sufficiently large to enact that persons in management of the trust as at the date of framing of the scheme will not continue in management and cease to be managers/or trustees. S. N. Naik i/b M/s. Little & Co., for Appellant; Y. S. Chitale with S. P. Bharucha i/b M/s. Gagrut and Co. (for No. 1) and V. H. Ghanekar (for Nos. 2 and 3), for Respondents.

JUDGMENT:— This is an appeal on behalf of the Charity Commissioner against the order dated December 17, 1965, made by Mr. Judge Zambre directing that clauses 7 and 8 of the scheme framed by the Charity Commissioner be dropped and consequential modifications be made in the scheme.

2. Mr. Naik for the Charity Commissioner has submitted that the finding made by the learned Judge that having regard to the scheme in Sections 47 and 47-AA the power vested in the Charity Commissioner under Section 50-A of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950, to frame a scheme does not include power to appoint trustees, is contrary to the intent of the provisions in Section 50-A and not sustainable. The observation of the learned Judge that a scheme framed in respect of a public trust under Section 50-A by the Charity Commissioner would be a set of rules for guidance of the trustees and may provide for number of the trustees and the mode of appointment of trustees and vesting of the trust properties in trustees so appointed and such similar matters but does not empower the Charity Commissioner to appoint trustees of the scheme is not warranted and is contrary to the scheme of the Act.

3. Mr. Chitale for the respondent 1 has with some emphasis submitted that the learned Judge's findings are based on the scheme of the Act and the provisions in the above Sections 47 and 47-AA and the findings made by the learned Judge should accordingly be confirmed. (Mr. Chitale further attempted to argue that in so far as the learned Judge confirmed the scheme framed by the Charity Commissioner, the findings of the learned Judge were not correct. In his submission, the facts of the case did not disclose any necessity or expediency of framing of a scheme. The framing of the scheme was not in the interest of the trust in question and the learned Judge should have accordingly set aside the scheme framed by the Charity Commissioner. Now, this second and/or the last contention must be negated on the simple ground that an appeal has not been filed on behalf of the 1st respondent against the findings made by the learned Judge that the scheme has been properly framed by the Charity Commissioner and he had jurisdiction to frame the same. The second contention accordingly is negated).

4. As regards the rival contentions made on behalf of the parties on the question of the power of the Charity Commissioner to appoint trustees in the scheme framed by him, the following requires to be noticed:—

5. Under clause (11) of Section 60, being the section relating to duties, functions and powers of the Charity Commissioner, it is specifically provided that the Charity Commissioner has the power to frame or modify scheme under Section 50-A. This Section 50-A and the above clause (11) and Section 47-A have been added to the original Act by amendments made by Bombay Act VI of 1960. Section 50 has reproduced the scheme of Section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure with certain nominal alterations and inter alia provides for the relief of settlement variations and/or alterations in a scheme and inter alia, for removal of a trustee, appointment of a new trustee, vesting of property in a trustee and certain other reliefs could also be claimed. By the amended Section 50-A inserted in the Act in 1960, it was provided as follows:—

"50-A (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in Section 50, where the Charity Commissioner has reason to believe that, in the interest of the proper management or administration of a public trust, a scheme should be settled for it, x x x x x, the Charity Commissioner may, if, x x x x, he is satisfied that it is necessary or expedient so to do, frame a scheme for the management or administration of such public trust x x x x x x x x". The sub-section (4) provided that the scheme framed shall, subject to the decision of the competent Court under Section 72, have effect as a scheme settled or altered, as the case may be, under a decree of a Court under Section 50. As is stated in the opening part of the Section 50-A, the provisions in this section are notwithstanding anything contained in Section 50. In other words, alternative independent power of framing of the scheme has been created in favour of the Charity Commissioner. This power, prima facie, must be parallel and similar in all respects to the power of the Court to frame a scheme in a suit instituted under Section 50.

Now, apart from the contents of the sections on which reliance has been placed by Mr. Chitale and which will require to be discussed, it first requires to be stated that the power vested in Court to frame and settle and vary and modify schemes which has continuously existed under Section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure from the date of its enactment and which otherwise existed by reason of the High Courts being guardians of charity is known to include the incidental power to make provisions for appointment etc. of trustees and for appointing trustees of the scheme itself. This power has been continued in the Courts under Section 50 of the Act and has been, by the Section 50-A added in 1960, vested in and/or delegated to the Charity Commissioner. It would be surprising, therefore, to come to the conclusion that the Legislature whilst delegating under Section 50-A power of Courts to the Charity Commissioner had not intended that he should have power to make initial appointment of the trustees of the scheme framed by him. The language of Section 50-A itself provides that the Charity Commissioner should proceed to frame a scheme under that section after giving an opportunity to be heard to the trustees of the trust concerned. It is patent that the power to frame a scheme for the management or administration of a trust must include power altogether to amend and nullify the previously existing scheme of appointment, removal etc. of the trustees. The power must be sufficiently large to enact that the persons in management of the trust as at the date of the framing of the scheme will not continue in the management and cease to be managers and/or trustees. This wider construction is, however, not necessary for the purposes of the present case, because the Charity Commissioner has not sought to remove the respondent No. 1 from continuing in the office of trustee of the trust in question. Now, it is difficult to appreciate the learned Judge's finding that the power to frame scheme is only power to frame a set of rules for the guidance of the trustees and regarding the management and trust pertaining to its actual working. By the clauses 7 and 8 of the scheme (which have been struck down) provision was made for appointment of the first trustees of the trust framed under the scheme and it was further provided that a trustee appointed under the scheme shall be a major male Parsi ordinarily residing in the State of Maharashtra. The relevant part of clause 7 provided as follows:—

"7 (a) The following persons shall be the first trustees of the said trust under the scheme.

Shri Hirjibhoy M. Kavarana and two others to be appointed by the Charity Commissioner out of the panel of x x x x. If no panels are submitted within 3 months, then the Charity Commissioner may appoint the remaining 2 trustees suo motu. Shri Hirjibhoy M. Kavarana will be in management for life and shall receive Rs. 1,500/- per year as remuneration x x x." The learned Judge was of the view that the power to frame a scheme did not include even power to appoint initial trustees of a scheme and for that simple reason, he struck off both the clauses 7 and 8 as invalid.

6. The Section 47 provides that any person interested in a public trust or the Charity Commissioner may apply to the Court for the appointment of a new trustee in the circumstances mentioned in clauses (a) to (h) of sub-section (1). The sub-section (2) provides:—

"(2) No such application shall be entertained. — (a) unless the trustee who on account of any of the reasons mentioned in clauses (a) to (h) of sub-section (1) is not fit or available to administer the trust is the sole trustee or unless by the vacation of office by one or more trustees on account of any of the said reasons the minimum number of trustees required by the instrument, scheme, order or decree of the Court or usage or custom of the trust for the administration of the trust is reduced;" Mr. Chitale argued that under Sec. 47 even Court is not empowered to appoint a new trustee thereby meaning additional trustee on the grounds mentioned in clauses (a) to (h) of sub-section (1) of Section 47, unless the minimum number of trustees fixed by the relevant instrument, scheme, etc., is reached or is not available for administration of the trust. He, therefore, submits that the power of framing scheme conferred under Section 50-A was not larger than the power conferred on the Court under Section 47. New and additional trustees cannot, therefore, be appointed by the Charity Commissioner when he frames scheme under Section 50-A. Now, this argument is without taking notice of the fact that the Section 47 relates to one single small question of administration of public trust, the question being of appointment of additional trustees. The emphasis in the provisions of sub-section (2) is that additional trustees cannot be appointed by Court contrary to the provisions of the trust as appearing in an instrument, a scheme, an order or a decree of the Court. In breach of the provisions in such instrument, scheme, etc., the Court is not enabled to appoint additional trustees. The argument advanced is not tenable, because the section relates to the power of appointing additional trustees under the circumstances discussed above and has no bearing whatsoever on the larger power of the Court and the Charity Commissioner for framing of schemes in pursuance of the jurisdiction conferred under Sections 50 and 50-A of the Act. Similarly, the provisions in Section 47-A which relate to ancillary powers of Court in making orders of vesting of properties in additional trustees appointed under Section 47 and the provision in Sec. 47-AA enabling the Charity Commissioner to make an application to the Court for appointment of new trustees under Section 47 have no relevance to and have no bearing on the question of jurisdiction conferred on the Court and the Charity Commissioner for framing of schemes under Sections 50 and 50-A of the Act. In my view, reliance has been placed on these sections under a misapprehension that they are relevant in considering the scope of jurisdiction of the Court and the Charity Commissioner for framing of schemes under Sections 50 and 50-A. The other sections which are referred to by the learned Judge in his judgment have not even a distant bearing on the question of jurisdiction of the Charity Commissioner to frame a scheme and appoint initial trustees of the scheme framed by him.

7. In the result, the finding made by the learned Judge that the Charity Commissioner had no power and jurisdiction to frame clauses 7 and 8 of the scheme must be held to be incorrect. These findings are set aside. The scheme framed by the Charity Commissioner will continue to include the clauses 7 and 8 as framed by him. The appeal is allowed. Costs of all parties to this appeal will come out of the estate.

Appeal allowed.

Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates (Control) Act (57 of 1947), Sections 12, 13 and 14 — Acts or omissions of a tenant cannot deprive his sub-tenant of the statutory protection where the impugned act or omission is not that of the sub-tenant and he is not shown to have been privy to the same.

A suit was brought by a landlord for possession of a shop against his tenant for failure to pay arrears of rent for more than 6 months in spite of a notice under Section 12 (2). The suit was contested by his sub-tenant on ground that he was a lawful sub-tenant by virtue of a sublease created by the tenant in his favour before the date of Ordinance 3 of 1969 which amended Section 15 (2) and was therefore protected under the Act.

Held that the sub-tenant could not be evicted for failure of his lessor to pay arrears in compliance with Section 12 (3). AIR 1967 Bom 210, Explained. (Para 7)

M. L. Pendse, for Petitioner; S. M.
Mhamane and S. K. Vaidya, for Opponents Nos. 1 (A to D & F).

ORDER:— The petitioner is the original plaintiff. On 1-9-1964 he filed a suit for possession of a shop situate in Ganji Market, Saraf Bazzar, Ward No. 6 of Ahmednagar City, bearing Municipal Committee No. 2801, City Survey No. 3093, against two defendants under the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates (Control) Act, 1947, (hereinafter referred to as the 'Rent Act') on the sole ground of defendant No. 1 tenant having failed to pay arrears of rent for more than six months in spite of service of notice under Section 12 (2) of the Rent Act. It was alleged that defendant No. 2 was running the said shop as the servant of the defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 1 did not contest and the proceedings were set ex parte against him. Defendant No. 2 contested the suit, pleading that he was a lawful sub-tenant and had paid rent to defendant No. 1 and cannot be evicted for breach of Section 12 (3) of the Rent Act by defendant No. 1.

2. The trial Court accepted the case of the plaintiff that defendant No. 2 was the servant of defendant No. 1 and passed a decree for eviction against both for non-payment of rent by defendant No. 1 and also a decree for rent against defendant No. 1. On appeal by defendant No. 2, decree for eviction against him was set aside by the District Judge holding that, he was a lawful sub-tenant and his possession was protected by the Rent Act and he cannot be evicted for failure of the defendant No. 1 to comply with Section 12 (3) of the Rent Act. The plaintiff challenges this decree in this Spl. C. A. under Article 227 of the Constitution of India.

3. Mr. Pendse for the petitioner contends that finding of fact as to the defendant No. 2 being the sub-tenant is vitiated by several errors. According to him, no rent agreement or rent receipts have been produced, nor attempt to lead evidence to prove direct lease agreement is even made, nor defendant No. 1 is examined to prove the grant of sub-lease by him to defendant No. 2. He contends that, reliance by the District Judge on an irregularly maintained rough note-book and un-proved documents of the Office of the Shop and Establishment Inspector, amounts to relying on hearsay evidence. I do not find any substance in this contention. The learned District Judge has relied on the evidence of defendant No. 2, his two witnesses and, also on the Registration Certificate under the Shops and Establishments Act issued in the years 1957 and 1959, showing that defendant No. 2 was running his own shop in the premises in dispute. This finding of fact does not cease to be so far the reasons suggested by Mr. Pendse. There is also no substance in the contention that the evidence of the plaintiff is not considered or that the judgment of the District Judge bristles with several misquoted extracts of evidence. None was however cited before me.

4. Mr. Pendse, however, contends that assuming that the defendant No. 2 is a lawful sub-tenant, he is still liable to be evicted along with the main tenant, once the main tenant, defendant No. 1, is so found liable under Section 12 (3) of the Rent Act due to his failure to pay the arrears of rent. Now, it would have been so under the ordinary law of landlord and tenant under which sub-tenant cannot possess or claim any better or independent rights apart from, the one that can be claimed through the main tenant. He has to sink or swim with the main tenant. But not so under the Rent Act. The defendant No. 2 is proved to have been a lawful sub-tenant. Sub-lease in his favour is proved to have been created before 1957. Definition of the word 'tenant', in Section 5 (11): (a) includes sub-tenant inducted lawfully before the amendment of Section 15 (2) of the Rent Act by Ordinance No. III of 1959. It will not make any difference as to whether sub-tenant is in possession of the whole or only a part of the premises leased to the tenant. Implication of this inclusive definition is that protection afforded to any tenant against his landlord under any provisions of the Rent Act, is also available to the sub-tenant against his lessor, the main tenant, in the same manner and to the same effect, as any other main tenant himself can claim against the landlord. By creating sub-lease before the date of Ordinance No. III of 1959, the tenant ceases to furnish his landlord any cause of action for eviction under Section 13 (1) (e) of the Rent Act. Such sub-leases are rendered now lawful even though these were not so when the same were created. The landlord has to suffer such sub-leases and put up with the possession of the premises or portion thereof by the sub-tenants without any privity of contract with them. Section 14 then confers a right on the sub-tenant to claim the status of tenants on the determination of the interest of the tenants in the premises. This right is again available to the sub-tenants, whether the landlords like it or not and in spite of them.

5. It is thus clear that the protection available to sub-tenants under the Rent Act is not the creation of the contract but is statutory. It does not depend upon sweet-will or pleasure of the landlord or the main tenant and also cannot depend on their act or omission. This protection of the Rent Act is made available independently of the rights, and acts, or omission of the main tenant.

6. Section 12 of the Rent Act affords a sort of guarantee of the continuance of the tenancy and, secondly of the possession of premises to the tenant against his landlord as long as he is ready and willing to pay rent and to abide by the term of the tenancy. Any sub-tenant also is entitled to claim the same guarantee and protection, in regard to the premises or portion in his possession as against his lessor i.e., the main tenant. This can be denied to him only on his failure to pay rent to his lessor i.e., tenant, or on his non-compliance with the terms of the tenancy. This protection obviously cannot be denied to him on failure to pay rent by the tenant to the landlord or breach of any terms of the tenancy by the tenant. Such act or omission of the tenant may result in the loss of protection of the Act to him in regard to the portion in possession of the tenant. This may, however, result in the determination of tenant's interest in the portion of the premises in possession of the sub-tenant and confer the status of a tenant on him. But mere non-payment of rent by the main tenant to the landlord cannot result in the liability of the sub-tenant for eviction. This militates against the guarantees and protection afforded by this very section to the sub-tenant under Section 14 which contemplates reversion of tenant's rights in such contingency on the sub-tenant and not on the landlord. No sub-tenant ever will be able to either claim tenant's rights under Section 14 if his rights in the premises are to determine along with the tenant, or the landlord's act or omission without his own any such failure, act, or omission. It shall also have to be borne in mind that Section 12 (3) of the Rent Act, does not appear to aim so much at landlord's right of resumption of the premises as at ensuring the receipt of the rent by him. Possession by the landlord in such contingency is more the result than the object.

7. Strong reliance is placed on the two clauses of Section 14 wherein it is said that the sub-tenant becomes tenant "on the same terms and conditions" and "subject to the provisions of the Act". The contention of Mr. Pendse that 'terms and conditions' referred to therein include liability to eviction and forfeiture of tenancy incurred by the main tenant, is simply untenable. This clause can apply only after a sub-tenant, becomes tenant in exercise of the right under this section. Mr. Pendse, however contends that accrual of such rights to the sub-tenant is controlled by Sections 12 and 13 of the Rent Act and he cannot claim any independent right or protection against eviction, if the landlord succeeds in making out a case for the main tenant's eviction under any of the clauses of Sections 12 and 13 of the Rent Act. To my mind, such construction of the above clause, "subject to provisions of this Act", of Section 14 is not warranted by the language of this section itself or Sections 12 & 13 and any such construction will render the rights and protection conferred on the sub-tenant under several provisions just illusory and ineffective. Under Section 12 (3) and Cls. (a) to (e) and (f), (j) of Section 13 (1) of the Rent Act the tenant is liable to lose protection of the Act, if he does or omits to do the acts envisaged therein. This cannot be construed to mean that such acts or omissions of any tenant can deprive the sub-tenant of the statutory protection where impugned act or omission is not his and the sub-tenant is not shown to have been privy to the same, otherwise. Under clauses (g) to (i) of Section 13 (1), landlord can claim possession on proof of his need for some purpose or the other. This claim again shall have to be tested not only against the rights and the security afforded to the tenant under sub-sections (1) of S. 12 and sub-section (2) of S. 13 and other provisions such as Sections 16 to 17-C, but the same shall also have to be tested in the light of the protection afforded to the sub-tenant in regard to the portion actually in his possession. Claim, of the landlord under clauses (k), (l) of S. 13 shall have to be examined accordingly. Any other interpretation will reduce the intended protection to sub-tenants to an absurdity. The clause 'subject to the provisions of the Act' shall have to be construed harmoniously consistent with the protection given to the sub-tenants too. So construed, it can only mean that the sub-tenant will not be qualified to be the tenant under Section 14 when he also incurs liability for eviction under Section 12 (3), and Cls. (a) to (e), (f) and (j) of Section 13 (1) of the Rent Act for some act or omission of his or when the landlord has succeeded in proving his need against sub-tenant also under Cls. (e), (h), (i), (j) of S. 13 (1), in spite of Section 13 (2) of the Rent Act or when absence of sub-tenants need under Cls. (k), (h) is proved about the portion in his possession. In fact it is difficult to conceive how a tenant's failure to pay rent under Section 12 (3) will ever be attributable to any act or omission of the sub-tenant-excepting very remotely, and how sub-tenant will ever incur liability for eviction in favour of the new landlord in such a case. There is thus no force in the contention of Mr. Pendse that the landlord is entitled to decree for possession even against the lawful sub-tenant without any act or omission of his, on mere proof of non-compliance of Section 12 (3) by the tenant.

8. Mr. Pendse relies on the judgment in Indian Coffee Workers' Co-op. Stores v. Mrs. Bachobai, 66 Bom LR 338 = (AIR 1967 Bom 210) to support his contention. Landlord in that case has succeeded in getting a decree for possession against the tenant and sub-tenants on the ground of unlawful subletting and unauthorised construction. In the meanwhile Ordinance No. III of 1959 was enforced and the sub-tenants claimed protection under Section 15 (2) of the Rent Act, in their Spl. C. A. to this Court. Protection was denied to them by this Court in view of the finding of fact that the sub-tenants also had incurred forfeiture of their rights by being party to the said unauthorised construction. It was held that the sub-tenant could not claim protection of the Act when they had failed to observe the terms of the tenancy. This is the only and true ratio of the Division Bench judgment and it does not run counter to what I have held above. With respect I agree with the views of Division Bench so far.

9. But Mr. Pendse relies on the observations in the last two paras of the judgment at page 340 of the report. Apparently reading thereof creates an impression of these supporting his contention. On close reading, however, observations are neutral. None in fact militates against what I have said above. But the judgment ends with the following conclusion:—

"In our view, therefore, even on the assumption that the tenant defendant

No. 1 had effected the alterations, since the landlord became entitled to possession defendants Nos. 2 and 3 cannot have the protection of Section 14".

These observations in the last two paras can assume different complexion if read in the light of the above conclusion. These, can be construed to mean that the landlord need not prove any act or omission of the sub-tenant, once any act or omission of the main tenant furnishes cause of action to the landlord to claim a decree for possession. With great respect, I do not agree with this view, if these observations really so mean. But in view of the controversy and the decision in the said case as summarised above, these observations were not necessary. These observations really do not constitute the ratio of the judgment in view of the principles laid down in State of Orissa v. Sudhanshu Sekhar Misra, AIR 1968 SC 647 and Quinn v. Leathem, 1901 AC 495. Secondly, I have no quarrel with the broad principles that, rights of sub-tenants under Section 14 are controlled by Sections 12 and 13 of the Rent Act, or that if the landlord is entitled to possession under the said provisions, sub-tenant's rights under Section 14 must yield. Question, as to what extent, the landlord's rights under Sections 12 and 13 are also affected by the protection given to the sub-tenants, did not fall for, and have not received consideration, in the above judgment and hence, these observations cannot have any binding effect. I therefore do not think it necessary to refer this matter to a larger Bench.

10. I find some support to my view in the judgment of Bhasme, J. in 73 Bom LR 140 = (AIR 1972 Bom 46), (Mangharam Chubarmal v. B. C. Patel) who also found difficulty in agreeing with the above views of Division Bench. Learned Judge has also recorded express dissent therefrom.

11. Rule is accordingly discharged. No order as to costs.

Rule discharged.

R. N. Deshpande, for Petitioner; N. N. Deshpande, for Respondent.

ORDER:— The question which arises in this petition is whether the lands in respect of which a trust has been made by the owner for education of the male members and children in his family are exempted from the provisions relating to the statutory transfer of ownership. The respondent is the tenant of survey number 13, area 15 acres 1 guntha, of village Bag Ambada, tahsil Achalpur, district Amravati. This field originally belonged to one Madhaorao Vithalrao Pangarkar. He got this field in a family partition made on 13-1-1950 when the respondent was already cultivating the field as a lessee. Madhaorao Pangarkar created a trust on 16-8-1960 in respect of about 60 acres of land including the land in dispute and himself became the managing trustee. The trust deed which is a registered document recites that the income of the trust property is required to be spent exclusively for the education of all the existing male children in the family as also for the education of the male children that would be born from time to time in the family.

2. When the proceedings for transfer of statutory ownership were started before the Agricultural Lands Tribunal, Achalpur, it was contended on behalf of the landlord that the tenant cannot get any right to purchase the field as it was owned by the trust for educational purposes. In his evidence the original owner stated that his two sons and his grand-son were taking education and that the field was kept separate for educational purposes. It was expressly stated by him that the trust was made exclusively for the education of the family members.

3. The Agricultural Lands Tribunal accepted the contention of the landlord and held that the provisions of Sections 46 to 49-A of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act, 1958, hereinafter referred to as the Tenancy Act, did not apply to the field in view of the provisions of Section 129 (b) of the Tenancy Act and the proceedings were, therefore, dropped.

4. In an appeal filed by the respondent the Special Deputy Collector reversed the order of the Agricultural Lands Tribunal and he took the view that a trust, beneficiaries of which were the members of the family, was not exempted from the provisions of compulsory transfer of ownership. Further he also held that no accounts had been produced to prove that the entire income of the land was appropriated towards the purpose for which the trust was created. He, therefore, remanded the case to the Agricultural Lands Tribunal for fixation of the purchase price.

5. The petitioner then filed a revision application before the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal. The Revenue Tribunal took the view that the beneficiaries of the trust were the present and future members of the Pangarkar family and the benefit of the trust property was "strictly limited to the education of the born and unborn members of the family" and since the provisions of Section 129 of the Tenancy Act indicated that the protection under that section was granted only to those trusts which were created for the benefit of the public, the respondent was entitled to a transfer of ownership. The Tribunal found that the intention of the law in Section 129 was clear that the protection was given only to those trusts which were created for a public purpose. The revision application filed by the petitioner was therefore, rejected. The petitioner has now filed this petition challenging the orders of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal and the Special Deputy Collector.

6. In this petition also the argument for the petitioner of the learned counsel is that even a private trust for the benefit of members of the settlor's family are included in the category of lands referred to in Section 129 (b) of the Tenancy Act. It is contended that while the word "public" is expressly used when referring to an institution for public religious worship, that word is not used with reference to the other institutions such as trust for educational purpose, hospital, Panjarpole and Gaushala, and therefore, it is contended that the trust for the above purposes need not be for a public purpose so as to claim exemption under S. 129 of the Tenancy Act. Reliance was placed on the provisions of Section 88-B of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948 which contains an express provision that a trust claiming an exemption under that Section must be one which is or is deemed to be registered under the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950, and it is contended that if the legislature intended that the benefit of Section 129 of the Tenancy Act, 1958, should be given only to a trust for a public purpose, then the requirement of registration under the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950, would have found place in Section 129 of the Tenancy Act also.

7. The material part of Sec. 129 of the Bombay Tenancy Act, 1958, is as follows.—

"129. Nothing in the foregoing provisions except Section 2, the provisions of Chapter II (excluding Sections 21, 22, 23, 24 and 37) and Section 91 and the provisions of Chapters X and XII in so far as the provisions of the said Chapters are applicable to any of the matters referred to in sections mentioned above, shall apply—

(a) to lands held or leased by a local authority, of university established by law in the State;

(b) to lands which are the property of a trust for an educational purpose, hospital Panjarpole, Gaushala, or an institution for public religious worship, provided the entire income of such lands is appropriated for the purposes of such trust;

(c) to lands assigned or donated by any person before the commencement of this Act for the purpose of rendering any of the following services useful to the community, namely:—

maintenance of water works, lighting or filling of water troughs for cattle;

(d) to any land taken under management by a Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court;

Provided

Explanation:— For the purpose of clause (b), a certificate granted by the Collector after holding an inquiry, that the conditions mentioned in the said clause are satisfied by a trust shall be the conclusive evidence in that behalf". It cannot be disputed that the provisions of Sections 41 to 49-A of the Tenancy Act which are contained in Chapter III of the Act are not applicable in the case of lands referred to in clauses (a) to (d) of S. 129 of the Tenancy Act. Under clause (a) lands held or leased by a local authority, or university established by law in the State are exempted from the provisions relating to statutory transfer of ownership. Similarly cl. (c) expressly refers to lands assigned or donated by any person before the commencement of the Act for the purpose of rendering services useful to the community as indicated in that clause and such lands are exempted from the operation of the provisions regarding statutory transfer of ownership. In the original Bill and the Act clause (d) was not there at all and it was introduced for the first time by Maharashtra Act No. V of 1961. It is clear that clauses (a) and (c) of Section 129 refer to lands which are used for public purposes or purposes which are beneficial to the community. A local authority and an university are institutions for public benefit. Clause (c) expressly refers to lands assigned or donated for rendering services useful to the community, such as maintenance of water works, lighting or filling of water troughs for cattle. The scheme of clauses (a) and (c) of Section 129 cannot be left out of consideration while considering the question whether the purposes in clause (b) also must have some reference to the community at large. The purposes of Panjarpola and Gaushala are obviously public purposes. A Panjarpole connotes a charitable institution which takes care of old, sick and disabled animals. A Panjarpole is thus always run for a public charitable purpose. The nature and purpose of the institution called Gaushala is also similar. Since Panjarpole and Gaushala by their very nature are institutions of public benefit it was not necessary to qualify these words by the word "public". With reference to the institution for religious worship also the legislature has expressly stated that it is only if the institution is for public religious worship that the lands belonging to it will be exempted from the provisions relating to statutory transfer of ownership.

It is thus obvious that the scheme of the provisions of clauses (a), (b) and (c) of Section 129 of the Tenancy Act was to exempt from the operation of the provisions regarding statutory transfer of ownership all lands from which the landlord or member of his family did not receive benefit and which were set apart for public benefit. If that be the scheme, then even the trust for educational purpose referred to in clause (b) of S. 129 must have reference to public benefit. It is necessary therefore that if the trusts specified in clause (b) of Section 129 claim exemption from the operation of the provisions regarding transfer of ownership they must be trusts which are constituted for the benefit either of the public at large or some considerable portion of it answering the public description. It follows that they must be charitable trusts as "public trust" and 'charitable trust' are generally considered as synonymous expressions. (See Lewin on Trusts, 15th Edition, Chapter I, S. 2).

8. It is true that the condition of registration as a trust under the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950, which is required to be satisfied by the trust before it claims an exemption under Section 88-B of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948 is not to be found and, indeed, could not be found in Section 129 of the Tenancy Act, 1958. The Tenancy Act, 1958 came into force in the Vidarbha Region of the erstwhile State of Bombay with effect from 30th December 1958. The Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950, was not then in force in the Vidarbha Region. For the first time the Act became applicable to the Vidarbha Region by virtue of the Bombay Public Trusts (Unification and Amendment) Act, 1959, which came into force on 1-2-1961. The requirement of registration under the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950, could not, therefore, have been made a condition for claiming the benefit of exemption under Sec. 129 and the absence of that condition, therefore, is of no significance.

9. There is no doubt that the trust which the original landlord Pangarkar has made is clearly a private family trust and is not a public charitable trust. The gift is in its nature a private or family benefaction. It is purely a personal gift and a trust for private individuals. An established principle of the law of charity is that a purpose is not charitable unless it is directed to the public benefit and the element of public benefit is the necessary condition of legal charity. (See Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edition, Vol. 4, para. 488). The essential difference between a private and a public trust is that in the former beneficiaries are definite and ascertained individuals or who within a definite time can be definitely ascertained, but in the latter the beneficial interest must be vested in an unascertained and fluctuating body of persons, either public at large or some considerable portion of it answering a public description. A trust for the education of the members of one's own family cannot be called a public trust. In Oppenheim v. Tobacco Securities Trust Co. Ltd., 1951 AC 297, Lord Simonds has observed that a trust for the education of members of a family or of a number of families cannot be regarded as charitable. It was further observed that "a group of persons may be numerous but, if the nexus between them is their personal relationship to a single propositus or to several propositi, they are neither the community nor a section of the community for charitable purposes." In Re Compton Powell v. Compton, (1945) 1 All ER 198 it was held that a gift for the education of descendants of named person introduced into their qualification a purely personal element and such gift was therefore to be regarded as a family trust and not as one for the benefit of the section of the community. In that case Lord Greene M. R. after referring to certain observations made by Gayan Duffy, J. in Re Moenery. (1941) Ir. R 323 said:

"If I may respectfully say so, this reasoning appears to me to be unassailable. Even if my view that the necessity of founding a claim upon the fact of kinship to an individual precludes the possibility of regarding a gift as charitable is too widely stated, I am of opinion that a gift for the education of descendants of named persons must be regarded as a family trust and not as one for the benefit of a section of the community on any fair view of what that phrase may mean."

It is not, therefore, possible to accept the contention that the lands in respect of which a trust was made for the education of the settler's children and their children would be entitled to the exemption under Section 129 (b) of the Tenancy Act, 1958.

10. The petition must, therefore, fail and is dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

NAIN AND S. K. DESAI, JJ.

M/s. K. I. Suratwala and Co., Appellants v. Mahmud Bidi Works Sholapur and others, Respondents.

A. F. O. D. No. 70 of 1963, D/- 29-4-1970 against order of N. S. Pathak, Civil J. Sr. Division at Sholapur, D/- 22-10-1962.

(A) Bombay Money Lenders Act (1946), Ss. 2 (6), 25, 2 (9) (g) — Transaction between traders styled as Bidi selling agreement — Construction — Dominant intention of the transaction has to be considered in deciding its nature — On construction, the agreement held to be an unconscionable and usurious loan transaction which attracted the provisions of S. 25 — Profits mentioned in the agreement were in fact 'interest' as defined in S. 2 (6).

Where the agreement between the parties admitted receipt of Rs. 58,000/-, in lieu whereof the defendant agreed to repay the amount with 'profits' by supplying the goods described in the agreement in 48,000 bundles grossly valued at Rs. 26,400 at a fixed price per bundle, which was not to vary if the price was increased but in case of fall in the prices of the goods the defendant agreed to make good the loss so as to make up the ultimate amount agreed to be repaid i.e. Rs. 1,32,000/- (made up of Rs. 58,000/- principal plus Rs. 74,000/- as profits), on construction of the agreement.

Held that (i) the agreement was a loan transaction which provided for an escalation down of the market rate and not an escalation upwards;

(ii) that clause (8) of the agreement prohibiting the defendant No. 1 from alienating, encumbering, or disposing of his property, movable or immovable, till the agreement was fulfilled and creating a charge in favour of the plaintiffs on the bidi trade-mark used by defendant No. 1 clearly showed the anxiety of the plaintiff to secure to himself the moneys advanced by him and indicated that the dominant intention of the so called selling agreement was to advance a loan at exorbitant interest.

(iii) that the recital in the agreement that both the parties were manufacturers of and traders in bidis reflected the anxiety of the plaintiffs to get out of the provisions of the Bombay Money Lenders Act and the definition therein of the word 'loan'.

(iv) that the amount repayable by the defendant No. 1, described as "profit" in the agreement was nothing other than interest.

(v) that the fact that plaintiffs were expecting goods at ascertainable prices in repayment of the sum advanced made no difference to the fact that what had to be repaid was a particular sum of money prefixed in the agreement. In case of sale of goods only price is charged and there is no question of charging any profit by the buyer to the seller. C. R. A. No. 356 of 1969, D/- 3-2-1970 (Bom. at Nag.), Rel. on; AIR 1946 PC 145, Ref.; AIR 1953 SC 485, Dist. (Paras 8 to 13)

(B) Debt Laws — Usurious Loans Act (1918) (10 of 1918), S. 2 (2) — Loan — Definition of loan under this Act is of wider connotation — It gives the court power to declare a transaction as loan if in its opinion the transaction is in substance a loan. (Para 14)

(C) Stamp Act (1899), S. 35 — Document not properly stamped — Admitted in evidence — Its admissibility cannot thereafter be questioned at any stage, of the same proceedings or even in appeal. AIR 1961 SC 1655, Foll. (Para 22)

V. H. Gumaste with M. B. Kadam, for Appellants; M. D. Pathak, for Respondents.

NAIN, J.:— This is an appeal by the original plaintiffs against the judgment dated 22nd October 1962 of the learned Civil Judge, S. D., Sholapur, dismissing the plaintiffs' suit for recovery of Rupees 33,909.94.

2. The plaintiffs instituted the suit for recovery of the said amount, interest and costs. The plaintiffs are a partnership firm and it has been proved that they were registered under the Indian Partnership Act 1932. The defendants No. 1 are also a partnership firm. The defendant No. 2 is an admitted partner in the said firm. He is the person who executed the agreement, Ex. 42, which is the subject-matter of this litigation. The defendants Nos 3, 4 and 5 have denied that they were partners in the firm of defendants No. 1 at the time of the accrual of the cause of action.

3. The agreement, Ex. 42, which is the subject-matter of this litigation was executed on 25th October 1957. Thereby the plaintiffs advanced to the defendant No. 1 a sum of Rs. 58,000. The defendant No. 1 contracted to sell to the plaintiffs 48,000 bundles of bidis at Rupees 2-12-0 per bundle. The price of these 48,000 bundles worked out at the agreed rate to Rs. 1,32,000/-. The bidis were to be supplied within a period of five years from the date of the agreement in a particular proportion every month. It was provided that if the defendants committed default in supplying bidis, the balance amount then remaining out of Rupees 1,32,000/- would be recoverable by the plaintiffs from defendants No. 1. The agreement also provided that for the amount due to the plaintiffs there would be a charge on the trade-mark label of the bidis under which trade mark the defendants marketed their goods.

4. Upto 29th June 1961, the defendants delivered to the plaintiffs 35,300 bundles of bidis. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendants No. 1 failed to deliver the remaining quantity. The defendants alleged that they had delivered 35,600 bundles but were unable to prove the delivery of the difference of 300 bundles. These bidis were of the value of Rupees 98,925.06. If this amount is deducted out of Rs. 1,32,000/- we get the figure of the claim of the plaintiffs in the suit of Rs. 33,909.04. This amount the plaintiffs claimed from the defendants No. 1 in terms of the agreement Ex. 42.

4-A. The defendant No. 2 died on 18th December 1961 and the defendants Nos. 2(A) to 2(L) were joined as his heirs and legal representatives. The defendants Nos. 2(K) and 2(L) denied that they were the heirs and legal representatives of defendant No. 2.

5. In the written statement defendants No. 1 contended that the agreement, Ex. 42, was brought about by undue influence, coercion and fraud, that the amount of Rs. 58,000 was advanced as a loan by the plaintiffs to defendants No. 1 at an exorbitant rate of interest, that the transaction was governed by the Bombay Money Lenders Act, 1946, and that defendants No. 1 were only liable to pay interest at 9 per cent. per annum. They further contended that the plaintiffs had been over-paid and that the plaintiff firm was not registered under the Indian Partnership Act, 1932, and therefore the suit was not maintainable. They also contended that Ex. 42 was a bond and was not sufficiently stamped and was therefore not admissible in evidence.

6. The trial Court held that the defendants Nos. 3 to 5 were not partners in the firm of defendants No. 1. The trial Court also held that the agreement Ex. 42 was a bond and was not properly stamped. It, however, appears that the said agreement was admitted in evidence, marked as an exhibit and referred to in the examination-in-chief and cross-examination. The trial Court further held that the agreement was not brought about by undue influence and was not void. The trial Court also held that the transaction embodied in the agreement, Ex. 42, was a money lending transaction and was an unconscionable and usurious bargain. In the result, the trial Court dismissed the plaintiffs suit with costs. The plaintiffs have, come in appeal against the said decision.

7. The first contention taken before us by Mr. Gumaste appearing for the plaintiffs is that the suit transaction is not hit by any of the provisions of the Bombay Money Lenders Act and that even the provision of Section 25 of the said Act limiting the rate of interest does not apply to it. He contended that the transaction was purely a transaction for sale of bidis and advance payment made towards the price. He therefore contended that the plaintiffs' suit has been wrongly dismissed on this ground.

8. In order to appreciate this contention it is necessary to refer to a few provisions of the Bombay Money Lenders Act. Section 2 (6) of the Bombay Money Lenders Act, 1946 defines interest and provides that interest includes any sum, by whatsoever name called, in excess of the principal paid or payable to a money-lender in consideration of or otherwise in respect of a loan, but does not include types of transactions enumerated in the said section. One of the kinds of loans, excepted from the said section is a loan to a trader except for the purposes of Sections 23 and 25. Section 2 (9) (g) provides that Sections 23 and 25 will be applicable to loans even if they were to traders. Although the learned trial Judge has referred in his judgment to Sec. 23, in our opinion Section 23 has no application because in the suit no amount of interest which is higher than the amount of loan has been claimed. But it is clear that Section 25 would apply, if we hold that the amount of Rs. 58,000/- advanced by the plaintiffs to defendant No. 1 was a loan and the difference, between Rupees 1,32,000/- and Rs. 58,000/- was interest and the limitation on rates of interest prescribed by Section 25 would be applicable to the said transaction. Section 25 of the Bombay Money Lenders Act, 1946, provides that the State Government may from time to time by notification in the Official Gazette fix the maximum rates of interest for any local area or class of business of money-lending in respect of secured and unsecured loans. It is not in dispute that at the date of the suit transaction the rates of interest prescribed under Section 25 were 12 per cent. per annum for unsecured loans and 9 per cent. per annum for secured loans.

9. We must now turn to the agreement, Ex. 42, for its construction so as to decide whether the dominant intention of the said agreement was to advance a loan by the plaintiffs to defendant No. 1 on interest.

10. The agreement, Ex. 42, is dated 25th October 1947. It recites that the plaintiffs as well as defendants No. 1 were both manufacturers of and traders in bidis. This recital reflects the anxiety of the plaintiffs to get out of the provisions of the Bombay Money Lenders Act and the definition of the word "loan". It also recites that defendant No. 1 on the date of the agreement received from the plaintiffs Rs. 58,000/- and in lieu thereof the defendants No. 1 had agreed to 'repay the said amount with profits by supplying the goods described in the agreement'. We have later to see whether this 'profit' was to secure payment of interest and whether the supply of goods was repayment in kind and if so, whether repayment in kind would not fall in the definition of loan. Clause (2) of the agreement provides that the prevalent wholesale rate of bidis at the time of the agreement was Rs. 2-12-0 per bundle and that the amount of Rupees 1,32,000/- repayable by the defendant No. 1 to the plaintiffs was worked out at that rate for 48,000 bundles deliverable within a period of five years. Clause (4) of the agreement provides that bidis of the value of Rs. 26,400/- were to be supplied every year, out of which Rs. 11,600/- represented the principal and Rs. 14,800/- were 'profit'. This clause also provides that in this way within a period of five years, defendant No. 1 had agreed to repay the principal amount of Rs. 58,000 received from the plaintiffs and that Rs. 74,000/- were 'the amount of profit'. Clause (9) provides that if the rate of bidis went down below Rs. 2-12-0 per bundle the defendant No. 1 would supply bidis at the lower market rate then prevailing and make up the total payment of Rs. 1,32,000/-. Neither this clause nor any other clause of the agreement provides that in case the market rate went up the bidis would be supplied at the higher market rate and consequently a smaller quantity would have to be supplied to make up the amount of Rupees 1,32,000/-. In other words the agreement provides for an escalation down of the market rate and not an escalation upwards. We might here comment on the anxiety of the plaintiffs to secure the minimum payment of Rs. 1,32,000/- even if the market rate went down. In case the market rate went up the plaintiffs would have been repaid even more than Rs. 1,32,000/-. Clause (7) of the agreement provides that if defendant No. 1 committed a breach of the agreement, the plaintiffs would be entitled to recover from the defendants No. 1 the amount of Rs. 1,32,000/- after deducting therefrom the price of the bidis delivered. This clause provides for the mode of recovery through Court but we are not concerned with the same. This clause uses the expression "after deducting the amount paid by me (defendant No. 1) towards the repayment of the aforesaid amount of Rs. 1,32,000/-" (words in bracket and underlining supplied). Cl. (8) of the agreement provides firstly that unless the agreement was fulfilled the defendants No. 1 and would not alienate or dispose of moveable and immoveable property or encumber the same; and secondly, the plaintiffs would have a charge on the bidi trade mark used by the defendants No. 1. This clause would show the anxiety of the plaintiffs to secure themselves for the advances made by them to defendant No. 1.

11-12. The anxiety of the plaintiffs to get out of the definition of the word 'loan' and the provisions of the Bombay Money Lenders Act, the provisions for 'repayment' of Rs. 1,32,000 in lieu of Rupees Rs. 58,000/-, and the attempt to describe the difference as 'profit', the provision for escalation down of the price and not for escalation upwards, the anxiety to secure at least Rs. 1,32,000/- and if possible a larger amount, provision for recovery of the balance of Rs. 1,32,000/- in case of short deliveries, reference to the value of goods delivered as "amount paid", securing the repayment of amount by negative covenant against alienation of property and by creating charge on trade mark would tend to show that the dominant purpose of the agreement, Ex. 42, is to secure the repayment of a loan advanced with usurious interest and not to secure sale of goods.

13. It would also appear to us from the terms of the agreement set out and discussed hereinabove that the difference of Rs. 74,000/- between the amount of advance, viz. Rs. 58,000/- and the amount repayable by the defendants No. 1 to the plaintiffs and which has been described in the agreement as 'profit' is nothing other than interest. The definition of the word 'interest' in sub-section (6) of S. 2 of the Bombay Money Lenders Act provides that interest includes any 'sum' by whatsoever name called. Mr. Gumaste for the plaintiffs contended that what the defendants No. 1 were to give was bidis of the value of Rs. 74,000/- and not money. The amount of payment in excess of advance was not a 'sum' and was therefore not interest. It, however, appears to us that the amount repayable is fixed in money and is a 'sum'. It may be that the plaintiffs were expecting goods at ascertainable prices in repayment of the sum. That, however, makes no difference to the fact that what had to be repaid was a particular sum of money. This is more so because the plaintiffs were not taking any risk even on account of a fall in prices. If the prices went down they were to get larger quantity of goods. The plaintiffs, however, provided benefit to themselves by not giving any advantage to defendant No. 1, if the prices went down. In case of sale of goods only price is charged and there is no question of charging any profit by the buyer to the seller. There is no explanation from the plaintiffs as to what this profit represented. To us it is clear that the 'profit' represented nothing other than interest. We have therefore come to the conclusion that the amount of Rs. 74,000/- called 'profit' in the agreement was nothing other than interest.

14. Mr. Gumaste also contended that the definition of the 'loan' in sub-section (9) of S. 2 of the Bombay Money Lenders Act meant an advance at interest whether of money or in kind. He contended that while advance could be in kind the repayment could not be in kind. This argument is, however, based on the assumption that the repayment was in kind. In this case the repayment is provided for in money, the amount of Rs. 74,000/- is specified. It is only repayable by sale of bidis at particular prices and in case of breach the balance is payable in money. This would therefore not make the payment not in money. Repayment in money or in money's worth at ascertainable prices is repayment of a loan.

15. Mr. Gumaste contended that the agreement itself recited and there was no dispute about the fact that both the parties, viz. the plaintiffs on the one hand and defendants No. 1 on the other, were manufacturers of and traders in bidis and the Bombay Money Lenders Act would therefore have no application. This argument would be correct except for Sections 23 and 25 of the Bombay Money Lenders Act. We are not concerned with Section 23. Section 2 (9) (g) expressly provides that Sections 23 and 25 will be applicable to loan even if they were to a trader. Section 25 would, therefore, be applicable to the suit transaction and this section provides maximum rate of interest chargeable for secured and unsecured loans. This rate at the relevant time was 9 per cent. per annum for secured loans and 12 per cent. per annum for unsecured loans.

16. A Division Bench of the Bombay High Court sitting at Nagpur held on 3-2-1970 in C. R. A. No. 356 of 1969 that in construing a document one has to look at the dominant intention of the transaction. Mr. Gumaste contended that on a true construction of the agreement, Ex. 42, the dominant intention was sale of goods and not advancement of a loan and payment of interest. We have, however, discussed the terms of the agreement itself and, in our opinion, the dominant intention of the transaction is to advance a loan and to secure its repayment along with a high rate of interest. The sale of bidis might have been mutually beneficial to both the parties but the dominant intention was not an agreement of sale but an agreement for repayment of loan with interest. It may also have been the intention of the parties to give it a colour of a sale agreement so as to take it out of the operation of the Bombay Money Lenders Act. We have, however, to see the true intention of the transaction and as we have stated above it is clear to us that the nature of the transaction is money lending transaction. However, no other provision of the Bombay Money Lenders Act, 1946, will apply to it except the two sections referred to above in view of the fact that defendants No. 1 are traders.

17. Mr. Gumaste invited our attention to the judgment of a Division Bench of this Court in Suleman Haji Ahmed Umer v. Haji Abdulla Haji Rahimtulla, 42 Bom LR 971, which brings out a distinction between a deposit and loan for the purposes of Arts. 57, 59 and 60 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. There the question was whether the amount advanced was a deposit repayable on demand or a loan which must be repaid within 3 years of the time when it was repayable. In our opinion, this judgment is totally irrelevant for the purposes of our case.

18. Mr. Gumaste also invited our attention to the definition of loan in Section 2 (2) of the Usurious Loans Act, 1918 (Act 10 of 1918) which provides that a 'loan' means a loan whether of money or in kind and includes any transaction which is, in the opinion of the Court in substance a loan. In this case the loan is of money. The Usurious Loans Act 1918 gives a wider definition and provides that if a transaction is in the opinion of the Court in substance a loan, it is a loan. In this case we have already held that in our opinion the transaction was in substance a loan and therefore the said transaction would be a loan even under the Usurious Loans Act, 1918. We are however concerned with the definition of the word loan in the Bombay Money Lenders Act and have come to the conclusion that the suit transaction was one of a loan advanced within that definition.

19. Mr. Gumaste also cited to us the judgment of the Supreme Court in Shri Ram Mills Ltd. v. Commr. of Excess Profits Tax, AIR 1953 SC 485, where it has been held that a loan imports a positive act of lending coupled with an acceptance by the other side of the money as a loan. We have no quarrel with the proposition laid down in this judgment and we are bound by it. But as we have already shown that this was a positive act of lending of Rs. 58,000/- and it was accepted by defendant No. 1 as a loan, the transaction is a transaction of loan within the meaning of this definition. This apart from the fact that the Supreme Court was construing the word "loan" in a case arising under the Excess Profits Tax Act, 1940 and not as defined under the Bombay Money Lenders Act, 1946.

20. Mr. Gumaste also cited a judgment of the Privy Council in Beninson v. Shiber, AIR 1946 PC 145 but as we find that it has no application to the facts of the case before us we do not consider it necessary to discuss it.

21. Mr. Gumaste also took up through the evidence of the Managing Partner of the plaintiffs and a representative of the firm of defendant No. 1. In his evidence the Managing Partner of the plaintiffs has emphasised the fact that he is a bidi manufacturer and trader and so were the defendant No. 1 and that the plaintiffs were not money lenders; whereas the representative of the defendant No. 1 has deposed that this was intended to be a transaction of loan and that the plaintiffs were demanding interest at 24 per cent. per annum. These are the rival contentions in the evidence, but we think that the agreement has to be construed by its own terms and what we have held is on the construction of the agreement, Ex. 42, itself rather than on the rival contentions of the parties in the evidence.

22. The learned trial Judge held that the agreement, Ex. 42 was a bond, within the meaning of Section 2 (c) of the Indian Stamp Act and was liable to be stamped with an ad valorem stamp duty due under Art. 15. We, however, find that the document had already been exhibited and used at the trial. Under Section 35 of the Indian Stamp Act once a document is so admitted in evidence and used it cannot be thereafter questioned at any stage of the same proceedings or even in appeal. We cannot therefore hold that it was open to the learned Judge to hold in the judgment that the instrument was inadmissible in evidence once it had been marked as an exhibit and admitted in evidence. The Supreme Court has also so held in the case of Javer Chand and Ors. v. Pukhraj Surana, AIR 1961 SC 1655.

23. We asked Mr. Gumaste whether if interest was calculated on Rupees 58,000/- even at 12 per cent. per annum which was the notified rate for unsecured loans at the time of agreement, any amount would be due by defendant No. 1 to the plaintiffs. He, however, stated that in that event nothing would be found due to the plaintiffs from the defendant No. 1. There is therefore no question of giving a decree to the plaintiffs for any amount.

24. The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

25. Mr. Gumaste made an oral application that in case we decide against the plaintiffs, we should grant to them leave to appeal to the Supreme Court. The amount of the value of the subject-matter in dispute is undoubtedly over Rs. 20,000/- and the case turns on the interpretation of the Bombay Money Lenders Act, 1946, and construction of document, Ex. 42. It appears that the case is a fit one to appeal to the Supreme Court of India. We therefore, grant a certificate to the plaintiffs under Arts. 133 (1) (a) and (c) of the Constitution of India.

Appeal dismissed. Leave to appeal to Supreme Court granted.

and Miraj Medical College, Miraj and distributing them between the two colleges in the proportion of the number of students registered for the Pre-Professional Examination (Medical) at the Poona University and Shivaji University at Kolhapur is neither arbitrary nor irrational, considering the existence and history of these two Universities. The basis adopted has logical nexus with the object sought to be achieved viz. of allocating certain seats in the Poona B. J. Medical College to the students of Shivaji University because the Government is not able to provide more seats in the Miraj Medical College for the time being. Contention that the allocation ought to be on the basis of number of students who passed the examination and got minimum qualification marks was rejected on the ground that it was not practicable. The allocation had to be made sufficiently in advance of the commencement of the academic year. AIR 1970 SC 35 and Special Civil Appln. No. 2767 of 1967 (Bom). Followed. (Paras. 12 to 14)

M. V. Paranjpe, V. A. Gangal and Sharad Manohar, for Petitioner; T. R. Andhyarjina i/b M/s. Little and Co. Attorney (for Nos. 1 and 2), B. R. Ketkar (for No. 3) and Prakash S. Shah (for No. 4), for Respondents.

VAIDYA, J.:— In this petition under Art. 226 of the Constitution of India, the validity of Rr. 1 [N. B. 1 (C) 2] 2, 4 (c) and (d) of the Rules framed by the Government of Maharashtra for admission to Government Medical Colleges is challenged by the petitioner, who sought admission in B. J. Medical College in Poona and was refused admission following the said rules.

2. The rules are framed by the Government for admission to all the Government Medical Colleges in the State for the academic year 1970-71. The rules are annexed to the petition as Exhibit A. Rule 1 in substance, lays down that a candidate for admission must submit an application in writing upon a prescribed form to the authorities mentioned therein. The students of the different Universities are directed to forward applications to the authority mentioned against the University concerned as follows:

Authority to whom application should be forwarded.

The Dean, Grant Medical College, Byculla, Bombay 8.

The Dean, B. J. Medical College, Poona.

The Dean, Medical College Nagpur.

The Dean Medical College, Aurangabad.

The Principal, Miraj Medical College, Miraj.

scheduled castes, scheduled tribes, etc. The notes in Rule 1 which are relevant so far as this petition is concerned are

"N. B. 1(c): Although the seats at the Miraj Medical College and B. J. Medical College, Poona, are pooled together and distributed between the two colleges in the proportion of the number of students registered for pre-professional examination (Medical) at the Poona University and the Shivaji University, Kolhapur, vide rule 2, the students of the Shivaji University should submit a single application for admission to Principal, Miraj Medical College, Miraj and the students of the Poona University should submit a single application to the Dean, B. J. Medical College Poona, as they are the authorities to fill in the seats allotted to the students of respective Universities. Applications submitted by the students wrongly will not be considered.

N. B. 2. The students who have secured less than 45 per cent. of total marks will not be considered for admission. Similarly the students belonging to the Scheduled Castes, Scheduled Tribes etc., and applying for admission to reserved seat should have secured not less than 40 per cent. of total marks".

Rule 2 which is the most material rule relevant to the challenge in this petition runs as follows:—

"Admissions are granted once a year only at the Medical Colleges mentioned in Rule 1 in the beginning of the academic year. Except the seats for the nominees of the Government of India and the seats at the B. J. Medical College, Poona and Miraj Medical College, Miraj, all the seats at each medical college are earmarked for the students of the Universities to which the particular medical college is affiliated. For admission to the B. J. Medical College, Poona and Miraj Medical College, Miraj, the seats at the two Medical Colleges, should be pooled together and distributed between the two colleges in the proportion of the number of students registered for the Pre-Professional Examination (Medical) at the Poona University and the Shivaji University, Kolhapur". Rule 3 deals with the qualifications of the candidates and the certificates which they should furnish and we are not concerned with that rule in this petition. Rule 4 (a) lays down that selection of students amongst those who have applied for admissions to a medical college will be on the basis of merit as disclosed in the marks obtained in the Science subjects including additional paper on Physics at the qualifying examinations specified under R. 3(a) of a particular University in Maharashtra State, modified with respect to the career of the student; and it lays down that credit will be given to students having extra-curricular qualifications such as sports qualifications. It says that the same conditions will also govern the selection inter se of candidates for the reserved places at the Colleges. Rule 4(b) gives a preference to sons and daughters or dependents of persons in the defence forces. Rule 4 (c) run as follows:—

"Other Backward Classes as mentioned in the uniform list of Backward Classes for the whole of Maharashtra under G. R. E. and S. W. D. No. CBC 1467-M dated the 13th October 1967, and as amended from time to time will be eligible for admissions against the reserved seats in the Medical College". The percentage of these seats reserved is provided in Rule 4 (d) which runs as under:—

"The percentage of seats reserved at each medical College after excluding the reserved seats for the nominees of the Miraj Medical Centre and D. M. P. qualification holders, will be as follows:—

Category.	Percentage of reservation.
1. Scheduled castes and Nav Buddhas converted from scheduled castes	13 per cent.
2. Scheduled tribes including those outside specified areas	7 per cent.
3. Denotified tribes and Nomadic tribes	4 per cent.
4. Other backward classes	10 per cent.

Reserved seats remaining vacant in any of the above mentioned groups for want of students in that group should go to the other groups even if the percentage in a particular group exceeds the percentage prescribed for that group provided that the total percentage of the seats does not exceed 34 per cent. of the total seats reserved for Backward Classes. These seats should go to the members of the general public only when Backward Class students from any of the above mentioned group are not available to fill up the seats. The above percentage should be inclusive of the numbers of students who get admission on merits and should not be in addition thereto".

It is not necessary to refer to the other rules which deal with certain reservations, provisions in the different Universities, exemption from payment of fees in respect of certain communities, scholarships for lady students, some facilities and other matters relating to admission, as the said provisions are not relevant or referred to in support of this petition and we are not therefore, concerned with them in this case.

3. It is not disputed that as a result of the application of the impugned rules the petitioner was refused admission, although he secured 66.8 per cent. marks in S. S. C. examination in the year 1968 and was declared to have passed the examination in the first class in the Pre-Professional (Medical) examination held in April 1970 by the Poona University obtaining about 66.8 per cent. marks in the examination. As he did not belong to any of the communities for whom seats were reserved, he had to compete with the general students on merits. The scarcity of seats available for students of Poona University and Shivaji University has unfortunately deprived the petitioner of a chance to become a student for the M. B. B. S. course in the B. J. Medical College at Poona.

4. According to the petitioner, the students, who passed in first class (that is to say, those obtaining 60 per cent. and above marks) at the examination held by the Poona University in the year 1970 were 467 in number. The petitioner's number in the order of merits was 151. It is undisputed that 200 seats are available in the year 1970-71 for the first year M. B. B. S. course at the B. J. Medical College, Poona, and out of these two seats have been reserved for students nominated by Government of India. The remaining 198 seats are available to the students of the Poona University and Shivaji University. Thirty-four per cent of the available seats are reserved for scheduled castes, scheduled tribes and other tribes and backward classes as per Rule 4 (d) stated above. The remaining seats available for the general candidates were further allocated between the general students of Poona University and Shivaji University on the basis of the proportion between the number of students registered at the Pre-Professional (Medical) examination in the two Universities in the year 1970. The number of students registered at the Poona University was 2450 and the number of students registered at the Shivaji University was 2039 and as a result of applying the proportion between the said number in the year 1970-71, 59 seats were allocated out of the seats available in the B. J. Medical College for the students passing pre-professional examination from the Shivaji University. The petitioner alleged that only 92 seats remained for the students of the Poona University, who were not belonging to the scheduled castes, scheduled tribes or backward classes. The petitioner's grievance is that because of this allocation of the seat in the B. J. Medical College to the students of the Shivaji University he lost his chance of being admitted to the B. J. Medical College. It is alleged in the petition that in the year 1969, 125 seats were made available for the students of the Poona University, and even a student who got 65 per cent marks in that year in the Poona University i.e., less than the marks obtained by the petitioner, was admitted to the College, whereas as a result of the reduction of the seats available to the students of Poona University in the year 1970-71, he lost his chance of getting himself admitted, even though he got more marks.

5. It is unnecessary to refer to certain other allegations made in connection with the attempts of the petitioner's father and uncle to get information about the rules relating to admission and the statistics with regard to the students of the two Universities seeking admission in the medical colleges, as all the relevant facts are now before us in the form of affidavits in reply and affidavits in rejoinder. It is undisputed that the pooling of the students is going on since 1964, when the Shivaji University was started and the system of pooling is not challenged in the petition. What is challenged by petitioner is the validity of the allocation made in the seats in the B. J. Medical College on the basis of the number of students registered at the Pre-Professional (Medical) examination in the two Universities. It is alleged that Rule 2 quoted above, which directs the allocation on the basis of students so registered is arbitrary, irrational and must be struck down as making a discrimination between the students of the Poona University and the students of Shivaji University without any reasonable or logical nexus with the object of the Government in giving admission to the best students to the medical colleges. Nota Bene 2 in Rule 1 and Rule 4 (d) which provides for reservation of seats for scheduled castes, scheduled tribes and backward classes is challenged on the ground that the percentages fixed for these communities under that rule are arbitrary, that the classification of the backward classes on the basis of castes is in contravention of Article 15 (1) of the Constitution inasmuch as there was nothing to show that the castes mentioned in the list of backward classes were socially and educationally backward within the meaning of clause (4) of Article 15, and that the discrimination made between the students belonging to those communities and other in N. B. 2 to Rule 1 is not a discrimination made for the advancement of the said classes. It is also alleged that an unreasonable discrimination is made between the students of Poona University and the students of other Universities in the State by compelling them to share the seats available in a Medical College affiliated to that University with the students of another University. The petitioner, therefore, prayed for a writ of mandamus or any other appropriate writ, order or direction directing the State of Maharashtra, respondent No. 1 and the Dean B. J. Medical College respondent No. 2, to admit the petitioner for the first year M. B. B. S. course in the B. J. Medical College, Poona, or in the alternative to issue a writ directing the said respondents to consider the question of giving him admission. The Vice-Chancellor of Poona University, Poona was made respondent No. 3 to the petition and the Vice-Chancellor, Shivaji University, Kolhapur was made respondent No. 4. Persons likely to be interested or affected by the result of the petition were joined as respondents Nos. 5 to 24.

6. The petition is resisted by respondents Nos. 1 to 4. On behalf of the State of Maharashtra, reliance is placed on an affidavit in reply filed by Mr. S. T. Vanjari, Under Secretary to the Government of Maharashtra, Urban Development, Public Health and Housing Department and also on the affidavits of (1) Dr. Vishwanath Ganpat Ganla, Dean of the B. J. Medical College, Poona and (2) Mr. V. S. Mathkar, Under Secretary to the Government of Maharashtra, Education, Sports and Social Welfare Department. In the affidavit filed by Mr. Vanjari it is stated that the allocation of seats between the students of the Shivaji University and the Poona University had to be made on account of the circumstances in which these two Universities came into existence and the reservation for the various communities was made on the basis of the proportion of scheduled castes, scheduled tribes and backward classes to the entire population of the Maharashtra State, according to the last census. It is also stated that between the various classes of students to whom seats are allocated according to the rules, admission to the medical colleges is given strictly on the basis of their merits. In the affidavit filed by Mr. Mathkar, it is pointed out that in view of Articles 38 and 46 of the Constitution the policy of the Government of Maharashtra in the field of social welfare and welfare of backward classes is governed by the principles stated in the said articles, viz. to strive to promote the welfare of the people by securing and protecting as effectively as it may, a social order in which justice, social, economic and political, shall inform all the institutions of the national life and the State shall promote with special care the educational and economic interest of the weaker sections of the people. He refers to the classification of backward classes in the State of Maharashtra as (1) the scheduled castes including Navabuddhas (2) scheduled tribes including tribes outside specified areas (3) Nomadic tribes and

"The history of the backward classes is the history of the rigid caste system prevailing in India over the centuries and the evils attending this system. It is common knowledge that many castes in India have remained backward on account of centuries of suppression under which they lived and under which they were denied opportunities of social progress and upliftment. The upliftment of the backward classes was engaging the attention of State even before the advent of independence. A committee under the chairmanship of Mr. O. H. B. Starte, I. C. S. was appointed by the Government of the Province of Bombay to go into the question of the depressed classes and aboriginal tribes. This committee, submitted its report in the year 1930 and made certain recommendations inter alia, about the measures to be adopted for the upliftment of the backward classes. The said committee had prepared a list of backward classes in the Province of Bombay and it was annexed to its report as Appendix No. 2. The said list describes the backward classes by their caste names but it is clear from the said report that the classes named therein are classes which on account of historical reasons, were socially and educationally backward and required a special treatment for the purpose of their upliftment."

He averred that after the coming into force of the Constitution of India, as it was felt that the classification of backward classes on the basis of their castes was not feasible in view of the provisions of Articles 16 (2) and 16 (4), the Government by its resolution No. 490/46, dated November 1, 1950 cancelled the earlier classification of communities as advanced, intermediate and backward classes and prepared a fresh list of backward classes in respect of the entire State of Bombay as it existed then prior to its reorganisation on November 1, 1956. The said list, however, was more or less the same list as prepared by the Starte Committee. After the reorganisation of the former State of Bombay under the States Reorganisation Act, 1956, certain other communities in the areas comprised by the former States of Madhya Pradesh and Hyderabad and States of Saurashtra and Kutch were added to the list. After the formation of the Maharashtra State in 1960, once again the Government contemplated drawing up a uniform list of backward classes applicable throughout the State of Maharashtra so that the backward classes in the State may receive uniform treatment and benefits and accordingly a list was prepared on October 1, 1962 which comprised the scheduled castes, scheduled tribes and backward classes in the districts which are described as Marathawada districts and Vidarbha districts. Again on October 13, 1967 the list was further altered and in a new list containing the names of 185 backward classes was prepared and it is stated that this list was prepared taking into consideration the social and educational backwardness of the various castes. The affidavit further refers to another committee known as the Deshmukh Committee appointed in 1961 to go into the question of reservation for backward classes in the services, which recommended inter alia that percentage reservation for backward classes should be linked to the population statistics of the entire State for State level recruitment and districtwise for district level recruitment. Acting on this recommendation, the Government of Maharashtra in the General Administration Department passed a resolution dated April 9, 1965, whereby after reviewing the Government's previous orders regarding the reservation of vacancies for members of the backward classes and concessions in their favour in the matter of recruitment to the Government services, in the light of the recommendation of the Deshmukh Committee, the Government ordered in modification of the then existing orders, that the reservation of vacancies in the Government services for the backward classes should be as follows:—

|---|--------------|
| (1) Scheduled castes and scheduled castes converted to Buddhism | 13 per cent. |
| (2) Scheduled tribes including those outside specified areas | 7 per cent. |
| (3) Denotified tribes and Nomadic tribes | 4 per cent. |
| (4) Other backward communities | 10 per cent. |

It is, therefore, averred in the affidavit that the percentage adopted by the Government for reservation of vacancies in the Government services for backward classes by the aforesaid resolution was on the basis of the population of the respective categories of backward classes mentioned above, except in the case of the last category, in which case the percentage of reservation was very much lower than that category deserved having regard to its population in the State. Following the very principle, the Government of Maharashtra by its resolution No. EBC 2169/2167-J, dt. July 10, 1969 adopted the same percentage basis for reservation of percentage of seats for backward classes in Government education institutions for all types of courses. The Government further directed that if the reserved seats remained vacant in any of the above mentioned groups for want of students in that group, such seats should go to the other groups even if the percentage prescribed for them is thereby exceeded provided that the total percentage of the seats prescribed for all the backward classes does not exceed 34 per cent. The Government directed that the seats not filled by backward classes should go to the members of the general public only when backward classes from any of the above mentioned groups were not available to fill up those seats. The percentages so reserved included the number of students who got admission on merit. The affidavit explained that it is because of this basis that the percentage relating to admission of these communities was fixed in Rule 4 (d) of the rules relating to admission to Government medical College.

7. Respondent No. 2 filed an affidavit stating that the admissions to that college were made strictly according to the rules prescribed by the Government and according to the merits of the candidates ascertained and determined according to the rules of admission.

8. On behalf of respondent No. 4, Vice Chancellor of Shivaji University, reliance was placed on an affidavit of the Deputy Registrar of that University submitting that the allocation of seats to the students of the Shivaji University was legal and proper and the petition was liable to be dismissed and the petitioner could not make any grievance in respect of the rules framed by the Government.

9. The uncle of the petitioner, one Shankar Vishnu Pandit, filed an affidavit in rejoinder denying submissions made in the affidavits relied on by the respondents and reiterating the contentions made in the petition.

10. It is undisputed that before 1964, the areas at present served by Shivaji University were served by Poona University and the Miraj Medical College at Miraj, which is at present affiliated to Shivaji University, was, prior to 1964, affiliated to Poona University. Thus prior to 1964, even the students, who had passed their qualifying examination from the colleges in the area which is now served by Shivaji University, had to seek admission to the B. J. Medical College at Poona as well as to the Miraj Medical College, and students, who had passed their qualifying examination from the college which is affiliated to Poona University, had to seek admission to the Miraj Medical College as well as the

B. J. Medical College. The Shivaji University Act, 1962, defines the University area as meaning the area specified in the schedule, and the scheduled to the Act described the area as (1) Kolhapur District (2) Ratnagiri District (3) Sangli District (4) Satara District and (5) Sholapur District. After the enactment of the Shivaji University Act, the area of the Poona University, as defined in the Poona University Act, 1948, comprised of (1) Poona District (2) Ahmednagar District (3) Nasik District, (4) Kolaba District (5) Dhulia District (6) Thana District and (7) Jalgaon District. The general rule which was followed by the Government of Maharashtra for admission to the medical colleges was that the students of a University were admitted only to the college, which was the medical college affiliated to that University. In the case of Shivaji University, however, it was found that following the said rule would result in denying opportunities to the students of Shivaji University as it was difficult to increase the number of seats at the Miraj Medical College. It is stated in the affidavit filed by Mr. Vanjari that prior to 1964, the number of seats available to Poona University (ignoring the reservation for the nominees of the Government of India) was 230 of which 200 seats were available at the B. J. Medical College and 30 seats were available at the Miraj Medical College. But in the year 1964 the number of seats in the Miraj Medical College was increased to 60. The Government, therefore considered that after 1964 to limit the opportunities available to the students of Shivaji University to a maximum number of 60 in the Miraj Medical college was not fair to the students of the areas of that University, particularly because it was found that the number of students seeking admission to medical college increased year by year even in that area. The Government was, therefore, compelled to pool together the seats available at the B. J. Medical College and Miraj Medical College from the year in which the Shivaji University started working i.e. 1964, after so pooling the seats available in the two colleges, the Government allotted the seats to the students of Poona University and Shivaji University on the basis of the students registered in the said two Universities respectively for the pre-profession qualifying examination held prior to the first year course in medicine to which admission was to be made.

11. What is challenged in this petition is not the rule regarding the pooling of the seats in the medical colleges at Poona and Miraj but the methods adopted by the Government for allocating the seats between the two Universities on the basis of students registered in the said two Universities, as stated above. Mr. Paranjpe the learned counsel for the petitioner, urged in the first instance that the allocation made on the basis of students so registered for the examination had no nexus with the object of securing the best students available into the medical colleges. According to him, the Government ought to have allocated the seats not on the basis of the number of students registered for the examination but on the basis of the number of students who passed the examination and got the minimum qualification marks of 45 per cent. in the case of other students and 40 per cent. in the case of scheduled caste and other backward class students. He faintly tried to argue, that the method adopted by the Government in allocating the seats was arbitrary and discriminated against the students at Poona University in depriving them of the seats available to them, in a college affiliated to their University, although in respect of other students in the Maharashtra State, the students were entitled to seek admission in the medical colleges affiliated to their respective University.

12. These submissions have to be rejected on the simple ground that the petitioner cannot complain of any discrimination between himself, who is a student of Poona University, and other students of other Universities. The students of two Universities form two distinct classes in view of the separate examinations conducted by the said Universities. The Government of Maharashtra wants to provide fair opportunities to students of the Universities by equitably allotting the seats available at Poona and Miraj. The nature and object of classifying the students into two classes as students of Poona University and Shivaji University cannot be, therefore, assailed as contravening Art. 14 or 15 of the Constitution. The classification is based on intelligible differentia and is reasonable having regard to the existence of these two Universities and their history. The basis adopted by the Government has a relevant connection with the object sought to be achieved by the Government, viz., of allocating certain seats in the Poona B. J. Medical College to the students of Shivaji University because the Government is not in a position to provide more seats in the Miraj Medical College for the time being.

13. The question of admitting the best students on the basis of their merits arises only after the said object of allocation is fulfilled. The petitioner has no right to ask for any relief from this Court on the ground that the allocation so made by the Government of the seats in Poona B. J. Medical College works against him. Poona B. J. Medical College admittedly is a college run by the Government. It is for the Government to lay down the criteria for eligibility. The Government cannot be denied the right to decide from what sources the admission will be made. It is open to them, therefore, to admit the students from Shivaji University into that college, if they find it impossible to give fair opportunity to the students of that University. A somewhat similar question arose in a recent case in Chitra Ghosh v. Union of India, AIR 1970 SC 35 where Mr. Justice Grover speaking for the Court laid down:—

"That essentially is a question of policy and depends inter alia on an overall assessment and survey of the requirement of residents of particular territories and other categories of persons for whom it is essential to provide facilities for medical education. If the sources are properly classified whether on territorial, geographical or other reasonable basis it is not for the courts to interfere with the manner and method of making the classification".

It is clear that the Government of Maharashtra in the present case has taken into consideration the number of students in the two Universities, viz., Poona University and Shivaji University, and has adopted an objective test of determining the proportion of allocation on the basis of students registered for the examinations to be passed for qualifying for the first M. B. B. S. course.

14. Mr. Paranjpe, however, submitted that all those who were registered for the examination may not pass; and all those who pass may not get the qualifying marks; and when all those who get the qualifying marks may not seek admission in the medical college; and, therefore, the number of students registered for the examination cannot be a rational basis for determining the allocation. This contention has no merit. In theory it may be possible to conceive that only those who seek admission on the basis of securing qualifying marks must be taken into consideration for allocation. In practice, however, such a method would result in a great number of difficulties in working out the rule. The allocation of seats has to be made sufficiently in advance of the commencement of the academic year. It is common knowledge that immediately after the results are out, there is a rush for admission to these medical colleges. The college authorities must know in advance how many students of Shivaji University and Poona University have to be admitted and on what basis. It is also possible that the Government has in view the danger of an unhealthy rivalry developing between the two Universities for securing a larger number of seats in the medical colleges which may ultimately result in a fall in the standard of education. It cannot, therefore, be said that the basis adopted by the Government is unreasonable or irrational. It has a rational connection with the object of the Government to allocate certain seats to the students of the Shivaji University in time for the college authorities to know how many students could be admitted to the college and on what basis.

15. The only other ground which was urged by Mr. Paranjpe in support of the petition was that the reservations made for the scheduled castes and scheduled tribes and backward classes on the basis of the proportion of these communities to the population of the State, as stated in the affidavit filed by Mr. Mathkar, was irrational, and further that the classification of the other backward classes on the basis of castes was illegal. He contended that the provision contained in Rule 4 (d) laying down that the reserved seats remaining vacant in any of the reserved group for want of students in that group should go to the other groups of scheduled castes, and scheduled tribes and backward classes, was also unworkable and irrational.

16. We find no substance in any of these contentions. It is possible that some other mode of reserving the seats may be adopted, but it cannot be said that the basis of the proportion of population adopted by the Government of Maharashtra in reserving seats for scheduled castes and scheduled tribes and other backward classes on the basis of the last census is in any manner unreasonable. In the leading case on the subject M. R. Balaji v. State of Mysore, AIR 1963 SC 649 Gajendragadkar, J., as he then was, speaking for the Court laid down the principles as follows, while setting aside an order of the Government of Mysore which resulted in reservation of seats for 68 per cent of population of Mysore State treated as backward classes as plainly inconsistent with Article 15 (4):—

"In our country where social and economic conditions differ from State to State, it would be idle to expect absolute uniformity of approach; but in taking executive action to implement the policy of Art. 15 (4), it is necessary for the States to remember that the policy which is intended to be implemented is the policy which has been declared by Article 46 and the preamble of the Constitution. It is for the attainment of social and economic justice that Art. 15 (4) authorises the making of special provisions for the advancement of the communities there contemplated even if such provisions may be inconsistent with the fundamental rights guaranteed under Art. 15 or 29 (2). The context, therefore, requires that the executive action taken by the State must be based on an objective approach free from all extraneous pressures. The said action is intended to do social and economic justice and must be taken in a manner that justice is and should be done".

Applying the said principles to the facts of the present case, we find that the Government has adopted an objective and just test for determining the proportion of seats to be reserved in the medical colleges.

17. It is further clear from the affidavit filed by Mr. Mathkar that the castes which are classified as other backward classes were so classified originally on the basis of the recommendations of the State Committee which was appointed under a resolution passed by the then Bombay Legislative Council "to enquire into the educational economic and social condition of the Depressed Classes (untouchables) and of the Aboriginal Tribes in the Presidency and to recommend measures for their uplift". That Committee, after considering the state of society in the whole of the then Bombay Presidency, recommended that the backward classes should be divided into depressed classes which would consist of untouchable classes only and the aboriginal and Hill Tribes and other backward classes. As stated in the affidavit of Mr. Mathkar, the classifications had to be revised from time to time due to reorganisation of the States, the merger of States and the recommendations of a committee known as Deshmukh Committee, which, no doubt, was appointed only to report on reservation for backward classes in services. That committee also considered the social and economic conditions as well as the representation in the services of the various communities and recommended the classification, which is adopted by the Government of Maharashtra, into (1) scheduled castes and scheduled castes converted to Buddhism, (2) scheduled tribes including those outside specified areas, (3) denotified tribes and nomadic tribes, and (4) other backward classes. We accept the statement of Mr. Mathkar that this classification is based on a careful consideration of the social and economic conditions of the castes by the Government of Bombay (now Maharashtra). That the Deshmukh Committee recommended that the percentage of reservations for backward classes should be modified and linked to the population statistics of the State; and that this recommendation was substantially implemented by the Government of Maharashtra is not disputed although so far as the other backward classes are concerned, the percentage of reservation for them is less than the proportion of their population to the population of the State.

18. It is clear from the affidavit of Mr. Mathkar that the classification of certain castes as "other backward classes" in the aforesaid list dated October 13, 1967, is made on considering their backward social, economic and educational conditions. This is permitted under Art. 15 (4) of the Constitution. They are some of the castes recognised as "other backward classes" in the report made by the Backward Classes Commission (appointed by the President under Art. 340 of the Constitution in 1953) taking into consideration: (1) their low social position in the traditional castes hierarchy of Hindu Society; (2) lack of general educational advancement among the major section of a caste or community; (3) inadequate or no representation in Government service; (4) inadequate representation in the field of trade, commerce and industry and (5) their economic backwardness and consequent inability to take advantage of the available opportunities as well as the recent trends in their advancement as a result of various measures initiated by Government (vide paras 25, 27 of Chapter V of the Backward Classes Commission Report, 1955). Although the Government has not implemented its recommendations, perhaps in view of the number involved, — the Court can take judicial notice of its contents under Section 57 of the Evidence Act as it is a report submitted by the Commission appointed under Art. 340 of the Constitution and as such, a matter of public history and a document of reference. Apart from this report, however, we are satisfied in the present case from the affidavit of Mr. Mathkar, the State Committee Report and Deshmukh Committee Report that the criterion adopted by the Government of Maharashtra for determining the backwardness of the castes in the said list dated October 13, 1967 as "other backward classes" is their social, economic and educational backwardness similar to the backwardness from which the scheduled castes and scheduled tribes suffer. Hence, Mr. Paranjpe's challenge to the classification as one contravening Art. 15 (1) is futile. Vide Shah, J. para 6 in State of Andhra Pradesh v. P. Sagar, AIR 1968 SC 1379 (1380) and para 4 in Trilokinath Tikur v. State of Jammu and Kashmir, AIR 1969 SC 1; and also Subba Rao, J. (as he then was) paras 15, 18 and 19 in Chitrlekha v. State of Mysore, AIR 1964 SC 1823.

19. Mr. Paranjpe further submitted that since the rest of the population of the State was not concerned with the Shivaji and Poona Universities, it was illogical to adopt the basis of the proportion of these communities to the entire population of the whole State in determining the proportion of seats to be reserved in medical colleges in the areas of Shivaji and Poona Universities. We do not find anything illogical in it. Reservation is permitted under Art. 15 (4) for the backward classes and, perhaps, there is no better basis for such reservation than the proportion of the population of the backward classes to the whole population of the State. It would be totally unreasonable to expect the State to take a separate census of the backward classes population only of the areas of the two Universities or of each of the Universities in the whole State. The contention of Mr. Paranjpe that the rest of the population of the State is not interested in the admissions of the medical colleges at these two Universities has to be rejected because the Government of Maharashtra is certainly justified in adopting a uniform rule of reservation in respect of all parts of the State; and if it has adopted a uniform rule on the basis of the population, we find nothing in it which is irrational or is hit by Article 14 or 15.

20. Mr. Paranjpe next contended that the reservation of the seats to students of these communities was also vitiated by the fact that they were qualified to apply for admission even if they got 40 per cent marks as against the minimum of 45 per cent prescribed for other students and thereby the Government instead of advancing the backward communities was encouraging them to be less advanced than the others. This argument ignores the very purpose for which Article 15 (4) was enacted. The backward communities, who are recognised as such, and the scheduled castes and scheduled tribes have been suffering from social and economic handicaps for centuries and one of the ways by which their conditions can be ameliorated by making students, who get even somewhat lower marks, to be eligible for admission to medical colleges; and this must be considered as a measure in advancement of these backward communities.

21. Similarly, the contention of Mr. Paranjpe that the rule of carrying forward the vacant seats in a particular group to the groups in the backward classes is unworkable, has no merit because, in our opinion, Rule 4 (d) is very practical and reasonable and easy of application. We do not find any difficulty in its working. The said rule is quoted above. It is manifest that the four groups mentioned in the rule are "socially and educationally backward classes of citizens" and "scheduled castes and scheduled tribes" and Art. 15 (4) lays down that nothing in Art. 15 or in clause (2) of Art. 29 shall prevent the State from making any special provision for the advancement of the said classes, castes and tribes. The Government of Maharashtra has made such a special provision in Rule 4 (d) for the four groups mentioned therein. They can be and are given special preferences under Art. 15 (4). Under the rule, 34 per cent seats are reserved for all the four groups together and within the said 34 per cent seats, further special provision is made for filling up vacant seats reserved for any one or more of the four groups by throwing them open to students belonging to the remaining groups. All the four groups form one category of socially and educationally backward citizens. They are to be given preference. Therefore provision is made for filling up vacant seats among the seats reserved for them. The sub-division into the four groups is made obviously only to allocate the reservation to the four groups falling under the one category of socially and educationally backward citizens so that the comparatively brighter students in one group may not keep out the students of the other groups. All this, in our judgment, is permissible under Art. 15 (4) of the Constitution of India and consistent with Art. 46 which requires the State "to promote with special care the educational and economic interests of the weaker sections of the people, and, in particular, of the scheduled castes and scheduled tribes". The petitioner cannot, therefore, challenge Rule 4 (d) on the ground that after reserving seats for each of the groups, it further makes special provision for the benefit of these groups by throwing open the vacant seats in one group for students of other groups or on the ground that vacant seats in any of the four groups should be thrown open to all students on merit without making them again available to students belonging to the said groups.

22. Mr. Paranjpe relied on a decision of the Supreme Court in P. Rajendran v. State of Madras, AIR 1968 SC 1012 and contended that there a district-wise selection was struck down as defeating the object of getting the best students. But there the object was admittedly solely the object of getting the best student on merit. In the present case, the Govt. has not merely the object of getting the best students but also the objects of allocating seats between Shivaji University and Poona University and of reserving seats for scheduled castes, scheduled tribes and backward classes. In our judgment, therefore, there is nothing in the said case which supports the argument of Mr. Paranjpe that the rules framed by the Government of Maharashtra for admission to the medical colleges for the year 1970-71 offend Arts. 14 and 15 of the Constitution.

23. Mr. Desai, the learned Counsel for the Government of Maharashtra, has brought to our notice a judgment of Tarkunde, J. in Special Civil Appln. No. 2767 of 1967 (Bom) where this Court considered, inter alia, the validity of the rules in force in 1967-68 regarding pooling of seats in the medical colleges and held that there was nothing illegal about the pooling of seats and it was pointed out that merely because some students of Poona University who got more marks than the students in the Shivaji University, would be denied an opportunity to join the medical college, the rule of allocation cannot be challenged on the ground of discrimination against the Poona University students. We respectfully agree with the conclusions arrived at there; and Mr. Paranjpe has not challenged the conclusions arrived at by the Division Bench in that case.

24. So far as the present petition is concerned, we find no substance whatsoever in the grounds urged in its support by Mr. Paranjpe and the petition must be, therefore, dismissed.

25. Rule discharged. In the circumstances of the case, no order as to costs.

Petition dismissed.

The ordinary common law cause of action on a contract of indemnity arising only upon damnification and sufferance of loss has not been wiped off by the extra cause of action introduced by the rulings of Chancery and Equity Courts which vest the promisee with a right to call upon the promisor to carry out his obligations by payments to the creditors and third parties and/or by deposits made in Court in anticipation of the actions and proceedings which such creditors and third parties may take against the promisee. (Para 7)

Thus where a purchaser undertook to indemnify a seller against the amount of sales tax that may be levied and the seller was required to pay sales tax, it was permissible for him to call upon the purchaser to pay the amount directly to the authorities concerned.

DP/EP/C586/72/YPB

Since on the failure of the purchaser the seller paid the amount, the cause of action to recover the same arose on the date when he paid the amount and not on the date when he was ordered to pay sales tax. AIR 1967 SC 1315, Followed; AIR 1942 Bom 302 and AIR 1940 Bom 161, Referred to. (Para 8)

JUDGMENT:— This is an appeal on behalf of the original plaintiff from the judgment and decree dated November 16, 1966, of Mr. Judge Kapadia of the City Civil Court, Bombay, whereby the learned Judge tried the issue of limitation as preliminary issue and upon finding that the suit was barred by the Law of Limitation dismissed the same with costs.

2. The relevant facts are as follows:—

3. Between October 11, 1957 and January 3, 1958, the plaintiff had sold and delivered to the defendants certain different goods and had also recovered the price thereof. In the letter dated October 11, 1957, the defendants stated: "In respect of the transactions under your invoice x x x x x dated 25th September 1957 we do hereby indemnify you against any amount of sales tax that may be levied by the authorities with or without any guarantee thereof, as the case may be, as and when charged". Similar letter of indemnity was executed by the defendants on January 3, 1958. There is no dispute between the parties that in respect of the goods sold and delivered by the plaintiff to the defendants during the above period a contract of indemnity in the terms contained in the above letters existed.

4. In connection with the sales tax relating to the goods sold by the plaintiff to the defendants as mentioned above, the sales tax authorities issued an order dated February 28, 1963, calling upon the defendants (plaintiff?) to pay Rs. 3,101.25 by way of sales tax and Rs. 378/- as penalty. The plaintiff called upon the defendants to deposit the amount of tax and penalty, but the defendants failed to do so. An appeal filed by the plaintiff was dismissed on November 12, 1963. The revisional application filed by the plaintiff was dismissed in July 1963. Prior to the institution of the above appeal, between April 27, and July 1, 1963, the plaintiff deposited the aggregate sum of Rs. 3,479.25 with the sales tax authorities. To recover that amount the plaintiff filed the present suit on April 13, 1966. The parties were agreed before the learned Judge below that the claim in suit was governed by the provisions in Article 113 in the Schedule to the Limitation Act of 1963 which runs as follows:—

"113. Any suit for which no period of limitation three years. When the right to sue accrues is provided elsewhere in this Schedule.

Relying upon certain observations of Chagla J. (as he then was) in the case of Gajanan Moreshwar v. Moreshwar Madan, 44 Bom LR 703 = (AIR 1942 Bom 302), the learned Judge below held that in the present case the right to sue had accrued in favour of the plaintiff when the order dated February 28, 1963, demanding and/or levying sales tax and penalty was issued. As three years' period had expired from that date prior to the date of the institution of the suit, he held that the suit was barred and dismissed the same.

5. Mr. Malkani for the plaintiff has submitted that the above finding of the learned Judge is contrary to the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Shanti Swarup v. Munshi Singh, AIR 1967 SC 1315. The effect of the observations of the Supreme Court in this case, according to Mr. Malkani, was such that in the present case the right to sue on the contracts of indemnity between the parties should be held to have accrued to the plaintiff only upon the plaintiff being damaged and suffering loss of the sum of Rs. 3,479.25 by deposit and payment thereof between April 27 and July 1, 1963. He, therefore, submitted that the suit that was filed before expiry of three years from April 27, 1963, was within the prescribed period of three years and was not barred by the Law of Limitation.

6. Mr. Jhaveri for the defendants has submitted that on a true construction of the contracts of indemnity contained in the two letters mentioned above, the plaintiff became entitled to be indemnified immediately upon the levy of the sales tax and penalty. The levy was made by the order dated February 28, 1963. In fact, in accordance with the contracts of indemnity, the plaintiff had called upon the defendants to deposit the amount of the tax and the penalty. The true construction of the contracts of indemnity was that the right to sue accrued in favour of the plaintiff immediately upon the plaintiff receiving the order dated February 28, 1963. In this connection, he relied upon the observations of Chagla, J., in the above-referred case.

7. Now, in connection with the phrase "right to sue accrues" that appears in the third column of Art. 113, one may refer to the contents of Sections 22 and 23 of the Act which relate to continuing breaches and torts and suits for compensation for acts not actionable without special damage. Without quoting the contents of these sections it is sufficient to state that the Law of Limitation has recognised that liabilities for payments of damages and/or compensation may continue to accrue from day to day newly in respect of continuing breaches of contracts and torts. One illustration of a cause of action which may continue to come into existence under a contract from time to time and day to day will be a negative covenant agreed to between purchasers and sellers in deeds of conveyances and between lessors and lessees in the deeds of leases. But this is not the subject in which it is necessary to indulge too deep. It is sufficient to state that a contract of indemnity may be such as may give rise to two and different sorts of claims which may be enforceable in a Court of law. The ordinary common law cause of action on a contract of indemnity did not arise at any date prior to damnification and/or loss that the plaintiff suffered. In other words the cause of action arose only if and when the plaintiff was damaged and suffered losses. Now, it is true that this view of the nature of contracts of indemnity was by the Chancery and/or Equity Courts considered very harsh and not sufficient to carry out the entire and true purpose of such contracts. The common law was by rulings of Chancery and Equity Courts amended and it was held that the promisee in a contract of indemnity was entitled to additional and extra cause of action vesting him with a right to call upon the promisor to carry out his obligations by payments to the creditors and third parties and/or by deposits made in Court in anticipation of the actions and proceedings which such creditors and third parties may take against the promisee in the indemnity contract. The effect of the findings made by the learned Judge below is that the above additional relief which is afforded to a promisee in an indemnity contract by Law established under rulings of the Chancery and Equity Courts was sufficient to make a finding that the cause of action which would have accrued to such promisee only upon being damnified and suffering loss as originally at common law was not a separate cause of action. It appears to me that in spite of the discussion contained in the case of 44 Bom LR 703 = (AIR 1942 Bom 302) there is no justification in holding against the plaintiff-indemnified promisee that a fresh cause of action does not accrue to him under the same contract of indemnity when he is in fact damnified and/or suffers loss. It is true that by the law of indemnity as amended by the rulings of the Chancery and Equity Courts, promisee in an indemnity contract would have a cause of action to claim relief of directions that the promisor do make payment to the third party creditor so that in fact the promisor (promisee?) is never damnified. It is true that in this very connection the promisee may claim relief of deposit of the relevant amount in a Court of law so that the promisee can have the deposited money in hand for payment to the third party creditor. This is a new cause of action created by the rulings of the Chancery Courts. This has not wiped off the common law cause of action vested in a promisee under an indemnity contract for enforcement of obligation on the indemnity contract itself by seeking a direct decree against the promisee (promisor?). To such decree he was entitled at common law only upon damnification and sufferance of loss. This cause of action arises only upon damnification and sufferance of loss. The observations made above are in consonance with the observations of the Supreme Court in the case of AIR 1967 SC 1315 where in paragraph 5, Their Lordships observed:—

"The vendees, in the present case, covenanted to the vendors not only to purchase the property mentioned in the sale deed but also to relieve the vendors from the liability of the mortgages, and in that sense there was an implied contract to indemnify the vendors. The cause of action in such a case arises when the plaintiff-vendors are actually damnified. The mere fact that a mortgage decree has been obtained against the plaintiff is not sufficient to put the statute in motion. In other words, the statute runs not when the event happens which caused the loss but on the actual damnification."

8. In view of the above observations of the Supreme Court, I do not deem it necessary to discuss the observations of Chagla, J., in the case of 44 Bom LR 703 = (AIR 1942 Bom 302) mentioned above as also the contrary statements of law contained in the judgment of Lokur, J. in the case of Shan-kar Nimbaji v. Laxman Supdu, 42 Bom LR 175 = (AIR 1940 Bom 161), which both cases are referred to in the judgment of the learned Judge. In my view, on a true construction of the contracts of indemnity admitted between the parties, it was permissible for the plaintiff to call upon the defendants to pay the amounts claimed in the order dated February 28, 1963, directly to the sales tax authorities. That was because of the additional cause of action afforded by rulings of Courts of Equity. It was, however, permissible for the plaintiff to wait and institute the present suit on the basis of the original cause of action arising at common law upon damnification and sufferance of loss. The plaintiff was for the first time damnified and suffered losses for which he was entitled to be indemnified when he made payments between April 27 and July 1, 1963. The plaintiff's suit was within three years from the date of the above period and accordingly within the time prescribed by Article 113.

9. In the result, the finding of the learned Judge on the question of limitation is set aside. The decree dismissing the suit is set aside. The suit is referred back to the trial Court for further disposal according to law. The defendants will pay costs of this appeal. Order accordingly.

MODY AND CHANDRACHUD, JJ.

Bibi Batool and others, Petitioners v. The Principal Judge, City Civil Court, Bombay and others, Opponents.

Special Civil Appln. Nos. 1116, 1138 of 1966 and O. S. Misc. Petn. No. 478 of 1966, D/- 23-8-1967.

(A) Bombay Municipal Corporation Act (3 of 1888), S. 105-B and Chap. V-A — As amended by Maharashtra Act 14 of 1961 — Constitutionality — Section 105-B and provisions of Chap. V-A do not violate Art. 14 of the Constitution and are valid. (Paras 43, 44)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 14 — Legislation vesting discretion in authority — Guiding principles to test its constitutionality under Art. 14.

(A+B) When a legislation vests discretion in the nature of an option in an authority it would not amount to discrimination if there exist principles which would guide that authority in the exercise of its discretion. Such guiding principles may be specifically stated in the Act itself or they can be gathered from the various provisions of that Act, including its title and preamble or even from the statement of objects and reasons of the Act. Such guiding principles may also be yielded by the surrounding circumstances which existed at the date of the legislation and which occasioned the legislation. Such surrounding circumstances may be gathered from facts of which the Court itself can take judicial notice or from evidence in the form of affidavits. The opinion of the State Government, however, cannot be said to form part of the surrounding circumstances. It cannot, therefore, be legitimately referred to for this purpose.

(Paras 26, 27)

The classification of tenants into tenants of corporation premises and tenants of non-corporation premises in S. 105-B is based on justifiable reason and such classification has rational nexus with the object and policy of the Bombay Act which introduced Chap. V-A. AIR 1967 SC 1581, Applied.

(Para 17)

Section 105-B gives to the commissioner a discretion or option to select one out of the two procedures for recovery of corporation premises, viz. (i) under Chapter V-A which is quasi judicial and (ii) under the general law through ordinary courts. But there are no principles to guide the Commissioner in the exercise of his discretion to resort to one or the other of the two procedures and to pick and choose between occupiers and occupiers of corporation premises.

(Para 28)

The test to judge whether a remedy is more drastic than another or not is whether one remedy is substantially different from the other from the point of view of the incidence of prejudice which may be caused to the parties against whom the proceedings may result in such orders.

(Para 29)

The two procedures available are, however, substantially similar and, therefore, the procedure under Chap. V-A is not more drastic or more prejudicial than the ordinary procedure to be followed in the ordinary courts of law.

(Para 42)

The principle to be applied in such cases is that when there is an option to pick and choose, the existence of both the factors, namely the element of the special procedure being more drastic and the element of lack of guidance, would make the legislation void and violative of Art. 14. But if either of them is absent, so far as the legislation itself is concerned, it would not be violative of Article 14.

(Para 43)

Though there is a lack of guiding principles as the two procedures available under Chap. V-A are substantially similar there is no denial of equality and the impugned provisions do not violate Art. 14. Case law discussed.

(Paras 43, 44)

(C) Precedents — Binding effect of a decision — Does not depend upon whether a particular argument was considered or not, provided that the point with reference to which an argument was subsequently raised was actually decided — (X-Ref:— Civil P. C. (1908), Pre.). AIR 1963 SC 151, Rel. on. (Para 15)

(D) Precedents — Decision based upon two or more independent reasons each of which sufficient to justify final conclusion and decision based on cumulative effect of decision on several points— Distinction between as to binding effect of — (X-Ref:— Civil P. C. (1908), Pre.).

Where a decision has been reached for two independent reasons, either of which taken individually was sufficient by itself to justify the final conclusion, it cannot be urged that the decision on one of the reasons is the only or main factor leading to the conclusion and the decision on the other is in the nature of obiter. In that class of cases the decision on each of the two points being capable of leading to the conclusion actually reached in that case would lay down a ratio and such ratio on each of the two points would be binding on any lower court. In the other class of cases would fall a final conclusion arrived at as a result of the decisions on several points, the conclusion being based on the cumulative effect of the decisions on each of those points in that case. The final conclusion would in that class of cases rest on the cumulative support of the decisions on each of the points and such a conclusion would serve as a precedent and be of binding effect only in those cases where all such reasons cumulatively exist, but in cases where any of those reasons is absent, though the other reasons be present it would be open to the Court to assess the effect of the absence of any particular reason or reasons and after assigning due effect to them to reach its own conclusion. - MODY, J.:— Orders of eviction have been passed against the petitioners in these three petitions in respect of "corporation premises" under the special provisions contained in Chap. V-A of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act, 1888. The petitioners in two of the three petitions have filed their petitions under Art. 227 of the Constitution of India and the petitioner in the third petition has filed its petition under Art. 226 challenging the validity of the order of eviction passed against each of them. Various grounds have been taken in each of the three petitions in support of the challenge, but all the three petitions raise one common question which is a question of law. The common question is whether the provisions of Chapter V-A of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act, and particularly Section 105-B thereof, violate Arts. 14 and 19 (1) (f) and (g) of the Constitution and are therefore void. Counsel in all the three petitions stated that they were agreed that the above question be tried as a preliminary point in all these three matters as a common question and that only thereafter each of the three matters be dealt with separately if and to the extent it may be necessary.

2. The provisions of Chapter V-A were introduced in the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act by a Maharashtra Act, being Act No. XIV of 1961, as an amendment to the main Act. Sec. 105-A contains the definitions of "Commissioner", "corporation premises" and "unauthorised occupation in relation to any corporation premises". These definitions are not material for the purpose of this case. Section 105-B contains six sub-sections all of which are not relevant. Sub-sections (1) and (2) are very material and they read as follows:—

"105-B. (1) Where the Commissioner is satisfied—

(a) that the person authorised to occupy any Corporation premises has, whether before or after the commencement of the Bombay Municipal Corporation (Amendment) Act, 1960,—

(i) not paid for a period of more than two months, the rent or taxes lawfully due from him in respect of such premises; or

(ii) sub-let, contrary to the terms or conditions of his occupation, the whole or any part of such premises; or

(iii) committed, or is committing, such acts of waste as are likely to diminish materially the value or impair substantially the utility, of the premises; or

(iv) otherwise acted in contravention of any of the terms, express or implied, under which he is authorised to occupy such premises;

(b) that any person is in unauthorised occupation of any corporation premises;

(c) that any corporation premises in the occupation of any person are required by the corporation in the public interest, the Commissioner may notwithstanding anything contained in any law for the time being in force, by notice (served by post or by affixing a copy of it on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of such premises, or in such other manner as may be provided for by regulations, order that that person, as well as any other person who may be in occupation of the whole or any part of the premises, shall vacate them within one month of the date of the service of the notice.

(2) Before an order under sub-section (1) is made against any person, the Commissioner shall issue, in the manner hereinafter provided, a notice in writing calling upon all persons concerned to show cause why an order of eviction should not be made.

The notice shall,—

(a) specify the grounds on which the order of eviction is proposed to be made and

(b) require all persons concerned, that is to say, all persons who are or may be in occupation of, or claim interest in, the corporation premises to show cause against the proposed order, on or before such date as is specified in the notice. If such person makes an application to the Commissioner for the extension of the period specified in the notice, the Commissioner may grant the same on such terms as to payment and recovery of the amount claimed in the notice, as he deems fit.

Any written statement put in by any person and documents produced, in pursuance of the notice, shall be filed with the record of the case, and such person shall be entitled to appear before the Commissioner by Advocate, attorney or pleader.

The notice to be served under this sub-section shall be served in the manner provided for the service of a notice under sub-section (1); and thereupon the notice shall be deemed to have been duly given to all persons concerned."

3. These provisions indicate that the Commissioner is to be satisfied as mentioned therein at two stages, the first stage is before he issues a show cause notice and the second is before he makes his final order of eviction.

The first satisfaction is a mere prima facie satisfaction, arrived at ex parte, on such material as is then placed before him. The only purpose or object for providing for such satisfaction is to prevent him from issuing a show cause notice wantonly or out of caprice. The final satisfaction however is to be reached after duly considering all the material placed before him as a result of the inquiry held by him after notice to the occupier of corporation premises concerned. In the decision of this case before us what is material is this final satisfaction and it is this final satisfaction to which reference will be made in this judgment.

4. Sub-section (3) of S. 105-B empowers the Commissioner to evict a person who refuses or fails to comply with an order made under sub-s. (1). Sub-s. (6) empowers the Commissioner to cancel an order made by him under sub-s. (1) if the person against whom the order has been made, vacates the premises or complies with certain terms of the order as more specifically mentioned in sub-s. (6).

5. Section 105-E reads as under: "The Commissioner shall, for the purpose of holding any Enquiry under this Act, have the same powers as are vested in a civil court under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, when trying a suit, in respect of the following matters namely:—

(a) summoning and enforcing the attendance of any person and examining him on oath;

(b) requiring the discovery and production of documents;

(c) any other matter which may be prescribed by regulations made under Section 105-H".

6. Sub-section (1) of S. 105-F provides that an appeal shall lie from every order of the Commissioner made in respect of any corporation premises, under Section 105-B or S. 105-C, to an appellate officer who shall be the Principal Judge of the City Civil Court of Bombay or such other judicial officer in Greater Bombay of not less than ten years' standing, as the principal Judge may designate in this behalf. Sub-section (2) provides a period of thirty days for filing an appeal from an order under Sec. 105-B or S. 105-C; the period to be calculated as mentioned in that sub-section. The proviso to that sub-section empowers the appellate officer to entertain the appeal after the expiry of the said period of thirty days if he is satisfied that the appellant was prevented by sufficient cause from filing the appeal in time. Sub-section (4) provides that every appeal shall be disposed of by the appellate officer as expeditiously as possible.

7. Section 105-G provides that save as otherwise expressly provided in this Chapter, every order made by the Commissioner or the appellate officer under that Chapter shall be final, and shall not be called in question in any original suit, application or execution proceeding.

8. Although the common question relates to a challenge under Art. 19 (1) (f) & (g), no contention has been advanced in respect of the same. The contention about the violation of Art. 14 has been pressed. In support of the contention that Section 105-B violates Art. 14, two main contentions have been urged. The first contention is that Section 105-B differentiates between persons in possession or occupation of corporation premises and persons in possession or occupation of non-corporation premises, that is to say, premises other than the Corporation premises, and that there is no valid basis for making such differentiation. The second contention is that even assuming that there is a valid basis for making such differentiation, there is discrimination inter se, i. e., within the class of persons in possession or occupation of corporation premises because of three reasons. The first reason is that Section 105-B gave to the Commissioner a discretion or option to select one out of two procedures for recovery of corporation premises, the two procedures being the one under Chap. V-A and the other under the general law through ordinary courts, the two procedures being alternative and not substitutive. The second reason is that the procedure for recovery of corporation premises under Chap. V-A is more drastic and more prejudicial than that under the general law. And the third reason is that the discretion so given to the Commissioner is an unguided and unfettered discretion of an executive officer.

9. As regards the first contention, Mr. Setalvad, the learned Counsel for the State, contended that a differentiation has been made between persons in possession and occupation of corporation premises on the one hand and persons in possession and occupation of non-corporation premises on the other, but that the differentiation has been made on a valid basis, the classification having been validly made. As regards the second contention he did not dispute the first reason stated by Mr. Sorabji, the learned Counsel for some of the petitioners. He, however, disputed the second and the third reasons. As regards the second reason he contended that the alternative procedure under Chap. V-A is not more drastic or more prejudicial to the person against whom it is adopted as compared with the procedure under the general law and followed in the ordinary courts of law. As regards the third reason he contended that the discretion given to the Commissioner is not unguided or unfettered. He contended that the object and purpose of introducing Chap. V-A by the Maharashtra Act XIV of 1961 and the policy underlying the provisions of Chap. V-A is to provide for speedier recovery of corporation premises and that the policy furnishes guidance to the Commissioner in the exercise of his discretion in selecting one out of the two procedures. He contended that the object and policy is disclosed by the provisions of Chap. V-A itself, the Statement of Objects and Reasons in connection with the Maharashtra Act XIV of 1961 and the affidavit in reply filed on behalf of the State. He contended that in view of this object and policy a condition must be read as it were under Section 105-B to the effect that the Commissioner shall adopt the special procedure under Chapter V-A if he is satisfied that speedier recovery of Corporation premises is necessary in a particular case.

10. The provisions of Chap. V-A clearly show — and it is not at all disputed before us — that the special procedure provided for under Chap. V-A is a quasi-judicial and principles of natural justice would apply to it.

11. In the case of the Northern India Caterers Private Ltd. v. State of Punjab, being Civil Appeal No. 1101 of 1965, which was decided by the Supreme Court by its judgment dated 4-4-1967 (reported in AIR 1967 SC 1581), which Judgment is not yet reported, Section 5 of the Punjab Public Premises and Land (Eviction and Rent Recovery) Act, XXXI of 1959, was held to be violative of Art. 14. The petitioners before us contend that material provisions of the Punjab Act are substantially similar to those of Chapter VA and that therefore we must hold that Section 105-B also violates Article 14 and is therefore void. It is really because of that judgment that the above common question is being tried by us as a preliminary point. For arriving at a correct assessment of the effect of that Supreme Court Judgment in deciding the point raised before us it is necessary to first refer to the material provisions of the Punjab Act.

12. The preamble of the Punjab Act states that it was passed to provide for eviction of unauthorised occupants from public premises and for certain incidental matters. Section 2 (e) defines "public premises" and, briefly stated, they mean premises belonging to the State Government, District Board, Municipal Committee, notified area committee or panchayat. Section 3 provides that a person shall be deemed to be in unauthorised occupation of any public premises if he falls within the various categories mentioned in that section. A comparison of Section 3 of the Punjab Act and Section 105-B, sub-section (1), of the Bombay Act shows that their provisions are similar in all material respects. As a matter of fact, there is no dispute that they are materially similar. Section 4 provides that if the Collector is of opinion that any person is in unauthorised occupation of public premises and that he should be evicted, he shall issue a notice in writing calling upon such person to show cause why an order of eviction should not be made against him and that the notice shall specify the grounds on which the order of eviction is proposed to be made and require all persons concerned to show cause against the proposed order within the time specified in the section. The provisions of sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 4 of the Punjab Act are materially similar to those of sub-section (2) of Section 105-B of the Bombay Act. Section 5 of the Punjab Act provides that if, after considering the cause, if any, shown and the evidence produced by such person and after giving him a reasonable opportunity of being heard, the Collector is satisfied that the public premises are in unauthorised occupation, he may make an order of eviction for reasons to be recorded therein. This provision in the Punjab Act is materially similar to the corresponding provision contained in the Bombay Act, there being a few minor differences. For example, the words "for reasons to be recorded therein" occurring in the Punjab Act do not find place in the Bombay Act.

Sub-section (2) of Section 5 and sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 6 and Section 7 of the Punjab Act materially correspond to sub-sections (3), (4) and (5) of Section 105-B and Section 105-C of the Bombay Act. The provisions of Section 8 of the Punjab Act are identical with those of Section 105-E of the Bombay Act. Section 9 of the Punjab Act provides for an appeal to the Commissioner from every order of the Collector made under Section 5 or Section 7. The other provisions about appeal contained in Section 9 of the Punjab Act are materially similar to the corresponding provisions contained in Section 105-F of the Bombay Act. The provisions of Sections 10 and 12 of the Punjab Act are materially similar to those of Sections 105-G and 105-H of the Bombay Act. Section 11 of the Punjab Act provides for protection of action taken in good faith under that Act. The provisions of that section are not material to the question which arises before us.

13. A comparison of the provisions of the two Acts show that a material difference exists between them only on two points. Sub-section (2) of Section 105-B specifically provides that the person against whom the proceedings are taken under that section shall be entitled to appear before the Collector by advocate, attorney or pleader. There is no such specific provision in the Punjab Act. The other point is that the Punjab Act provides for an appeal against the order of the Collector to the Commissioner who also is an executive officer, whereas Sec. 105-F provides for an appeal against the order of the Municipal Commissioner to a judicial officer. The judicial officer provided for is a senior and experienced judicial officer because the section provides that the appeal shall lie to the Principal Judge of the City Civil Court of Bombay or such other judicial officer in Greater Bombay of not less than ten years' standing as the Principal Judge may designate.

14. The said Northern India case was heard by a Bench of five Judges of the Supreme Court and decided by a majority of three Judges who held Section 5 to be void. We will refer to the Judgment of the majority delivered by Shelat, J. The Judgment shows that in that case contentions similar to the two contentions raised before us of discrimination by classification and of discretion inter se the class of persons similarly situated were urged. Because of the rival contentions urged before us about the effect of that Judgment on the point to be decided by us, it is necessary to refer to that judgment in some detail. The Judgment first refers to the Statement of Objects and Reasons. It states that the objects and reasons for the enactment of the Punjab Act were that there was no provision in the Land Revenue Code or in any other Act providing for summary removal of unauthorised encroachments or occupation of Government, Nazul and other specified properties that the only procedure available to Government was to sue the party concerned in a Civil Court which was a cumbersome procedure involving delay and that therefore to keep all Government owned lands free from encroachments and unlawful possessions it was necessary to provide a speedy machinery. The Judgment then refers to the various provisions of the Act to which we have already referred. It then considers the contention urged in that case that the special provisions for eviction under the Punjab Act impliedly repealed the Government's ordinary remedy for eviction under the ordinary law and negatives it. There is no such contention before us. It then considers the contention which was of the nature of the first contention before us as to whether the classification between public premises and other than public premises was valid. In so doing the Judgment, refers to the Statement of Objects and Reasons as indicating that the Act was passed, inter alia, to provide a speedier machinery for eviction of unauthorised occupants from public properties as against lengthy proceedings under the ordinary law of eviction involving delay. In discussing this point about classification the Judgment uses phrases and words like "It is possible to say" and "Assuming" which would show that the statements in the Judgments were made as an expression of only a prima facie opinion that the differentiation and classification was valid but without expressly so deciding it. The Judgment indicates that it was the prima facie opinion of the Supreme Court that the segregation of tenants of public properties and premises from the tenants of private properties was based on justifiable reason and that such segregation had a rational nexus with the object and policy of the Act. The Judgment then proceeds to consider the second head of attack on the ground of discrimination inter se the tenants and occupants of Government premises. The Judgment considers certain previous Judgments of the Supreme Court and states that the principle which emerges from those decisions is that discrimination would result if there are two available procedures one more drastic or prejudicial to the party concerned than the other and which can be applied at the arbitrary will of the authority entrusted with such discretion. The Judgment holds, firstly, that under Section 5 of the Punjab Act the Collector has a discretion or option to select one of two remedies, the one being under the Code of Civil Procedure and the other being under Section 5. Secondly, the Judgment then reaches a conclusion that the remedy provided under Sections 4 and 5 was more drastic than that of the ordinary remedy under the Code of Civil Procedure. We reproduce the words material in this connection:—

"There can be no doubt that if the Collector were to proceed under Sections 4 and 5, the remedy is drastic, for a mere opinion by him that a person is in unauthorised occupation authorises him to issue a show cause notice and his satisfaction under Section 5 is sufficient for him to pass an order of eviction and then to recover under Section 7 rent in arrears and damages which he may assess in respect of such premises as arrears of land revenue" and.

"The procedure under Section 5 is obviously more drastic and prejudicial than the one under the Civil Procedure Code where the litigant can get the benefit of a trial by an ordinary court dealing with the ordinary law of the land with the right of appeal, revision, etc. as against the person who is proceeded against under Section 5 of the Act as his case would be disposed of by an executive officer of the Government, whose decision rests on his mere satisfaction, subject no doubt to an appeal, but before another executive officer, viz., the Commissioner."

The Judgment also reaches the third conclusion that Section 5 does not lay down any guiding principle or policy under which the Collector has to decide in which cases he should follow one or the other procedure and, therefore, the choice is entirely left to his arbitrary will. It also finds in that connection that there can be no doubt that Section 5 confers an additional remedy over and above the remedy by way of suit and that by providing two alternative remedies to the Government and leaving it to the unguided discretion of the Collector to resort to one or the other and to pick and choose some of those in occupation of public properties and premises for the application of the more drastic procedure under Section 5, that section has lent itself open to the charge of discrimination and as being violative of Art. 14. The Judgment, in consequence, declared Section 5 to be void as it manifestly violated the right of equality guaranteed by Article 14.

15. Mr. Sorabji once contended that the Supreme Court Judgment is "binding" on us. Now we are not dealing with the Punjab Act, but with another piece of legislation. This case, therefore, necessitates an examination of the provisions of the Bombay Legislation, an examination whether the procedure under Chapter V-A is more drastic, an examination of what the object and policy of the Bombay legislation is and whether it furnishes any guidance for the exercise of a discretion by the Commissioner and then consider what is the effect of the decision in the case of the Northern India Caterers on the contentions before us relating to the Bombay legislation. As we are considering a piece of legislation different from that considered by the Supreme Court, it would be the ratio and reasoning of the Supreme Court Judgment which would be binding on us. We must, therefore, examine the provisions of the Bombay Legislation and ascertain whether the provisions of the two pieces of legislation are identical or similar or in any way different. If there is no material difference, we would be bound by the Supreme Court Judgment and must hold the Bombay legislation void by way of analogy. If, however, there is any material difference we will have to consider to what extent, if at all it will affect the application of the ratio and reasoning of the Judgment in the case of the Northern India Caterers to the case before us. Mr. Sorabji invited our attention to the decision in three cases in support of his contention that under Article 14 of the Constitution the law declared by the Supreme Court is binding on the High Courts even if some aspect or some argument has not been considered by the Supreme Court. The three Judgments he referred to were in Sharda Prasad v. A. G. of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1955 All 496, Commr. of Income-tax v. Man Mal Uttam Chand, (1961) 42 ITR 203 (All) and Somawanti v. State of Punjab, AIR 1963 SC 151.

As the last Judgment is that of the Supreme Court it is not necessary to refer to the two earlier Judgments which are of the High Courts. The Judgment of the Supreme Court in Somawanti's case, AIR 1963 SC 151 lays down that the binding effect of a decision does not depend upon whether a particular argument was considered or not provided that the point with reference to which an argument was subsequently advanced was actually decided. We will bear this principle in mind and refer to it at the appropriate time when that point arises during the course of our Judgment.

16. The Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, being Act 57 of 1947, gives special protection to tenants, inter alia, of premises situated within the area of Greater Bombay. Section 4 of that Act, however, excludes the application of its provisions to any premises belonging inter alia, to a local authority, which would include the Bombay Municipal Corporation. In the case of Baburao Shantaram More v. Bombay Housing Board 1954 SCR 572 = (AIR 1954 SC 153), Section 4 was challenged as being ultra vires of Article 14 of the Constitution on the ground that it discriminated against tenants of properties belonging to Government or local authority, in that such tenants were denied the benefits of the Bombay Rent Act which were available to all other tenants in Bombay. That challenge was repelled by the Supreme Court in that Judgment on the ground that the two classes of tenants were not by force of circumstances placed on equal footing and the tenants of Government or local authority would not therefore complain of any denial of equality before the law or equal protection of the law and that there was no real discrimination, because the two classes were not similarly situated. In that case the classification of tenants into those of properties belonging to Government or local authority and of those of properties belonging to persons other than the Government or local authority was held not to be discriminatory for the purposes of the Bombay Rent Act.

17. In the case of the Northern India Caterers, Civil Appeal No. 1101 of 1965 D/- 4-4-1967 = (Reported in AIR 1967 SC 1581) the Supreme Court has reiterated that the two tests for a valid classification are that it must be founded on an intelligible differentia which distinguishes those who are grouped together from the others and that that differentia must have a rational relation to the objects sought to be achieved by the Act and that when, therefore an enactment is challenged on the ground of discrimination, the Court must first ascertain the object sought to be achieved by the legislature and then apply the two tests. In that case the Supreme Court was considering the Punjab Act the provisions of which for the purpose of deciding as to classification are practically similar to those of Chapter V-A of the Bombay Act. The Supreme Court has, as stated earlier, not finally decided the point about classification, but it has expressed an opinion that it is possible to say that in making the classification Section 5 of the Punjab Act did not violate the fundamental right guaranteed by Article 14. That opinion having been expressed on a parallel legislation is entitled to the highest respect. In expressing that opinion the Supreme Court considered the Objects and Reasons and the Preamble of the Punjab Act, and reached the conclusion that that Act was passed to provide for eviction of unauthorised occupants from public properties and premises, and to keep such properties free from encroachment and unlawful possession and to provide a speedier machinery for that purpose as against the lengthy proceedings under the ordinary law of eviction involving delay. The Judgment further states that it is possible to say that there is an intelligible differentia between the two classes of occupiers and that they are similarly situated in that in the case of public properties and premises the members of the public have a vital interest and are interested in seeing that such properties and premises are freed from encroachment and unauthorised occupation as speedily as possible. It then states that it is also possible to contend that such classification is justified in that it is in the interest of the public that speedy recovery of rents and speedy eviction of unauthorised occupiers is made possible through the instrumentality of a speedier procedure instead of the elaborate procedure by way of suit involving both expense and delay. The Statement of Objects and Reasons in respect of the Maharashtra Act XIV of 1961 and the Preamble of that Act is, for the present purposes, very similar to that of the Punjab Act. The above reasoning of the Supreme Court, therefore, applies in full force to the case before us. We therefore hold that the classification of tenants into tenants of corporation premises and tenants of non-corporation premises is based on justifiable reason and that such classification has rational nexus with the object and policy of the Bombay Act which introduced Chapter V-A. We have not dealt with this point in greater detail, firstly because of the opinion expressed by the Supreme Court in the Northern India Caterers' case and as the reasons stated in that case as the basis of that opinion exist in our case and secondly because the position itself is so clear that Mr. Sorabji, though he did not give up this contention argued it very briefly and it appeared to us very feebly.

18. That takes us to the second contention urged by Mr. Sorabji. As regards Mr. Sorabji's argument in respect of that contention, there is no dispute that Section 105-B confers upon the Commissioner a discretion or option to select between two procedures, the two procedures being alternative and substitutive.

19. The second argument of Mr. Sorabji necessitates a consideration whether that discretion of the Commissioner is unguided and unfettered. Mr. Setalvad has contended that the guiding principles for the exercise of the discretion are to be gathered from the object and the purpose of the amending Act and the contents of Chapter V-A itself. Before turning to the material on which he based this argument, it is necessary to bear in mind the principles of law relevant to this contention. Mr. Setalvad has contended that the guiding principle is the necessity of a speedier trial in each case falling under Section 105-B.

20. The first case relied upon by Mr. Sorabji is that of State of West Bengal v. Anwar Ali Sarkar, (1952) SCR 284 = (AIR 1952 SC 75). In that case the validity of the West Bengal Special Courts Act was challenged on the ground that it contravened Article 14. The title of that Act, as also its Preamble, specifically stated that the Act was to provide for speedier trial of certain offences. The Supreme Court held that the necessity of a speedier trial was too vague, uncertain and elusive a criterion to form a rational basis for discrimination and that the necessity of speedier trial may be the object which the legislation had in view or that it may be the occasion for making the enactment. (See for example the Judgment of Mukherjee, J. at page 316 of the Report and of Mahajan J. at page 314 of the Report). Shortly thereafter a similar point arose before the Supreme Court in the case of Kathi Raning Rawat v. State of Saurashtra reported in 1952 SCR 435 = (AIR 1952 SC 123). In that case the Saurashtra State Public Safety (Third Amendment) Ordinance, which empowered the State to constitute special Courts to try special classes of offences mentioned in that Ordinance, was challenged as violative of Article 14. The Preamble of the Act showed that it was passed "to provide for public safety, maintenance of public order and preservation of peace and tranquillity in the State of Saurashtra". It was held in that case that the mere mention of speedier trial as the object of the Act did not cure the defect of a class being picked out and subjected to a special procedure because the expression "speedier trial" standing by itself provided no rational basis for classification. The Court, however, found from the affidavit filed in that case on behalf of the State that when the Ordinance was passed an alarming lawlessness prevailed in some of the districts within the State, that there were gangs of dacoits operating in different places and their number began to increase gradually and that the ordinary law was found to be insufficient to cope with nefarious activities of those criminal gangs. The Court held that in the light of the circumstances prevailing at the date when the Ordinance was promulgated the necessity of speedier trial Court be the guiding principle in exercising the discretion that the particular cases in which the persons were charged with offences covered by the Ordinance should be referred by the Government to the Special Courts under that Act. The test of the necessity of speedier trial as furnishing guidance in exercise of discretion was again considered by the Supreme Court in Kedar Nath Baioria v. State of West Bengal, 1954 SCR 30 = (AIR 1953 SC 404). That case concerned the challenge to the validity of the West Bengal Criminal Law Amendment (Special Courts) Act, 1949, which empowered the Provincial Government to constitute special Courts of criminal jurisdiction for special areas and to appoint Special Judges to preside over such Courts and to allot cases for trial to the Special Judges in respect of the charges for the offences specified in the Schedule to that Act. In that case the title and the Preamble of the Act showed that the Act was to provide for the more speedy trial and more effective punishment of certain offences. The Court considered various earlier Judgments of that Court, including the cases of Anwar Ali Sarkar, 1952 SCR 284 = (AIR 1952 SC 75) and Kathi Raning Rawat, 1952 SCR 435 = (AIR 1952 SC 123) and then made the following observations:—

"Whether an enactment providing for special procedure for the trial of certain offences is or is not discriminatory and violative of Article 14 must be determined in each case as it arises, for, no general rule applicable to all cases can safely be laid down. A practical assessment of the operation of the law in the particular circumstances is necessary. There are to be found cases on each side of the line; Anwar Ali Sarkar's case, 1952 SCR 284 = (AIR 1952 SC 75) is an authority on one side; the Saurashtra case is on the other. Apart from the dicta here and there in the course of the judgments delivered in these cases and the decisions based on them, there is no real conflict of principle involved in them."

As regards Anwar Ali Sarkar's case, 1952 SCR 284 = (AIR 1952 SC 75) it explained that no principle or policy was disclosed in the legislation challenged in that case, to guide the exercise of discretion by the Government and all that was relied upon as indicative of a guiding principle for selection was the object disclosed in the Preamble of the West Bengal Act, of providing for the speedier trial of certain offences and it was for that reason that it was held to be too indefinite and vague to constitute a reasonable basis for classification.

21. In Asgarali Nazarali Singaporewalla v. State of Bombay, 1957 SCR

678 = (AIR 1957 SC 503) the Act impugned was the Criminal Law Amendment Act (XLVI of 1952) which provided for trial of certain offences by Special Judges and it was held that the Act did not violate Article 14 of the Constitution because not only that the Preamble of the Act showed that it was enacted for providing a more speedy trial of certain offences but also that from material gathered from outside the Act it could be gathered that the circumstances providing when the Act was passed were that bribery and corruption was rampant and the need for weeding them out was urgently felt and it was necessary to enact measures for the purpose of eliminating all possible delay in bringing the offenders to book and that it was with that end in view that provisions were enacted in the impugned Act for speedier trial of those offences by the appointment of Special Judges. This case re-affirms the Principle laid down in the case of Kedar Nath Baioria 1954 SCR 30 = (AIR 1953 SC 404) that if in addition to the test of speedier trial there are other circumstances, the necessity for speedier trial would furnish a test for the exercise of discretion in selecting one or the other Court.

22. In Jyoti Pershad v. Union Territory of Delhi, AIR 1961 SC. 1602, the Supreme Court has by way of a summary laid down four propositions which are relevant in considering an attack on a piece of legislation made on the ground of violation of Article 14. Only the third and the fourth propositions are relevant for our purpose and they are stated at page 1609 of the Report as follows:—

"(3). It is manifest that the above rule would not apply to cases where the legislature lays down the policy and indicates the rule or the line of action which should serve as a guidance to the authorities where such guidance is expressed in the statutory provision conferring the power, no question of violation of Art. 14 could arise, unless it be that the rules themselves or the policy indicated lay down different rules to be applied to persons or things similarly situated. Even where such is not the case, there might be a transgression by the authority of the limits laid down or an abuse of power, but the actual order would be set aside in appropriate proceedings not so much on the ground of a violation of Art. 14, but as really being beyond its power.

(4). It is not, however, essential for the legislation to comply with the rule as to equal protection, that the rules for the guidance of the designated authority.

which is to exercise the power or which is vested with the discretion, should be laid down in express terms in the statutory provision itself."

Proposition 3 applies when the guidance is expressed in the statutory provision itself proposition 4 states that such guidance may not be laid down in express terms in the statute itself. The conclusion is, as stated later in that judgment that such guidance can be obtained from and afforded by the preamble read in the light of the surrounding circumstances which necessitated the legislation. That judgment shows that such surrounding circumstances can be ascertained from well-known facts of which the Court might take judicial notice or of which it is apprised by evidence produced before the Court in the form of affidavits. This statement makes it clear that the function of such affidavits is to produce evidence of facts which can go to make up the surrounding circumstances.

In P. J. Irani v State of Madras, AIR 1961 SC 1731, the Act impugned therein vested a discretionary power in the Government to exempt any building or class of buildings from all or of the provisions of the Act and the Act was because of that reason challenged being violative of Article 14. That decision shows that guidance in the exercise of such discretion can be furnished by the purpose of that Act as also from the preamble and all the provisions of the Act. It further shows that it may not be possible for the statute itself to contemplate every contingency and make specific provision therefor in the enactment that particular cases should or should not be exempted and it was for that reason that the power of exemption in general terms was conferred on the State Government which however could be used not for the purpose of discriminating between tenant and tenant, but in order to further the policy and purpose of the Act which was, in the context of that case to prevent unreasonable eviction of tenant and that in such cases the vesting of a discretion would not offend against the provisions of Article 14.

23. The Judgment of the Supreme Court in Ram Sarup v. Union of India, AIR 1965 SC 247, shows that the policy and the purpose of the Act can be gathered from the enactment which is impugned as a whole as violative of Article 14 and the policy of that Act so gathered would serve as guiding principles in the exercise of the discretion vested under the impugned Act.

24. Another case relied upon was that of M/S. Devi Das Gopal Krishnan v. State of Punjab cases, being Civil Appeals

Nos. 526, 527 and 529 of 1966, and certain others decided by a common Judgment of the Supreme Court D/- 10-4-1967, which has not yet been reported (Since reported in AIR 1957 SC 1895). That case was concerned with a challenge to a piece of legislation on the ground of excessive delegation, but the principle laid down therein is equally useful in considering a challenge under Art. 14 of the Constitution. It reiterates that for a statute to effectively withstand that challenge, it must give guidance to the authority in whom discretion is vested, but that whether such guidance is given or not much depends upon the provisions of a particular Act and that merely because a statute defines the purpose or the purpose for which a statutory authority was constituted and vests a discretion in it, it could not be said that the statute necessarily contains the necessary guidance because it will depend upon the provisions of the statute itself.

25. We may last refer to the said Northern India Caterers Case Civil Appeal No. 1101 of 1965 D/- 4-4-1967 = (reported in AIR 1967 SC 1581) in which the Supreme Court expressed its opinion about classification by referring to the Preamble and the Statement of Objects and Reasons of the Act.

26. The conclusion to be drawn from these cases is that when a legislation vests discretion in the nature of an option in an authority it would not amount to discrimination if there exist principles which would guide that authority in the exercise of its discretion. Such guiding principles may be specifically stated in the Act itself or they can be gathered from the various provisions of that Act, including its title and preamble or even from the Statement of Objects and Reasons of the Act. Such guiding principles may also be yielded by the surrounding circumstances which existed at the date of the legislation and which occasioned the legislation. It should be borne in mind that even when the same object has been stated in the preamble of two different Acts the presence or absence of different circumstances may lead to different conclusions as has been specifically so stated in the cases of Kedar Nath Bajoria 1954 SCR 30 = (AIR 1953 SC 404) and Jyoti Pershad (1962) 2 SCR 125 = (AIR 1961 SC 1602). Mr. Sorabji as well as Mr. Setalvad had drawn our attention to various passages occurring in the Judgments of the above cases and tried to show how one or the other case or the remarks made in the Judgments therein were more or less applicable to the case before us. It is, however, the principle which these cases lay down which would guide us and it would be erroneous to emphasise or attach greater importance or greater weight to some remarks or some identity of facts without taking into account the entire perspective.

27. The State contends that guiding principles do exist in this case and that they are to be gathered from the provisions of Chapter V-A itself, the Statement of Objects and Reasons in respect of the Maharashtra Act XIV of 1961 and the affidavit in reply filed on behalf of the State. To show that guiding principle is the necessity for a speedier trial, reliance has been placed on three provisions contained in Chapter VA itself. The first is the provision contained in sub-section (1) of section 105B which requires that the Commissioner shall call upon the person to vacate within a short period of one month from the date of the service of the notice. The second is the provision contained in sub-section (2) of Section 105B which requires a person on whom a show cause notice has been served as mentioned in that sub-section to apply to the Commissioner for extension of the period specified in the notice and empowers the Commissioner to grant such extension only on terms as mentioned in that sub-section. The third requirement is that sub-section (4) of section 105F provides that every appeal shall be disposed of as expeditiously as possible. According to Mr. Setalvad, these provisions show that Chapter V-A was enacted to apply to those cases in which speedy recovery of corporation premises was necessary. The Statement of Objects and Reasons in respect of the Maharashtra Act XIV of 1961 shows that Chapter V-A was introduced in the main Act "for enabling the Bombay Municipal Corporation to carry out its policy of slum clearance, speedy development of the estate of the Corporation and providing more housing accommodation." Paragraph 4 of the affidavit in reply of Gulam Hamid Shaikh, under Secretary to the Government of Maharashtra, Urban Development, Public Health and Housing Department dated 31st March 1967 contains statements relevant to this point. It first points out that the corporation premises are exempted from the application of the Bombay Rent Act. It then states that it was found that the ordinary processes of law were dilatory and important public purposes of such authorities as the Bombay Municipal Corporation were being unduly delayed by reason of the necessity of such authorities to resort to the ordinary processes of law to evict persons in unauthorised occupation of premises belonging to such authority. It further states that in the context of the Bombay Municipal Corporation it was found in particular that projects of the Corporation for slum clearance and the speedy development of the Corporation estates and the providing of further housing accommodation were being held up by reason of the delays inevitable in following the ordinary processes of law. So far as these statements are concerned, they are statements of fact which can certainly be said to constitute the circumstances existing at the date of the enactment of the amending Act. But thereafter follows that the statement that in those circumstances the State Government was of opinion that it was desirable to enact the said Act. This statement is a statement as to the opinion of the State Government. The Judgment of the Supreme Court in the case of Jyoti Pershad shows that when a Court is ascertaining what the guiding principles are the data can be furnished by the surrounding circumstances existing at the date of the enactment and that such surrounding circumstances may be gathered from facts of which the Court itself can take judicial notice or from evidence in the form of affidavits. The opinion of the State Govt. however cannot be said to form part of the surrounding circumstances. It cannot, therefore, be legitimately referred to for this purpose.

28. A question then arises whether in these circumstances speedy recovery of corporation premises serves as a guiding principle in this case as contended by Mr. Setalvad. In this respect the preamble of the Act is not helpful, but the provision of Chapter V-A itself that thirty days' time is to be given in the order of eviction and particularly a provision that even the whole proceeding is to be disposed of as expeditiously as possible show that speedy recovery was the object. The Statement of Objects and Reasons refers to three subjects, being the Corporation policy of slum clearance, speedy development of its estates and providing more housing accommodation. The jurisdiction of the Corporation extends to Greater Bombay. The existence of slums within that area and the acute scarcity of housing accommodation prevailing within that area at the date of the amending Act are factors of which this Court can take Judicial notice. This Court can also take judicial notice that speed is very essential for clearing slums and for providing more housing accommodation. The old slums and the new ones which sprang up in Bombay after partition of India were expanding fast in 1961 and spread over open lands and even on the road sides. At the date of the amending Act lands and immoveable properties in Greater Bombay were developing and developing fast. Bungalows with large gardens and one and two storeyed structures are being replaced with skyscrapers of ten to twenty.

storeys. Estates of the Corporation are in the nature of public property, in the sense that those who pay taxes to the Municipality are interested therein. It was necessary that the slums should be speedily cleared and that the estate of the Corporation should be speedily developed. All the three objects mentioned in Statement of Objects and Reasons and repeated in the affidavit in reply necessitated speed. The object were possible of being carried out by the Corporation because the protection of the Rent Act did not extend to its tenants. The delays in law courts due to accumulation of large arrears is a subject within the special knowledge of the Courts of which Courts can take judicial notice. Such delays would cause corresponding delay in the execution of the said three objects. In our opinion, therefore what is stated in the affidavit in reply is mostly material of which this Court can take judicial notice. The only additional point contained in the affidavit in reply is a statement of fact that delay was being caused in the recovery of corporation premises. In these circumstances it is possible to say, as contended by Mr. Setalvad, that the object and the policy of the amending Act was speedy recovery of corporation premises and that it would serve as a guidance to the Commissioner in exercising his discretion or option in selecting whether the special procedure under Chapter V-A or the ordinary procedure in the ordinary courts should apply in different cases which involved recovery of corporation premises. No speed may be necessary to recover a small portion of a large tenanted corporation building from its tenant, if he be solvent, merely on the ground that he was in arrears of some rents. On the other hand, the recovery of possession of a whole tenanted corporation building may require speed if the corporation intends to urgently replace it by a suitable building for a hospital or a school. Mr. Setalvad invited us to hold that the necessity of speedier recovery furnishes guidance to the Municipal Commissioner in the exercise of his discretion under Section 105-B. Mr. Sorabji, however, contended that in the case of the Northern India Caterers the necessity of speedier recovery of public premises was the basis on which the Supreme Court expressed its opinion that the classification of Government and non-Government premises may not be violative of Article 14. He pointed out that although it was present to the mind of the Supreme Court and in fact it used it as a basis when expressing its opinion on this classification, the Supreme Court has in fact not relied upon it or even referred to it when the Supreme Court held that the discretion vested in the Collector was unguided and unfettered that is in respect of the sub-classification between occupiers of Government property. He contended that it must therefore be held that the necessity of speedier recovery cannot be further extended to such sub-classification and that it is therefore not open to us to take this factor into account when considering discrimination by such sub-classification. He stated that it has been held in Somwanti's case AIR 1963 SC 151, that the binding effect of a decision does not depend upon whether a particular argument was considered therein or not, provided that the point with reference to which an argument was subsequently advanced was actually decided. Mr. Sorabji contended that the point about the necessity of speedy recovery serving as a guidance for the purpose of sub-classification was the point to be decided by the Supreme Court in the Northern India Caterers' case, that that argument was present to the mind of the Supreme Court, but the Supreme Court has not even referred to or discussed the effect of that point in relation to the sub-classification. He contended that though the test of speedier recovery was available in the case of Northern India the Supreme Court has nevertheless held that the discretion of the Collector was unguided and unfettered. At the highest, according to him, it can be contended that when deciding that point the Supreme Court did not consider this particular argument, but that this Court cannot distinguish the final conclusion of the Supreme Court on this point concerning the sub-classification merely on the ground that this particular argument was not considered by the Supreme Court in the Northern India Caterers' case. Now the ratio as laid down by the Supreme Court in Somwanti's case AIR 1963 SC 151 is quite clear. So far as this particular point is concerned, we do not see any difference between the provisions of the Punjab Act and the Bombay legislation. Although Mr. Setalvad's contention is that the Supreme Court has not considered this aspect in connection with the sub-classification, we are of the opinion that we are not free to examine the position on the basis that we should ignore the conclusion of the Supreme Court on this point and re-consider what would be the effect on the identical point but as arising in the case before us. We, therefore, hold that, as decided by the Supreme Court in the Northern India Caterers' case in this case also there are no principles to guide the Commissioner in the exercise of his discretion to resort to one or the other of the two procedures and to pick and choose between occupiers and occupiers of corporation premises.

29. This brings us to the consideration whether the procedure provided under Chapter V-A of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act is more drastic than that under the ordinary law applied in ordinary courts. It is common ground that the proceedings under Chapter V-A are quasi-judicial. Section 105-F provides for an appeal. Although the order under Section 105-B is to be made if he is so satisfied it is not the result of a proceeding which is arbitrary but is a quasi-judicial and appealable. In spite of the fact that the order rests on the Commissioner's satisfaction, he must state his reasons in his order. (See the Judgment in the case of C. R. H. Readymoney Ltd. v. State of Bombay, (1957) 59 Bom LR 786 = (AIR 1956 Bom 304) and the observations of Tendolkar J. at page 807 and those of the Division Bench on appeal in the Judgment of Chief Justice Chagla at page 825). An appeal under Section 105-F is to a judicial officer. Any defects which occurred in the original proceedings before the Commissioner are therefore, capable of being corrected in appeal by a judicial officer. Now the test to judge whether a remedy is more drastic than another or not is whether one remedy is substantially different from the other from the point of view of the incidence of prejudice which may be caused to the parties against whom the proceedings may result in such orders. Such parties, in the impugned provisions before us, from whose point of view it is to be examined, would be the occupiers of corporation premises.

30. Suraj Mall Mohta and Co. v. A. V. Visvanatha Sastri 1955 SCR 448 = (AIR 1954 SC 545), has decided that if persons dealt with by the impugned Act are deprived of substantial and valuable privileges which they would otherwise have if they were dealt with under the ordinary law, which in that case was the Income-tax Act, it would be no defence to say that the discriminatory procedure also advances the course of justice. It further decided that the special procedure in that case would be more drastic if it was substantially different and more prejudicial than the procedure under the Indian Income-tax Act. That decision is also useful as showing that for assessing whether a special procedure is more drastic than the ordinary procedure or not, the Supreme Court took into account such factors as to whether the Investigator and the Judge who was to make the order were rolled into one without there being any provision for reviewing the conclusions of the Investigator, whether the right of inspection was taken away, whether a party was deprived of his right of second appeal or revision, etc. Barring the general principles so disclosed in that Judgment, the further decision in that case is not useful to us because it applies those principles to the facts of that case. We do not propose to discuss the different aspects in that other part of that case because the facts of this case are different from those in that Supreme Court case. The same test was reiterated and again applied by the Supreme Court in the case of Jagannath Prasad v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1961 SC 1245. It was a case relating to a disciplinary enquiry against a Government servant which also is a quasi-judicial enquiry. Certain observations made in that case may be noted at this stage. They are to the effect that in a quasi-judicial proceeding, the approach of the Tribunal must be judicial and that therefore the Tribunal would not be entitled to rely upon hearsay evidence and further that parties could appear by their lawyers. Bearing these principles in mind we will consider Mr. Sorabji's contention that the procedure under Chapter V-A is more drastic. He has supported this contention by several arguments.

31. Mr. Sorabji's first argument was that the original decision under Chapter V-A is that of an executive officer, whereas under the ordinary procedure it would be that of a judicial officer. He contended that the executive officer would lack the training, background and approach to the matter before him which a judicial officer would have. He contended that Chapter V-A does not even provide that the commissioner or the person who would hold the enquiry should have any judicial or even legal qualifications or training. We will consider this argument a little later.

32. His second argument was that though the enquiry under Chapter V-A is a quasi-judicial enquiry, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure and the strict rules of evidence will not apply and it would therefore be more drastic in several respects. In this connection he relied upon the decision of the Supreme Court in Bharat Barrel and Drum Manufacturing Co. v. L. K. Bose, AIR 1967 SC 361, and argued that this case shows that in quasi-judicial enquiries oral evidence can be refused to be recorded without such refusal amounting to a violation of the principles of natural justice. He particularly relied upon the reference to the two earlier Supreme Court Judgments in New Prakash Transport Co. Ltd. v. New Suwarna Transport Co. Ltd. 1957

SCR 98 = (AIR 1957 SC 232) and Western India Match Co. v. Industrial Tribunal (1962) 1 Lab LJ 629 (SC) and thereafter the decision in the case of Bharat Barrel itself. In our opinion, a correct appreciation of these three Judgments shows that none of them lays down a general principle as canvassed for by Mr. Sorabji. All the three cases, of course, do relate to quasi-judicial enquiries. In the case of New Prakash, however, the statute itself provided that in the appeal the Appellate Authority shall hear such persons as may appear and after such further enquiry, if any, as may have been necessary, confirm, vary or set aside the order against which the appeal was preferred. It was, therefore, a case where a statute itself limited the scope of oral evidence and therefore the Judgment in Bharat Barrel points out that neither the sections nor the rules framed under the Act contemplated anything like recording oral or documentary evidence in the usual way as in Courts of law, nor did they contemplate a regular hearing as in a Court of justice. The Supreme Court of India in its judgment in the Bharat Barrel case explained that the refusal to record oral evidence was justified in the other case of the Western India Match Co. because the Tribunal had held that the agreement in dispute in that case reached between the parties had been recorded by the Conciliation Officer in some of his letters and so it was a matter of construction of those letters and in that view there would be no violation of the principles of natural justice by reason of the refusal to examine the Conciliation Officer orally. In the Bharat Barrel case itself the petitioner who challenged the order made against him was prevented from leading oral evidence of his witness Lalta Prasad to prove an agreement alleged by the petitioner. It was the petitioner's contention that there was thereby a violation of the principles of natural justice. The Supreme Court held that there was no such violation, because, firstly, on a construction of the consent order it was held that that order did not contemplate leading of oral evidence and, secondly, that on the facts of the case the prevention of recording of oral evidence caused no prejudice because the agreement was set out in the correspondence which correspondence itself had been produced on the record. The prevention of leading oral evidence was justified in all these three cases on the individual facts of each of the three cases, but they do not lay down a general principle that rules of natural justice would not necessarily in every case be violated if oral evidence is prevented to be led in a quasi-judicial enquiry.

33. The third argument of Mr. Sorabji was in a quasi-judicial enquiry there would not be a right of cross-examination and that even if cross-examination is prevented there will be no violation of principles of natural justice. In support of this argument he relied upon the case of Bakshi Gulam Mahomed reported in AIR 1967 SC 122 (128). The Supreme Court was concerned in that case with a fact finding enquiry and not a quasi-judicial enquiry. Moreover, the statute expressly limited the right of cross-examination. It cannot therefore be contended that the observations made by the Supreme Court in that judgment apply to quasi-judicial enquiries.

34. Mr. Sorabji also relied on the Judgment of the Supreme Court in Calcutta D. L. Board v. Jaffar Imam, AIR 1966 SC 282. He drew our attention to certain remarks occurring in that judgment in paragraph 12 at page 287 of the Report to the effect ".....but such a hearing is often, if not always, likely to be ineffective because the detenu is deprived of an opportunity to cross-examine the evidence on which the detaining authorities rely and may not be able to adduce evidence before the Advisory Board to rebut the allegations made against him." These observations have not been made in connection with a quasi-judicial enquiry. The absence of a right to cross-examine is here considered in connection with the enquiry of the Advisory Board under the Preventive Detention Act, 1950. The enquiry by an Advisory Board, as pointed out in this very Judgment, is not a quasi-judicial enquiry, but the function of the Advisory Board is limited to consider the relevant material placed before it and the representation received from the detenu and then submit a report to the Government. As a matter of fact, the observations in paragraph 13 of that Report relate directly to a quasi-judicial enquiry, the same being in respect of a disciplinary inquiry against an employee alleged to be guilty of misconduct and they are that it was absolutely essential that the employer should have held a proper enquiry at which reasonable opportunity should have been given to the employee to show cause and that before reaching its conclusion the employer was bound to give evidence against the employee, give him a reasonable chance to test the said evidence, allow them liberty to lead evidence in defence, and then come to a decision of its own. The reference here to "a chance to test the evidence led against him" can only mean a right of cross-examination. In our opinion, this case, far from laying down that a quasi-judicial enquiry would not be violative of principles of natural justice by reason of a refusal of the right of cross-examination. affirmatively lays down that the right to cross-examine forms a part of the principles of natural justice as applicable to quasi-judicial enquiries. This argument of Mr. Sorabji must, therefore, fail.

35. The fourth argument of Mr. Sorabji was that the principles of res judicata do not apply to quasi judicial enquiries and that therefore the enquiry under Chapter V-A is more prejudicial because an occupier of the corporation premises can be subjected to defending identical proceedings in respect of identical allegations against him over and over again. In Burn and Co. v. Their Employees AIR 1957 SC 38 which related to an enquiry under the Industrial Disputes Act. it has however been laid down that the rule of res judicata enacted in Section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure is no doubt, in terms, inapplicable to an enquiry, but that the principle underlying that Section is founded on sound public policy and is of universal application. It quotes with approval the observation of Sir Jenkins C. J. in Sheoparsan Singh v. Ramnandan Prasad Narayan Singh, 43 Ind. App. 91 = (AIR 1916 PC 78) "The rule of res judicata is dictated by a wisdom which is for all time." These observations, although made in a case dealing with an enquiry under the Industrial Disputes Act, is in general terms and can apply to all quasi-judicial enquiries. It is not the terms of Section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure which will apply but the principles underlying it which will apply and those principles have been stated to be of universal application and embodying wisdom which is for all time. To the same effect are the observations in the Judgment of the Supreme Court in Daryao v. State of U. P. AIR 1961 SC 1457. In paragraphs 9 and 10 of that Report it has been pointed out that the rule of res judicata as indicated in Section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure is a technical rule, but although it has no doubt some technical aspects the basis on which the rule rests is founded on considerations of public policy and that it is in the interest of the public at large that a finality should attach to binding decisions pronounced by Courts of competent jurisdiction, and it is also in the public interest that individuals should not be vexed twice over with the same kind of litigation. Mr. Sorabji, however, contended that the principle of res judicata does not apply and has been held not to be applicable to many quasi-judicial enquiries. He referred to the judgment of the Supreme Court in Remington Rand of India v. Its Workmen, (1962) 1 Lab LJ 287 (SC). He relied particularly on the remark at page 290 of the Report: "Indeed, it is hardly necessary to add that the decision of industrial disputes in a large number of matters may not easily admit the application of all the technical implications of the doctrine of res judicata". A correct appreciation of this decision however shows that it does not lay down a general principle that the principle of res judicata is not applicable to quasi-judicial enquiries. The particular remark referred to by Mr. Sorabji has been made in a case which related to an inquiry under the Industrial Disputes Act. Principles relating to industrial disputes have been set out in that Judgment. It has there been pointed out that although there may have been an industrial award or industrial agreement which is to subsist for a particular period, the workers may yet demand a change. In that case it was because the demand was made during the period of the subsistence of an industrial agreement or award that the principle of res judicata was sought to be invoked. But it is inherent in the industrial law as at present interpreted that even when there is an agreement or award which is to subsist for a particular period, two factors, being a subsequent rise in the cost of living index and a change for the better in the financial position of the employer company, may nevertheless justify a demand for a revision upwards of the amounts payable to the workers thereunder. The principle of res judicata has therefore been held to be inapplicable in such cases not because a previous decision is not binding on the parties, but because the law under which the agreement or award was made enables a change to be made if new circumstances come into existence subsequently to the agreement or award. It would not therefore, be a decision on the same facts or on the same allegations which was the basis of earlier decision, whereas the decision on same facts is the very basis of the principle of res judicata. In such industrial disputes a fresh decision can be invoked because it involves a determination of new facts and the effect of those facts on the demand of the workers.

36. Mr. Sorabji then relied upon two other decisions in Asscd. Cement Staff Union v. Asscd. Cement Co. Ltd. AIR 1964 SC. 914 and Workmen of B. L. and Co. Ltd. v. B. L. and Co. AIR 1964 SC 728. Each of these two cases relates to a position under the Industrial Disputes Act and what we have just stated in connection with the Remington Rand case equally applies to these two cases.

37. Mr. Sorabji also relied upon the Judgment of the Supreme Court in Visheshwara Singh v. Commr. of Income Tax, AIR 1961 SC 1062. The Judgment in that case states "There is no such thing as res judicata in income-tax matters'. Now Mr. Sorabji is right in a sense in relying upon this observation. It should, however be read in the context of the facts of the case in which it is made. It was a matter under the Indian Income-tax Act. There was an earlier decision by the Income-tax Officer in respect of the assessee but for the year 1941-42. The particular period to which this case related was the subsequent period to the years 1942-43 to 1946-47. The question was whether the decision in respect of the earlier year 1941-42 whereby the assessee had been held to be a dealer in shares and securities for that year would on the basis of the principle of res judicata shut out an enquiry as to whether the assessee was a dealer in shares and securities in respect of the subsequent period. It is quite clear that the decision on the later period would depend on a fresh set of facts and circumstances and therefore a fresh investigation would not be barred on the principle of res judicata.

38. Mr. Sorabji had contended that it is possible for the Commissioner to record statements behind the back of the occupant against whom action is being taken. The procedure would, according to him, be more drastic because although a copy of the statement would be furnished to the occupant, the occupant would not have an opportunity to watch and comment on the demeanour of the witness during his examination-in-chief and notice and point out how the witness develops his story. In this connection the observation of the Supreme Court in the State of Mysore v. Shivabasappa, AIR 1963 SC 375, at p. 378 of the Report may be noted. The same are:

"The position is the same when a witness is called, the statement given previously by him behind the back of the party is put to him and admitted in evidence, a copy thereof is given to the party, and he is given an opportunity to cross-examine him. To enquire in that case that the contents of the previous statement should be repeated by the witness word by word, and sentence by sentence, is to insist on bare technicalities and rules of natural justice are matters not of form but of substance."

According to these observations, it is clear that this difference in the two procedures is not of any substance.

39. It was also contended that the provisions of Sections 91, 92 and the other provisions of the Indian Evidence Act like excluding hearsay evidence would not apply. It is true that the technical provisions of the Evidence Act will not apply, but the basic principles embodied in the Evidence Act would apply. Therefore, no hearsay evidence would be admitted. Similarly although it would be open to give oral evidence of the contents of a document in proper cases, the appellate officer who would be a trained judicial officer would take those factors into consideration and would attach due weight, in the sense of less weight, if any weight can be attached, to the oral evidence as to the contents of a document except, of course, in cases where even under the Evidence Act it would be open to lead oral evidence of the contents of documents. But these are but technical differences and not differences of any substance causing any material prejudice.

40. The fifth argument of Mr. Sorabji was that although the appeal under Chapter V-A is to a judicial officer, the appeal itself will have a limited scope. Now, in this connection the distinction between the personal factor of the appellate officer and the scope of the appeal must be borne in mind. In both cases the original order would be of an executive officer, but when the Appellate Officer is a judicial officer, he will examine the record like a Court and in that respect there would be no difference whether an appeal be to a judicial officer or to a Court under the ordinary law.

41. When the Appellate Officer is an executive officer however, honestly and conscientiously he may act, he may possibly take into consideration departmental policy decisions and departmental talks because he would not be trained to avoid even a sub-conscious impression created by them. Now, so far as the scope of the appeal is concerned, though the Commissioner's decision under appeal would rest on his satisfaction, such satisfaction would be reached under a quasi-judicial procedure at an enquiry. As seen earlier, so far as the procedure before the Commissioner is concerned, it is a quasi-judicial procedure and there is no difference of substance between that procedure and the procedure which would be followed ordinarily in a court of law and he has to record his reasons of his order in the order which he makes at the end of the proceedings. The result would be that the scope of the appeal would be substantially similar to the scope of an appeal from a lower court to a higher Court.

42. The sixth argument of Mr. Sorabji was that in respect of a parallel act the Supreme Court has held in the Northern India Caterers' case that the procedure under the Punjab Act is more drastic than the ordinary procedure followed in an ordinary court and that we must therefore apply the ratio and reasoning in the case before us and reach a similar conclusion. We have reproduced the two relevant passages from that Judgment of the Supreme Court. A very careful reading of those two passages shows that there is an important difference between the Punjab Act and Chapter V-A. The Punjab Act provides for an appeal to an executive officer, whereas Chapter V-A provides for an appeal to a judicial officer. We are of the opinion that that particular factor is of very great importance. The difference lies not merely in the provision as to the person who is to hear the appeal, that is, whether he be an executive officer or a judicial officer, but it changes the whole evaluation of the entire procedure followed before the officer who makes the order at the initial stage. When the appellate officer is a judicial officer, he would judge even the original proceedings with a trained eye. With his qualifications, training and experience as a lawyer and a judicial officer he would notice every defect or shortcoming in the original proceedings before the Commissioner and wherever he is so satisfied he would in his appellate order set them right, in this connection it must also be noticed that because of the provision in Chapter V-A, and such provision does not exist in the Punjab Act, even in the original proceedings the person against whom the order is to be made is entitled to appear by an advocate, attorney or pleader. This point also is of great importance because as he would be represented by a trained lawyer, the lawyer would not only represent the occupant's case properly, but he would see that even the record before the Commissioner is properly and fully prepared. Of course, the appeal to a judicial officer does not widen the scope of the appeal. But the combined effect of the two provisions that a lawyer can appear for the occupier at the stage of the initial inquiry before the Commissioner and the appeal thereafter being to a judicial officer would have very important consequences of a substantial nature. The presence of the lawyer would ensure, so far as the initial inquiry is concerned, proper evidence being led, opposite side's witnesses being properly cross-examined, the case being properly argued and a full and proper record being kept. As an appeal would lie to a judicial officer, the inquiry officer himself would be more careful and the judicial officer would have a full record before him, deal with it judicially like a court and correct all shortcoming if any, in the initial proceedings. If the two procedures, namely, the one under Chapter V-A and the other being the ordinary procedure under the Code of Civil Procedure in ordinary courts of law are compared in the light of these circumstances, there appears to be no substantial difference at all between the two procedures. The procedure before the original forum will be substantially similar. The procedure at the stage of appeal will be substantially similar. From the enquiry under Chapter V-A a second appeal or a revision may not lie. But, in our opinion, the remedies of a second appeal and a revision would be substantially substituted by a writ petition to the High Court under Article 227 which would be equally efficacious. We are, as contended by Mr. Sorabji, bound to follow the ratio and reasoning of the Supreme Court's Judgment in the Northern India Caterers' case. But in this case we have to follow it by way of an analogy. We can, however, do so only on points the facts and circumstances relative to which are substantially similar. In fact, it is on that very basis, and even though one argument or one reason was not considered by the Supreme Court, that we have followed the ratio and the reasoning of that judgment in connection with the point as to whether there exist principles to guide the Commissioner in the exercise of his discretion under Section 105 B. But the ratio and reasoning of the Supreme Court judgments referred to earlier requires that the two procedures available to the authority vested with a discretion to select between them must first be critically compared and a conclusion then reached whether they are or not substantially similar for ascertaining whether one is or is not more drastic and more prejudicial than the other. As we find that the two procedures available to the Commissioner under Chapter V-A are substantially similar, we cannot, with respect, apply, by way of a so-called analogy the conclusion in the case of the Northern India Caterers to the legislation impugned in this case and hold that the procedure under Chapter V-A is more drastic. The relevant provisions of the Punjab and impugned legislations are substantially different and no Court can ignore its duty to compare, the two procedures available under Chapter V-A and record a finding whether one of the two is or is not substantially similar to the other. No Court is entitled to make a mere superficial comparison and adopt what may be called the easier way of holding that it is bound by analogy to reach the same conclusion in this respect as that in the case of the Northern India Caterers. We find that in the case before us the two procedures available under Chapter V-A are, substantially similar and we therefore hold that the procedure under Chapter V-A is not more drastic or more prejudicial than the ordinary procedure to be followed in the ordinary courts of law.

43. That leads us to a consideration as to what is the effect of our holding that there are no principles to guide the Commissioner in the exercise of his discretion under Section 105-B, but the procedure under Chapter V-A is not more drastic. If the special procedure be more drastic and there is lack of guidance, it would render the legislation void as happened in the Northern India Caterers' case. If, however, the special procedure be not more drastic and there also be lack of guidance, the result would be that the element of lack of guidance would not cause any prejudice because the two procedures would be substantially similar and the impugned legislation in such a case would have to be held to be valid. If, however, the special procedure is found to be more drastic and prejudicial, but there being no lack of guidance, that is, there exist principles for guidance, the impugned legislation would have to be held valid, because although the special procedure is more drastic, in the selection of one of the two procedures, the authority concerned would be guided by those principles and there would be no discrimination or violation of Article 14. In such a case it would not be the legislation which would be void, but if in any particular case or cases the officer concerned violates the principles for guidance, his decision in that particular case or those particular cases may be set aside, because the legislation itself would be valid but only the exercise of the power would be violative of Article 14. The principle therefore appears to be that when there is an option to pick and choose, the existence of both the factors, namely the element of the special procedure being more drastic and the element of lack of guidance, would make the legislation void and violative of Article 14. But if either of them is absent, so far as the legislation itself is concerned, it would not be violative of Article 14. This principle, when it is considered basically and without reference to any decided case, appears to be so clear that it is not necessary to refer to any authorities on that point. Mr. Sorabji had drawn our attention to three decided cases in London Jewellers Ltd. v. Atten-Borough, (1934) 2 K. B. 206, Jacobs v. London County Council, 1930 A. C. 361 and Suraimal v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1958 Madh Pra 103. None of these cases appears to be of any direct help to us. To state it in other words the principle appears to be that in cases where a decision has been reached for two independent reasons, either of which taken individually was sufficient by itself to justify the final conclusion, it cannot be urged that the decision on one of the reasons is the only or main factor leading to the conclusion and the decision on the other is in the nature of obiter. In that class of cases the decision on each of the two points being capable of leading to the conclusion actually reached in that case would lay down a ratio and such ratio on each of the two points would be binding on any lower court. In the other class of cases would fall a final conclusion arrived at as a result of the decisions on several points, the conclusion being based on the cumulative effect of the decisions on each of those points in that case. The final conclusion would in that class of cases rest on the cumulative support of the decisions on each of the points and such a conclusion would serve as a precedent and be of binding effect only in those cases where all such reasons cumulative exist, but in cases where any of those reasons is absent, though the other reasons be present it would be open to the Court to assess the effect of the absence of any particular reason or reasons and after assigning due effect to them to reach its own conclusion. Adopting these principles we hold that in our case though there is a lack of guiding principles as the two procedures available under Chapter V-A are substantially similar there is no denial of equality and the impugned provisions do not violate Article 14.

44. In the circumstance we hold that Section 105B and therefore also the provisions of Chapter V-A do not violate the provisions of Article 14 and are valid.

45. In the result the other points arising in each of these three petitions will have to be tried before a final order can be made in these petitions.

46. As regards costs, each of the three petitioners in which this question was tried as a common question will now have to be tried in respect of the other disputes involved therein. So far as the parties to each of these petitions are concerned, we therefore order that the costs of those parties in respect of the trial of this preliminary point shall be costs in that petition. The State however, has appeared only because of the constitutional challenge to the State legislation. The State is not a party to any of these petitions. Therefore it is no longer interested in appearing in those petitions after the decision on this preliminary point. We must, therefore, finally make our order as to costs in each of the three petitions as between the State on the one hand and the petitioners in each of the cases on the other. Bearing in mind the importance of the point involved, the duration of the hearing of the preliminary point which we are informed has lasted for about thirty-one hours, and the fact that our decision as to guiding principles is against the State we quantify the costs of the hearing of this preliminary point payable to the State at Rs. 2,400/-. We order that each of the petitioners in the three petition do pay to the State a one-third of the said amount of Rs. 2,400/-. i. e. Rs. 800/-. by way of its contribution to the said costs awarded to the State.

Order accordingly.

(B) Bombay Rents Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947) Section 13 (1) (b) — Eviction for construction of permanent structure by tenant without permission of landlord — Interference by High Court under Art. 227 — (X-Ref:— Constitution of India Art. 227).

If the Court draws an improper inference as to the legal effect of proved facts, the High Court can correct it because that is a question of law. Though it is true that the High Court has to interfere only when there is a manifest and patent error of law on the face of the proceeding when there is clear ignorance or disregard of provisions of law, yet the legal effect of an inference as regards a provision of law can also be looked into by the High Court in its supervisory jurisdiction. This will have to be done in the interests of justice if the subordinate Court has stepped beyond its bounds.

(Para 9)

Thus where the construction of a temporary nature (tin shed) was already there and the tenant erected a wall on one side of such shed to protect his goods it was held that no structure of permanent nature could be said to have been erected by the tenant within meaning of Section 13 (1) (b). Gujarat Ginning and Manufacturing Co. Ltd. Ahmedabad v. Motilal Hirabhai Spinning and Manufacturing Co. Ltd. Ahmedabad 9
S. A. Desai with P. G. Bhimrao, for Petitioner; V. M. Limaye for Opponent No. 1.

JUDGMENT:— The petitioner here is a tenant in respect of the suit premises belonging to the respondent in village Chopda, district Jalgaon. A vacant plot of land bearing S. No. 7543 and admeasuring 32' x 12' was leased out to the petitioner on 2-11-57 at a monthly rent of Rs. 4/-. The petitioner used it for running a shop after constructing a tin shed on it. It appears that in the year 1963 there was a theft in the shop and, therefore the petitioner constructed a wall in brick and mortar on the side touching the road, from where there was a possibility of the shop being broken open. There was exchange of notices at that time between the landlord and the tenant. There was also some litigation in which the landlord won. On 1-6-65 the respondent-landlord terminated the tenancy of the petitioner by a notice on the grounds that he is in arrears of rent from 1-11-64 to 1-5-65; that he had built a wall in brick and mortar on the southern side of the structure and had also built another wall in brick and mortar to partition the tin shed. The petitioner denied the allegations of the respondent and the suit followed on 15-7-65. The trial Court held in favour of the petitioner but the District Court did not agree and reversed the order passed by the trial Court and decreed the respondent's suit for possession of the suit plot. This decree of the learned Assistant Judge, Jalgaon, is sought to be corrected here by this petition under Article 227 of the Indian Constitution.

2. We are here concerned with two grounds taken up by the respondent for evicting the petitioner. The first ground is that the petitioner was in arrears of rent from 1-11-64 till 1-5-65 and the second ground is that the petitioner had constructed a wall in brick and mortar on the southern side of the tin shed; that he has also constructed another partition wall to divide the tin shed into two. The respondent, therefore, relies on Section 12 and Section 13 of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (hereinafter called "Rent Act"). In order to understand the legal effect of certain facts and circumstances for the purpose of recording whether the petitioner has neglected to make the payment of rent it will be necessary to mention certain facts.

3. We have on record Exhs. 58 to 61, which are money order coupons. These were the money orders which were sent by the Petitioner between 24-4-63 to 29-6-64 to the respondent from time to time. The respondent refused to accept these money orders sent by the petitioner as and by way of rent between April 1963 and June 1964. The money order coupons on record also show that the petitioner had sent in lump sum Rs. 24/- towards rent at the rate of Rs. 4/- per month for the period beginning from 1-11-64 to 1-5-65. The petitioner has examined himself and stated that he had sent these money orders towards rent at the rate of Rs. 4/- for the period from 1-11-64 to 1-5-65, which were refused by the respondent. In this case we are concerned with the notice dated 8-6-65 given by the respondent to the petitioner terminating the tenancy because the petitioner was in arrears from 1-11-64 to 1-5-65. Thus, we have seen that the petitioner did send rent by money orders but it was refused. The point, therefore, that is raised here for consideration is whether the petitioner could be said in these circumstances to be not ready and willing to pay rent and whether he was in arrears of rent for a period of more than six months.

4. The learned Assistant Judge while considering this point held that the payment of rent by money orders for the period from 1-11-64 to 1-5-65 absolutely irrelevant. He held that the money orders prior to the notice cannot be taken into consideration under Section 12 (2) of the Rent Act. In support of this proposition he has relied on Manorama S. Masurekar v. Dhanlaxmi G. Shah (68 Bom LR 412). That was a case where also a notice was served demanding rent in arrears for more than six months. In that case the amount of rent was sent after one month after notice but before the suit was filed. That was not a case, where rent was paid, as we have seen in the instant case, by money orders before notice for the period for which the landlord says the petitioner was in arrears. In that case the notice was dated 22nd December, 1966 demanding rent in arrears. The other side alleged that standard rent was tendered on 22nd January 1967 but not accepted. Money order was then sent on 4th February 1967, which was refused. In these circumstances, Patel, J., who heard the civil revision application, was of the view that under Section 12 (3) (a) of the Rent Act the Court should pass a decree if tender of rent was made after a month's notice under Section 12 (2) of the Rent Act. The fact that tender of rent was made before the suit for ejectment was filed by the landlord does not give protection to the tenant under Section 12 (1). The learned Assistant Judge relied on these observations and held that these observations would apply to the facts and circumstances of the instant case. In my view the learned Assistant Judge has erred in applying this law to the facts and circumstances before us which are quite different from the facts and circumstances, which were before Patel, J.

5. Section 12 of the Rent Act provides for ejectment of the tenant by the landlord. It is divided into four clauses. The first clause prohibits a landlord from recovering possession of any premises so long as tenant pays and is ready and willing to pay the amount of the standard rent and permitted increases, if any, and observes and performs the other conditions of the tenancy in so far as they are consistent with the provisions of the Rent Act. Therefore, as long as the tenant is ready and willing to pay and as long as he observes the conditions of tenancy, landlord cannot recover possession of the premises. The second clause directs the landlord to give a notice before a suit on the ground of non-payment of rent is filed. A landlord under this clause cannot file a suit until expiration of one month next after the notice of the demand of standard rent. The third clause deals with two kinds of arrears. Sub-clause (a) deals with a tenant who is in arrears for a period of six months or more; sub-clause (b) deals with a tenant, who is in arrears for less than six months and sub-clause (c) provides that if a tenant raises a dispute regarding the amount of standard rent or permitted increases, he is allowed to raise that dispute; and if the tenant makes the payment of which he is in arrears within one month of the notice, then the landlord cannot recover possession of the premises. But if he does not raise any dispute and if he neglects to pay until expiration of the period of one month after the notice then the Court has no other alternative but to pass a decree for eviction. So far as sub-clause (b) is concerned the tenant is asked to pay the arrears on the first date of the hearing of the suit or before such other date as the Court may fix and if he continues to pay rent regularly in Court, then no decree can be passed against him but if after notice and after filing of the suit he neither pays the arrears on the first date of the hearing of the suit nor before such other date as the Court may fix, then a decree for eviction shall have to be passed. We are not concerned with the fourth clause because that clause merely deals with disbursement of the amount paid by the tenant in Court.

6. Now, therefore, under Section 12 of the Rent Act this Court has to see whether the tenant was ready and willing to pay rent; whether the landlord had given him necessary notice; whether in this case, which is governed by Section 12 (3) (a), the tenant is in arrears of rent for a period of six months or more and whether the tenant has neglected to make payment of the same. We have seen that the respondent had been refusing to accept rent sent to him by money orders. The arrears of rent according to the notice given by the landlord is for a period from 1-11-64 to 1-5-65. The question, in view of the fact that the tenant had sent rent by money orders and the landlord refused to accept the same is whether the tenant was still in arrears of rent. If the landlord had accepted rent, the tenant would certainly not have been in arrears and there could not have been any cause of action for the notice to be served by the landlord on the tenant. Because the landlord had been refusing to accept rent for the period for which he was said to be in arrears the cause of action arose. In my view the landlord cannot take advantage of his conduct in not accepting rent sent by the tenant and then give a notice saying that the tenant is in arrears of rent for more than six months. The intention of the legislature when enacting Rent Act could not have been to protect the landlord who refuses to accept rent and after six months turns round to say that the tenant is in arrears of rent for a period of six months or more. In my view, therefore, the facts and circumstances of the instant case show that the petitioner-tenant was ready and willing to pay rent. The facts also show that the tenant was not in arrears of rent voluntarily. It is because of the conduct of the landlord that he fell in arrears for a period of six months or more. If the landlord had accepted rent, he would not have been in arrears at all. If that is so, then, in my view, the view of the learned Assistant Judge in inferring that the petitioner can be evicted under Section 12 (3) (a) of the Rent Act is erroneous. On the other hand the inference and the legal effect of these proved facts is that the tenant cannot be evicted because he was neither in arrears of rent nor can be said to be not ready and willing to pay rent.

7. I am supported in this view of mine by a judgment of Chandrachud J. while deciding Civil Revision Application No. 1450 of 1961 on 16th April 1964. He had before him facts similar to the facts of the instant case and he has taken the same view as I am now taking.

8. Another ground taken by the landlord is that the tenant had erected on the premises a permanent structure and, therefore he is liable to be evicted. Under Section 13 (1) (a) notwithstanding anything contained in the Rent Act but subject to the provisions of Section 15, which deals with sub-letting, a landlord shall be entitled to recover possession of any premises if the Court is satisfied that the tenant has without the landlord's consent in writing erected on the premises any permanent structure. What the landlord has been pleading is that the petitioner has erected on the premises a permanent structure viz. a wall on the southern side and a partition wall dividing the tin shed. The learned Assistant Judge in his judgment relied upon the fact that the petitioner has nowhere denied the fact of constructing the wall in brick and mortar on the southern side. That is true. But the shed was there from the beginning. It is only in 1963 that the wall was constructed because of a theft. The judgment gives an impression that the whole house was constructed at the time when this wall was constructed. That is not so. The learned Assistant Judge is of the view that because the tenant has erected a house like structure consisting of two compartments with the southern wall and partition wall in brick and mortar with a foundation of about $1\frac{1}{2} \times 2\frac{1}{2}$ therefore it is an erection of a permanent structure. According to the learned Assistant Judge if the contention of the tenant in erecting the wall was to protect himself from the thieves, that will not help him and this fact according to him is quite irrelevant for deciding the issue. In that view of the matter he found that the tenant has contravened the provisions of S. 13 (1) (b). The trial Court, however, differed from him. According to the trial Judge, who had the advantage of inspecting the site, this was a temporary structure; the shed was no better than a temporary shed; the wall was constructed to protect the shed from the road side; according to trial Court the wall was constructed to save himself from thefts being committed from that side. He says that in these circumstances the wall cannot be said to be a permanent structure.

9. Now, the expression used in Section 13 (1) (e) is "permanent structure." So far as the wall is concerned, admittedly it is built for the purpose of protecting his goods from theft from the road side; it is only a part of the whole temporary shed. He has constructed the wall sloping towards the east. He has also constructed a partition wall dividing the tin shed into two. On one side the goods are kept and the other side there is a shop.

It is brought in the cross-examination that the foundation of this wall was about $1\frac{1}{2} \times 2\frac{1}{2}$. The point, therefore, that arises here for consideration is what is the legal effect of the facts here? It is contended on behalf of the respondent that this Court cannot correct a finding of fact. After all according to Mr. Limaye, the learned advocate for the respondent the wall cannot but be a permanent structure.

In my view this is not a finding of fact but is an inference as to the legal effect of certain proved facts. The Court has to infer on the basis of proved facts, whether these facts lead to the legal conclusion that the structure is or is not a permanent structure. In my view if the Court draws an improper inference as to the legal effect of proved facts, this Court could correct because that is a question of law. In Gujarat Ginning and Manufacturing Co. Ltd. Ahmedabad v. Motilal Hirabhai Spinning and Manufacturing Co. Ltd., Ahmedabad, AIR 1936 PC 77. Their Lordships have observed that the High Court in a second appeal is bound by the District Judge's finding of fact. But where the matter in question is as to the proper effect of legally proved facts that is a question of law. Now, it is true that this Court has to interfere only when there is a manifest and patent error of law on the face of the proceeding, when there is clear ignorance or disregard of provisions of law. In my view the legal effect of an inference as regards a provision of law can also be looked into by this Court in its supervisory jurisdiction. This will have to be done in the interests of justice if the subordinate Court has stepped beyond its bounds. This will therefore be a fit and proper circumstance to intervene. The contention raised by Mr. Limaye, the learned advocate for the respondent, therefore appears to be without basis.

10. The petitioner has taken on lease only the plot of land. He has not taken any premises. After taking this open plot of land he had in the beginning constructed a temporary tin shed. In 1963 theft was committed from the southern side, and, therefore in order to protect himself as well as his goods, he constructed the wall in brick and mortar. He has also constructed a partition wall to divide for his convenience and for his beneficial use. The rest of the construction is a tin shed. Now, can it be said that the petitioner has erected any permanent structure by constructing the southern wall and the partition wall? After all while determining the permanent character of a structure it is always necessary to see the nature of the structure and mode and degree of annexation. It may also be necessary to see the intention of the party who puts up the structure. The nature of the structure on the whole is temporary structure except for this wall. If the landlord finds reasons to eject the petitioner, in my view, it will not be difficult for the petitioner to vacate the open plot of land without causing any injury to it. Construction of the wall in my view therefore will not cause any injury to the open plot of land which was leased to him. This is not a case where substantial improvement was made by the petitioner to the premises, which were leased out to him and which, if removed, will cause injury to the open plot of land.

11. What is the nature of these walls and the degree of annexation? What was the intention of the tenant when he constructed these walls? The nature and mode therefore of annexation of its degree can be gathered by the intention with which the tenant had built the wall though in brick and mortar. It is done to prevent the thieves from breaking open the shed which was exposed to the road. The intention therefore was not to have a permanent structure but to save himself and his goods in that temporary shed. The whole shed is still there. It is all of a temporary character. The walls are but small annexations. The open plot of land will never lose its identity in the process of the removal of the wall. The wall is but an insignificant part of the temporary shed. The original nature of the open plot of land is not materially altered or interfered with. In this view of the matter, therefore, it appears to me that the legal inference drawn by the learned Assistant Judge from the proved facts is not correct. On the other hand the inference should be that the wall in the peculiar circumstances of the case cannot be said to be permanent structure erected by the tenant within the purview of Section 13 (1) (b) of the Rent Act. If this is so, then the order passed by the learned Assistant Judge has to be set aside.

12. I, therefore, allow this petition, set aside the Assistant Judge's order and restore the trial Court's order.

13. No order as to costs.

14. Rule made absolute.

Petition allowed.

(A) Companies Act (1956), Ss. 258, 260 — Right of company to increase the number of its directors — Board of Directors cannot by appointment of Additional Directors increase the strength of the Board so as to affect the power of the company vested in it under Section 258.

(Para 15)

(B) Companies Act (1956), S. 258 — Power to increase number of directors — Exercise of — No formalities are prescribed therefor — It is not necessary for the company to pass a separate resolution increasing the number of directors to fill the additional sanctioned post — It is sufficient compliance with the provisions of Section 258 when the company chooses to appoint additional directors within the permissible limits so as to increase the number of its directors — Absence of a separate resolution re: increase in number of directors would not render appointment of additional directors null and void. (C) Companies Act (1956), S. 172 (1) — Notice of meeting — Invalidity or insufficiency of notice — Question as to, is a mixed question of law and fact and its grounds have to be specifically pleaded — It cannot be raised at any stage of the proceeding — (X-Ref:— Civil P. C. (1908) Section 100). AIR 1965 SC 1535 (Approving AIR 1963 Orissa 189) Rel. on. AIR 1965 Guj 96 and (1920) 1 Ch. D. 466 and (1921) 3 K. B. 32, Ref. (Para)

(D) Companies Act (1956), Ss. 172, 173 (1) & (2) — Section 173 is mandatory and not directory — Non-compliance with it vitiates the action taken at the meeting — Allegation of insufficiency or misleading nature of notice of special business — Has to be substantiated by relevant particulars.— (X-Ref:— Civil P. C. (1908), O. 6, R. 4)

Section 173 is mandatory and not directory. A notice of meeting when it contains items of special business within the meaning of Section 173 (1) (b) must disclose all the material facts. All the share-holders, must be in a position to make up their mind in advance whether they will attend the meeting or leave it to the good sense of the majority at the meeting. Any non-compliance with this requirement will nullify the action taken at the meeting. While considering the efficacy of any such notice, a benevolent construction will not be adopted so as to defeat the provisions of the statute. It is also clear that whether or not a particular notice or an explanatory statement in a given case complies with the statutory requirement is a question of fact. There are two ways in which the mandatory provisions contained in Section 172 may be contravened. It may be a case where no explanatory statement is at all appended to the item of special business. or it may be a case where the statement is incomplete, misleading or tricky. The contravention may be the result of an act of omission or an act of commission. Whatever be the nature of the contravention, the question always is a mixed question of fact and law. When a challenge to the notice is made in court of law the court will have to consider all the facts and circumstances of the case and then decide one way or the other. Where the explanatory statement appended to the notice of the meeting is challenged as being insufficient or misleading, the plea is very much like the plea of fraud and as such must be substantiated by all relevant particulars. In the absence of such a pleading the matter cannot be challenged in appeal or even in earlier proceeding. (Paras 37, 40)

(E) Companies Act (1956), S. 264 (1) (as amended) — Interpretation of — Use of Objects and Reasons — Provision so far as it relates to filing of consent is directory.

It is true that a statute should be interpreted without looking into other extraneous circumstances; but when a provision has undergone several changes a reference must be made to Objects and Reasons for the purpose of finding out the particular reason that prompted the legislature to evolve the provision in its current form.

The object of the legislature in enacting S. 264 is evident when one considers the various amendments made by the Legislature before the section was enacted in the present form. Those who have once acted as directors were only seeking re-appointment. It was considered throughout that the formal consent on their part was not necessary. It is very clear as to why such a condition was found necessary. It may be that a person who is appointed as a director may refuse to act on the ground that he had never consented to act as a director. When such a flaw is discovered later on and the appointment will have to be ignored as ineffective, the company will have to take again further steps for filling the posts of such director. Ordinarily a person appointed as a director is not likely to refuse to act. In a rare case he may do so. It is only to avoid the attending inconvenience that the Legislature has prescribed the condition. In the section as originally worded somewhat strong language was used. It was enacted that a person shall not be capable of being appointed as a director unless he had filed earlier his consent in writing to act as such director. The deletion of these words in the subsequent amended form of the section is not without significance. Perhaps the Legislature thought that the condition was given comparatively more importance when it was introduced in the section. If this is the only object which the Legislature sought to achieve by prescribing a prior consent in writing then there is no reason why the absence of consent in all cases should invalidate the appointment. Even without a consent a person appointed may accept the appointment and prefer to act as a director. This is likely to happen in a majority of cases. Considering the section as a whole and bearing in mind the object of the Legislature, and magnitude of the mischief intended to be avoided it must be held that Section 264 (1) is clearly directory and not mandatory. AIR 1957 SC 832 and AIR 1952 SC 369. Ref. (Para 49)

(F) Companies Act (1956). S. 264 (2) — Interpretation of — Provision is mandatory — Filing of consent under the provision is a condition precedent for acting as a director — Unless the consent is filed within the prescribed time, person appointed as director for the first time cannot act as a director. (Obiter)

(Para 49)

(G) Companies Act (1956), Section 264 (1) — Expression "or otherwise" — Connotation of — Expression covers all the other directors who for one reason or the other cease to hold office and are immediately thereafter reappointed as directors — The expression does not refer only to directors who remain in office after the directors retiring by rotation but also the Directors who cease to be in office because of Section 260. First proviso — Dictum in AIR 1970 SC 765, Rel. on, (X-Ref:— Interpretation of Statutes — Reference to Objects and Reasons — Permissibility — (X-Ref:— Companies Act (1956) S. 256). (Paras 52, 53)

(H) Companies Act (1956), Sec. 264 (1) — Scope — Consent to act as director — Consent contemplated is referable to the candidature of a person for the office of a director — No consent is necessary to act as a director or an additional director — This is clear from the fact that one of the persons exempted from filing such consent is one who has left at the office of the company a notice under Section 257 signifying his candidature for the office of a director — Section 264 does not in any manner regulate the appointment of additional directors under Section 260. (Para 54)

(I) Companies Act (1956), ss. 173, 258, 396 (1) (b) — Suit for permanent injunction restraining defendants from acting as directors and against the company or its servants etc. from allowing them to act as such — Suit, though it related to internal affairs of the company, was maintainable as there were allegations of non-compliance with the mandatory provisions of Section 173 and Section 258 and unauthorised alteration in the Board of Directors — A share-holder as such is certainly interested to see that persons who are apparently directors of the company are validly appointed as such, though he cannot interfere with internal management of the company. JUDGMENT:— This is an appeal by defendants 2 and 3 and is directed against the judgment and decree passed in the suit filed by Respondents 1 and 2 against the appellants and Respondent No. 3. The suit was for a permanent injunction restraining Respondent No. 3 and its directors, servants and agents from allowing the appellants to act as directors of the Respondent No. 3 company. A similar injunction was also claimed against the appellants restraining them from acting in any manner as the directors of the respondent No. 3 company.

2. Respondent No. 3 is a public limited company registered under the Indian Companies Act and carries on business, inter alia, as manufacturer of rayon yarn and has its registered office at Bombay. It is the plaintiffs' case that on 9-4-1969 the Board of Directors appointed the appellants as additional directors of Respondent 3 company. The Board of Directors consisted at that time of 8 members excluding these additionally appointed directors. The plaintiffs have referred to the 8 directors as functioning directors and that may be to distinguish them from the appellants who are appointed additional directors. Thereafter notices dated 10th April 1969 were received by Respondent No. 3 company proposing the appellants as directors at the next Annual General Meeting. On 11-6-1969 the 22nd Annual General Meeting of the Respondent 3 company was convened. At the General Meeting two directors Kasturbhai Lalbhai and Naval H. Tata retired by rotation and were again elected as directors. At the same meeting by two separate resolutions the appellants were appointed directors. The two resolutions are referred to in the Plaint as Resolutions Nos. 5 and 6.

3. The plaintiffs by the suit challenged the legality of the appointment of the appellants on certain grounds. According to the plaintiffs the number of directors on the Board can be increased by the company under Section 258 of the Indian Companies Act by passing a resolution. No such resolution was ever duly notified, proposed and passed. In the absence of any such resolution, Respondent No. 3 company had not the power to appoint the appellants as directors. The plaintiffs submit that Resolutions Nos. 5 and 6 are, therefore, invalid, void and of no effect.

4. The plaintiffs also submit that without prejudice to the aforesaid ground, the appointment of the appellants as directors was illegal, void and of no effect as they had not filed letters of consent under Section 264 (1) of the Act in respect of their proposed appointment as directors at the Annual General Meeting. The plaintiffs, as share-holders of Respondent 3 company, have the right to property in Respondent 3 company. It is for this reason that they had filed the suit restraining the appellants from acting as directors of Respondent 3 company.

5. Respondent 3 company filed its written statement and submitted that the appointment of the appellants as directors was valid and legal. It has stated that a separate resolution to increase the number of directors was not required under the provisions of the law. The company also stated in para 2 (a) of the written statement that on 9th April 1969 the appellants had filed their letters of consent to act as directors, if appointed. After receipt of these letters the appellants were appointed as directors. It is mentioned in the written statement that after their appointment as Additional Directors on 10th April 1969, two share-holders delivered to the company notices under Section 257 of the Act intending to propose the appellants as candidates for the office of the directors of respondent 3 company at the next Annual General Meeting of the company. The appellants were not required to file any letters of consent under Section 264 (1) of the Act before their election as directors at the 22nd Annual General Meeting. According to the company the appellants were validly proposed and elected as directors.

6. The appellants between themselves filed one written statement and supported the validity of their appointment on all the grounds alleged by Respondent 3 company. In addition the appellants stated that on their appointment as Additional Directors, the strength of the board was increased to 10 directors. In paragraph 8 of the written statement it is submitted that they were not required to file any letters of consent under Section 264 (1) of the Act before their appointment as directors at the meeting. Without prejudice to this defence it is also pleaded that they did file the letters of consent on 9th April 1969 with Respondent 3 company. They argued that as Additional Directors, they were persons to whom Section 264 (1) of the Act did not apply. Assuming that there was any such requirement, it is asserted that it was a mere irregularity and that did not disable them from acting or functioning as directors. They made it clear that it was implicit in the two resolutions appointing them as directors that the number of directors was, if necessary, being increased. According to them no separate resolution under Section 258 or Article 169 of the Articles of Association of the company was necessary for increasing the number of directors from 8 to 10. At any rate, the absence of any separate resolution will not affect the validity of the resolution appointing them as directors of Respondent 3 company. They denied that it is mandatory under S. 258 of the Companies Act or under Article 169 of the Articles of Association of the company that before the number of directors is increased, a resolution increasing the number of directors ought to have been duly notified or proposed or passed. There were other allegations made by the appellants against the plaintiffs but for deciding the points raised in this appeal they are not at all relevant. As the parties had not sought any issues on the basis of those allegations, the learned Judge was not called upon to consider whether they were true or false. The substance of those allegations was that according to the appellants the plaintiffs had filed the suit mala fide at a late stage at the instance of one Rasiklal J. Chinai who was defeated in the contest for election of directors at the general meeting of the share-holders of Respondent 3 company.

7. At the trial the learned Judge framed the relevant issues. Parties did not lead any oral evidence. By consent of the parties only documents were exhibited. The defendants had also resisted the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs being share-holders cannot have any grievance against respondent 3 company as the matter in dispute was concerning the internal management of the company and the suit by the two share-holders was not maintainable. Perhaps it was felt by the parties that the issues arising in the suit are purely questions of law and it was not necessary to adduce any oral evidence.

8. The learned Judge, on a consideration of the evidence on record and the submissions of the parties, has recorded his findings. He held that the present suit is maintainable. He came to the conclusion that the letters of consent under S. 264 (1) of the Act for the appointment of the appellants as directors at the Annual General Meeting were not necessary. In view of this finding he held that whether or not such letters were filed need not be considered. According to him the impugned resolutions Nos. 5 and 6 passed at the Annual General Meeting of the company on 11-6-1969 appointing the appellants as directors of the company were illegal. Consistent with this finding the learned Judge decreed the plaintiffs' suit and granted the injunctions against Respondent No. 3 company and the appellants.

9. As stated above the appellants, aggrieved by the decree, have come to this Court with the present appeal. Mr. Nariman appears for the appellants. Mr. Thakkar with Mr. Mody instructed by M/s. Haridas & Co., appears for respondents 1 and 2, the original plaintiffs. Mr. D. H. Buch with Mr. G. K. Munshi instructed by M/s. Bhaishankar Kanga and Girdharilal, appears for Respondent 3 company. It must be stated at the outset that Respondents 1 and 2 have purported to file cross-objections against the finding recorded by the learned Judge about the consent letters under S. 264 (1) of the Act. Mr. Thakkar conceded that the cross-objections are misconceived but mentioned that he had the right, as an advocate appearing for the respondents, to assail the decree under appeal on any of the grounds decided against him. Therefore, the points for determination in this appeal are:—

(1) Whether the Board of Directors of the Company before and after the Annual General Meeting consisted of ten members or whether at the Annual General Meeting the strength of the Board of Directors was increased from 8 to 10.

(2) Whether the Company can increase the strength of the Board of Directors only by passing a separate and distinct resolution before proceeding to appoint directors by filling the additional sanctioned posts?

(3) Has the Board of Directors contravened the mandatory provisions of Section 173 of the Act by not furnishing any information about the proposed special business or by furnishing information which is hopelessly inadequate or misleading?

(4) Can the plaintiffs rely on the above contravention in any form without specific averments in the Plaint?

(5) Has the learned Judge erred in holding that the Additional Directors, like the retiring directors, are not required to file written consent duly signed before their reappointment as directors by the Company?

(6) Is the suit not competent as the alleged irregularities arise in the course of the internal management of the company?

10. Before I proceed to consider the various points urged before me, it is desirable to refer to the relevant provisions of the Companies Act, 1956 and the Articles of Association of Respondent 3 company.

11. Section 2 (13) of the Companies Act defines "director", as any person occupying the position of director, by whatever name called. Section 255 provides for the appointment of directors and the proportion of those who are to retire by rotation. Section 256 contains provisions for ascertainment of directors retiring by rotation and filling up of the vacancies. Under Section 257 a person who is not a retiring director shall be eligible for appointment to the office of director if he or some member intending to propose him has, not less than fourteen days before the meeting, left at the office of the company a notice in writing under his hand signifying his candidature for the office of director or the intention of such member to propose him as a candidate for that office. The other provisions of Section 257 are not quite relevant and need not be referred to here.

12. Under Section 258 of the Act subject to the provisions of Ss. 252, 255 and 259, a company in general meeting may, by ordinary resolution, increase or reduce the number of its directors within the limits fixed in that behalf by its articles. S. 259 in certain cases requires the sanction or approval of the Central Government for any increase in the number of its directors. Section 260 provides that the Board of Directors, if permitted by the Articles of Association, can appoint additional directors. The Board is to exercise that power so as not to exceed the maximum strength fixed for the Board by the Articles. The first proviso to Section 260 makes it clear that such additional directors shall hold office only upto the date of the next Annual General Meeting of the company. S. 262 deals with the filling of casual vacancies amongst directors. Under Section 263 (1) ordinarily there will be only one resolution for the appointment of one director at the Annual General Meeting of the company. A single resolution is permitted under certain special circumstances for appointing more than one director. Section 263 (2) provides that a resolution moved in contravention of sub-section (1) shall be void, whether or not objection was taken at the time to its being so moved. Section 264 (1) under certain circumstances requires that the candidate for directorship should file his written consent with the company before his appointment as director at the meeting. Section 264 (2) requires that a person appointed as a director shall not act as a director unless he has within the prescribed time signed and filed his consent with the Registrar to act as such director.

13. Apart from the group of these sections, there are two more sections which assume importance while deciding the points which arise in this appeal. Section 172 requires that every notice of a meeting of a company shall contain certain relevant particulars, leaving the other details, I must only mention that under Section 172 (1) such notice shall contain a statement of the business to be transacted at the meeting. Under Section 173 (1) (a) in the case of an Annual General Meeting, all business to be transacted at the meeting shall be deemed special, with the exception of business relating to four specified items. Item No. 3 deals with the appointment of directors in the place of those retiring. Section 173 (1) (b) makes it clear that in the case of any other meeting, all business shall be deemed special. Section 173 (2) contains a direction that where any items of business to be transacted at the meeting are deemed to be special under sub-section (1), there shall be annexed to the notice of the meeting a statement setting out all material facts concerning each such item of business, including in particular the nature of the concern or interest, if any, therein of every director, the managing agent, if any, the secretaries and treasurers, if any, and the manager, if any. The proviso also requires further and better particulars in specified cases. It is not necessary to refer to that proviso at any length.

14. Now it remains to mention the relevant Articles of Association of the company. Under Art. 142, the Directors have power at any time and from time to time to appoint any other qualified person to be a Director as an addition to the Board so that the total number of Directors at any time shall not exceed the maximum fixed. Any person so appointed as an addition to the Board shall retain his office only upto the date of the next Annual General Meeting but shall be eligible for re-election at such meeting. Under Art. 164 at every Annual General Meeting of the Company, one-third of such of the Directors for the time being as are liable to retire by rotation or if their number is not three or a multiple of three, the number nearest to one-third shall retire from office. Article 166 makes it clear that a retiring Director shall be eligible for re-election. It is true that counsel on either side did refer to other sections and articles to elucidate the various points raised by them, I need not consider them all at this stage.

15. The first point made by Mr. Nariman on behalf of the appellants is about the strength of the Board of Directors of the Company. He objected to the expression "functioning Directors" and "Additional Directors" as used by the plaintiffs in the plaint. He said that there is no warrant for any such distinction. Whether the Directors are appointed at the meeting or by the Board of Directors, they all together constitute the Board. The Directors in that capacity have the same rights, privileges and obligations under the provisions of the Act. He referred to the definition of "director" as contained in Section 2 (13) of the Companies Act. In all other places in the Act the Board of Directors was mentioned as such and he says that the distinction sought to be made by the plaintiffs is without any legal significance. It appears to me that the plaintiffs have used the different expressions only for a better understanding of their case. The appellants were, in the first instance, appointed as Additional Directors and later on they were re-appointed as Directors. But apart from this fine distinction in phraseology, the point of substance made by Mr. Nariman is that the company had not increased the number of Directors from 8 to 10 at the Annual General Meeting by the reappointment of the appellants. When the Board of Directors in exercise of their power under Section 260 of the Act co-opted the appellants, the number of Directors on the Board was increased from 8 to 10. Even at the meeting the number was not reduced. The two Directors retired by rotation and the two Additional Directors ceased to hold office. There were, therefore, four clear vacancies. When the Company passed four resolutions reappointing the four persons as Directors there was no increase and the provisions of Section 258 are not attracted. I find it very difficult to accept this submission. The composition of the Board of Directors with Additional Directors will not be the same as the Board of Directors appointed by the company at the General Meeting. It cannot be said that the company had at any time surrendered its inherent or statutory power to increase the number of directors on the Board when the Board appointed or co-opted Additional Directors. As observed by Lord Hanworth, M. R. in (Worcester Corsetry Limited v. Witting) reported in 1936 (1) Chancery 640-648, the power conferred on the Directors to appoint additional Directors is a temporary power vested in them, and this is to be reviewed and perhaps confirmed at the General Meeting. Even the wording of Section 260 underlines the temporary nature of this power conferred on the Board of Directors. Section 260 first proviso makes it clear that such Directors shall hold office only upto the date of the next Annual General Meeting. It is true that under Art. 142 of the Company, the Board of Directors can appoint any number of Additional Directors at any time and from time to time so as not to exceed the permitted maximum limit. Consistent with the first proviso to Section 260, the Article also makes it clear that the person so appointed as an addition to the Board shall retain his office only upto the date of the next Annual General Meeting. I am of the view that the Board of Directors cannot by the appointment of Additional Directors increase the strength of the Board so as to affect the power of the Company vested in it under Section 258 of the Act.

16. Then Mr. Nariman argued that the learned Judge was not justified in holding that the company can increase the strength of the Board only by passing a separate and distinct resolution before proceeding to appoint Directors by filling the additional sanctioned posts. I have not used the exact words of the learned Judge but in substance that appears to be the finding recorded by him. According to Mr. Nariman all that S. 258 requires is that the company, subject to the other restrictions imposed on it, must resolve to increase or reduce the number of Directors in the General Meeting. The section itself has not prescribed any other formality for effecting the increase or decrease in the number of Directors. Mr. Nariman points out that under the Companies Act, wherever separate resolutions were found necessary, provisions were made in that behalf. He referred to Section 263 of the Act. I have already mentioned above the substance of that section. Ordinarily there will be a separate resolution for appointing a person as a Director at the Annual General Meeting of the Company. Mr. Nariman says that the Company can exercise the power vested in it under Section 258 by passing one or more resolutions and as no form is prescribed, one will have to look at the substance. When there are 8 members on the Board of Directors, the Company can by simply appointing two members in addition increase the number and this can be done without passing a separate resolution. He says that it is implicit in the act of appointing. The company has exercised the power to increase the number.

17. While dealing with this power of the Company to increase the number, Mr. Nariman referred to the corresponding English Law and submitted that the provisions are substantially similar. Mr. Nariman relied on an English case (Worcester Corsetry Ltd. v. Witting, (1936) 1 Ch D 640). The learned Judges were considering the effect of two apparently inconsistent Articles of the company. But as the case also dealt with the power of the company to appoint directors and thereby increase the number, it has some relevance while appreciating the point raised before me. Article 83 of Table A contained the provisions similar to Section 258 of the Indian Companies Act. At page 649 Lawrence, L. J. observes as follows about the existence of the power to increase and its exercise by the company:—

"Art. 83 of Table A shows in the plainest terms that the company has power to increase or reduce the number of its board. It is said that that does not involve the nomination and appointment of particular gentlemen or ladies as directors, but it seems to me that that is necessarily implied in the provision of Art. 83. If, for instance, there have been four directors, within the maximum number of directors, and the board desire that two additional directors shall be appointed, it can convene, in my judgment, a meeting under Art. 83 for the purpose of increasing the number of directors by two named persons, appointing those two persons, and thereby increasing the number of directors".

"The more natural view of Art. 83 is that it is not redundant or merely introducing unnecessary machinery which is already provided by Art. 12 in dealing with the maximum and minimum, but, as Lawrence L. J. has indicated, is itself conferring a power not only to increase the number but to increase that number by itself appointing directors to the extent to which it is intended to increase the number."

18. About the power of the company to increase the number of directors under its Articles of Association, the learned author in his book 'Pennington's Company Law' 2nd Edn. p. 456-57 sums up the legal position as under:—

"The power to appoint subsequent directors is usually exercisable by the members of the company in general meeting by ordinary resolution. If the articles prescribe the maximum number of directors who may be appointed, appointments in excess of the maximum are void. Usually, however, the members are empowered to increase or reduce the maximum number of directors by ordinary resolution, and then an appointment of a director in excess of the former maximum is taken to be an exercise of the power to increase the number of directors, and is valid".

While making the last-mentioned observation, the learned author in the footnote has referred to the abovementioned case. So Mr. Nariman argued that Section 258 was an enabling section which authorised the Company to increase or decrease the number of directors just by an ordinary resolution. As singular includes plural, one has to look at the result and not the number of resolutions to find out whether the company has exercised the power vested in it.

19. Mr. Thakkar, with equal force, stressed the word resolution and said that it was a condition precedent to the valid appointment of directors resulting in the increase of the number of directors. Any other construction, he says, will render Section 258 nugatory or meaningless. Mr. Thakkar tried to distinguish the said decision on certain grounds. He says that Art. 83 construed by the learned Judges refers to a General Meeting. Section 258 of the Companies Act provides that the company may in general meeting by ordinary resolution increase or reduce the number of its directors. In my opinion this distinction is not one of substance. Any such difference in the wording will not affect in any manner the efficacy of the observations made by the learned Judges in the above-mentioned case.

20. Then Mr. Thakkar was at pains to point out that no such point was ever raised and debated in that case. The observations of the Judges quoted above are merely obiter dicta. Mr. Thakkar says that the Judges were reconciling the two apparently conflicting articles which conferred the power of appointing directors on the Board of Directors and the company. He referred to several text books on Company Law, viz. Pennington's Company Law, 2nd Edn. p. 456-57; Modern Company Law by C. B. Gover, 11rd. Edn. p. 21; Palmer's Company Law p. 533; Halsbury's Laws of England Vol. 6, p. 279, Art. 574; Buckley on the Companies Act, 13th Edn. p. 885 and submitted that the abovementioned authority was quoted by the learned author to show that the company had not surrendered its power to appoint directors in favour of the Board of Directors. But the decision is not cited by Mr. Nariman as a binding authority on this Court. Mr. Nariman relies only on the wording of the Article considered by the Judges which resembles the wording of S. 258. Under both the provisions the company has the power to increase the number of directors. When the company at its meeting resolves to appoint additional directors in excess of the present strength of the Board, then it is an instance where the company is exercising its two-fold powers. The company increases the number not by separate resolution but by appointing additional directors. The effect is that the company has increased the number of directors. That appears to be a sensible construction which can be adopted while interpreting the relevant provisions contained in Section 258 of the Indian Companies Act. In the result, in my opinion, it is not necessary for the company to pass a separate resolution increasing the number of directors before appointing the directors to fill the additional sanctioned posts. In law it is possible for the company to comply with the provisions of Section 258 when it chooses to appoint within the permitted limit additional directors so as to increase the strength of its present Board. The learned Judge was in error in coming to the conclusion that in the absence of a separate resolution the appointment of the appellants as directors of Respondent 3 company was null and void. The legality of the Resolutions Nos. 5 and 6 cannot be challenged on the ground that there was any contravention of the provisions of S. 258 of the Act.

21. Then I propose to consider points Nos. 3 and 4 together as the discussion of law is likely to be overlapping. Point No. 3 will involve the consideration of the provisions of Sections 172 and 173 of the Act and point No. 4 is about the sufficiency or otherwise of the pleadings.

22. I have already set out above the relevant provisions of Section 173 of the Act. Section 173 will have to be read with Section 172 (1) of the Act. Under Section 172 (1) every notice of a meeting of a company, among other things, must contain a statement of the business to be transacted at the meeting. Section 173 (1) contains classification of the business and indicates when the business shall be treated as special. Under Section 173 (2) any items of special business mentioned in the notice must be accompanied by a statement setting out all material facts concerning such items of business.

23. Mr. Nariman for the appellants drew my attention to the notice of the meeting which is produced at Ex. D at p. 90 of the paper book. It is worthwhile to reproduce the material items of business:—

Serial No. 3: To elect a Director in the place of Shri Kasturbhai Lalbhai who retires by rotation under Art. 164 of the Articles of Association of the Company, but being eligible, offers himself for re-election.

Serial No. 4: To elect a Director in the place of Shri Naval H. Tata, who retires by rotation under Art. 164 of the Articles of Association of the Company, but being eligible, offers himself for re-election.

Serial No. 7: To appoint a Director in place of Shri Laljibhai Chhaganlal Kapadia who was appointed an additional Director of the Company by the Board of Directors on 10th April 1969 and who ceases to hold office under Section 260 of the Companies Act, 1956 on the date of this meeting in respect of whom a notice as required by S. 257 of the Companies Act, 1956 has been received by the Company.

Serial No. 8: To appoint a Director in place of Shri Nimjibhai Chhaganlal Kapadia who was appointed an additional Director of the Company by the Board of Directors on 10th April 1969 and who ceases to hold office under Section 260 of the Companies Act, 1956 on the date of this meeting in respect of whom a notice as required by Section 257 of the Companies Act 1956 has been received by the Company.

24. Items Nos. 3 and 4 constitute ordinary business and Items Nos. 7 and 8 constitute special business within the meaning of Section 173 of the Act. Being special business Items 7 and 8 are followed up by explanatory statements contained in an annexure to the notice. Explanatory statement accompanying Item No. 7 reads as under:—

"Shri Laljibhai Chhaganlal Kapadia was appointed an additional Director on 10th April 1969 by the Board of Directors of the Company and he retains his office as a Director only upto the date of this Annual General Meeting under the provisions of Section 260 of the Companies Act, 1956. As required by Section 257 of the Companies Act, 1956, a notice has been received from a member signifying his intention to propose his appointment as a Director. It is recommended that he be appointed as a Director".

Explanatory Statement accompanying Item No. 8 is identical with the difference that it is in respect of the other additional Director Shri Nimjibhai Chhaganlal Kapadia. Relying on the content of the notice in general and the explanatory notes in particular, Mr. Nairman submits that there is compliance with the requirement of Section 173 of the Act. Mr. Nariman points out that under Art. 164 of the Articles of Association of the Company, at every Annual General Meeting of the Company, one-third of such of the Directors for the time being as are liable to retire by rotation or if their number is not three or a multiple of three, the number nearest to one-third are to retire from office. The strength of the Board was 8 and obviously the number of Directors retiring by rotation will be two. Items Nos. 3 and 4 in the notice in unmistakable terms give an indication of this factual and legal position. As these items of business were not special there was no explanatory statement in the annexure to the notice. Items Nos. 7 and 8 constituted special business. The contents of these items conveyed to the body, of shareholders sufficient information about the proposal to fill up additional posts. The two persons had acted as additional directors and they ceased to hold office under Section 260 of the Act on the day of the meeting. It is stated that the company had received proposals about their appointment under Section 257 of the Act. It is implicit in this statement that the Board wants the company to consider the appointment of Directors for two additional posts. The explanatory statement contains one important additional particular. The Board of Directors has made a recommendation that the two persons who have acted as additional Directors be appointed Directors at the meeting. According to Mr. Nariman the Board has complied with the provisions of Section 173 of the Act.

25. Then Mr. Nariman argued that in the present state of pleadings, it was not open to the plaintiffs to raise any objection about the non-compliance with the requirement of Section 173 of the Act. He says that the plaint nowhere refers to Section 173 of the Act. A fair reading of the plaint would show that the main grievance of the plaintiffs was that no resolution was proposed or passed under Section 258 of the Companies Act read with Art. 169 of the Articles of Association of the Company about increasing the strength of the Board of Directors. According to the plaintiffs the two resolutions appointing the appellants as directors are not valid as they in effect increased the number of directors from 8 to 10 without an appropriate resolution being passed as required by Section 258 of the Act. This is the only grievance of the plaintiffs about the non-compliance with the condition in Section 258 of the Act. Mr. Nariman says that in view of this specific case made out by the plaintiffs, there was no occasion for the defendants to meet any other case about the illegality resulting from the non-compliance with the provisions of Section 173 of the Act. Mr. Nariman in this connection heavily leaned upon a decision of the Orissa High Court reported in Kalinga Tubes Ltd. v. Shanti Prasad Jain, AIR 1963 Orissa 189. The learned Judges of the Division Bench of that High Court had to tackle a similar point about the sufficiency or otherwise of the pleadings. While dealing with issue No. 4 (a) in that proceeding Misra, J. at page 202 in para 17 observed as follows:—

"The notice is challenged as fraudulent and contrary to the statute. None of the grounds have been pleaded. For the first time this contention appears to have been advanced in course of argument before Mr. Justice Barman. In none of the affidavits the petitioner swears that the notice was tricky, misleading or insufficient. The question is one of mixed question of fact and law, and it is not permissible to be taken at the stage of hearing for the first time".

The learned Judge certainly refers later on to Section 172 (1) and S. 173 (2) of the Act. At page 214 para 58 Das, J. observes as follows:—

"At the outset, I must say that the plea of invalidity of the notice was not taken either in the plaint which was filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge or in the petitions and affidavits before the Honourable Company Judge of this Court. At a fairly late stage of the case, oral submissions were made challenging the validity of the notice for the extraordinary General Meeting of 29-3-1958. On that ground alone, the point could have been left out of consideration".

However, it must be stated that the learned Judges despite the insufficiency of the pleadings considered the merits of the case, and held that the notice was in compliance with the statutory requirements of Section 173 of the Companies Act, and the meeting held on the basis of such notice and the resolutions passed therein were not in any way invalid. Mr. Nariman says that this authority has acquired additional sanctity as it was in terms approved by the Supreme Court in Shanti Prasad Jain v. Kalinga Tubes Ltd., AIR 1965 SC 1535. Wanchoo, J. at page 1545 para 24 has observed as follows:—

"It is, however, urged that the notice for the general meeting of the 29th March 1958 was not in accordance with Section 173 and so the proceedings of the meeting must be held to be bad. This objection was, however, not taken in the petition and we have, therefore, not permitted the appellant to raise it before us, as it is a mixed question of fact and law. We may add that though the objection was not taken in the petition, it seems to have been urged before the appeal court. Das, J. has dealt with it at length and we would have agreed with him if we had permitted the question to be raised."

Relying on these decisions Mr. Nariman maintained that the resolutions cannot be challenged on the ground that the notice of the meeting and the explanatory statements accompanying the notice were defective in any manner.

26. Mr. Nariman also submitted that the provisions of Section 173 were directory and not mandatory. Strict compliance with Section 173 was not necessary and there was in the present case substantial compliance with the provisions of that section. It is for this reason that, according to Mr. Nariman, any defect in the notice is capable of being waived by the shareholders. The company had unanimously appointed the appellants at the Annual General Meeting. If there were any averments in the plaint setting out the various defects and irregularities in the drafting of the notice and the explanatory statements, then it was open to the defendants to adduce evidence and satisfy the court that the plaintiffs by their conduct were estopped from objecting to the legality of the resolutions. As an instance of the so-called irregularity Mr. Nariman referred to In re: Express Engineering Works Ltd., (1920) 1 Ch 466. It was a case where the legality of the Company's meeting was challenged on the ground that it was styled a Directors' Meeting and business was transacted as if it was a General Meeting. The issue of debentures at the meeting was challenged as not valid. Younger, L. J. agreed with Lord Sterndale M. R., who held that the share-holders must be deemed to have acted in the meeting as shareholders and not as directors. What is stated by Younger, L. J. at page 471 is to the following effect:—

"I am of the same opinion. I am content to rest my conclusion upon what was said by Lord Davey in Solomon's case that a company is bound in a matter which is intra vires by the unanimous agreement of all the incorporators".

But this decision is not of any assistance to us. A syndicate of five persons formed a private company. They were all the directors and also shareholders. They all attended the meeting and transacted business. The objection to the legality of the meeting was rightly overruled.

27. Mr. Nariman then dwelt on the case In re. Oxted Motor Co. Ltd., (1921) 3 KB 32. The Court held that it was not open to a creditor to impeach the validity of a resolution to wind up the company as it was competent to the shareholders of the company acting together to waive the formalities required by Section 69 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 as to notice of intention to propose a resolution as an extraordinary resolution. Even this decision will not carry us any further as in the present case everything turns upon the interpretation of the words of S. 173 of the Companies Act.

28. Then Mr. Thakkar for the respondents submitted that Section 173 was in terms mandatory and not directory. He strongly relies upon a decision of the Gujarat High Court in Mohanlal Ganpatram v. Sayaji Jubilee Cotton & Jute Mills Co. Ltd., (1964) 1 Com LJ 326 = (AIR 1965 Guj 96). Mr. Thakkar pin-points the following observations of Bhagwati, J. (as he then was) at page 338:—

"The object of enacting Section 173 is to secure that all facts which have a bearing on the question on which the shareholders have to form their judgment are brought to the notice of the shareholders so that the shareholders can exercise an intelligent judgment. The provision is enacted in the interests of the shareholders so that the material facts concerning the item of business to be transacted at the meeting are before the shareholders and they also know what is the nature of concern or interest of the management in such item of business, the idea being that the shareholders may not be duped by the management and may not be persuaded to act in the manner desired by the management unless they have formed their own judgment on the question after being placed in full possession of all material facts and apprised of the interest of the management in any particular action being taken. Having regard to the whole purpose and scope of the provision enacted in Section 173, I am of the opinion that it is mandatory and not directory and that any disobedience to its requirements must lead to the nullification of the action taken".

29. Mr. Thakkar reinforced his argument by reference to a Calcutta decision in which it was held that it was incumbent on the directors to disclose in the notice of the General Meeting full facts. Before I refer to the relevant observations of the learned Judges, it is necessary to know in brief the facts of that case. Section 294 (2) of the Companies Act (as amended by Act 65 of 1960) provides that the appointment of a sole selling agent by the Board of Directors shall cease to be valid if it is not approved by the company in the first General Meeting held after the date on which the appointment is made. The Court held that the provision was not directory but mandatory. The mere substantial compliance was not enough but there must be a strict compliance. The impugned agreement about the appointment was referred to in the report of the Directors and the same was adopted in the subsequent adjourned annual general meeting. But the adoption or approval of the report was treated as ordinary business and not as special business. In the circumstances the learned Judges allowed the appeal and granted ad-interim injunction against the company and the directors restraining them from getting passed the resolution in the ensuing Annual General Meeting of the Company. At page 124 of the report (Shaligram Jhaharia v. National Co. Ltd., (1965) 1 Com LJ 112 (Cal). Bose, C. J. has made the following observations after quoting Section 173 (2) and (3) of the Act:—

"So it appears that under S. 173 (2) an explanatory note with regard to the special items of business has to be annexed to the notice of the meeting; but this was not done with regard to the agreement dated the 27th January 1962. Therefore, there was no compliance with the requirements of the Statute inasmuch as it was incumbent under the section, if any special business was to be transacted at the meeting, to specify the nature of such business in the notice".

Mitter, J. at page 134 dilates as follows on the importance of the statutory provision:—

"The provision for inspection of the agreement at the registered office of the company in terms of Section 173 (3) is not sufficient for the purposes of Section 173 (2). As the legislature has thought it fit to provide that shareholders must approve of the appointment of selling agents the opportunity given to the shareholders must be full and complete and there must be a full and frank disclosure of the salient features of the agency agreement before the shareholders can be asked to give their sanction. The provision for inspection of the document at the registered office of the company is not enough. Few shareholders have either the time or the inclination to go to the registered office to find out what the company is about to do. Moreover such an opportunity is illusory in the case of shareholders who do not live in Calcutta, when the registered office is situate here".

Coming nearer home, Mr. Thakkar quotes a recent decision of this Court reported in Firestone Tyre and Rubber Co. v. Synthetics and Chemicals Ltd., (1971) 41 Com Cas 377 (Bom) Madon, J. reviewed the entire case law on the subject while interpreting Section 173 (2) of the Act. I reproduce the headnote which nearly summarises the conclusions of the learned Judge:—

"Under Section 173 (2) of the Companies Act, where any items of business to be transacted at the meeting are deemed to be special, there shall be annexed to the notice of the meeting, a statement setting out all material facts concerning each such item of business, including, in particular, the nature of the concern or interest, if any, therein, of every director, the managing Agent, if any, the secretaries and treasurers, if any, and the manager, if any. The object underlying Section 173 (2) is that the shareholders may have before them all facts which are material to enable them to form a judgment on the business before them. Any fact which would assist them in making up their mind, one way or the other, would be a material fact under Section 173 (2) and has to be set out in the explanatory statement. This provision is mandatory and not directory and disobedience to its requirements must lead to nullification of the action taken." Then Mr. Thakkar brought to my notice one more decision of the Calcutta High Court in Shaligram Jhajharia v. National Co. Ltd., (1967) 1 Com LJ 29 (Cal). It must be noted that the subject-matter of the litigation in this case was an impugned selling agency agreement which figured in the Calcutta decision cited earlier by Mr. Thakkar. The plaintiff challenged the legality of the notice of the Annual General Meeting on the ground that the explanatory statement attached to the proposed ordinary resolution was in contravention of Section 173 of the Act. On facts it was held that the explanatory statement was misleading in relation to the facts stated and it did not disclose certain other material facts. While concluding that the explanatory statement in that case was bad and in violation of Section 173 of the Act, A. N. Ray, J. indicated the correct principle of law. He says at page 36:—

"The further question is whether the explanatory statement is in violation of provisions contained in Section 173 of the Companies Act. It depends upon the facts of each case as to whether an explanatory statement is tricky or misleading."

Ray, J. while considering the essentials of a valid notice convening an extraordinary general meeting extracted two broad principles from the authorities cited before him. At page 135 he says:—

"Two broad principles can be extracted from the authorities: first that notice must be fairly and intelligently framed and it must not be misleading or equivocal. A benevolent construction cannot be applied. Secondly, some matters must be brought pointedly to the attention of the shareholders, for example, where the directors are interested in a contract or matter which is to be submitted to a meeting for confirmation or approval, it appears to be desirable and in certain cases absolutely necessary to disclose the fact in the notice convening the meeting or some accompanying circular."

30. In the wake of these various judicial pronouncements, Mr. Thakkar thought it wise to draw upon the comments of the learned author of 'Law and Practice of Meetings' Frank Shackleton, 5th Edn. At page 27 under the Caption 'Special Business must be clearly stated', the following requirements are noted:—

"As to the essentials of a notice, it must state clearly the nature of any special business to be transacted, as no other business can be transacted in addition or otherwise, unless the notice refers to ordinary business which it is competent for the meeting to transact....."

It is, however, always desirable to state clearly the nature of any special business to be transacted, and if the regulations provide for notice of such special business, any resolutions passed without due notice will be invalid."

31. To reiterate with emphasis the importance of the notice of a meeting,

Mr. Thakkar referred to Grundt v. Great Boulder Proprietary Gold Mines Ltd., (1948) 1 All ER 21. Article 102 of the Articles of Association of the Company provided as follows:—

"If at any general meeting at which an election of directors ought to take place the place of any director retiring by rotation is not filled up, he shall, if willing, continue in office until the ordinary meeting in the next year, and so on from year to year until his place is filled up, unless it shall be determined at any such meeting on due notice to reduce the number of directors in office." The question arose whether the plaintiff, a retiring director, despite his failure to get re-elected, continued in office. His claim was resisted on the ground that the company in effect had at its meeting reduced the number of directors. Cohen, L. J. overruled the contention and held that the number of directors in office cannot be reduced unless there was a specific resolution of the company to that effect after a mention of the general nature of such resolution has been made. The concluding words of Art. 102 require a specific notice to that effect. Lord Greene, M. R. at p. 30 of the report clarifies the legal position in the following words:—

"In the present case counsel for the company argued that the company had, in effect, determined to reduce the number of directors in office (a) by refusing to re-elect the retiring plaintiff, and (b) by not electing anybody to fill that vacancy. I do not accept that argument. It appears to me that the concluding words of Article 102 require a specific resolution, not merely to re-elect A but a specific resolution that nobody shall be elected to fill the vacancy."

32. It must be noted that the absence of due notice and a specific resolution was linked up with certain legal consequences, for instance, continuation of the retiring director in office. It was mostly on account of the peculiar wording of Article 102 that the court held that a proper resolution after due notice of the proposed special business was absolutely necessary.

33. Then Mr. Thakkar cited a decision in Tiessen v. Henderson, (1899) 1 Ch 861. The relevant part of the head-note of that case may be stated:—

"The notice of an extraordinary general meeting must disclose all facts necessary to enable the share-holder receiving it to determine in his own interest whether or not he ought to attend the meeting; and pecuniary interest of a director in the matter of a special resolution to be proposed at the meeting is a material fact for this purpose."

While restraining the company by an ad-interim injunction from acting upon or carrying into effect certain — special resolutions for reconstruction alleged to have been passed and confirmed at its extraordinary general meetings, the learned Judge Kekewich, J. has made rather strong remarks at page 866 of the report:

"The application of the doctrine of (Foss v. Harbottle), (1843) 2 Hare 461 to joint stock companies involves as a necessary corollary the proposition that the vote of the majority at a general meeting, as it binds both dissentient and absent share-holders, must be a vote given with the utmost fairness that not only must the matter be fairly put before the meeting, but the meeting itself must be conducted in the fairest possible manner"

Then at pages 870-871 the learned Judge makes a further observation—

"If a meeting properly convened, and properly instructed as to the purpose for which it is convened, chooses to assent to this, there is no reason why it should not do so, but I think it ought to have the opportunity of considering the point. The man I am protecting is not the dissentient, but the absent share-holder — the man who is absent because, having received and with more or less care looked at this circular, he comes to the conclusion that on the whole he will not oppose the scheme, but leave it to the majority. I cannot tell whether he would have left it to the majority of the meeting to decide if he had known the real facts. He did not know the real facts; and, therefore, I think the resolution is not binding upon him."

34. Now, I may sum up what emerges from these various authorities cited by Mr. Thakkar. Bearing in mind the object of the legislature, I must say that Section 173 is mandatory and not directory. It is in the interest of the general body of Share-holders that the legislature has made provisions in Section 173 (2) requiring the notice of a meeting to set out a statement containing all material facts concerning each special item of business. A notice of meeting when it contains items of special business within the meaning of Section 173 (1) (b) must disclose all the material facts. All the share-holders must be in a position to make up their mind in advance whether they will attend the meeting or leave it to the good sense of the majority at the meeting. Any non-compliance with this requirement will nullify the action taken at the meeting. While considering the efficacy of any such notice, a benevolent construction will not be adopted so as to defeat the provisions of the statute. It is also clear that whether or not a particular notice or an explanatory statement in a given case complies with the statutory requirement is a question of fact. There are two ways in which the mandatory provisions contained in Section 173 may be contravened. It may be a case where no explanatory statement is at all appended to the item of special business, or it may be a case where the statement is incomplete, misleading or tricky. The contravention may be the result of an act of omission or an act of commission. Whatever be the nature of the contravention, the question always is a mixed question of fact and law. When a challenge is made in a court of law the court will have to consider all the facts and circumstances of the case and then decide one way or the other.

35. As the contravention alleged by the plaintiffs in this case is a mixed question of law and fact, the pleadings certainly assume importance. Mr. Nariman has made a point, as stated above, that the pleadings give no indication that the plaintiffs ever alleged any contravention of Section 173. As the resolution is challenged on the ground of breach of Section 258 in particular and the provisions of the Companies Act in general, there is certainly some difficulty in permitting the plaintiffs to raise this point.

36. Mr. Thakkar has not accepted the position that the plaint does not contain sufficient averments. He has pointed out from the plaint and the written statement that the pleadings certainly give an indication that the plaintiffs wanted to challenge the legality of the action on the ground of either want of or a defective resolution. Mr. Thakkar relied upon the averments in para 7 of the plaint. The plaintiffs have averred that before increasing the number of directors under Section 258 of the Act and Article 169 of the Articles of Association, a resolution ought to have been passed after due compliance with the requirements of the provisions of the Companies Act. Mr. Thakkar says that though the plaintiffs have alleged contravention of the Companies Act, they have by implication referred to the requirement of an explanatory statement under Section 173 of the Act. Then Mr. Thakkar also read out portions of the written statement of the appellants, particularly paragraphs 9 and 10, which, according to Mr. Thakkar, show that the defendants were aware of the challenge made by the plaintiffs to the legality of the resolutions on the various grounds. Even apart from the pleadings, according to Mr. Thakkar, the parties were aware of all the relevant facts and the point about the applicability of Section 173 of the Act. In this connection reliance was also placed on the affidavits filed at the interlocutory stage in support of the notice of motion taken out for interim relief. Plaintiffs had in their affidavits referred to the defective explanatory statement and said that there is non-compliance with the requirements of Section 173. A reference was also made to the appeal memo (A. O. No. 436 of 1970) filed by the respondents in this Court against the interlocutory order. After considering all these submissions, I am of the opinion that Mr. Thakkar can at best show in this case that there is no explanatory note at all accompanying the item of special business. But the averments referred to above are certainly insufficient to cover a plea that the explanatory statement appended to the notice of the meeting about the special business is insufficient or misleading. Any such plea about insufficiency of the explanatory statement is very much like the plea of fraud. It is well settled that the plea of fraud must be substantiated by all relevant particulars disclosed in the pleadings.

37. Then I have to deal with the point raised by Mr. Thakkar that in the present case there is no explanatory statement and, therefore, there is a clear contravention of the provisions of S. 173 of the Act. Mr. Thakkar says that there was no proposal in so many words about the increase of the number of directors. There was no such item in the notice. Therefore, there was no occasion for any explanatory statement.

38. I have already referred to the contents of the Items Nos. 3, 4, 7 and 8 in the notice of meeting. Items Nos. 3 and 4 refer to ordinary business inasmuch as the directors retiring by rotation were to be re-elected. The permanent strength of the Board of Directors was 8. Under Article 164 of the Company, the number nearest to one-third had to retire from office. Items Nos. 3 and 4 certainly indicate that the company was to fill up the two vacancies caused by the retirement of the directors by rotation. Now, Items Nos. 7 and 8 state that the Board had appointed two additional directors on 10th April 1969. Those directors will cease to hold office under Section 260 of the Act on the date of the meeting. Notices, as required under Section 257 of the Act, have been received by the company proposing the candidature of these additional directors at the meeting. This information about the item of business has to be considered along with the corresponding explanatory statement. The explanatory statement virtually restates what is contained in Items Nos. 7 and 8. One additional particular is also mentioned and that is the recommendation of the Board of Directors that the named persons be appointed as directors. Items Nos. 7 and 8 along with the explanatory statement certainly convey to the share-holders that the Board of Directors have made a proposal that two more additional directors be appointed at the meeting and if possible the two named persons be elected to fill up those additional posts. In my opinion this is nothing short of a proposal to increase the strength of the Board of Directors from 8 to 10. Mr. Thakkar tried to show that all this information has nothing to do with the proposal to increase the number of directors. But despite his best efforts he was not in a position to convince me that all this information was in connection with some other intelligible topic. I have not been able to place any other construction on Items Nos. 7 and 8, and in my opinion the plaintiffs have failed to make out a case that there is no information at all about the proposed special business accompanied by the required explanatory statement.

39. Then Mr. Thakkar argued that at any rate the court must hold that the information given along with explanatory note is wholly misleading. Mr. Thakkar pointed out that the Board of Directors has nowhere indicated in the notice or the explanatory statement as to why it had made a proposal for increasing the number of directors.

40. Mr. Nariman, on the other hand, submitted that the Board can only disclose known reasons and it is not in a position to disclose the unknown reasons. I do not find any substance in either of these contentions. In the absence of a pleading in fact, Mr. Thakkar cannot successfully show that there was no reason contained in the statement about the proposed increase. In my opinion the statement is a comprehensive and compendious statement. The Board has in a way indicated the reasons for the increase. It has stated that it was required to appoint two men of their confidence as additional directors. It is implicit in this action and the statement that the company needed their services. This is followed by a recommendation by the Board that the two named persons be appointed to fill up the additional posts. This is sufficient reason for the proposed increase. A share-holder, after reading this information, can certainly form an intelligent judgment and make up his mind one way or the other. He may either choose to attend the meeting or leave it to the good sense of the majority of the voters. As the plaint does not show in what way the explanatory statement is defective, there is no reason to further examine the so-called defect pointed out by Mr. Thakkar. Mr. Nariman's distinction between known and unknown reasons is also very far from convincing. One acts only for known reasons. Acting without reasons is a leap in the dark and, therefore, there is never any occasion for giving unknown reasons. But I must make it clear that under Section 173 (2) material facts will not necessarily include the reasons. It will all depend upon the nature of the subject-matter which constitutes the special business. Some times the facts stated are sufficiently eloquent and there is no need to justify the proposed action by giving reasons. In the absence of sufficient pleadings, the plaintiffs in the present case cannot challenge the statements contained in the notice and the explanatory statement on the ground that the particulars are insufficient and/or misleading. In the result I disagree with the finding of the learned Judge and hold that there is no contravention of the provisions of Section 173 of the Companies Act.

41. Then Mr. Thakkar argued that the learned Judge was in error in holding that the additional directors, like the retiring directors, are not required to file any written consent duly signed by them before their reappointment by the company. This question involves the interpretation of Section 264 (1) of the Act. Section 264 (1) as it originally stood in 1956 has gone through a process of one or two amendments. Before I consider the point and the various possible interpretations of Section 264, it will be necessary to state a few more facts.

42. On 9-4-1969 there was a move for appointing the appellants as additional directors. On the same day two letters were separately addressed by the appellants to the company. The letters purported to be consent in writing duly signed under Section 264 (1) of the Act. The appellants have indicated their consent to act as directors of the company if appointed. On 10-4-1969 the Board of Directors appointed the appellants as additional directors under Section 260 of the Act. On 10-4-1969 separate proposals by two members were made in favour of the appointment of the appellants as directors at the ensuing meeting. Defendant No. 1 (3?) the company in its written statement, has stated that after the receipt of the letters of consent dated 9-4-1969 the appellants were appointed as additional directors. Mr. Thakkar referred to form No. 29, which was submitted on 26-4-1969, that is, long before the Annual General Meeting of the company. All these facts and circumstances according to Mr. Thakkar show that the letters of consent were, in fact, filed by the appellants in connection with their appointment as additional directors. The learned Judge has accepted this position. But Mr. Nariman for the appellants is challenging this finding. I may not consider this controversy at this stage.

43. As stated above, it will be necessary to point out the legislative changes before I consider Section 264 in its present form. Section 264 as originally enacted reads as follows:—

"(1) A person who is not a retiring director shall not be capable of being appointed director of a company unless he has himself or by his agent authorised in writing signed and filed with the Registrar a consent in writing to act as such director.

(2) Sub-section (1) shall not apply to a private company unless it is a subsidiary of a public company".

44. The provision as enacted required all persons who desired to be considered for appointment as directors to file a written consent before their appointment. The consent has to be given before the appointment as without such consent the person was not capable of being appointed and he could not be considered a qualified or a fit person for appointment as director. Only one person was exempted from this condition and that was a retiring director. It was not necessary for him to file any consent before his reappointment as a director. Then as a result of the Amending Act 65 of 1960 a new Section 264 was substituted with effect from 28-12-1960. The new section reads as under:—

"264 (2). Every person (other than a person who has left at the office of the company a notice under Section 257 signifying his candidature for the office of a director) proposed as a candidate for the office of a director shall sign and file with the company, his consent in writing to act as a director, if appointed.

(2) A person other than—

(a) a director re-appointed after retirement by rotation or immediately on the expiry of his term of office, shall not act as director of the company unless he has within thirty days of his appointment signed and filed with the Registrar his consent in writing to act as such director.

(3) This section shall not apply to a private company unless it is a subsidiary of a public company".

The significant change in the wording is the deletion of the words "shall not be capable of being appointed". Section 264 (1) dispenses with the formal consent in the case of a person who has proposed himself as a candidate for the office of a director under Section 257 of the Act. Sub-section (2) requires all persons newly appointed as directors to file with the Registrar within 30 days of their appointment a consent in writing to act as a director. Sub-section (2) makes it clear that unless such a consent is filed the person appointed shall not act as a director.

45. Thereafter by Act No. 31 of 1965 the section is substantially amended and I have to consider the section so amended. The section in the present form is as follows:—

"264(1) "Every person (other than a director retiring by rotation or otherwise or a person who has left at the office of the company a notice under Section 257 signifying his candidature for the office of a director) proposed as a candidate for the office of a director shall sign and file with the company, his consent in writing to act as a director, if appointed.

(2) A person other than—

(a) a director re-appointed after retirement by rotation or immediately on the expiry of his term of office, or

(b) an additional or alternate director, or a person filling a casual vacancy in the office of a director under S. 262, appointed as a director or reappointed as an additional or alternate director, immediately on the expiry of his term of office, or

(c) a person named as a director of the company under its articles as first registered, shall not act as a director of the company unless he has within thirty days of his appointment signed and filed with the Registrar his consent in writing to act as such director.

(3) This section shall not apply to a private company unless it is a subsidiary of a public company".

46. The first point debated before me by counsel on either side is whether Section 264 is directory or mandatory. As the point is not covered by any direct authority, the counsel had to rely upon their original submissions and they have also referred to decisions which deal with the construction of statutes.

47. Mr. Thakkar says that the section is mandatory because the condition referred to in the section of filing a written consent is a condition precedent to the valid appointment. The consent required under Section 264 is to be in writing and duly signed. Section 264 (1) provides that the person who is a candidate for the office of a director shall file his consent in the prescribed form to act as a director, if appointed. Mr. Thakkar says that the use of the expression "shall" indicates that the section is mandatory. Mr. Thakkar invited my attention to a number of judicial decisions about the interpretation of statutes. He relied upon a decision of the Supreme Court in Aswini Kumar Ghose v. Arabinda Bose, AIR 1952 SC 369 for the proposition that if the specific words used by the legislature are clear then for interpretation the courts could not rely upon the Statement of Objects and Reasons. Patanjali Shastri, C. J. at page 378 (para 32) has made the following observations:—

"As regards the propriety of the reference to the Statement of objects and reasons, it must be remembered that it seeks only to explain what reasons induced the mover to introduce the bill in the House and what objects he sought to achieve. But those objects and reasons may or may not correspond to the objective which the majority of members had in view when they passed it into law. The Bill may have undergone radical changes during its passage through the House or Houses, and there is no guarantee that the reasons which led to its introduction and the objects thereby sought to be achieved have remained the same throughout till the Bill emerges from the House as an Act of the Legislature, for they do not form part of the Bill and are not voted upon by the members. We, therefore, consider that the Statement of objects and reasons appended to the Bill should be ruled out as an aid to the construction of a statute".

But Mr. Thakkar admitted that the rigour of the rule laid down in the abovementioned case was relaxed, in a subsequent decision of the Supreme Court in Commr. of Income-tax, M. P. v. Smt. Sodra Devi, AIR 1957 SC 832, Bhagwati, J. at page 835 says:—

"It is clear that unless there is any such ambiguity it would not be open to the Court to depart from the normal rule of construction which is that the intention of the Legislature should be primarily gathered from the words which are used. It is only when the words used are ambiguous that they would stand to be examined and construed in the light of surrounding circumstances and constitutional principle and practice".

At page 839 a further rule of construction of statute is stated:—

"Though it is not legitimate to refer to the statement of objects and reasons as an aid to the construction or for ascertaining the meaning of any particular word used in the Act or Statute (see Aswini Kumar Ghose v. Arabinda Bose, (AIR 1952 SC 369)), nevertheless this Court in the State of West Bengal v. Subhod Gopal Bose, 1954 SCR 587 at p. 628 — (AIR 1954 SC 92) referred to the same for the limited purpose of ascertaining the conditions prevailing at the time which actuated the sponsor of the Bill to introduce the same and the extent and urgency of evil which he sought to remedy".

Mr. Thakkar says that it is the primary rule of construction that the statute should be interpreted without looking into any other extraneous circumstances. It is only when there is some ambiguity then, as stated by the Supreme Court, reference may be made to the objects and reasons for the limited purpose of finding out the particular reason which prompted the Legislature to pass that enactment.

48. Then Mr. Thakkar referred to the rule which, in the judicial parlance, is recognised as the Golden Rule of construction of statutes. The statement of the rule by Burton, J. in Warburton v. Loveland, (1928) 1 Hud & B., 623-648 (IR) is reproduced by the learned author in Bindra's Interpretation of Statutes, 5th Edn. at p. 71 and is to the following effect:—

"I apprehend it is a rule in the construction of statutes, that, in the first instance, the grammatical sense of the words is to be adhered to. If that is contrary to, or inconsistent with any expressed intention, or declared purpose of the statute, or if it would involve any absurdity, repugnance, or inconsistency, the grammatical sense must then be modified, extended, or abridged so far as to avoid such inconvenience, but no further".

The following passage in Chapter XIII from Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 12th Edn. 314 also lays down a sound principle:—

"It is impossible to lay down any general rule for determining whether a provision is imperative or directory. 'No universal rule' said Lord Campbell L. C. 'can be laid down for the construction of statutes, as to whether mandatory enactments shall be considered directory only or obligatory with an implied nullification for disobedience. It is the duty of Courts of justice to try to get at the real intention of the Legislature by carefully attending to the whole scope of the statute to be construed.' And Lord Penzance said: 'I believe, as far as any rule is concerned, you cannot safely go further than that in each case you must look to the subject-matter; consider the importance of the provision that has been disregarded, and the relation of that provision to the general object intended to be secured by the Act; and upon a review of the case in that aspect decide whether the matter is what is called imperative or only directory'".

49. Viewed in the light of these principles, the section, in my opinion, appears to be directory in so far as the person who would desire to be a candidate for the office of a director would be required to file his consent. The object of the legislature is evident when one considers the various amendments made by the Legislature before the section was enacted in the present form. Those who have once acted as directors were only seeking reappointment. It was considered throughout that the formal consent on their part was not necessary. It is very clear as to why such a condition was found necessary. It may be that a person who is appointed as a director may refuse to act on the ground that he had never consented to act as a director. When such a flaw is discovered later on and the appointment will have to be ignored as ineffective, the company will have to take again further steps for filling the post of such director. Ordinarily a person appointed as a director is not likely to refuse to act. In a rare case he may do so. It is only to avoid the attending inconvenience that the Legislature has prescribed the condition. In the section as originally worded, somewhat strong language was used. It was enacted that a person shall not be capable of being appointed as a director unless he had filed earlier his consent in writing to act as such director. The deletion of these words in the subsequent amended form of the section is not without significance. Perhaps the Legislature thought that the condition was given comparatively more importance when it was introduced in the section. If this is the only object which the Legislature sought to achieve by prescribing a prior consent in writing then there is no reason why the absence of consent in all cases should invalidate the appointment. Even without a consent a person appointed may accept the appointment and prefer to act as a director. This is likely to happen in a majority of cases. Considering the section as a whole and bearing in mind the object of the Legislature, and magnitude of the mischief intended to be avoided I hold that Section 264 (1) is clearly directory and not mandatory. I am only interpreting Section 264 (1) of the Act and it is not necessary to pronounce any opinion about Section 264 (2). Whether it is mandatory or directory will have to be decided in a suitable case. But I cannot help expressing my opinion that the difference in the language has certainly assisted me in reaching my conclusion about the directory nature of S. 264 (1) of the Act. The consent under S. 264 (2) which is to be filed with the Registrar is a condition precedent for acting as a director. The sub-section provides that a person, who is being appointed for the first time as a director, shall not act as a director of the company unless he has filed the consent within the prescribed time. No argument is necessary for saying that the sub-section is mandatory.

50. Then Mr. Thakkar submitted that the learned Judge was in error in holding that there is really no difference between the retiring director and the additional director while considering the application of Section 264 (1) of the Act. As all the relevant points were urged before me I had to consider them and give my decision accordingly. In fact when I found that the section is directory it is sufficient for the final disposal of the appeal but these are all points of law touching the interpretation of Section 264 (1) as a whole and, therefore, I must consider each point urged by the counsel separately.

51. That takes me to the interpretation of the key words in S. 264 (1) "or otherwise". The learned Judge while considering these words has relied on the dictionary meaning of the expression "retire". A person retires when he ceases to hold a particular office. There is no difference between retiring by rotation and retiring by ceasing to hold office. The additional directors appointed under Section 260 hold office only upto the date of the next Annual General Meeting. In other words they cease to hold office before the date of the next Annual General Meeting. Mr. Thakkar says that the learned Judge was not right in reaching this conclusion. According to Mr. Thakkar there is material difference between the two sets of directors. Mr. Thakkar points out that under Section 256 (1) of the Act certain proportion of directors retire by rotation. Under S. 256 (2) the directors retire by rotation at every Annual General Meeting. Whereas under Section 260 first proviso, the additional director holds office only upto the date of the next Annual General Meeting of the company. In other words, the additional director ceases to hold office earlier and thereafter the retiring director who vacates the office at the meeting remains in office for at least a short duration. Mr. Thakkar says that this distinction between the tenure of the two classes of directors is recognised even under the English Law. Mr. Thakkar has relied on a decision in Eyre v. Milton Proprietary Ltd., (1936) 1 Ch 244. The court in that case was required to consider the exact connotation of two Arts. 85 and 90 of the Articles of Association of the Company. The court had to decide the meaning of the expression "of the whole number of directors" in Art. 85. That was necessary to determine the number of directors who had to retire in a particular year. There was no doubt that the expression "whole number of directors" did not include the Managing Director. Article 90 provided that the Board may from time to time appoint additional directors but any director so appointed shall hold office only until the next following ordinary general meeting of the company, and shall then be eligible for re-election. The point for consideration depended for its answer on the words of Art. 85 as compared with the words of Art. 90 and in particular certain latter words of Art. 85. According to the Court there must be some point of time at which it was to be ascertained as to who are the whole number of directors to whom must be applied the provision relating to retirement. That point of time was to be at the ordinary general meeting. It was clear from Art. 90 that at the annual general meeting the two additional directors will not be in office as they were to hold office only until the next following ordinary general meeting of the company. At the commencement of the ordinary general meeting they will be no longer in office. But the retiring directors and the other continuing directors will act as directors throughout the meeting. In other words, they would constitute the total number of directors, for deciding the proportion of the directors retiring. Romer, L. J. at page 257 sums up the legal position in the following words:—

"I agree that in the circumstances the number of directors to be considered is the number of directors existing at the moment when the ordinary general meeting begins and inasmuch as at the particular moment that it begins the two directors elected under Art. 90 cease to be directors, the number of directors then must be taken to be five and not seven".

Mr. Thakkar relies on this decision for underlining a similar distinction between the directors retiring by rotation at every annual general meeting and the additional directors holding office only upto the date of the next annual general meeting. Mr. Thakkar says that when the Legislature has used the expressions like "retiring" and "holding office" upto a particular point of time, the court will have to interpret the different words in a different way. In support of this rule of interpretation he relies on a decision of this Court in East and West Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Mrs. Kamala Jayantilal Mehta, AIR 1956 Bom 537. Chief Justice Chagla, who delivered the judgment of the bench, says at p. 543:—

"Now, the normal canon of construction either of a statute or of articles of association is that when different expressions are used they are intended to connote something different....."

There cannot be any dispute about this rule of interpretation. Giving full effect to the rule it only means that a retiring director ceases to hold office later than the additional director. The difference in the duration of their tenure is brought out by the Legislature by using appropriate expressions. But it will not be correct to carry this distinction too far. While interpreting the words appearing in Section 264, the expression "retiring by rotation" has to be understood in conjunction with or along with the other key words "otherwise". These two expressions certainly are used for covering or for including different set of directors who cease to hold office. We know very well what is meant by a director retiring by rotation. Section 256 (1) provides that at the first annual general meeting one-third of the directors for the time being as are liable to retire by rotation, or if their number is not three or a multiple of three, then the number nearest to one-third, shall retire from office. Then the question arises on a literal interpretation of the words as to who are the other directors who otherwise retire, that is, retire otherwise than by rotation. Mr. Thakkar says that the Articles of Association of a company may provide that all the directors en bloc shall retire and in that case the company might appoint directors to fill up all the vacancies. Mr. Thakkar has not been able to indicate any other class of directors who will be covered by the expression "or otherwise". He maintained that under Section 256 (1) a company may by its articles provide that a certain proportion of directors will ever remain in office and only the remaining directors will wholly retire and it is to cover such a class of directors retiring in this manner that the expression "or otherwise" is used by the Legislature in Section 264 (1) of the Act.

52. It is difficult to accept this interpretation of S. 256 (1). Section 256 (1) provides:—

"..... one-third of such of the directors for the time being as are liable to retire by rotation, or if their number is not three or a multiple of three, then, the number nearest to one-third, shall retire from office".

In the illustration given by Mr. Thakkar, a certain fixed number of directors will remain in office permanently and the others will retire, so as to enable the company to fill up those vacancies. Those who are retiring in this manner are, according to Mr. Thakkar, not retiring by rotation. I am not prepared to accept this interpretation of Section 256 (1) of the Act. When few of the directors retire in the manner indicated in S. 256 (1) of the Act, then they are retiring by rotation. If the articles so provide, all the directors may retire and that retirement certainly will not be covered by the expression "retiring by rotation". On a reference to the Shorter Oxford Dictionary, Vol. II-N-Z, 3rd Edn. revised with Addenda, I find that the adverb "otherwise" means in another way or in other ways. Whether the expression "otherwise" would include one or more classes is not clear. At any rate, the expression is somewhat equivocal. In such a case I will be justified in following the dictum laid down by the Supreme Court in Virji Ram Sutaria v. Nathalal Premji Bhanvadia, AIR 1970 SC 765. The Supreme Court in that case, while interpreting certain articles of the Constitution, relied upon the statement of objects and reasons,

The Supreme Court had to decide whether certain provisions were directory or mandatory. As the provisions themselves were not clear, reliance was placed on the statement of objects and reasons for finding out the intention of the Legislature. I may reproduce the following passage from the judgment of Mitter, J. which appears at page 769 para 11 of the report:—

"The above cases are sufficient to show that non-compliance with the provisions of a statute or Constitution will not necessarily render a proceeding invalid if by considering its nature, its design and the consequences which follow from its non-observance one is not led to the conclusion that the legislature or the constitution-makers intended that there should be no departure from the strict words used".

So, in other words, while interpreting the words or even while departing from the strict words used, the Court may find out the intention of the legislature by referring to the statement of objects and reasons. Mr. Nariman rightly says, that relying on this decision one can look at the notes on clauses preceding the amendment of Section 264 of the Act. (See Gazette of India, Extraordinary, Part II, Sec. II, 1964 dated 10-2-1964). Clause 32 reads as under:

"Section 264 requires that a person proposed as a candidate for the office of director shall file with the company his consent to act as director, if appointed. It also requires that a person other than a director reappointed after retirement by rotation shall not act as director unless he has filed with the Registrar his consent in writing to act as such. This amendment seeks to exempt persons who have served as directors in the immediate preceding terms from these requirements. It is felt that in the case of such persons the requirement to file their consent in writing is a formality which could well be dispensed with." Clause 32 shows in unmistakable terms as to why the exceptions were enacted to dispense with the filing of consent in certain cases. No such consent either under Section 264 (1) or sub-section (2) was necessary in the case of persons who had immediately before the reappointment acted as directors. Considering the object of the amendment there is no reason why the additional directors who are expressly exempted from the requirement of filing a consent under Section 264 (2) should be excluded while construing a somewhat similar exemption under Section 264 (1) of the Act. In my opinion the expression "otherwise" covers all the other directors who for one reason or the other cease to hold office and are immediately thereafter reappointed as directors.

For these reasons I hold that the learned Judge was right when he recorded a finding that additional directors are not required to file any written consent under Section 264 of the Act, as a condition precedent for the validity of their reappointment.

53-54. Then Mr. Nariman submitted that no such consent under S. 265 (1) is required for appointment of any person as an additional director under S. 260 of the Act. He relies on the wording of Section 264 (1), viz:

"Every person proposed as a candidate for the office of a director shall sign and file with the company, his consent in writing to act as a director, if appointed".

These words, according to Mr. Nariman, indicate that the consent contemplated is referable to the candidature of the person for the office of director. That can only be at the meeting of the company in which directors are appointed by unanimous or majority vote of the shareholders. Mr. Nariman says that S. 260 confers power on the Board of Directors to appoint additional directors when so permitted by the Articles of Association of the Company. Neither in Section 260 nor anywhere in the articles of the Company are there provisions requiring the person to file his consent before his appointment as additional director. A closer reading of Section 264 (1) furnishes one more reason in support of the interpretation suggested by Mr. Nariman. One of the persons, who is exempted from the condition of filing such a consent is one who has left at the office of the company a notice under Section 257 signifying his candidature for the office of a director. This clearly shows that the provision about consent is in connection with the appointment of directors at the meeting of the company. Even the consent that is prescribed is to be in writing to act as a director, if appointed. There are no such words to show that the consent is given to act as a director or an additional director. These various expressions used by the Legislature certainly indicate that Section 264 (1) does not in any manner regulate the appointment of additional directors under Section 260 of the Act.

55. It is not disputed before me nor was there any dispute before the learned Judge about the fact that there is one set of written consent filed in this case on behalf of the appellants. It is not necessary to resolve the controversy whether it was with reference to the appointment as an additional director or with reference to the reappointment as a director. If no consent was required for any appointment under Section 260 that consent, if filed, will be redundant. It is true that the company by its written statement has taken up a contention that after receipt of these consents the appellants were appointed as additional directors. Mr. Thakkar also submitted that, that may be accepted as a fact in view of the various facts and circumstances mentioned above. But the appellants in their written statement have pleaded that these written consents certainly validated their appointment in the general meeting. Once it is found as a fact that no consent was required for the appellants' appointment as Addl. Directors, then there is no reason why the appellants should not be allowed to rely upon the letters of consent, when the validity of their appointment is challenged by the plaintiffs. Letters of consent were to be filed duly signed by the persons concerned with the company. They are so signed and filed with the company. There are no words used in the letters to indicate that they had given the consent only to act as additional directors, if appointed. In the absence of any such restrictive words, it can be fairly assumed that they gave their consent in writing not only to act as additional directors, if appointed, but also to act as directors, if appointed. In my opinion even for this additional reason the appointment of the appellants cannot be challenged.

56. The last point raised in the present appeal is about the maintainability of the suit. Mr. Nariman, consistent with the appellants' stand in the lower court, submits that the plaintiffs have come to the court with certain grievances about the irregularities committed by the company while appointing the appellants as directors. Mr. Nariman relied upon a decision of this Court in V. N. Bhajekar v. K. M. Shinkar, 36 Bom LR 483 = (AIR 1934 Bom 243). It was a suit by the shareholders challenging irregularities committed by the directors. It was held that such a suit was not competent. The headnote indicates that there are certain recognised exceptions to the rule that mere irregularities committed during the course of the management of the internal affairs of the company do not furnish any cause of action to the shareholder or shareholders. The relevant headnote is to the following effect:—

"The supremacy of the majority of shareholders is subject to certain exceptions, viz:

(1) where the act complained of is ultra vires the company;

(2) where the act complained of is a fraud on the minority; and

(3) where there is an absolute necessity to waive the rule in order that there may not be a denial of justice".

Mr. Nariman submits that the present case is not covered by any one of these three exceptions. The appellants were appointed directors by a unanimous resolution passed at the meeting of the company. The plaintiffs after a long lapse of time had no reason to rush to the court for any relief. It is not an act which is patently illegal or ultra vires the company. But I find it difficult to accept this contention of Mr. Nariman. I have already held that Section 173 is mandatory and not directory. Any non-compliance with the provisions of S. 173 will result in the nullification of the Act. The plaintiffs have alleged that there was contravention of Section 258 of the Indian Companies Act, as there was no valid resolution proposing the increase in the number of directors. It may be that the plaintiffs have not eventually succeeded in the suit. In view of the findings recorded by me, it cannot be said that the suit as framed is not competent. In my opinion the plaintiffs' case will be covered by the first of the three exceptions mentioned above. The learned Judge was, therefore, right when he held that the suit as framed was maintainable.

57. Mr. Buch with Mr. Munshi, who appeared for Respondent No. 3 Company, submits to the orders of this Court.

58. In the result the appeal is allowed, the judgment and decree of the lower court is set aside and the plaintiffs' suit is dismissed with costs throughout. Respondents 1 and 2 will not be liable to pay the costs of Respondent No. 3 throughout.

Appeal allowed.

A person who contravenes a rule framed under the Act, commits an offence under the Act and on his conviction for that offence, he is liable to be disqualified under S. 17 (1) for holding a driving licence. Cr. R. A. No. 52 of 1971 (Bom) and Cr. R. A. No. 1142 of 1970 (Bom). Overruled. (Para 21)

Section 112 which prescribes punishment takes in breaches of the Act as well as breaches of the rules, with the result that breaches of the rules become offences under Section 112, that is offences under the Act. (Para 12)

The power conferred by sub-section (1) of Section 17 can be exercised even if the breach is of a rule of conduct not directly connected with the act of driving like the one contained in R. 26 (34) Bombay Motor Vehicles Rules. The power to suspend the driving licence is not conditioned by the circumstance that the offender must be guilty of an offence connected directly with the act of driving. (Paras 14, 15)

The word "penalty" is used in Section 112 in the sense of 'sentence' following upon a conviction. The context is that if no other penalty is provided for the offence, the offence would be punishable with a sentence of fine, indicating thereby that if no other sentence is provided, the sentence of fine may be imposed. G. A. Chandra, for Petitioner; S. C. Pratap, Asst. Govt. Pleader, for State.

CHANDRACHUD, J.:— In Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 52 of 1971 (Bom) Vaidya, J. took the view that the power conferred by Section 17 (1) of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939 (herein, "the act") to disqualify a person for holding a driving licence cannot be exercised in cases where the contravention is of a rule relating to the mere conduct of the driver. Bhasme, J., also sitting singly, took the same view in Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 1142 of 1970 (Bom).

2. A similar question arose before the learned Chief Justice in Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 1101 of 1970. He was inclined to a different view and therefore he has referred for our decision the question as regards the correctness of the two earlier decisions. In his referring judgment on July 16, 1971, the learned Chief Justice has expressed the opinion that the power conferred by Section 17 (1) to suspend a driving licence is exercisable even where the conviction is for the breach of a rule governing the conduct of the driver.

3. Only a few facts are relevant. The petitioner is a taxi driver and the prosecution arose out of his refusal to drive the complainant to the desired destination. The complainant got into the taxi when the meter flag was in a vertical position but rather than take him where he wanted to go, the petitioner held him by his legs and threatened to throw him out. For this, the petitioner was convicted by the learned Presidency Magistrate under Section 112 of the Act read with Rule 26 (34) of the Bombay Motor Vehicles Rules, 1959, (hereinafter called "the Rules"). This rule provides that "No driver shall without reasonable excuse refuse to let the cab for hire when the flag is in a vertical position". The Magistrate sentenced the petitioner to pay a fine of Rs. 100/- and under Section 17 (1) he suspended the petitioner's driving licence for a period of two months.

4. The learned Chief Justice has confirmed the order of conviction and the sentence of fine. He was also inclined to confirm the order of suspension but he felt that he could not differ from the view taken by Courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction. He has therefore referred for our consideration the question as regards the correctness of that view.

5. Counsel appearing on behalf of the petitioner has raised two preliminary objections to the reference made by the learned Chief Justice. Counsel says that two single Judges having taken the same view, their judgments are on a par with the judgment of Division Bench and therefore the learned Chief Justice had no power to differ from the view taken by the "Division Bench" and refer the matter to another Division Bench. This objection is untenable. One plus one equals two is plain arithmetic but you cannot roll two judgments of two single Judges into one and give to those judgments the authority of the judgment of a Division Bench. This novel method will bring into being a new class of privileged judgments of "Division Benches", "Full Benches" and "Special Benches" — unknown to the law of precedents. The objection is devoid of merit.

6. Of no different variety is the second preliminary objection that the question referred to us cannot possibly arise as Section 17 (1) of the Act offends against Article 20 (2) of the Constitution. Article 20 (2) provides that no person shall be "prosecuted and punished" for the same offence more than once. Even assuming that the suspension of the petitioner's licence is punishment within the meaning of Article 20 (2), the petitioner has not been prosecuted for the same offence more than once. It is in the prosecution that he is being fined and disqualified for holding a licence. Therefore, this objection must also fail.

7. The question for consideration is whether the power of the Court to disqualify a person for holding a driving licence extends to cases in which the conviction is recorded under S. 112 of the Act for the breach of a Rule made under the Act.

8. Section 17 (1) of the Act is in these terms:

"17. Power of Court to Disqualify.—

(1) Where a person is convicted of an offence under this Act, or of an offence in the commission of which a motor vehicle was used, the Court by which such person is convicted may, subject to the provisions of this section, in addition to imposing any other punishment authorised by law, declare the person so convicted to be disqualified, for such period as the Court may specify, for holding any driving licence or for holding a driving licence to drive a particular class or description of vehicle."

9. Section 21 of the Act confers on the State Government the power to make rules for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of Chapter II of the Act, in which Section 17 occurs.

10. Section 112 of the Act provides:

"Whoever contravenes any provision of this Act or any rule made thereunder shall, if no other penalty is provided for the offence, be punishable with fine which may extend to one hundred rupees, or, if having been previously convicted of any offence under this Act he is again convicted of an offence under this Act, with fine which may extend to three hundred rupees."

11. It is urged on behalf of the petitioner that Section 112 makes a distinction between the contravention of a provision of the Act and the contravention of a provision of a rule made under the Act and, therefore, the power conferred by Section 17 (1) to suspend the driving licence of "a person convicted of an offence under this Act" is not available in regard to offenders convicted for breach of a rule. We find it difficult to accede to this contention. Whether the contravention is of a provision of the Act or of the provision of a rule made under the Act, the offence is committed under the Act. Therefore, even if the breach alleged is of a rule, the offence is not committed under the Rules but it is committed under the Act. It is the Act which prescribes punishment and penalties for contravention of the rules, so that offences, though they may consist in breach of rules, can be committed only under the Act and not under the rules. That is the plain position.

12. Section 112 undoubtedly refers separately to contravention of the provisions of the Act and contravention of any of the rules made under the Act but it does not make a distinction between the two classes of offences. Far from it. It clubs them together and treats them on a par by declaring both classes of contraventions as offences under it and by prescribing the same punishment for both. Section 112 thus takes in breaches of the Act as well as breaches of the rules, with the result that breaches of the rules become offences under Sec. 112, that is, offences under the Act.

13. It is important that the rules framed by the State Government in the exercise of its powers under Section 21 of the Act do not create any offences, assuming that the rule-making power could extend that far. The rules provide for contingencies of diverse kinds like licensing of drivers and conductors, registration and control of motor vehicles, construction, equipment and maintenance of vehicles etc. There is no rule among the 316 rules which are contained in the Rules of 1959, which either creates an offence or prescribes a penalty for any offence. The rules prescribe norms; breaches thereof become offences under the Act and the Act provides for the punishment and penalties for those offences. Thus, the breach of a rule constitutes an offence not under the Rules but under the Act.

14. The relevant pre-condition of Section 17 being that the person who is proposed to be disqualified for holding a driving licence must be convicted of an offence under the Act and as the petitioner was convicted for the contravention of Rule 26 (34), which constitutes an offence under the Act, he was liable to be disqualified under S. 17 (1).

15. The argument that the power to disqualify an offender can be exercised only if he is convicted of an offence directly connected with the act of driving fails to impress us. There is intrinsic evidence in Section 17 itself to show that the power conferred by sub-section (1) can be exercised even if the breach is of a rule of conduct not directly connected with the act of driving. Clause (c) of Section 17 (5) provides that a Court "shall" order disqualification of an offender convicted under Section 123 of the Act unless for special reasons to be recorded in writing it thinks fit to order otherwise. Now, acts which constitute an offence under Section 123 are uncorrelated to the want of care involved in the act of driving. That section makes it an offence to drive an unregistered vehicle or to drive a motor vehicle without the permit required by Section 42 (1) or in contravention of any condition of such permit relating to the route on which or the area in which or the purpose for which the vehicle may be used or a condition relating to the maximum number of passengers or the maximum weight that may be carried on the vehicle. You may drive your vehicle with all the care in the world but if you have transgressed the conditions of your permit, you are liable to be convicted under Section 123 and that conviction entails a disqualification under Section 17 (1) read with Section 17 (5) (c). It is therefore manifest that the power to suspend the driving licence is not conditioned by the circumstance that the offender must be guilty of an offence connected directly with the act of driving.

16. In fact, Section 17 (1) in terms provides that the penalty of disqualification may be imposed even "Where a person is convicted of an offence in the commission of which a motor vehicle was used". To a proposed suspension of a driving licence it is no answer to say: "True, I used my car to transport illicit liquor but I took all the care possible while driving my car." If the car is used in the commission of an offence, the licence is liable to be suspended without more.

17. Section 15 of the Act furnishes some clue to the question whether in order to suspend a driving licence it is necessary that the driver must be guilty of an offence involving the act of driving. That section confers on the "licensing authority" the power to disqualify a person for holding a driving licence, in cases where, inter alia, the driver is a habitual criminal or a habitual drunkard or has used a motor vehicle in the commission of a cognizable offence. If Executive authorities can suspend the driving licence for reasons unconnected with the act of driving, it could not have been intended that Courts of law should possess a lesser power.

18. The petitioner's reliance on Schedule V and Sections 18 and 19 of the Act in support of the submission that the breach of a rule of conduct cannot involve the driver in suspension of his licence, is misplaced. Schedule V specifies "offences on conviction of which an endorsement shall be made on the licence of the person affected". It does not deal with the power to suspend the licence. Section 18 provides for the "Effect of disqualification order," while Section 19 provides, inter alia, for the modes of endorsement. None of these provisions bears out the petitioner's submission.

19. It is urged that Section 112, on its terms, can apply only if "no other penalty is provided for the offence" and since suspension of a licence is a "penalty", breaches which attract that penalty would stand excluded from the compass of Section 112. The argument proceeds that it could not have been intended that the breach of a Rule could be penalised by suspension of the licence but is not punishable under Section 112. We are unable to agree that disqualification of a driver for holding a driving licence is a "Penalty" within the meaning of S. 112. Chapter IX of the Act is entitled "Offences, Penalties and Procedure" and Section 112 which occurs in that chapter uses the word "penalty" to comprehend the punishments prescribed for diverse offences, as detailed in that chapter. Section 17 occurs in Chapter II called "Licensing of Drivers of Motor Vehicles" and though suspension may involve serious consequences, it is not a "penalty" prescribed for an offence, within the meaning of Section 112. It is clear from the context of that Section that the word "penalty" is used in the sense of "sentence" following upon a conviction. The context is that if no other penalty is provided for the offence, the offence would be punishable with a sentence of fine, indicating thereby that if no other sentence is provided, the sentence of fine may be imposed.

20. Finally, we see no merit in the contention that the words of S. 17 (1) must be construed in the light of the provisions of sub-sections 2 to 5 of Section 17. Section 17 (1) confers on the Courts the power to disqualify a driver for holding a licence. Sub-sections 2 to 5 merely regulate the exercise of that power.

21. We are therefore of the opinion, and we say so with respect to the learned Single Judges who decided to the contrary, that a person who contravenes a rule framed under the Act, commits an offence under the Act and on his conviction for that offence, he is liable to be disqualified under Section 17 (1) for holding a driving licence.

22. The papers may now be sent back to the learned Chief Justice, for passing final orders.

Answer accordingly.

ment in different ways — Judgment-debtor cannot choose option that makes payment impossible.

The option that a judgment-debtor is given in the scheme of O. 21, R. 1 to pay money in Court may by reason of a consent decree be rendered impossible and unavailable. When a decree directs payment to be made on a particular day when the Courts may be closed, the option of making payment into Court would be entirely impossible and unavailable. There is no reason why in such circumstances the judgment-debtor must be entitled to the benefit of such impossible option. He should be under an obligation to discharge his liabilities under the decree by resorting to other options under O. 21, R. 1. If a judgment debtor opts to choose making payment scheduled on a particular date in Court and if the Court is closed on that date, he cannot be given the advantage of making payment on the day when Court reopens. The judgment-debtor should be treated as a defaulter, and must meet the consequences of the default. JUDGMENT:— This is judgment-debtors' appeal against the dismissal of their chamber summons for setting aside the attachment levied under warrant of attachment dated 14-1-1970. The relevant facts are as follows:—

2. On the summons for judgment taken out by the plaintiff, a decree on admission for Rs. 4,529.74 and interest and costs was made against the judgment-debtors. The decree was made payable by monthly instalments of Rupees 200/- with a direction that the first of such instalments be paid on September 23, 1968, and the subsequent instalments on or before the 23rd of each succeeding month. The decree provided that in default of payment of any two instalments, the whole of the decretal balance then due should become payable and accordingly the plaintiff should be at liberty to apply for recovery of the outstanding balance by execution of the decree.

3. Admittedly, the debtors made first default in payment of Rs. 200/- payable on September 23, 1969. The Second default was alleged to have taken place in respect of instalment of Rs. 200/- payable on December 23, 1969. The City Civil Court which had passed the decree was closed for Christmas holidays between December 23, 1969 and January 4, 1970, and the defendants made deposit of Rs. 200/- in Court on January 5, 1970. The plaintiff's case was that by non-payment of Rs. 200/- on December 23, 1969, the defendants had incurred second default in payment of the decretal amount and the whole of the decretal balance then outstanding had become due to the plaintiff on the expiry of December, 23, 1969. The plaintiff accordingly, after instituting an application for execution, got issued the warrant of attachment dated January 14, 1970. Attachment was levied by service of the warrant on January 19, 1970. The defendants thereupon took out the above chamber summons for raising of the attachment. The contention of the defendants in the trial Court was that under Order 21, Rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, all moneys payable under a decree could be at the option of the debtor paid in three different manners as mentioned in sub-rule (1) of Order 21. The money could be paid into Court whose duty it is to execute the decree or by payment to the decree-holder out of Court or otherwise in the manner as the Court which made the decree directs. The submission on behalf of the debtors was that all the previous instalments were paid by depositing the money into Court. Rs. 200/- which was payable on December 23 was at the option of the debtors payable into the City Civil Court. That Court was enjoying December holidays on December 23. The payment made on the reopening day on January 5 was valid payment for satisfaction of the instalment that was payable on December 23. This was so because of the scheme of Order 21, Rule 1. This submission was in consonance with the findings made by the High Court at Nagpur in the case of Premchand Bhikabhai v. Ramdeo Sukdeo, AIR 1949 Nag 141, and the decision of the Madhya Pradesh High Court in the case of Rakhadoo v. Narayan, AIR 1959 Madh Pra 352.

4. Apart from the observations in the above two authorities, it has appeared to me that the option that the judgment-debtor is given in the scheme of Order 21, Rule 1 to pay money in Court may by reason of a scheme of a consent decree be rendered impossible and accordingly unavailable. Thus, when a decree directs payment to be made on a particular day when the Courts may be entirely closed due to holidays and/or vacation, the option for making payment into Court would be entirely impossible.

and unavailable. There is no reason why in those circumstances the judgment-debtor must be entitled to the benefit of such impossible option. On the contrary, in obedience to the provisions of the decree, he should be under an obligation to discharge his liabilities under the decree by resorting to the other possible option as contained in the scheme of Order 21, Rule 1. There is no reason why when payment could be directly made to the decree-holder as mentioned in clause (h) of Rule 1 of Order 21, there should be liberty to the judgment-debtor to select the impossible option of discharging his liability under the decree by payment into Court on entire closed days and/or in vacation. Obligations created by decrees are meant for being carried out and it is difficult to appreciate why a debtor should be entitled to select an option which makes it impossible to carry out the provisions in the decree. Now, it is true that the City Civil Court was in December holidays on December 23. It is at the same time true that the plaintiff who carried on business and had dealings with the defendants was available in Bombay for receiving payment on December 23, the date fixed for payment of instalment in December. It is difficult to appreciate why in those circumstances towards discharging their obligation for making payment on December 23, the judgment-debtors were not bound to go and make payment to the plaintiff himself. It is further necessary to notice that the office of the City Civil Court was open for receiving urgent Civil work and applications even during December holidays. It was, therefore, open to the judgment-debtors to go to the vacation Judge of that Court and inform him that they would be guilty of default in discharging their obligation to make payment on 23rd December if deposit was not received in the Court office. The Judge would have considered that application and made an appropriate order. In connection with the observations of the High Court at Nagpur in the above cited case, it first requires to be noticed that the Court mentioned that different divergent opinions had been expressed on the question involved by different Courts. In Chimna v. Chunnilal, AIR 1957 Raj 378, it was held that where the due date for payment under a decree fell during the vacation, but the Court was kept open for urgent work, the payment made on the date the Court reopened was not within the time fixed by the decree. In the case of Indal v. Ram Nidh, AIR 1946 Oudh 156, failure of payment of the amount due under the decree on the specified date on the ground that the High Court was then in vacation and payment made on the reopening date was held to have been made not within the time prescribed by the decree. Now, it appears to me that the findings made in the above two authorities are in consonance with the scheme of Order 21, Rule 1 and I would prefer these authorities to the authorities on which reliance has been placed on behalf of the judgment-debtors.

5. Under the circumstances, the trial Court was right in dismissing the chamber summons taken out by the defendants. The appeal is dismissed with costs. Stay to stand vacated. The amount deposited in the trial Court is directed to be paid over to the decree-holder.

Appeal dismissed.

AIR 1972 BOMBAY 301 (V 59 C 56)

MODY AND S. K. DESAI, JJ.

The Union of India and another, Appellants v. Tata Engineering and Locomotive Co. Ltd. and another, Respondents.

Appeals Nos. 33 and 34 of 1971 (Company Petns. Nos. 159 and 161 of 1970), D/- 22-3-1971.

(A) Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act (1969), S. 2 (v) — Engagement in provision of service — Held, the old Central Bank was not engaged in provision of service.

A Memorandum of a company registered under the Companies Act, by itself, confers merely a power to carry on business, but whether such power is thereafter exercised for carrying on business is a question of fact. Legal capacity to carry on business must be clearly distinguished from the company being at any particular time actually "engaged in" carrying on the business authorised by its Memorandum. Act No. V of 1970 took away the old Central Bank's entire undertaking including banking and gave to it only compensation. Exercising an option for obtaining such compensation cannot form part of carrying on business. The act of selling the promissory notes and making deposits out of the sale proceeds thereof is also not carrying on business. The mere fact of holding of meetings of the Board of Directors does not, by itself, amount to carrying on business. Allotment of its own shares by a company is not a business. It is only an incidental function of its corporate existence. The old Central Bank was not engaged in production, supply, distribution or control of goods of any description or provision of service of any kind at any material time and it therefore did not fall within the definition of "undertaking" in Cl. (v) of Section 2. (Paras 19, 20, 22, 23)

(B) Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act (1969), S. 23 (1) (a) — "Any other undertaking" — Meaning of — (X-Ref:— Interpretation of Statutes — Word defined — Whether to be understood in its dictionary meaning).

It would be possible in law to read a word, even if defined in the Statute, in a modified sense if the context so requires. But nonetheless there must be something in the Act itself, and not dehors the Act, which would make the meaning of a word or phrase statutorily defined by that Act, repugnant in the context in which it is used and furnishes a strong and compelling reason to discard it in favour of its ordinary dictionary meaning. In the phrase "any other undertaking" occurring in sub-section (1) of Section 23 the word "undertaking" is used in the meaning given to it in clause (v) of Section 2 and the context does not require any departure being made from it.

K. H. Bhabha with P. M. Mukhi, for Appellants in both the Appeals; N. A. Palkhiwala with F. S. Nariman and S. P. Bharucha, for Respondents in Appeals Nos. 33 and 34 of 1971.

MODY, J.:— These are two appeals by the Union of India and the Regional Director, Company Law Board, Western Region, Bombay, against a common Judgment but two separate orders passed in Company Petitions Nos. 159 of 1970 and 161 of 1970, the first filed by Tata Engineering and Locomotive Company Ltd., hereinafter referred to as "Telco", and the second by the Central Bank of India Ltd., hereinafter referred to as "the old Central Bank", whereby Mr. Justice Nain as the Companies Judge sanctioned under Sections 391 and 394 of the Companies Act, 1956, an arrangement in the nature of a scheme of amalgamation between the two companies, negating the contentions of the appellants that the Court should not sanction the scheme without prior approval of the Central Government as required under Section 23 (1) of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969, hereinafter referred to as "the Monopolies Act". We also propose to dispose of these two appeals by a common Judgment as both the matters have been heard together and involve common facts and identical points for consideration.

2. On 1st September 1945 Telco was incorporated as a company under the Indian Companies Act, 1913. Its authorised capital is Rs. 24 crores. Its subscribed capital aggregates to Rupees 18,44,81,325/- composed of Ordinary, Cumulative Preference and Cumulative Redeemable "A" Preference Shares, all fully paid-up. Its main objects are to carry on the business of manufacturing, selling and dealing in locomotives, motor vehicles, trucks, lorries, omnibuses, machinery, tools etc. One of the objects mentioned in the Memorandum contains ancillary objects, one of which is to amalgamate with any Company or companies. Telco has, in fact, been carrying on the business of manufacturing and selling diesel commercial vehicles, excavators, power shovels, industrial shunters, machine tools, industrial tractors, etc. There is no dispute that its gross assets at the material time well exceeded Rs. 120,00,00,000/- and its net assets exceeded Rs. 97,00,00,000/-.

3. On 21st December 1911 the old Central Bank was incorporated under the Indian Companies Act, 1913. Thereafter it carried on banking business. Its business was nationalised by the Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Ordinance, 1970, succeeded by the Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Act, 1970, hereinafter referred to as "Act V of 1970", after an attempt to do so by a prior Ordinance and a prior Act which latter two were struck down by the Supreme Court. Under the provisions of Act V of 1970, a new corporation called "Central Bank of India", hereinafter referred to as "the New Central Bank", was constituted and all the rights and properties, as also the obligations and liabilities, of the old Central Bank got transferred to the new Central Bank. Upon such transfer, as held by the Supreme Court in R. C. Cooper v. Union of India, AIR 1970 SC 564, the totality of the assets and liabilities of the old Central Bank vested in the new Central Bank and the only right which the old Central Bank acquired was the right to receive compensation in the sum of Rs. 17.5 crores. Under sub-section (2) of Section 6 of Act V of 1970, the Old Central Bank had an option to receive that amount of compensation in cash or in four and a half per cent per annum promissory notes repayable after ten years or five and a half per cent per annum promissory notes repayable after thirty years in the manner as mentioned in that sub-section. After such acquisition of its business, the Old Central Bank has ceased to carry on banking business.

4. It may be stated that the business of the Old Central Bank got transferred to and vested in the new Central Bank as from 19th July 1969, being the date of the said first Ordinance. It was on 10th February 1970 that the Supreme Court by its said Judgment struck down the earlier ordinance and the earlier Bank Nationalisation Act. Under the earlier Ordinance and the earlier Bank Nationalisation Act the amount of compensation payable to nationalised Banks was not determined as a fixed amount by the Act itself and entailed calculations to be made for that purpose. As the validity of the first Ordinance and the first Bank Nationalisation Act were challenged before the Supreme Court the old Central Bank did not make any move for getting that compensation payable to it ascertained. Then followed the second Ordinance and the Second Bank Nationalisation Act No. V of 1970. The latter Act itself fixed the amount of compensation payable to the various nationalised banks.

5. The second Bank Nationalisation Act came into force on 31st March 1970. The Board of Directors of the old Central Bank considered how the option to receive compensation payable under Act V of 1970 should be exercised. The old Central Bank exercised its option to take its compensation in the form of Rs. 50,000/- in cash and the balance in the form of five and a half per cent per annum promissory notes of the face value of Rs. 17,49,50,000/-. On an inquiry from Mr. Bhabha, the learned Counsel for the Appellants, Mr. Nariman, the learned Counsel for the Respondents, stated that the old Central Bank actually received the said five and a half per cent per annum promissory notes on 8th May 1970.

6. Thereafter, as appearing from the Report of the Board of Directors of the old Central Bank for the year 1969, the Board applied its mind to the future of that company. Various views in that regard had been discussed at some length at the extraordinary general meeting of the old Central Bank held on 13th January 1970. It was thereafter that the Supreme Court gave its said Judgment. Thereafter, after doing some re-thinking, the Board of Directors reached the conclusion that there were three alternatives before the company, the first being a winding-up of the company, the second being the carrying on of fresh business as an investment company or some other activity after obtaining powers by amendment of the company's constitution, and the third being an amalgamation with some other suitable undertaking. The Board then came to the conclusion that amalgamation of the old Central Bank with another company, preferably a large scale industrial undertaking, would be in the best interests of the company and its shareholders because, firstly, it was likely to avoid several implications in regard to the settlement of tax claims of the Company and the shareholders and would enable the carrying on of business pending such settlement; secondly, it would ensure a fair and steady return to the shareholders on their capital along with prospects of reasonable growth; and, thirdly, if, as was the intention, the amalgamation was with a company whose shares commanded a ready market, the shareholders of the old Central Bank would be able, if they so chose, to liquidate their holding wholly or partially. The Board had thereafter carried on negotiations with the Directors of Telco and evolved a concrete scheme of amalgamation with Telco. As a matter of fact, on 29th July 1970, the Board of Directors of each of the two companies passed a resolution approving the scheme of amalgamation.

7. As a preliminary step to effectuate the said amalgamation, the old Central Bank filed in this Court the Company Application No. 46 of 1970 on 8th September 1970 and Telco filed the Company Application No. 49 of 1970 on 9th September 1970. On 11th September 1970 orders were passed by the Companies Judge on both the said applications calling meetings of the Old Central Bank on 26th October 1970 and of Telco on 27th October 1970. The old Central Bank thereafter issued notices dated 29th September 1970 that such meetings would be held on 29th October 1970. Along with that notice an Explanatory Statement was sent to all its share-holders. In paragraph 5 of the Explanatory Statement it is stated that the Board of Directors had come to the conclusion that it would not be in the best interests of the Company or its share-holders to undertake any other business within the frame work of the Company's Memorandum as, for example, the business of the finance and investment company, because, apart from the difficulties involved in setting up such a unit which would operate in a competitive field, such a business did not appear to ensure prospects of a steady and reasonable return to the share-holders on a par with the return till then yielded on the Company's shares, nor did it inspire any hopes of adequate capital appreciation. It further refers to the proposed amalgamation and the comparative advantage to the Company and its share-holders if the amalgamation became operative.

8. On the same day, i.e., 29th September 1970, the old Central Bank also sent to its share-holders another notice convening an extraordinary general meeting of the share-holders on 26th October 1970 for the purpose of considering and passing of the two resolutions, the first being for amendment of its Memorandum and the second being to authorise its Board of Directors, in pursuance of Section 293 (1) (c) of the Companies Act, 1956, to invest the whole or any part of the amount of compensation of Rs. 17,50,00,000/-, including the sale proceeds of the said five and a half per cent per annum promissory notes, in such securities, investments and fixed and call deposits, including trustee securities, as the Board of Directors may from time to time think fit. An Explanatory Statement was enclosed with that notice. The Explanatory Statement specifically states that the amendments were being proposed in order to enable the old Central Bank to amalgamate with Telco and that the said Second Resolution, which was a special Resolution, was proposed so as to enable the scheme of amalgamation between the two Companies to fructify and if the said second Resolution was passed and implemented it would yield a better return to the Company, particularly in the event the process of amalgamation of the Company with Telco took some time. The extraordinary general meeting of the old Central Bank was held on 26th October 1970. On 26th October 1970 the extraordinary general meeting of the old Central Bank passed both the Resolutions of which the said Notice had been given, approving the amendments in the Memorandum and investing powers in the Board of Directors about the investment as proposed. Thereafter, on the same day, the statutory meeting was held of the shareholders of the old Central Bank in pursuance of the said Order dt. 11th September 1970 and the scheme of amalgamation was approved at the said meeting.

9. On 27th October 1970, the statutory meeting of the shareholders of Telco was held pursuant to the said Order dated 11th September 1970 at which meeting the said scheme of amalgamation was approved.

10. The Scheme provides that Telco will issue and allot one Ordinary Share and three 9 per cent cumulative Redeemable "A" Preference Shares out of its authorised but unissued capital as also fifteen 7. 3/4 per cent Convertible Debentures to the members of the old Central Bank against every twenty-five shares in its capital held by them.

11. On an inquiry from Mr. Bhabha, Mr. Nariman, has stated that all the said five and a half per cent per annum promissory notes received as compensation, barring those of the face value of Rs. 1,68,20,000/-, were sold after 26th October 1970. Mr. Bhabha stated that he would accept this statement as true.

12. At the hearing of these appeals before us, by consent of parties, a statement of the deposits made by the old Central Bank has been put in as Ex. No. 1. The statement shows particulars of the various amounts of deposits made by the old Central Bank as fixed deposits with diverse banks which aggregate to Rs. 4,96,50,000/- and that with Telco which aggregate to Rs. 11,20,00,000.

13. Telco and the old Central Bank filed the present two Company Petitions on 17th November 1970 and 25th November 1970 respectively. On 8th February 1971 an order was made by the Companies Judge sanctioning the alterations in the Memorandum of the old Central Bank.

14. The Judgment and Orders which are the subject-matter of these appeals were thereafter passed on 17th February 1971.

15. The main dispute between the parties turns on the provisions of S. 23, and particularly of sub-section (1), of the Monopolies Act. Section 23 occurs in Chapter III of the Act, the Chapter heading being "Concentration of Economic Power". There are 11 sections in this Chapter divided under Parts A, B and C. Sections 20 to 26 appear under Part A, Section 27 appears under Part B and Sections 28 to 30 appear under Part C.

16. Section 20 provides:—

"This Part shall apply to—

(a) an undertaking if the total value of

(i) its own assets, or

(ii) its own assets together with the assets of its inter-connected undertakings, is not less than twenty crores of rupees;

(b) a dominant undertaking—

(i) where it is a single undertaking, the value of its assets, or

(ii) where it consists of more than one undertaking, the sum total of the value of the assets of all the inter-connected undertakings constituting the dominant undertaking, is not less than one crore of rupees.

x x x x"

Sub-section (1) of Section 23 provides:—

"23(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force,

(a) no scheme of merger or amalgamation of an undertaking to which this Part applies with any other undertaking,

(b) no scheme of merger or amalgamation of two or more undertakings which would have the effect of bringing into existence an undertaking to which clause (a) of clause (b) of Section 20 would apply, shall be sanctioned by any Court or be recognised for any purpose or be given effect to unless the scheme for such merger or amalgamation has been approved by the Central Government under this Act."

Section 2 contains definitions. Its opening words are "In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—"

Clause (d) of Section 2 in so far as it is relevant provides:—

"'dominant undertaking' means an undertaking which either by itself or along with inter-connected undertakings,—

(i) produces, supplies, distributes or otherwise controls not less than one third of the total goods of any description that are produced, supplied or distributed in India or any substantial part thereof, or

(ii) provides or otherwise controls not less than one third of any services that are rendered in India or any substantial part thereof.

x x x x

Clause (g) of Section 2 provides:—

"inter-connected undertakings" means two or more undertakings which are inter-connected with each other in any of the following manner, namely:—

(i) if one owns or controls the other,

(ii) where the undertakings are owned by firms, if such firms have one or more common partners,

(iii) where the undertakings are owned by bodies corporate,—

(a) if one manages the other, or

(b) if one is a subsidiary of the other, or

(c) if they are under the same management within the meaning of S. 370 of the Companies Act, 1956, or

(d) if one exercises control over the other in any other manner,

(iv) where one undertaking is owned by a body corporate and the other is owned by a firm, if one or more partners of the firm,—

(a) hold, directly or indirectly, not less than fifty per cent. of the shares, whether preference or equity, of the body corporate, or

(b) exercise control, directly or indirectly, whether as director or otherwise, over the body corporate,

(v) if one is owned by a body corporate and the other is owned by a firm having bodies corporate as its partners, if such bodies corporate are under the same management within the meaning of the said S. 370,

(vi) if the undertakings are owned or controlled by the same person or group of persons,

(vii) if one is connected with the other either directly or through any number of undertakings which are inter-connected undertakings within the meaning of one or more of the foregoing sub-clauses."

Clause (r) of Section 2 provides:—

"service" means service of any description which is made available to potential users and includes the provision of facilities in connection with banking, insurance, transport, supply of electrical or other energy, board or lodging or both, entertainment, amusement or the purveying of news or other information, but does not include the rendering of any service free of charge or under a contract of personal service."

Clause (v) of Section 2 provides:—

"undertaking" means an undertaking which is engaged in the production, supply, distribution or control of goods of any description or the provision of service of any kind."

17. There is no dispute that Telco. is an undertaking engaged in the production, supply and distribution of goods, that it is an undertaking within the meaning of clause (v) of Section 2, that the total value of its own assets is very much more than Rs. 20 crores and it is therefore an undertaking to which the provisions of Part A of Chapter III of the Monopolies Act apply.

18. Mr. Bhabha contended that the old Central Bank is also an "undertaking" within the meaning thereof under clause (v) of Section 2 of the Monopolies Act. In support of his contention he relied upon several facts. He stated that it is true that after the business of the old Central Bank was nationalised, its then existing banking business got transferred to and vested in the new Central Bank, but that even thereafter the old Central Bank could carry on even banking business by obtaining a licence under Section 22 of the Banking Regulation Act, 1949. He then invited attention to the Memorandum of the old Central Bank as it existed before its amendment in 1970. He contended that under sub-clause (c) of Clause III it can carry on investment business, under sub-clause (d) it can carry on the business of underwriting and under sub-clause (q) it can carry on the business of guaranteeing. He further pointed out that the provision at the very end of Clause III provides that in the interpretation of that clause the meaning of the Company's objects shall not be restricted by a reference to any other object or by the juxtaposition of two or more objects and that in the event of any ambiguity the clause shall be construed in such a way as to widen and not restrict the powers of the company. He contended that this provision requires each of the sub-clauses of Cl. III to be read independently. He contended that therefore although the banking business was acquired as aforesaid, a power survived in the old Central Bank, and it was open to it, to carry on the businesses mentioned, for example, in the said sub-clauses (c), (d) and (q) of clause III of the unamended Memorandum itself. He then contended that as a matter of fact the old Central Bank did carry on business after 19th July 1969. He pointed out that the Balance-sheet of the old Central Bank of the year 1969 shows that its Directors were paid remuneration which indicates that Board meetings were being held and the Directors were acting on behalf of the Old Central Bank. The old Central Bank through its directors acted and ex-exercised the option as aforesaid and obtained the compensation in the Cash sum of Rs. 50,000/- and in the five and a half per cent per annum promissory notes of the face value of Rs. 17,49,50,000/-. The old Central Bank through its Board also considered the three alternatives for carrying on business for earning profits. It also through its Board carried on negotiations with Telco for amalgamation. He contended that these acts show that the old Central Bank was carrying on business through its Board of Directors. He further relied on the fact that it sought alterations to its Memorandum with a view to make its objects identical with those of Telco. According to him, the very fact of seeking and securing alteration in its Memorandum shows that it carried on an activity and that it had therefore not ceased to exist. He further commented that its Memorandum was already altered and its objects entitled it to carry on the business of production of certain goods and that if the amalgamation with Telco fell through, the old Central Bank would nonetheless remain entitled to carry on all the businesses which were included in the amendments to its Memorandum. He further pointed out that as shown in the said Director's Report for the year 1969 the old Central Bank has, after 18th July 1969, allotted 184 shares to the former share-holders of the Jodhpur Commercial Bank Ltd. and that it proposed to make a further allotment of shares to those of the former share-holders of that Bank who had not exercised the option to receive cash and who had accordingly become entitled to the shares of the old Central Bank of equivalent value. He relied upon the facts that the old Central Bank had also sold most of its said five and a half per cent per annum promissory notes, made deposits out of the sale proceeds thereof and thereby earned profits in the nature of interest earned thereon. Mr. Bhabha concluded that these facts show that the substratum of the old Central Bank had not gone and that under its Memorandum it had power to carry on business and particularly the business of investment, underwriting and guaranteeing under even its original unamended Memorandum and that such business would amount to making "provision of service" within the meaning thereof in clause (v) read with clause (r) of Section 2 of the Monopolies Act. He contended that because of these actual acts of the Old Central Bank it was, at all material times, i.e., at the date of the petition and the order thereon, "engaged in" the provision of service and was therefore an undertaking as defined in the said clause (v) of Section 2.

19. Now it is true that under the Memorandum, before its amendment, the old Central Bank had the power to carry on the business of investment, underwriting and guaranteeing. It is also true that after the amendment of its Memorandum it has power to carry on business of producing certain kinds of goods. Mr. Bhabha has contended that if the amalgamation does not fructify, the old Central Bank will still remain entitled to carry on the business of producing goods. On the other hand, Mr. Nariman contended that in spite of these amendments having been made, in view of the provisions of Section 17 (1) (g) of the Companies Act, 1956, if the object of amalgamation falls through, the enlarged scope of its objects would not remain operative. In our opinion, it is unnecessary to decide whether the amendments made in its Memorandum would or would not survive the falling through of the proposed amalgamation. It should however, be noted that a Memorandum of a company registered under the Indian Companies Act, by itself, confers merely a power to carry on business, but whether such power is thereafter exercised for carrying on business is a question of fact and only if such facts exist then it can be said that the company, "is engaged in" carrying on business of producing goods or making provision for service. A memorandum is a pre-requisite to the registration of a company under the Companies Act. It is common knowledge that in the case of many companies they do not carry on any business after they are registered for a number of years and sometimes at no time during their entire existence. It is a still more common experience that numerous objects are provided for in the Memorandum but most companies do not carry on all the businesses so provided for. If in the latter case the company carries on only one of such businesses, it cannot be said that the company is, by reason of a mere provision in that behalf in its Memorandum, engaged in carrying on the other businesses so provided for in its Memorandum. Legal capacity to carry on business must be clearly distinguished from the company being at any particular time actually "engaged in" carrying on the business authorised by its Memorandum. It should be noted that Mr. Bhabha has not contended that the old Central Bank is "engaged in" producing goods. All that he has contended is that it "is engaged in" making provision of service because it has power in its Memorandum to do so and because of the aforesaid acts of the old Central Bank relied upon by Mr. Bhabha. Now the act of exercising its option, and obtaining the five and a half per cent per annum promissory notes cannot be treated as a part of investment business. Act No. V of 1970 took away the old Central Bank's entire undertaking including banking and gave to it only compensation. Exercising an option for obtaining such compensation cannot form part of carrying on business. The act of selling the promissory notes and making deposits out of the sale proceeds thereof is also not carrying on business. Mr. Bhabha's contention that even under the un-amended Memorandum the old Central Bank could carry on banking business after obtaining the requisite licence is an hypothetical argument, because it has not, as a matter of fact, applied for any such licence. An undertaking which carries on investment business may, of course, carry on the business of inviting deposits to be made with it and/or itself making deposits with outsiders and in such a case it would be carrying on the business of an investment company. But making deposits with banks and other institutions can be made by other persons who have spare money to invest. If a lawyer or a doctor or even a businessman makes deposits out of his savings, it cannot be said that by such investment he is carrying on a business of investment. It would be a question of intention in each case. For illustration, a person may buy shares of Joint Stock Companies and, depending on his intention, which is to be gathered from actual facts of his dealing with shares he buys, he may have done so either as and by way of pure investment or by way of operating in shares by way of business. The distinction in the concepts is clear, although in some cases it may be difficult to ascertain it from a given set of overt acts. In the case of the old Central Bank, on the compulsory acquisition of its business, it had no option left but to take compensation as provided under Act V of 1970. Compensation was payable in certain alternative ways. Exercising an option in selecting the five and a half per cent per annum promissory notes or, for the matter of that, any of the three alternatives provided by that statute, certainly does not disclose an intention to acquire them for doing business as an undertaking carrying on investment business. The old Central Bank subsequently sold the said five and a half per cent promissory notes and made deposits out of the sale proceeds thereof. The intention of so doing has been specifically and clearly stated in the Explanatory Statement which is an annexure to the said notice dated 29th September 1970 convening the extra-ordinary general meeting to be held on 26th October 1970. The Explanatory Statement clearly shows that a change of investment was made only because it was apprehended that the final fructification of the scheme of amalgamation might take some time and it was desired that a little higher return should be secured on the investment. It was by way of a mere change of investment and not by way of doing business. Under the proposed scheme of amalgamation which has already been approved by both the Companies, the compensation or what was received by way of sale proceeds of the five and a half per cent per annum promissory notes as compensation was to be the property of Telco and the shareholders of the old Central Bank were to be entitled to receive shares of Telco in certain proportion in exchange of the original holding of shares in the old Central Bank. The scheme further provides for payment of dividend on shares so received in exchange from 1st October 1970 and it is but natural that it would be felt that the share-holders of the old Central Bank would participate in the profits of Telco by reason of the acquisition of shares of Telco in exchange who, in their turn, should try to secure the best return on the funds of the old Central Bank which were to go to Telco. The investment by way of deposits was not intended to be of any appreciable duration but only pending the finalisation of the scheme of amalgamation and that it was so is made clearer by the Statement Ex. No. 1 which shows that all the deposits with Banks were for a comparatively short period of 91 days. The fact of selling the promissory notes and making such deposits does not, in our opinion, evince any intention on the part of the old Central Bank to carry on investment business.

20. Mr. Bhabha referred to the said Directors' Report of the old Central Bank for the year 1969 and pointed out that remuneration was paid to the Directors and that it must, therefore, be concluded that the Directors had held meetings and had held a meeting to decide for exercising the option in respect of the taking of compensation and also held meetings in respect of the negotiations with Telco and also in connection with the alteration of the Memorandum. Now, the old Central Bank is a company. It has a corporate existence and the process of making up its mind is by way of a discussion and the passing of a resolution at the meeting mostly of Directors and occasionally of the general body of share-holders. The work done at the Board meeting referred to by Mr. Bhabha is merely in the process of the making up of the company's mind and arriving at a decision. The process is similar to what goes on in the mind of a human being when he considers a problem and arrives at a decision. The mere fact of holding of these meetings of the Board of Directors does not, by itself, amount to carrying on business. What happened at the Board meetings would merely disclose the intention of the company. But in the present case no intention is disclosed to carry on any activity of the nature of a business.

21. Mr. Bhabha also pointed out from the said Directors' Report of the Old Central Bank for the year 1969 that the Directors had also allotted 184 shares after 18th July 1969. The Statement in the Report, however, clearly shows that these shares were allotted in pursuance of an obligation which existed prior to the nationalisation of its banking business. Allotment of its own shares by a company is not a business. It is only an incidental function of its corporate existence.

22. It is, therefore, clear that old Central Bank was not at any time from the date of the nationalisation of its banking business till the date of the orders under appeal engaged in the provision of service of any kind. A company continuing to exist with power in its Memorandum to do a business is totally different from a company engaging in that business. The facts earlier stated clearly show that the amalgamation was in alternative to the old Central Bank carrying on, by itself, some business. To amalgamate was an alternative to itself carrying on business and the decision which chose the alternative of amalgamation clearly negatives that it itself wanted to carry on any business. The facts further show that till the date of the orders under appeal the old Central Bank intended and, as a matter of fact, made all necessary preparations and even an application to the court for the proposed amalgamation with Telco which discloses a definite intention that on amalgamation materialising it intended to carry on no business, but would, as a matter of fact, even cease to exist as a separate company. Because of the intention of amalgamation the old Central Bank did not consider, much less decide, what it should do if the amalgamation did not for any reason materialise. It was, therefore, not engaged in the provision of service of any kind at any time after bank nationalisation till the date of the petition or the Order thereon. It must, therefore, be held that the old Central Bank was not engaged in production, supply, distribution or control of goods of any description or provision of service of any kind at any material time and that it therefore did not fall within the definition of "undertaking" in clause (v) of Section 2 of the Monopolies Act.

23. Mr. Palkhiwala and Mr. Nariman had argued that in order that an undertaking should fall within clause (v) of Section 2 of the Monopolies Act the undertaking must, firstly, have capacity, i.e., legal competence, to produce goods or render services as mentioned in that clause, as also, secondly, that the undertaking must be actually engaged in such production of goods or making provision of service. They further contended that the undertaking must have actually engaged in such activity prior to the material time, i.e., the date of the application under Sections 391 and 394 of the Companies Act, 1956, and the order thereon and that although it may not have done so immediately prior to the material time and may not be doing so and may be in hibernation as it were at the material time, it may yet fall within the definition of the said clause (v) if it continued to have a capacity and an intention to do so at a convenient time after the material date. If an undertaking was, as a matter of fact, engaged in production of goods or provision of service but because of some reason like strike, lock-out or non-availability of raw materials, it was not actually so engaged at the material time but it intended to resume such activity in future upon the reason for the cessation of its activity disappearing, it can still be said to fall within the phrase "is engaged in" occurring in the said clause (v) of Section 2 of the Monopolies Act. In short, a legal capacity to carry on the activity and an intention to carry it on on the cessation of the period of inactivity must co-exist. Mr. Bhabha, however, on the other hand, argued that if the capacity, i.e., legal competence, exists, it is sufficient to attract the definition of the said Cl. (v) irrespective of the fact whether the undertaking is or is not carrying on that activity at the material time. We are of the opinion, however, that the existence of mere legal capacity is not sufficient. Such a test would apply only to a company which is a juridical person and its legal capacity to carry on activity is circumscribed by its Memorandum, but an individual or a firm or a Hindu joint family has the capacity, if it has the money, to carry on any business permissible in law. Mere legal capacity by itself cannot be relied upon to be a test whether one "is engaged in" the activity as mentioned in the said clause (v). In view of this conclusion which we have reached, it is unnecessary to refer to authorities cited in connection with construing the phrase "is engaged in" and the effect of the use of the present tense in that phrase. We have held that the investment in fact made by the old Central Bank was not by way of a business activity and that the negotiations and the decision for amalgamation and the steps taken to implement that decision do not amount to being engaged in any activity mentioned in the said clause (v) and it is, therefore, unnecessary to decide whether any activity which was open to the old Central Bank to carry on under its Memorandum would amount to service as defined under clause (r) of Section 2. We are of the opinion that a mere capacity or a mere intention to carry on such activity in future without its being so done in the present, i.e., at the material date, nor some time in the past, i.e., before the material date, cannot at all give rise to a consideration whether an undertaking is engaged in any activity as contemplated under the said clause (v). We are not called upon to decide in this case, and we do not decide, in what circumstances activity of the nature mentioned in the said clause (v) would fall within the phrase "is engaged in" if the activity had ceased for some time before the material date.

24. The next point turns on the construction of sub-section (1) of S. 23. In clause (a) of Section 23 (1) occur the words "an undertaking to which this Part applies". It is Section 20 which lays down to which undertakings Part A of Chapter III applies. The word "undertaking" occurs in the said clause (a) of Section 23 first in the said phrase quoted above and thereafter in the phrase "any other undertaking". At an earlier stage Mr. Bhabha contended that the word "undertaking" in the said first phrase has the meaning not as defined in S. 2 (v) but has its common or dictionary meaning. At a later stage he specifically stated that he abandoned that contention and accepted that the word had the same meaning as defined in Section 2 (v). There is no dispute between the parties that Telco is an undertaking to which Part A of Chapter III applies. Mr. Bhabha, however, contended that the word "undertaking" in the said second phrase "any other undertaking" would, if his earlier contention about the construction of the word "undertaking" under S. 2 (v) was not accepted — and we have earlier in this Judgment not accepted it — have its ordinary, i.e., dictionary meaning, because of the context in which it occurs not only in the case of an inclusive definition but also in the case of an exhaustive definition like the one in Section 2 (v). It would be possible in law to read a word, even if defined in the Statute, in a modified sense if the context so requires. He supported this contention by citing authorities. But we do not refer to them, as for the purposes of this case, we accept the principle which he canvasses for. But nonetheless there must be something in the Act itself, and not de hors the Act, which would make the meaning of a word or phrase statutorily defined by that Act, which would be for the purposes of that Act, repugnant in the context in which it is used and furnishes a strong and compelling reason to discard it in favour of what would be its ordinary dictionary meaning.

25. Mr. Bhabha contended that the provisions of Section 23 (1), like the other provisions in Sections 23 (4), 21, 22 and 24, which all occur in Part A of Chapter III, have the same object and intention of controlling the undertakings defined in Section 20, which he, for the sake of emphasising the concept, referred to as "giants". To ascertain that intention he referred to the preamble of the Monopolies Act and the heading of Chapter III. The preamble reads: "An Act to provide that the operation of the economic system does not result in the concentration of economic power to the common detriment, for the control of monopolies, for the prohibition of monopolistic and restrictive trade practices and for matters connected therewith or incidental thereto." The first object viz., to provide that the operation of the economic system does not result in the concentration of economic power to the common detriment, is the object which is relevant in this case. The Chapter heading of Chapter III, is: "Concentration of economic power". Chapter III contains provisions relating to that object. Chapter IV contains provisions relating to the other objects mentioned in the preamble of controlling monopolistic trade practices and Chapters V and VI deal with the object of controlling certain restrictive trade practices. Mr. Bhabha contended that the object and intention of preventing concentration of economic power require that emphasis should be placed on, and the problem should be viewed in the light of, controlling an undertaking to which Part A applies and that it must be considered that the mention of "any other undertaking" is merely incidental, i.e., to achieve, that object. He contended that in order that, that object may be achieved, the word "undertaking" as occurring in the second phrase "any other undertaking" must be interpreted, not as defined in Section 2 (v) which gives to it a restricted meaning in the way in which we have already construed it, but in its ordinary dictionary meaning, which is wider. He contended that it is to prevent concentration of economic power that clause (a) of Section 20 provides that the provisions of Part A shall apply if the value of the assets of an undertaking is not less than Rs. 20 crores and clause (b), which has to be read with clause (d) of Section 2, provides that such value must be not less than one crore of rupees and then enacts the limitation on such giants as contained mainly in Sections 21, 22, 23 and 24 but also the other provisions of Part A, the provisions of Parts B and C being merely in the nature of machinery sections.

26. Now in Section 20 occur the words "undertaking" and "its assets". "Its assets" must mean the assets of the undertaking. But does it mean the assets of the undertaking itself or does it mean the assets of the owner of the undertaking? An undertaking may be owned by a body corporate, i.e., a company, or by an individual or by a firm or even by some other owner like, for example, an association of individuals. If the company is the owner, the company may be conducting more than one undertaking, in which case can all the assets of the company be treated as the assets of every one of its undertakings? Or are the assets to be apportioned to each of the undertakings according to what assets are, at any particular time, actually used for it? And if the undertaking is owned by an individual, are all the assets of the individual to be deemed to be the assets of the undertaking if he owns but one undertaking? And similarly if the undertaking is owned by a firm, are the assets of all the individual partners to be deemed to be the assets of the undertaking? The definition of "undertaking" in clause (v) of Section 2 suggests that the word "undertaking" is meant to refer to that entity itself which is engaged in production of goods or provision of service. The Monopolies Act, however, does not appear to always distinguish between an "undertaking" and its "owner". As a matter of fact, many provisions of the Monopolies Act are extremely difficult to construe. The language used at a large number of places in the Monopolies Act clearly suggests a distinction between an "undertaking" and its "owner". Examples of it can be found in the following:—

Section 2 (g) (ii), (iii) (a), (b) and (d), (iv), (v) and (vi); Section 3; Section 22 (1); Section 23 (1).

Some other provisions of the Monopolies Act further suggest an undertaking to be itself, an owner, the undertaking being identified with its owner, be the owner one or more human beings or a juridical person like a company. Examples of the latter type are to be found in the following sections:—

Section 20, sub-section (1), when it uses the phrase "its own assets".

(Here does the phrase mean the assets in use of or appertaining — to the undertaking or all the assets of its owner?)

Section 21 (1) which contemplates "issue of fresh capital" by the undertaking and as this phrase is apt in connection with a company it appears to identify the undertaking with the company.

Section 48 (2), Cls. (a), (b) and (c).

Clause (d) of Section 2 provides the test of not less than one-third of the total goods of any description that are produced in India. Here the reference to the total goods must, because of the qualifying phrase "of any description", mean the goods of a particular kind. If the same owner is producing two different kinds of goods, say, textiles in a factory at Bombay and sanitaryware in another factory at Madras and the latter falls under clause (d) of Section 2, "its assets" under clause (a) of Section 20 would require "its assets" to be interpreted to mean the assets of the undertaking which provides sanitaryware and not the assets of the owner. It would appear that the provisions of clause (b) of Section 20 also would require each of the different activities or businesses of the same owner to be considered separate undertakings.

27. In our opinion, in view of this confusion "undertaking" should not be identified with its owner unless the context in which it occurs requires it to be so construed. In clause (a) of S. 20 "its assets" must be construed in its natural or grammatical sense and the phrase must mean assets employed in the conduct of the activity of a particular undertaking.

28. The avowed object and intention of the Monopolies Act as disclosed in its preamble and the heading of Chapter III is to prevent concentration of economic power. The object is sought to be achieved by the Act mainly by the provisions contained in Sections 20, 21, 22, 23 and 24. Section 20 lays down the tests for determining what Mr. Bhabha referred to as "giant" undertakings. Section 22 prevents such giant undertakings to be brought in existence. Section 23, by clause (a) of its sub-section (1), seeks to exercise control by preventing merger or amalgamation of another undertaking with an existing giant. The object and intention of sub-section (1) of S. 23 under its clause (a) is to exercise control by preventing merger and amalgamation of an existing giant undertaking with another undertaking and under its Clause (b) to prevent a giant undertaking being formed, the object underlying sub-section (4) of Section 23 appears to be to control further acquisition by a giant undertaking so as to prevent it from becoming still larger, although its construction does not appear to be easy, because, if the undertaking is already an undertaking to which Part A applies, how can it again become an undertaking to which Part A applies as contemplated in its clause (a)? The object underlying the provisions of S. 21 is to control the expansion of such a giant undertaking by the issue of fresh capital or by the installation of new machinery or other equipment or in any other manner. The actual provisions of these sections all show that the object sought to be achieved is to prevent concentration of economic power. But the language used in these sections frequently varies. The obvious inference is that to the extent that the language varies, the extent to which the object is sought to be achieved and the method by which it is sought to be achieved was intended to correspondingly vary. We will proceed to examine the provisions of these sections from this point of view.

29. The phrase "issue of fresh capital" used in sub-section (1) of S. 21 is appropriate to a company. Therefore in the case of a company the provision in this sub-section would apply only when the company proposes to issue fresh capital, but it would not apply when the company obtains funds in any other way, by, for example, taking a loan. Therefore Section 21 (1) does not contemplate any method, other than issue of fresh capital, to control such a giant undertaking acquiring funds and the intention of the Legislature does not appear to be to prevent the company from acquiring funds otherwise than by issue of fresh capital. The reason can be found in the other provision of sub-section (1) of Section 21 by which control is provided for being exercised when such a giant undertaking, be it a company or other than a company, proposes to expand its production of goods or provision of service with such further funds. The conclusion is that Section 21 does not prevent such a giant undertaking from acquiring funds as distinguished from acquiring new machinery or other equipment, which latter only is sought to be controlled by Section 21, and the object of the preamble and the Chapter heading of preventing concentration of economic power is not intended to prevent such a giant undertaking, even when it is a company, from acquiring funds otherwise than by issue of fresh capital. Moreover, "issue of fresh capital" would not be apt in the case of an undertaking which is not owned by a company and the Legislature has not at all controlled, so far as Section 21 is concerned, the acquisition by such an undertaking of further funds and has introduced control only when, with the additional funds, it proposes to instal new machinery or other equipment. The point to be noted is that in sub-section (1) of S. 21 the method of exercising control appears to be, not by controlling, except by issue of fresh capital by a company, the acquisition of more funds which would be only a means to acquire new machinery or other equipments but by controlling the actual installation of new machinery or other equipments which would result in the expansion of its activities.

30. Sub-section (3) of S. 23 provides:—

"Nothing in sub-section (1) of sub-section (2) shall apply to the scheme of merger or amalgamation of such inter-connected undertakings as are not dominant undertakings and as produce the same goods".

The opening words "Nothing in sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall apply" show that sub-section (3) carves out an exception out of the general provision which is contained in sub-sections (1) and (2). From the very fact that an exception has been carved out, whatever be the ambit of that exception, shows that in trying to achieve the avowed object and intention of the Monopolies Act, the Act makes a distinction between an undertaking and an undertaking.

31. Now the undertakings to which Part A applies would, under Section 29, read with clause (d) of Section 2, divide themselves into four classes, the four classes being:—

(1) An undertaking which by itself is engaged in producing goods;

(2) An undertaking which along with inter-connected undertakings is engaged in producing goods;

(3) An undertaking which by itself is engaged in provision of service, and

(4) An undertaking which along with inter-connected undertakings is engaged in provision of service.

32. The exception in S. 23 (3) applies to the scheme of merger or amalgamation "of such inter-connected undertakings as". Undertakings only of the second and fourth of the above four classes are inter-connected undertakings and those of the first and third are not and the exception does not apply to the latter two.

33. Thereafter in Section 23 (3) there occurs the phrase "undertakings as are not dominant undertakings and as produce the same goods". This is an additional requirement to make an undertaking to fall within the exception in sub-section (3) of S. 23. It requires, that the undertaking must be an inter-connected undertaking which is a dominant undertaking but must yet not be engaged in the activity of producing goods. It excludes the said second class.

34. Conversely stated, the exception would apply only to an undertaking which is an inter-connected undertaking which is a dominant undertaking engaged in the provision of service, that is, an undertaking of the said fourth class. The language of the sub-section appears to be a little involved but its meaning is clear. Instead of providing affirmatively that the exception applies only to undertakings of the said fourth class, it uses negative language to exclude the said first three classes leaving, as a result, only the said fourth class to fall within the exception. The effect is that from the application of the general provisions contained in sub-sections (1) and (2) of S. 23, sub-sec. (3) excludes inter-connected undertakings which are dominant undertakings engaged in the provision of service. This interpretation yields the conclusion that although the object and intention of the Legislature, generally speaking, is to prevent concentration of economic power, in making the actual provisions in the statute the method is not identical when dealing with different cases for certain purposes, even when it is identical for other purposes.

35. The above discussion shows that although the preamble and the heading of Chapter III shows the object and intention of the Legislature to be to control concentration of economic power, the Legislature has, while enacting the Monopolies Act, made distinctions between like entities in respect of the application of certain provisions of Chapter III itself at least in the two cases referred to above.

36. Mr. Bhabha wanted us to reject the meaning of "undertaking" as defined in Section 2 (v) on the only ground that the object and intention of the Monopolies Act as gathered from the preamble and Chapter III heading is to control concentration of economic power. That object, however, must be gathered from the actual provisions contained in the Act itself and it would not be permissible to add to or subtract from such actual provisions. One would have been justified in accepting Mr. Bhabha's contention if the actual context so required it by reason of the meaning of "undertaking" as defined in Section 2 (v) creating any repugnancy or inconsistency when it has been used in the phrase "any other undertaking" in S. 23 (1). No repugnancy or inconsistency exists and Mr. Bhabha has not even pointed out any. He had, of course, pointed out that even a company in liquidation can, in view of the provisions of Section 394 of the Companies Act, be a party to a merger or amalgamation with an undertaking to which Part A applies, but the former in most cases would not be "engaged in" production of goods or provision of service and would be excluded from the operation of Section 23 (1) although it may have machinery and equipment for doing so. We are not required to consider such a case. Now it may be that such a case may require it to be held in its case that the context otherwise requires such a company to be included in the phrase "any other undertaking" in S. 23 (1). But there can be another view, which would possibly be a better view to take, that the merger or amalgamation of a company in liquidation is a rarity and the Legislature did not intend to control it.

37. Mr. Bhabha put a poser as to how would the meaning of "undertaking" as defined in Clause (v) of Section 2 apply in the case of a new undertaking for the purpose of consideration under Section 22 because the undertaking would not at that stage have been established and therefore it cannot be said in the case of such an undertaking that it "is engaged in" production of goods or provision of service. Now the obvious answer is that the context of Section 22 definitely requires that the word "undertaking" as used in Section 22 should not be construed and as a matter of fact cannot be construed to have the same meaning as contained in the definition in clause (v) of Section 2. In Section 22 itself there is overwhelming material to justify holding that the context so otherwise requires, because the words used are not "any undertaking" but are "any new undertaking" in sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 23 and moreover in sub-s. (2) the adjectival phrase "which is intended to be established" has been used to qualify the phrase "new undertaking". The latter adjectival phrase would clearly show that the use of the phrase "which is intended to be established" would be totally inconsistent with the concept of an undertaking which, as required by Sec. 2 (v), "is engaged in" production of goods or provision of service.

38. We, therefore, reject Mr. Bhabha's present contention under consideration and hold that in the phrase "any other undertaking" occurring in sub-section (1) of S. 23 the word "undertaking" is used in the meaning given to it in clause (v) of S. 2 and that the context does not require any departure being made from it. We further hold that the learned Judge was, therefore, right in according sanction to the scheme, although the merger or amalgamation formulated in the Scheme is not sanctioned by the Central Government under the Monopolies Act. The appeals, therefore, fail and are dismissed with costs.

39. Mr. Bharucha, the learned Counsel for the respondents in both the petitions, states that notwithstanding the order for costs in favour of the respondents the respondents will not enforce that order if the appellants inform the respondents in writing within eight weeks from today that the appellants have not filed and do not intend to file an appeal against this Judgment and Order to the Supreme Court.

40. It is necessary to record that although the Memorandum of Appeal in both the matters makes a grievance against the learned Judge not having ordered the appellants to be made parties to the petitioners, before him, Mr. Palkhiwala stated that the respondents in both the matters waive their objection as to the maintainability of the appeals. In view of this statement of Mr. Palkhiwala we did not even consider it necessary to grant to the appellants their request to us for granting them leave to file these appeals which they applied for. Mr. Bhabha stated that he made this application because of the reason that they were not parties to the two petitions but only notices had been served upon them. Neither of the parties before us in either of the petitions has argued that point as they did not intend to take a decision on that point. We have therefore not at all dealt with the point and make it clear that the parties have intended and we have accepted that the point should not be deemed to have been decided but is left open and should not serve as a precedent.

41. On Mr. Mukhi's application for stay, after some arguments are advanced, Mr. Bharucha states that the respondents in the two appeals will not take any steps to implement the order sanctioning the scheme of amalgamation on or before the 24th April 1971.

Appeals dismissed.

Index Note:— Bombay Public Trusts Act (1950), Ss. 2 (13), 19 — Corporation, registered under Companies Act, owning property in trust for religious and charitable purposes for the benefit of a class of persons, is a public trust liable to registration under the Act.

Brief Note:— A corporation licensed under Section 25 of the Companies Act, 1913, authorised by the object clause in its Memorandum of Association to hold property in trust for public religious or charitable purposes for the benefit of a class of beneficiaries is a public trust within Section 2 (13) of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950 and as such is required to be registered under the said Act. A corporation is a juristic person capable of owning property in its capacity as a trustee.

The memorandum of the Mandal in the instant case expressly provides that it shall act as a trustee in respect of its property for attainment of the charitable objects for which it was formed and that it shall hold such property in trust and apply the same for the said purposes for the benefit of all the members of the community. The Mandal therefore is a trustee of the property it holds for carrying out the public religious and charitable purposes for which it was expressly formed. There is thus in existence a public trust in the form of a Mandal which is liable also to be registered as such under the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950. JUDGMENT:— This is an appeal by the original Applicants No. 1 against the order dated 3rd March 1966 of a Judge of the Bombay City Civil Court. The Applicants No. 1 are Akhil Deshastha Rugvedi Brahman Madhyawarti Mandal (hereinafter for the sake of brevity referred to as "the Mandal"). The Mandal is a Company limited by guarantee incorporated under the Indian Companies Act, 1913 and now under the Companies Act, 1956 under a license from the Central Government under Section 26 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913 corresponding the Section 25 of the Companies Act, 1956 dispensing with the word "Limited" in the name of the Mandal. The Respondent No. 1 is the Joint Charity Commissioner, State of Maharashtra. The Respondent No. 2 was formerly the Chairman of the Mandal. The order under appeal held that the Mandal was a public trust and as such was liable to be registered under Section 18 of the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950 (hereinafter referred to as "the Public Trusts Act") as a public trust notwithstanding the fact that it was a Corporation.

2. A few facts leading to this litigation may be briefly stated. The Mandal applied for and obtained a license under Section 26 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913 to register itself under the said Act without the word "limited" added to its name of the representation that it was a non-profit making concern and charitable institution. The Mandal was incorporated on 3rd April 1939 as a company limited by guarantee without the word "limited" added to its name. It appears between 1939 and 1961, the Mandal acquired some property for the objects set out in its Memorandum of Association. On 12th October 1961, the Mandal made an application to the Charity Commissioner for its registration as a public trust under the Public Trusts Act. It is alleged on behalf of the Mandal that this application was made under protest and to find out whether it was liable to be registered under the Public Trusts Act so that it may not be charged with the contravention of the provisions of the Public Trusts Act. On 26th April 1962 as a result of an inquiry the Assistant Charity Commissioner, Bombay, held that the Mandal did not require registration under the Public Trusts Act. It appears the Joint Charity Commissioner, Bombay, was not satisfied with this order. He therefore commenced review proceedings suo motu and by an order dated 27th April 1965 set aside the order dated 26th April 1962 of the Assistant Charity Commissioner, held that the Mandal constituted a public trust and remanded the proceedings to the Assistant Charity Commissioner for inquiry and findings on the remaining statutory issues provided for in Section 19 of the Public Trusts Act.

3. Against the decision of the Joint Charity Commissioner the Mandal appealed to the Bombay City Civil Court. By its order dated 3rd March 1966 the Bombay City Civil Court dismissed the appeal and upheld the decision of the Joint Charity Commissioner. It is against the said decision that the present appeal has been filed.

4. As I have stated above the Mandal is a company limited by guarantee registered under a license under Section 26 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913 corresponding to Section 25 of the Companies Act, 1956. It is a corporation and therefore a juristic person and a distinct legal entity. This is a well-established proposition from the time of the decision of the Judicial Committee of the House of Lords in Salomon v. Salomon & Co. Ltd., 1897 AC 22, which has been followed in India by the Supreme Court in Mrs. Bacha F. Guzedar v. Commr. of Income-tax, Bombay, AIR 1955 SC 74, State Trading Corporation of India, Ltd. v. Commercial Tax Officer, AIR 1963 SC 1811 and Tata Engineering and Locomotive Co. Ltd. v. State of Bihar, AIR 1965 SC 40. As a juristic person the Mandal can carry on all human activities subject to such limitations as arise from its not being a natural person and the limitations imposed upon its activities by its own charter contained in the Object Clause in the Memorandum of Association. A juristic person cannot marry and procreate, but it is certainly capable of owning property. It is also capable of owning property in its capacity as a trustee. Corporations carrying on the activity of becoming trustees and executors are not unknown. There can therefore be no objection to a Corporation acting as a trustee provided its Object Clause in the Memorandum of Association so permits.

5. On behalf of the Mandal my attention was drawn to the definition of "trust" in Section 3 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882. This Act does not apply to public trusts, but the definition of "trust" contained in it is nonetheless a proper definition of the word "trust". Section 3 provides that a "trust" is an obligation annexed to the ownership of property and arising out of a confidence reposed in and accepted by the owner or declared and accepted by him for the benefit of another The person who reposes or declares the confidence is called the "author of the trust". The person who accepts the confidence is called the "trustee", and the person for whose benefit the confidence is accepted is called the "beneficiary" and the subject-matter of the trust is called "trust property". In my opinion if a Corporation is capable of accepting the ownership of property with an obligation annexed to the ownership for the benefit of another which may be a class of persons, there can be no objection to a Corporation acting as a trustee. The only question is whether in this case the Mandal has accepted such trust.

6. Section 2 (13) of the Public Trusts Act defines a "public trust" as under:—

"'public trust' means an express or constructive trust for either a public religious or charitable purpose or both and includes a society formed either for a religious or charitable purpose or for both and registered under the Societies Registration Act, 1860".

The difference between a private trust and a public trust arises from the difference between the objects. While in the private trust the intention is to benefit an individual or a group of persons and there is no public religious or charitable purpose, in a public trust there is a public religious or charitable purpose. It is expressly provided in the definition of "public trust" that a society formed for a religious or charitable purpose or for both and registered under the Societies Registration Act, 1860 is included in the definition of "public trust". There is no reference to a Company incorporated under the Companies Act but that should not make any difference. If a Company is authorised by its object clauses in its Memorandum of Association to hold property in trust for public religious or charitable purposes, there is no reason why its ownership of property for such purposes should not form a public trust.

7. We must therefore refer to the constitution of the Mandal and find out whether the object clauses and the other provisions in its Memorandum of Association authorise it to hold property for public religious or charitable purposes. We must also see if there are other circumstances if any pointing to the existence of a public trust. Under S. 26 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913 and under Section 25 of the Companies Act, 1956 a license can only be granted by the Central Government if the Company is formed for promoting commerce or science, religion, charity or any other useful purpose and intends to apply its profits if any or other income in promoting its objects and to prohibit the payment of any dividend to its members. In the case of the Mandal the license granted to it by the Central Government provides that the Memorandum of Association shall prohibit payment of any dividend to its members. Now, we come to the object clause in the Memorandum of Association of the Mandal. Several sub-clauses provide for establishment of a home for the use of Akhil Deshastha Rigvedi Brahman community, providing a lecture hall, educational and religious classes, industrial workshops and hospitals etc. The objects also include rendition of medical aid to the members of the said community, scholarships for the education of the members of the said community and provision for gymnasiums, gymkhanas and other recreation. Sub-clauses (11), (12) and (13) of clause 3 provide as under:—

"(11) To accept and undertake any Trust and to act as sole Trustee or Executor in respect of any estate if such acceptance and undertaking is conducive to the attainment of the above objects or any of them.

(12) To accept donations for the purposes aforesaid in cash or in kind.

(13) To hold the property and funds of the Mandal in trust to apply the same and/or the income thereof in promoting the above objects or any one or more of them".

It will thus appear that the object clauses contained in the Memorandum of Association of the Mandal expressly provide that the Mandal shall act as a trustee in respect of its property for the attainment of the objects of the Mandal, and that it shall hold such property in trust and apply the same for the said purposes. The educational and other purposes set out in the Memorandum would in my opinion constitute public religious and charitable purposes. The Mandal is therefore in my opinion a trustee in respect of the property it holds for carrying out the said public religious and charitable purposes and there is in existence a public trust which is liable to be registered under the Public Trusts Act.

8. On behalf of the Mandal it was contended that at the time of incorporation of the Mandal in 1939 there was no property and therefore there could be no public trust. It is true that there is no evidence that in 1939 there was any property of the Mandal and it may be that at that time the object clauses in the Memorandum of Association only contained an intention that when the property came into existence, it would be held by the Mandal in trust for the members of the said community for charitable purposes. But the moment the property came into existence the Mandal became a trustee in respect of the said property, the beneficiary was the community for whose benefit the property was held and the objects are those set out in the Memorandum of Association.

9. The second contention taken was based on two judgments, one of Jahagirdar, J. in the case of Bhaskar Sadashiv Joshi v. Registrar, Bombay Public Trust Registration Act, 1935, 50 Bom LR 612 = (AIR 1949 Bom 76) and the other an unreported judgment D/- 12-7-1956 in Appeal No. 657 of 1954 of a Division Bench of this Court consisting of Chagla, C. J. and Dixit, J. In Bhaskar Joshi's case, (50 Bom LR 612) = (AIR 1949 Bom 76) it was held that a society registered under the Societies Registration Act, 1860, even if it is religious or charitable is exempt from the operation of the Bombay Public Trusts Registration Act, 1935. This may be a correct interpretation of the 1935 Act but it cannot apply to the Bombay Public Trusts Act of 1950 because such a society is now expressly included in the definition of a public trust. Apart from this we are in this case concerned with a company and not with a society. In the case before the Division Bench (Civil Appeal No. 657 of 1954 (Bom)) there was a Panchayat holding property for the benefit not of the members of a particular community but for the benefit of such members of that community who were members of the Panchayat. It was in view of that limitation that the Division Bench held that the Panchayat was not a public trust and was not liable to be registered under the Public Trusts Act. In this case, however, the Memorandum of Association of the Mandal expressly provides for holding property in trust for the objects specified in the Memorandum, and the beneficiaries are the members of a particular community irrespective of whether they are or are not the members of the Mandal. The Division Bench decision has no application to the facts of this case.

10. Another contention taken on behalf of the Mandal was that if the Mandal was compelled to register itself under Public Trusts Act, it will come under dual control and such dual control will create conflict, the dual control being of the Companies Act and of the Public Trusts Act. In my opinion, there is no substance in this contention. The Mandal is a trustee. With regard to its own constitution, it may be governed by the provisions of the Companies Act. But with regard to property held by it as trustee for public religious and charitable purposes, it will be liable to comply with the provisions of the Public Trusts Act. A company incorporated under the Companies Act has to comply with the other laws of the land applicable to its activities. This does not result in any conflict.

11. The last contention taken was that if the Mandal was compelled to register itself under the Public Trusts Act, and it is removed as a trustee for any breach of trust or other malversation, the trust would come to an end. I find no substance in this contention. It may be that the Mandal may be found guilty of breach of trust or malversation of the property of the trust and may be removed as a trustee. There is no reason why the removal as a trustee of the Mandal should bring an end to the trust. The Charity Commissioner or the Court can always frame scheme for the administration of the trust and the trust can continue with substituted trustees. It would not matter if in that event the Mandal has to be wound up. Many companies find themselves in this position, if their business comes to an end and their substratum is gone. This cannot be a reason for exempting the Mandal from registering itself under the Public Trusts Act.

12. If the contention that a company even if it owns property as a trustee in trust for a class of beneficiaries for public religious and charitable purposes is not required to be registered under the Public Trusts Act were accepted, it would result in large scale evasion of the provisions of the Public Trusts Act. All that the trustees have to do is to register a company under the Companies Act, vest the trust property in the company and become its directors in order to escape the provisions of the Public Trusts Act. Such a construction is not to be favoured.

13. In the result, the appeal fails and is dismissed. The order of the City Civil Court dated 3rd March 1966 is confirmed. In the circumstances of the case, there will be no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

AIR 1972 BOMBAY 316 (V 59 C 58)

K. K. DESAI AND VAIDYA, JJ.

Diwanchand Gupta, Petitioner v. N. M. Shah and others, Respondents.

Special Civil Appln. No. 259 of 1970, (with Spl. C. As. Nos. 744, 745 and 750 of 1970), D/- 1-7-1971.

(A) Bombay Municipal Corporation Act (3 of 1888), S. 354 — Notice to pull down dangerous structures — Subjective satisfaction of authority — Justiciability.

The notice issuing authority under Section 354 has to consider the facts objectively. Its satisfaction is open to challenge only if it has not come to the conclusion honestly and bona fide. AIR 1959 Bom 332, Rel. on. (Paras 7 and 28)

The fact that the building was subjected to some repairs, which were not repairs to the entire building but repairs effected to undo the damage caused while pulling down the rest of the building, or the fact that notwithstanding the lapse of time till now, the building has survived several seasons without any untoward incident happening to the inmates or to the passers-by, cannot be sufficient to interfere with the subjective satisfaction of the authority, who has stated in the notice that a portion of the building was in a ruinous condition, likely to fall and dangerous to persons occupying, resorting to or passing by the same. (Para 8)

(B) Bombay Municipal Corporation Act (3 of 1888), S. 354 — Notice to pull down dangerous structures — Whether becomes inefficacious.

Once a notice is issued under S. 354 to the owner, the owner is liable to be prosecuted for non-compliance with the notice under Section 471 (b), unless he obtains an order under Section 507 directing the occupiers of the building to afford all reasonable facilities to the owner for complying with the notice. (Para 9)

Furthermore, under Section 471 (b) the occupants, who refuse to vacate the premises or afford reasonable facility to the owner are themselves liable to be punished for each such offence of non-compliance with the requisitions. Therefore, it is idle to contend that the notice issued by the Authority under Sec. 354 has become inefficacious or the order passed by the Chief Judge with reference to that notice has no relevance to the present conditions affecting the legal rights and obligations of the owners and occupiers of the building in respect of which the notice is given. (Para 9)

(C) Bombay Municipal Corporation Act (3 of 1888), S. 354 — Power to issue notice to pull down dangerous structures to owner or occupier — Exercise of, whether violated principles of natural justice, (Const. Arts. 19 and 226).

There is nothing expressed in the section itself which requires a notice to be given to the occupants of a building when the notice is given to the owner thereof. AIR 1959 Bom 332 and AIR 1971 SC 40, Rel. on. (Para 11)

The power conferred by the section is a power in the public interest. The power must be considered as a reasonable restriction on the right of property as well as the right to carry on trade or business within the meaning of Art. 19 (1) (f) and (g) read with Art. 19 (5) and (6) of the Constitution. (Para 14)

Where the authority issuing the notice to owner had not only satisfied himself about the ruinous condition of the building but a portion of the building collapsed and a major portion of the building had been pulled down in pursuance of the notice, and although the owners had made applications against all the tenants and occupants, the grievance was made against the order only by six of them.

Held, that question of violation of principle of natural justice before issuing a notice under Section 354 was entirely irrelevant. (Para 15)

The facts and circumstances clearly indicated that it was unreasonable to expect a notice to be given to the occupants of the dilapidated building with a view to comply with principles of natural justice. (Para 15)

(D) Bombay Municipal Corporation Act (3 of 1888), Ss. 56 (3) and 354 — Power of Commissioner to issue notice to pull down dangerous structure — Delegation of power by Deputy Commissioner to Assistant Engineer — Validity.

As under Section 56 (3) all acts and things performed and done by a Deputy Commissioner during the tenure of his office and in virtue thereof shall for all purposes be deemed to have been performed and done by the Commissioner, the Deputy Commissioner has a statutory authority or permission to delegate the powers of the Commissioner under Section 354 to the Assistant Engineer. The maxim delegatus non potest delegare cannot be invoked where the statute has permitted the delegation. AIR 1968 SC 822, Distinguished. (Paras 18, 19)

(E) Bombay Municipal Corporation Act (3 of 1888), S. 354 — Discretion to issue notice to pull down dangerous structures — Exercise of — Whether mala fide.

Section 354 does not confer an unfettered discretion on the authorities to pick and choose and indulge in unfair discrimination against the citizens and issue notice to whomsoever they like. (Para 21)

It is obviously impossible for the authority to inspect all structures that are suspected of being dangerous. Therefore, it is a sufficient exercise of his discretion in deciding what structures are dangerous if he appoints a competent person to represent to him what structures are dangerous. But if a notice is issued based on the representation of such a person it is open to the owner to prove that, that person has not exercised his discretion or has been actuated by improper motives in prescribing the steps to be taken. (1908) 10 Bom LR 821, Rel. on. (Para 21)

Where the owners had not only not challenged the notice but had already partially complied with the notice, it was held that it could not be said that the discretion was exercised unfairly or capriciously or mala fide. (Para 21)

Moreover it was not for the Court to satisfy itself whether the building was in a dangerous condition when the notice was issued. The fact that part of the building had been already pulled down and the majority of the occupants had no grievance against the pulling down itself further indicated that the allegation of mala fides made against the authority was baseless. 1905 A. C. 426 Rel. on. (Para 23)

(F) Bombay Municipal Corporation Act (3 of 1888), S. 507 — Jurisdiction of Chief Judge under — Not taken away by Section 13 (1) (hhh) or S. 28 of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (1947).

There is nothing in Section 13 (1) (hhh) or Section 28 of the Bombay Rent Act which takes away the jurisdiction of the Chief Judge under S. 507 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act. (1958) 60 Bom LR 1096, Rel. on; AIR 1971 SC 1495, Distinguished. (Para 26)

It is only in respect of suits or proceedings between landlords and tenants relating to recovery of rent or possession of any premises to which Rent Act applied and in respect of applications made under that Act or any claim or question arising out of the Act or any of its provisions that the jurisdiction of other Courts is excluded under S. 28 of the Rent Act. The application made by the owners under Section 507 of the Municipal Corporation Act does not fall under any of the categories of suits or proceedings referred to in Section 28 (1) of the Rent Act. It cannot be said that an application under Section 507 relates to the recovery of possession of the premises because Section 507 empowers the Chief Judge to make a written order "requiring the occupier of the building or land to afford all reasonable facilities to the owner for complying with the notice."

(Para 24)

(G) Bombay Municipal Corporation Act (3 of 1888), S. 507 (2) — Power to require the occupiers "to afford all reasonable facilities to the owner" — Extent of.

The power includes a power to order the occupants to vacate the premises if that is necessary for giving reasonable facility to the owner. (Para 27)

VAIDYA, J.:— The above four petitions under Article 227 of the Constitution of India are directed against an order dated November 28, 1969 passed by the Chief Judge of the Court of Small

Causes at Bombay in two applications filed under Section 507 of the Bombay

Municipal Corporation Act, 1888. The said two applications were filed by respondent Nos. 2 to 8 in special civil application No. 259 of 1970, who own the premises bearing No. 61, Clive Road,

Danabunder, Bombay No. 9 consisting of a ground floor and two upper floors.

Municipal Application No. 174/M of 1966 was filed against 17 tenants, one of whom is the petitioner in special civil application No. 259 of 1970. He was respondent No. 15 in the application. Municipal application No. 175/M of 1966 was filed against 16 respondents mentioned therein, of whom the petitioners in special civil application Nos. 744, 745 and 750 were some of the respondents. They were described as occupants, who were not the tenants of the owners.

2. In both the applications respondents Nos. 2 to 8 in special civil application No. 259 of 1970 (who will be hereinafter described as "the owners") stated that they were served with a notice bearing No. 18 dated June 11, 1965 from the Assistant Engineer, Division B, Bombay Municipal Corporation, which is as follows:—

"BOMBAY MUNICIPAL CORPORATION

Notice under Section 354 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act, No. BN/18 of 1965-1966.

Bombay,
Dt. 11-6-1965.

To Shri Parasram Dhanpat,
The Owner of the Building

Whereas it appears to me that the certain structure, to wit, a portion of the building on premises No. 61 situate at Clive Road, of which you are the owner is in a ruinous condition, likely to fall and dangerous to any person occupying, resorting to, or passing-by the same, I hereby require you, under Section 354 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act to

To pull down the whole building upto ground level.

Time limit 30 days.

Note: The building is presumed to face Clive Road, on east and to prevent all cause of danger therefrom, I further hereby require you, under the aforesaid section of the Municipal Corporation Act, forthwith before proceeding to pull down, and secure the said structure to set up a proper and sufficient board or fence for the protection of passers-by and other persons. I give you notice that, if within 30 days from the service or receipt hereof this requisition be not complied with you will render yourself liable to prosecution under Section 471 of the said Act and I may thereafter, pursuant to the provisions of Section 489 of the said Act take such measures or cause such work to be executed or such thing to be done as shall in my opinion be necessary for giving due effect to this requisition and you will be liable for the expenses thereof which will be recovered from you in the manner provided by Section 491 of the said Act. No portion of the structure within the regular line of the street may be reconstructed nor may anything within the scope of Section 342 of the said Municipal Corporation Act, other than the work which you are expressly required by this notice to do, be made or done without previously giving notice thereof as required by Section 342 aforesaid.

Bombay Municipal Corporation

Note: Under S. 68 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act the Municipal Commissioner for Greater Bombay has empowered the Asstt. Engineer Division B to exercise perform and discharge all the powers duties and functions conferred and imposed upon and vested in the Commissioner by Sections 354 and 489 of the said Act".

It was alleged by the owners that although the owners were called upon by the said notice to pull down the said building upto the ground level as the building stood in a ruinous condition, the petitioners in these special civil applications and the other tenants and occupants (who will be all hereinafter described as "occupiers") failed to vacate the premises and made it impossible for the owners to comply with the notice, which was given under Section 354 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act and rendered respondent No. 2 in special civil application No. 259 of 1970, Parasram Dhanpat, liable for prosecution by the Bombay Municipal Corporation. It was alleged that a case bearing No. 563 of 1965 was filed against respondent No. 2, one of the owners, in the Court of the Presidency Magistrate, 28th Court, Esplanade, Bombay and he was convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50/- in the said case on February 22, 1966. The owners further alleged that thereafter a portion of the wall supporting the staircase leading to the second floor of the building in the premises referred to above collapsed, resulting in further deterioration of the structural condition of the building. The Municipal authorities then warned some of the occupants to vacate the premises immediately. The owners further called upon the occupants by a notice through their Advocate dated June 6, 1966 to vacate the premises occupied by them forthwith. In spite of this, the occupants failed and neglected to vacate the premises and refused to afford necessary facilities to the owners to pull down the building as required by the aforesaid notice dated June 11, 1965. It is in these circumstances that the two applications mentioned above were filed by the owners on July 13, 1966 under Section 507 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act.

3. The petitioners in these special civil applications resisted the owners' applications by filing affidavits in reply to the applications contending inter alia that the applications were not properly filed, that they were belated and mala fide, that the owners had got the notice issued in collusion with Municipal officials with a view to get rid of the petitioners and other occupiers and thereafter to sell the plot as an open plot fetching a fabulous price or to reconstruct on it and let the same out to others free of any claim of the tenants, that the aforesaid notice purported to have been issued by the Assistant Engineer was invalid inasmuch as the signatory to the notice had no legal and valid authority to issue it and the notice was arbitrary, capricious and mala fide and that it was not expedient to pull down the tenements let out to the petitioners.

4. The learned Chief Judge allowed the parties to lead evidence and after considering the oral and documentary evidence before him and the contentions raised by the occupants passed the impugned order referred to above granting the applications of the owners. In Municipal Application No. 174 of 1956, all the respondents including Diwanchand Gupta, the petitioner in special civil application No. 259 of 1970 were directed to remove themselves from the premises in their occupation by January 31, 1970 in order to afford facilities to respondent No. 2 to enable him to comply with the requisition in the aforesaid notice and the tenants were directed to pay to respondent No. 2 court costs. The application was dismissed so far as respondents Nos. 3 to 8 were concerned as they were minors and it was respondent No. 2 alone who fell within the definition of the word 'owner' in Section 3, clause (m) of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act. In Municipal Application No. 175 of 1966, also, the occupants were directed to remove themselves from the premises in their occupation before January 31, 1970 in order to afford facilities to respondent No. 2 to enable him to comply with the notice. That application was also dismissed so far as respondents Nos. 3 to 8 were concerned.

5. Feeling aggrieved by the said decision of the Chief Judge, the tenant Diwanchand Gupta has filed special civil application No. 259 of 1970. Special Civil Applications Nos. 744, 745 and 750 of 1970 are filed by some of the occupants aggrieved by the said order, praying for quashing the notice dated June 11, 1965 and the aforesaid order passed by the Chief Judge of the Small Causes Court.

6. In support of the petition the first contention raised by Mr. Chagla, the learned Counsel for the petitioner in special civil application No. 259 of 1970, was that the notice having been issued as far back as June 11, 1965 had lost its effect or efficacy firstly because of the lapse of time from the date of its receipt till now, secondly because although the owners could have filed a suit to recover possession of the premises under S. 13

(1) (bhh) of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, they had failed and neglected to do so; thirdly because although part of the premises were pulled down, the petitioners were occupying the remaining premises which at present admittedly consist of two rooms on the first floor and the entire ground floor without anything untoward happening to any of them or to any member of the public since 1965, and fourthly that after pulling down the rest of the premises, certain repairs of the building have been carried out and the building had ceased to be dangerous or liable to be pulled down under the notice. Mr. Shah, the learned Counsel for the remaining petitioners, further urged that the efficacy of the notice ought to have been judged by the learned Chief Judge with reference to the time of the making of the application or the time of the making of the order by him; and as he had not done so, the order of the learned Chief Judge was liable to be set aside.

7. We do not find any substance in any of these contentions in view of the scheme of the provisions contained in Sections 354 and 507. The scheme of these provisions was considered by a Division Bench of this Court in Nathubhai Dhulaji v. Municipal Corporation, Bombay, 60 Bom LR 515 = (AIR 1959 Bom 332). The said case arose out of suits filed in the City Civil Court by tenants of a building in respect of which a pulling down notice under Section 354 was issued to the landlord, who was sued by the tenant as defendant No. 1 in those suits. One of the contentions raised before this Court in that case was that the notice issued to defendant No. 1 under Section 354 was mala fide both in fact and in law. The Division Bench consisting of Dixit and Tarkunde, JJ. observed at page 520 after quoting the provisions of Section 354 as follows:—

"The title under which this section occurs is 'Dangerous Structures,' and one has only to read the section to realize that the intention of the section is to secure public safety. The authority issuing notice under Section 354 has to objectively consider certain facts. After having ascertained the facts objectively, he has to satisfy himself as to whether or not he would issue a notice under Section 354. First, he has to consider whether a building is in a ruinous condition or is likely to fall or is in any way dangerous to any person occupying, resorting to or passing by such structure. This embraces not merely the persons who occupy the building but also those who go to the building and also those who happen to pass by the building. Therefore, the authority issuing notice under Section 354 has to ascertain these facts objectively. He has then to consider another fact objectively, which is, having regard to the state of the property, what is the degree of risk to the public safety, and having ascertained this, he has then to consider whether he would issue a notice to the owner or occupier requiring him either to pull down the building or to repair it. It is quite clear, therefore, that the authority issuing notice under Section 354 has to ascertain certain facts objectively and then to satisfy himself. In other words, the satisfaction is his own satisfaction, i.e., the subjective satisfaction of the authority issuing notice under Section 354."

Having regard to the facts of that case, they hold that all that the authority had to do was to act bona fide and not to act capriciously or with an improper motive. But if he considers the facts objectively and comes to a particular conclusion, his satisfaction would not then be open to challenge, provided he has come to the conclusion honestly and bona fide. They also observed:

"A building which needed repairing in 1954 may in conceivable circumstances, require pulling down in 1956. But whether the building should be pulled down or repaired is a matter of which the authority is the sole judge, and so long as the authority keeps himself within the limits of the authority given to him by Section 354, his discretion is absolute."

With respect, we are bound by this view enunciated about the scope and effect of Section 354.

8. It was not even argued before us that the impugned notice was issued mala fide by the Assistant Engineer. The fact that the building was subjected to some repairs, which were not repairs to the entire building but repairs effected to undo the damage caused while pulling down the rest of the building, or the fact that notwithstanding the lapse of time till now, the building has survived several seasons without any untoward incident happening to the inmates or to the passers-by, cannot be sufficient to interfere with the subjective satisfaction of the Assistant Engineer, who has stated in the notice that a portion of the building on premises No. 61 was in a ruinous condition, likely to fall and dangerous to persons occupying, resorting to or passing by the same. The satisfaction on these facts is the satisfaction of the authorized officer under Section 354. It is not open to the Court or any other authority, unless empowered by law, to sit in judgment over that satisfaction.

9. Moreover, the above arguments urged by Mr. Chagla and Mr. Shah in support of their contention that the notice has ceased to be efficacious are all without any substance. This is particularly so because once a notice is issued under Section 354 to the owner, the owner is liable to be prosecuted for non-compliance with the notice under Section 471 (b), unless he obtains an order under S. 507 directing the occupiers of the building to afford all reasonable facilities to the owner for complying with the notice. Section 507 (3) further lays down:—

"After eight days from the date of any such order, it shall be incumbent on the said occupier to afford all such reasonable facilities to the owner for the purpose aforesaid as shall be prescribed in the said order; and in the event of his continued refusal so to do, the owner shall be discharged, during the continuance of such refusal, from any liability which he would otherwise incur by reason of his failure to comply with the said provision or requisition".

Furthermore, under Section 471 (b) the occupants, who refuse to vacate the premises or afford reasonable facility to the owner are themselves liable to be punished for each such offence of non-compliance with the requisition. In our opinion, therefore, it is idle to contend that the notice issued by the Assistant Engineer under Section 354 has become inefficacious or the order passed by the Chief Judge with reference to that notice has no relevance to the present conditions affecting the legal rights and obligations of the owners and occupiers of the building in respect of which the notice is given.

10. The second and the most important contention raised by Mr. Chagla was that the notice under Section 354 calling upon the owners to pull down the building not only threatened the rights of the petitioners to occupy the building but affected his client's right to carry on business of a hotel in the said building; and before so prejudicing the rights or threatening the rights of his client, the authority issuing a notice under S. 354 was bound to give notice to his client. In other words, notwithstanding the absence of any express provision requiring a show cause notice to be issued under Section 354, it was incumbent on the authority consistent with principles of natural justice and fairplay, to give a notice of the proposed order of pulling down under Section 354. It must be noted that although this plea of violation of principles of natural justice was taken in some of the affidavits in reply filed by some of the occupants, the point does not appear to have been pressed at the hearing of the applications before the learned Chief Judge. Mr. Chagla contended that notwithstanding this, it is open to this Court in exercise of its powers under Art. 227 of the Constitution to decide whether the authority issuing a notice under Section 354 should issue a show cause notice and give an opportunity of hearing to the occupants of a building in respect of which the notice is issued. He submitted that although a Division Bench of this Court in the aforesaid case of 60 Bom LR 515 = (AIR 1959 Bom 332) had negatived this contention, that view was based on the earlier decisions of the Supreme Court following the decision in Province of Bombay v. Khushaldas S. Advani, 53 Bom LR 1 = (AIR 1950 SC 222). But that view was displaced by subsequent decisions of the Supreme Court, which, according to Mr. Chagla, laid down that irrespective of whether the decision was an administrative or quasi-judicial one, the concept of rule of law will lose its vitality if the instrumentalities of the State were not charged with the duty of discharging their functions in a fair and just manner. In other words, Mr. Chagla submitted that we should not follow the decision of this Court in Nathubhai's case in view of the later decisions of the Supreme Court which have applied principles of natural justice to even administrative decisions.

11. Even assuming that this point could be urged for the first time in this petition under Art. 227 of the Constitution by the petitioners, though it is not dealt with by the learned Chief Judge in the impugned order, we do not find any substance in the contentions raised by Mr. Chagla on the basis of the principles of natural justice in the context of Section 354. Section 354, no doubt, empowers the Commissioner to issue a notice under that section either to the owner or to the occupier. In the present case, notice has been issued only to the owners. The owners do not have any grievances of violation of principles of natural justice. The section does not require a notice to be given to the occupiers in all cases where owners are given notice. Mr. Chagla had to concede that there is nothing expressed in the section itself which requires a notice to be given to the occupants of a building when the notice is given to the owner thereof. But what he contends is that as the notice is a threat to the right of the occupants to continue to occupy the building and to carry on business in the building, it would be unreasonable to prejudice their rights without giving notice to them. For this purpose, he relied on the provisions contained in Article 19 (f) and (g) and submitted that the occupants' right to hold the property and carry on the business in the property would be jeopardized if a notice is given to the owner without any opportunity being given to the occupants. He rightly conceded that he could not rely on Article 31 (1) as Article 31 (1) lays down no such protection and it merely says that no person shall be deprived of his property save by authority of law.

12. This very argument was, however, negated by this Court in Nathubhai's case, 60 Bom LR 515 = (AIR 1959 Bom 332) with the following observations at page 520:—

"The contention which has been taken by Mr. Phadke is that Section 354 does not make provision for the right of a person to be heard. The short answer to this contention is that Section 354 does not provide for a hearing to be given to persons such as the plaintiffs in this case. When the contention is that the authority must act judicially, what the Court is concerned with is to see whether the section under which the right is claimed requires a hearing to be given. If the section of a statute requires that a hearing should be given, then surely the approach of the authority must be a judicial approach. But the alternative argument which has been advanced by Mr. Phadke is that even if the authority may not be bound to act judicially, the principles of natural justice require that a party should be heard before his rights are affected in any way. So far as the judicial approach is concerned, there is no difficulty in holding that the notice issued under Section 354 is an executive act or an executive order, and when by statute a provision is not made for hearing, it is impossible to accept the contention that the authority is bound to act judicially; nor is, in my opinion, the contention tenable that although the section does not provide for a hearing, the rules of natural justice require that a party should be heard before his rights are affected".

13. Now, it is true that in arriving at the above conclusion, this Court relied on the principles laid down by the Supreme Court in 53 Bom LR 1 = (AIR 1950 SC 222). It is also true that in A. K. Kraipak v. Union of India, AIR 1970 SC 150 the view taken is that the dividing line between an administrative power and a quasi-judicial power is quite thin and is being gradually obliterated; and that what was considered as an administrative power some years back is now being considered as a quasi-judicial power; and further that with the increase of the power of the administrative bodies, it has become necessary to provide guidelines for the just exercise of their power. The Supreme Court, therefore, remarked that to prevent the abuse of that power and to see that it does not become a new despotism courts are gradually evolving the principles to be observed while exercising such powers. But at the same time the Supreme Court observed that the scope of the application of principles of natural justice to the exercise of executive power was qualified with reference to the statute under which the said powers were exercised. In Union of India v. J. N. Sinha, AIR 1971 SC 40, Hegde, J. speaking for the Court reviewed the earlier case law and laid down "Rules of natural justice are not embodied rules nor can they be elevated to the position of fundamental rights. As observed by this Court in Kraipak v. Union of India, AIR 1970 SC 150, "the aim of rules of natural justice is to secure justice or to put it negatively to prevent miscarriage of justice. These rules can operate only in areas not covered by any law validly made. In other words they do not supplant the law but supplement it". It is true that if a statutory provision can be read consistently with the principles of natural justice, the Courts should do so because it must be presumed that the legislatures and the statutory authorities intend to act in accordance with the principles of natural justice. But, if on the other hand, a statutory provision either specifically or by necessary implication excludes the application of any or all the rules of principles of natural justice then the Court cannot ignore the mandate of the legislature or the statutory authority and read into the concerned provision the principles of natural justice. Whether the exercise of a power conferred should be made in accordance with any of the principles of natural justice or not depends upon the express words of the provision conferring the power, the nature of the power conferred, the purpose for which it is conferred and the effect of the exercise of that power".

14. Applying, therefore, these principles to the facts of the present case, we find that the power conferred under Section 354 is a power in the public interest. The section gives power to the Commissioner. If it shall at any time appear to him that any structure (including any building, wall or other structure and anything affixed to or projecting from any building, wall or other structure) is in a ruinous condition, or likely to fall, or in any way dangerous to any person occupying, resorting to or passing by such structure or any other structure or place in the neighbourhood thereof, the Commissioner may, by written notice, require the owner or occupier of such structure to pull down, secure or repair such structure, and to prevent all cause of danger therefrom. Such a power must be considered as a reasonable restriction on the right of property as well as the right to carry on trade or business within the meaning of Art. 19 (1) (f) and (g) read with Art. 19 (5) and (6) of the Constitution which empowers the State to make any law imposing, in the interests of the general public, reasonable restrictions.

15. In the facts of the present case, we find that the authority issuing the notice has not only satisfied himself about the ruinous condition of the building, but a portion of the building collapsed and a major portion of the building has been pulled down in pursuance of the notice; and although the owners had made applications against all the tenants and occupants, as stated above, the grievance is made against the order only by six of them. Having regard to these facts and circumstances, we are, therefore, of the opinion that the question of violation of principles of natural justice before issuing a notice under Section 354 is entirely irrelevant. The section did not require a notice to be given. The facts and circumstances clearly show that it was unreasonable to expect a notice to be given to the occupants of this dilapidated building with a view to comply with principles of natural justice. The contention of the Counsel for the petitioners that the notice violated the principles of natural justice must, therefore, fail.

16. It was next contended that the authority, who issued the notice, was delegated the power to issue the notice under Section 354 by the Deputy Commissioner who was himself a deputy of the Municipal Commissioner and this violated the principle contained in the maxim delegatus non potest delegare. The law on this point is succinctly stated in Allen on Law and Orders, 2nd edition at page 204 as follows:—

"With regard to executive functions, it is clear, on the one hand, that any administrator, whether of Ministerial degree or below it, must be allowed a reasonable amount of delegation in ordinary routine duties; but, on the other hand, if certain specific executive functions are committed to him, he cannot, without authority, entrust them to a deputy of his own choice".

Wade on Administrative Law, 2nd edition, 1967, at page 59 has stated the law as follows:—

"Although, therefore, the Courts are strict in requiring that statutory power shall be exercised by the persons on whom it is conferred, and by no one else, they make liberal allowance for the working of the official hierarchy, at least so far as it operates within the sphere of responsibility of ministers of the Crown. Powers, conferred upon special statutory bodies are more jealously watched, as we have noticed. Yet the maxim delegatus non potest delegare, like so many of the other rules of administrative law, turns out to be no more than a qualified rule for the interpretation of Parliament's intentions".

17. It is, therefore, necessary for us to consider whether in enacting the relevant provisions of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act, the legislature had intended that the Deputy Commissioner, to whom powers of the Commissioner were delegated, had no power to delegate the powers to the Assistant Engineer, who, in the present case, issued the notice.

18. The learned Chief Judge considered the proceedings of the Municipal Corporation of Greater Bombay at Ex. L relating to the Corporation resolution No. 820 dated October 28, 1958 and the Corporation resolution No. 331 dated May 16, 1960, which refers to the information given by the Commissioner under Section 56 (2) (b) and proviso to S. 56-B (1) of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act, stating that the Commissioner had deputed inter alia to the Deputy Municipal Commissioner Mr. S. M. Y. Shastri the powers under Section 354. He also considered Ex. H, which records the deputation of the powers to the Deputy Commissioner as well as Ex. G under which powers were delegated on September 26, 1960 to the Assistant Engineer Mr. Coutinho (who issued the impugned notice) including the powers to issue notice under Section 354, and held that in view of the provisions of S. 56 (3) of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act, the Deputy Commissioner Mr. Shastri could validly delegate his powers under Section 68 to Mr. Coutinho, the Assistant Engineer. In effect, he held that as under Section 56 (3) all acts and things performed and done by a Deputy Commissioner during the tenure of his office and in virtue thereof shall for all purposes be deemed to have been performed and done by the Commr., the Deputy Commissioner Mr. Shastri had a statutory authority or permission to delegate the powers of the Commissioner under Section 354 to Mr. Coutinho, the Assistant Engineer. We find no reason to disagree with the view taken by the learned Chief Judge.

19. Mr. Chagla, however, contended relying on a decision of the Supreme Court in Mangal Chuni Lal v. Manilal Maganlal, 70 Bom LR 745 = (AIR 1968 SC 822) that in view of the principles laid down in that case, the second delegation of powers by the Deputy Commissioner to the Assistant Engineer in the present case was invalid. This very case was cited before the learned Chief Judge and the learned Chief Judge rightly distinguished the case as one to be read in the context of the provisions of the Bombay Provincial Municipal Corporation Act, 1949 and the facts of that case; because the facts in that case were that the complaint had been filed by the Licence Inspector whereas the delegation under Section 59 in that Act was to the Deputy Health Officer to take proceedings as provided in Section 481 of that Act. There was no delegation of any power under any section of the Act by the Deputy Health Officer to the Licence Inspector. It is in view of those facts that the Supreme Court, with respect, rightly held that the Licence Inspector had no valid authority to file the complaint. In the present case, however, under Ex. G the power was validly delegated to the Assistant Engineer to issue the notice; and, as stated above, the maxim delegatus non potest delegare cannot be invoked where the statute has permitted the delegation. The contention of the petitioners that the notice was not validly issued by the Assistant Engineer must be, therefore, rejected.

20. In view of this, Mr. Chagla could not press his contention that merely because the notice mentioned in a footnote that the Assistant Engineer was delegated the power by the Municipal Commissioner contrary to the real facts, which showed that it was the Deputy Commissioner who had delegated the powers to the Assistant Engineer, the notice was invalid. It must be noted that it has been repeatedly pointed out by this Court that the Municipal Corporation should state the correct facts in the footnote and not mislead the recipient of the notice about the delegation. But the mere mis-statement by the Municipal Corporation, which unfortunately is persisted in in spite of observations made from time to time by this Court, is not sufficient to invalidate the notice because under Section 56 (3) the Deputy Commissioner is deemed to be a Commissioner for all purposes of the Act, as stated therein.

21. It was next contended that Section 354 conferred an unfettered discretion on the authorities which empowered them to pick and choose and indulge in unfair discrimination against the citizens and issue notice to whomsoever they like. This argument must be rejected not only because it is an erroneous contention in view of the provisions contained in the section but also because the principles on which the discretion has to be exercised have been laid down by this Court in Lalbbhai Tricamlal v. The Municipal Commr. for the City of Bombay, (1908) 10 Bom LR 821. In that case it is laid down that the word 'appear' in the section does not involve "appears to the eye", but it was sufficient if it appeared to the Commissioner on the representations of a competent officer whose duty it was to make such representations, and it was also laid down:—

"But the Commissioner's action when 'it appears' is judicial, so that he must exercise his discretion in determining what action should be taken. He does not satisfy this test, where he merely signs the notice which is sent to him by the Executive Engineer because it has previously been signed by that officer. It is only by aid of a fiction that it can be said that a notice signed in this way by the Commissioner complies with the section which should be considered as a notice to show cause.....

Discretion must not be arbitrary.....

The legislature has vested in the Commissioner a discretion in the matter (Section 354), and the Court would not interfere in his exercise merely because the object in view might be carried out in some other way nor would it lightly impute to him bad faith. But the Court is, in the first instance, entitled to inquire whether the discretion has been exercised. The discretion has to be exercised first in coming to a conclusion as to the state of the structure and then in fixing upon the remedy.

It is obviously impossible for the Commissioner to inspect all structures that are suspected of being dangerous. Therefore, it is a sufficient exercise of his discretion in deciding what structures are dangerous if he appoints a competent person to represent to him what structures are dangerous. But if a notice is issued based on the representation of such a person it is open to the owner to prove that that person has not exercised his discretion or has been actuated by improper motives in prescribing the steps to be taken".

With respect, we agree with these principles and it is unnecessary for purposes of this case to state anything more with regard to the scope and effect of the discretion conferred on the Commissioner or anyone acting in exercise of the powers of the Commissioner delegated to him under Section 354. There are no allegations in this case of any capricious exercise of power by the Assistant Engineer or any unfair discrimination against the landlord. In fact, as stated above, the owners have not only not challenged the notice but have already partially complied with the notice. In these circumstances, it cannot be said that the discretion exercised by the Assistant Engineer was exercised unfairly or capriciously or mala fide.

22. It is, however, contended on behalf of the occupants that the landlord himself had colluded with the Assistant Engineer. But apart from the allegation, there is nothing on the record to show that the Assistant Engineer had colluded with the landlord. It is true that the learned Chief Judge did not allow the petitioners to lead any evidence on the point. Six of the owners are minors and we find no reason whatsoever for the Assistant Engineer to collude with respondent No. 2. No allegations were made against the Assistant Engineer himself, apart from the vague allegation that he colluded with the owners. It is not sufficient to hold that the Assistant Engineer had acted mala fide in issuing the notice.

23. Moreover, it is not for the Court to satisfy itself whether the building was in a dangerous condition when the notice was issued. The fact that part of the building has been already pulled down and the majority of the occupants have no grievance against the pulling down itself further shows that the allegations of mala fides made against the Assistant Engineer is baseless. The criterion of the building being in a ruinous condition or dangerous to the occupants and to the passers-by, as required by Section 354, has been applied by the Assistant Engineer in the notice which mentions that the building "is in a ruinous condition, likely to fall and dangerous to any person occupying, resorting to, or passing by the same". As Lord Halsbury stated in Westminster Corporation v. London and North Western Railway, 1905 AC 426.

"Where the legislature has confided the power to a particular body, with a discretion how it is to be used, it is beyond the power of any Court to contest that discretion".

In the absence of anything to show abuse of the discretion or mala fide or capricious exercise of the discretion, it must, therefore be held that the contention of the petitioners that there was an unfair discrimination against them as citizens in violation of their right under Art. 14 of the Constitution of India is without any foundation.

24. The next contention urged on behalf of the petitioners is that the learned Chief Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the applications under Section 507 as the owners had a special remedy under the special statute, viz., the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947 for recovering possession of the premises in the possession of the tenants if the Court under that Act is satisfied under Section 13 (1) (hhh) that the premises are required for the immediate purpose of demolition ordered by any local authority or other competent authority. Apart from authority, in our opinion, the contention must be rejected, because it is only in respect of suits or proceedings between landlords and tenants relating to recovery of rent or possession of any premises to which Bombay Rent Act applied and in respect of applications made under that Act or any claim or question arising out of the Act or any of its provisions that the jurisdiction of other Courts is excluded under Section 28 of the Bombay Rent Act. The application made by the owners under Section 507 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act does not fall under any of the categories of suits or proceedings referred to in Section 28 (1) of the Bombay Rent Act. It cannot be said that an application under Section 507 relates to the recovery of possession of the premises because Section 507 empowers the Chief Judge to make a written order "requiring the occupier of the building or land to afford all reasonable facilities to the owner for complying with the notice". Section 507 is not concerned with the termination of the tenancy or recovery of the possession of the premises but only with providing reasonable facilities to the owner to comply with a notice issued to him under the provisions of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act. Such a question cannot be said to be a claim or question arising out of the Bombay Rent Act or any of its provisions. The tenancy is not terminated before or by making an application under Section 507. Section 507 enables the owner to get an order from the Chief Judge directing the occupants to give reasonable facilities and merely states that if the occupiers fail to afford the facilities after 8 days from the date of the order, the owner shall be discharged, during the continuance of such refusal, from any liability which he would otherwise incur by reason of his failure to comply with the said provision or requisition. It is true that the consequence of the refusal is that the occupants made themselves liable to be prosecuted under Section 471, as stated above. But this is not a question or claim arising out of any provisions of the Bombay Rent Act and we find nothing conflicting between S. 13 (1) (hhh) and Section 28 of the Bombay Rent Act and Section 507 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act from which we could infer an implied repeal of Section 354 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act. On the contrary, having regard to the nature and purpose of these provisions, it is clear that these sections can exist together and the applications made by the owners under Section 507 were maintainable notwithstanding Section 28 of the Bombay Rent Act. In Mohmed Haji Noormohamed v. Mona Vicaji Javeri, (1958) 60 Bom LR 1096 Miabhoy, J. as he then was, was concerned with a contention which was the reverse of the contention raised before us. In that case, a suit filed under Section 13 (1) (hhh) in the Small Causes Court was contested on the ground that it was not maintainable in view of the provisions of Section 507 and, with respect, he rightly held that when the owner of the building had availed himself of the remedy given in Section 507 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act, he was not disentitled to the further remedy provided to him under Section 13 (1) (hhh) of the Bombay Rent Act, 1947.

25. However, Mr. Shah submitted that this view will be contrary to the view taken by the Supreme Court in Sushila Kashinath Dhone v. Harilal Govindji Bhogani, 73 Bom LR 320 = (AIR 1971 SC 1495). This submission, in our opinion, must be rejected because all that is laid down by the Supreme Court in that case, with respect, was that if a suit involved reliefs to be granted to the plaintiff based on claims or questions arising out of the Bombay Rent Act, the suit could be dealt with only by the special Court constituted under S. 28 of the Act. In that case under a written agreement, the plaintiff gave a loan to the defendants for the purpose of financing the erection of a building on land held by the defendants as owners. The agreement was registered and it included the various conditions referred to in S. 18 (3) of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947. In a suit by the plaintiff filed against the defendants in the Court of Small Causes, Bombay the reliefs asked for were a declaration that the sum advanced as loan be a charge on the building and land on which it was constructed and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amounts mentioned in the agreement. In view of these facts, with respect, the Supreme Court rightly held that the reliefs claimed were all claims or questions arising out of the Act.

26. As stated above, the reliefs under Section 507 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act have nothing in common or similar to the claims or questions which arise under the Bombay Rent Act and hence, the said decision relied on by Mr. Shah has no application to the facts of the present case. It must, therefore, be held that there is nothing in Section 13 (1) (hhh) or S. 28 of the Bombay Rent Act which takes away the jurisdiction of the Chief Judge under Section 507 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act.

27. Mr. Shah, who appeared for some of the petitioners, urged two further points in support of the petition. The first of them was that under Section 507 the learned Chief Judge could not have ordered the occupants to vacate the premises. In support of his argument Mr. Shah relied on the decision in Ahmedalli Abdulhusein Kaka v. M. D. Lalkaka, 55 Bom LR 573 = (AIR 1954 Bom 33) which lays down the principles which should be followed by the Chief Judge when dealing with the cases under Section 507 and gives him a discretion to decide whether the occupants should be asked to vacate the entire building or a portion of the building. But, in our opinion, there is no substance in this contention of Mr. Shah because all that the learned Chief Judge has ordered in the present case is that the occupants should remove themselves "in order to afford facilities to respondent No. 1 to enable him to comply with the notice". The said order is consistent with the provisions of Section 507 (2) which empowers the Chief Judge to require the occupiers "to afford all reasonable facilities to the owner". The powers here are wide enough to include a power to order the occupant to vacate the premises if that is necessary for giving a reasonable facility to the owner.

28. The second contention urged by Mr. Shah is that the learned Chief Judge failed to exercise his mind on the question as to whether the building was really in a ruinous condition, as alleged in the notice. As stated above, the question rested on the subjective satisfaction of the authority exercising the power under Section 354 and the learned Chief Judge was, therefore, right in not going into that question. Moreover, it is difficult to see how a Court of law can decide such a question. The municipal authorities are satisfied that the building is in a ruinous condition. The statute does not provide for a right of appeal to the Court against the said satisfaction. The Court of law cannot, therefore, sit in judgment over the decision of the municipal authorities.

29. For these reasons, all the contentions raised by the petitioners fail. The rule in all the petitions discharged with costs. Costs of the Municipal Corporation fixed at Rs. 400/- in one petition. Costs of the respondents quantified at Rs. 300/- in each of the petitions.

Rule discharged.

Brief Note:— (A) G executed a lease of his theatre in favour of the defendant for a period of 10 years expiring on 19-1-1955: on a monthly rental of Rs. 741/- with an option to renew the lease for a further period of 5 years on the same terms by giving 3 months notice before the expiry of the lease. The defendant lessee was to vacate the theatre as soon as the period of lease was over and in case he continued in possession after the expiry of the period of lease he was bound to pay Rs. 20/- per day as penalty in addition to the rent. The defendant continued in possession after the expiry of 10 years without duly exercising the option to renew the lease. G filed a civil suit 36-B of 1955 on 19-12-1955 claiming only damages at the rate of 1341 Rs. p.m. from 20-1-1955 to 19-11-1955 as stipulated in the lease. This suit was finally decided in second appeal holding that the defendant had ceased to be a tenant of the theatre but no relief regarding possession or ejectment was asked for or granted. G filed a second suit on 21-1-1960 claiming possession of the theatre from the defendant as a trespasser and damages at the rate of Rs. 1341/- for the period 19-11-1955 to 20-1-1960. The question was whether the second suit was maintainable.

Held that the second suit was maintainable having regard to the provisions of Order 2, Rule 2 and Order 2, Rule 4, Civil P. C. The plaintiff was seeking to enforce in the subsequent suit his general title as owner and not his title to get back the property under the contract of lease. The second suit was based on a distinct and separate cause of action from that of the previous suit of 1955 and as such the bar under Order 2, Rule 2 could not apply. AIR 1931 Pat 233 & (1888) 11 Mad 210 & AIR 1966 Andh Pra 325, Rel. on; AIR 1935 Bom 306, Distinguished; AIR 1942 Bom 338, Distinguished but doubted. (Paras 29, 34, 37)

Order 2, Rule 2 is intended to deal with the vice of splitting a cause of action. The applicability of the rule depends upon there being established one and the same cause of action in the two suits. The defendant who raises the plea must establish that the second suit was in respect of the same cause of action as the previous suit. AIR 1931 PC 229, Rel. on. (Para 17)

The expression 'claims' in Cls. (a), (b) and (c) of Order 2, Rule 4 must be construed as equivalent to 'cause of action' used in the opening part of that Rule. The different words are used only in order to avoid repetition and for convenience of expression specially having regard to the language of Cl. (c). (Para 21)

Though Order 2, Rule 4, is in part an exception to the general principle laid down in Order 2, Rule 3, it is also an exception to Order 2, Rules 2 (1) and 2 (3). Order 2, Rule 4 cannot be regarded as only an exception to Order 2, Rule 3, and completely divorced from Order 2, Rule 2. Order 2, Rule 2 must therefore be read along with Order 2, Rule 4.

(Paras 24, 25)

Claims for damages and claim for mesne profits are regarded as distinct and separate causes of action from the cause of action for recovery of immovable property, and Order 2, Rule 4, says that they may be joined together, whereas otherwise they could not be joined together because of the general principle contained in the opening words of O. 2, R. 4.

A. S. Bobde, B. A. Udhoji and M. L. Vaidya, for Appellant; P. P. Deo, W. G. Deo, V. R. Manohar and K. G. Chendke, for Respondents.

KOTWAL, C. J.:— (This reference to a Full Bench has been occasioned by a conflict of decisions of this Court in Channappa Girimalappa v. Bagalkot Bank, AIR 1942 Bom 338 and Rama Kallappa Pujari v. Saidappa Sidrama Pujari, AIR 1935 Bom 306). In both the cases the judgment is that of Sir John Beaumont, Chief Justice. The original question referred simply posed for our determination the conflict between these two decisions, in short which of them was right but after some preliminary discussion and with the consent of counsel for both the parties, we have reframed the question in order to bring out the real controversy between the parties in the litigation from which these two appeals have been filed. The question that we have now to determine is:—

Is the plaintiff's suit maintainable having regard to the provisions of O. 2, R. 2 and O. 2, R. 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure?

2. The question arises upon the following facts: Gangabisen Sikchi was the owner of Kamal Theatre in Amravati town. He leased it out on 20-1-1945 to Shankarlal Rathl. The lease was for a period of ten years commencing from 20-1-1945 and is evidenced by a registered rent note dated 6-1-1946 (Ex. P-3). In 1949 there was a litigation between Gangabisen and Shankarlal. It was a suit (Civil Suit No. 40-A of 1949) filed by Gangabisen for the ejectment of Shankarlal in the Court of the Second Additional District Judge, Amravati (Mr. B. V. Patwardhan). The suit ended in a compromise and by the compromise decree the agreement of lease dated 20-1-1945 was modified in two respects:—

(1) Instead of the amount of Rs. 525/- per month the rent originally fixed, the lessee agreed to pay Rs. 741/- per month. (2) By the agreement a second lessee was introduced namely, Saroj Screens (Pvt.) Ltd. This company was recognised along with Shankarlal as a co-lessee. In all other respects the agreement dated 6-1-1946 continued to operate.

3. In 1955 Gangabisen filed a suit for declaration of his title only (Civil Suit No. 26-A of 1955) but later on decided to withdraw it and an order of withdrawal was passed on 28-8-1956 by Mr. B. B. Shrivastava, First Civil Judge, Class II, Amravati. No permission to bring another suit was asked for or granted.

4. The lease which was for ten years from 20-1-1945 expired on 19-1-55. On that date the defendant, Shankarlal Rathl and Saroj Screens (Pvt.) Ltd., were in arrears of rent, and according to the plaintiff, the lease had terminated by virtue of the operation of clause 7 of the rent note dated 6-1-1946. Clause 7 provided that the lessees will vacate the theatre as soon as the lease period was over, and in case the lessees continued in occupation of the theatre after the lease period was over, they would be bound to pay Rs. 20/- per day as penalty to the plaintiff Gangabisen in addition to the amount of rent, namely Rs. 741/-. Therefore, Civil Suit No. 36-B of 1955 was filed on 19-12-1955. Therein the plaintiff Gangabisen claimed damages from the defendant for the period from 20-1-1955 to 19-11-1955 at the rate of Rs. 1341/- per month. The amount of Rs. 1341/- was comprised of two items, namely, Rs. 741/- the revised rent per month fixed and Rs. 600/- per month at the rate of Rs. 20/- per day, being the penalty. This suit substantially came to be dismissed (except for a small amount of Rs. 1210/5/0) in the Court of Mr. N. M. Koyal, Civil Judge No. 2 Amravati, who was also at that time an Additional District Judge at Amravati. The trial Court's judgment was however reversed by the District Judge, Amravati, Mr. M. S. Apte (now Mr. Justice Apte) in Civil Appeal No. 17-B of 1958 by the judgment dated 29-7-1959. A second appeal was filed and in that second appeal there was first a remand order by the High Court and after the issue remanded was determined, that litigation came to be finally decided by this Court on 10-8-1965. (Second Appeal No. 396 of 1959). Thus it was finally determined that the defendants had ceased to be the tenants of Kamal Theatre, but no relief was asked for or granted as regards ejectment or possession of the theatre in this suit.

5. The present suit for possession was instituted on 21-1-1960. That is Civil Suit No. 3-B of 1960 out of which the two appeals in which the present reference before us arises. In this suit, in addition to possession the plaintiff Gangabisen has also asked for damages from the two erstwhile lessees who are the defendants. The damages claimed are again at the rate of Rs. 1341/- per month from 19-11-1955 to 20-1-1960, i.e. commencing from the next succeeding date up to which damages had been claimed in the earlier suit, that is to say, civil Suit No. 36-B of 1955, and up to the date of the filing of the present suit. The Civil Judge, Senior Division, Amravati Mr. N. S. Huzurbazar, decreed the claim for possession and damages and also ordered future mesne profits to be determined under Order 20, Rule 12 (e) of the Code of Civil Procedure.

6. Among other defences to this suit, the defendants raised the plea that the suit for possession was barred under the provisions of Order 2, Rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, because Civil Suit No. 36-B of 1955 had been filed earlier between the same parties and the plaintiff had failed to include the whole of his claim which he was entitled to make in respect of one and the same cause of action. Therefore, he had incurred the penalty prescribed under O. 2, R. 2. According to the defendants the plaintiff must be held to have omitted to sue in respect of the claim for possession, or, at any rate, intentionally relinquished it and that therefore he cannot be allowed to sue in the present suit for possession. This plea is reflected in the following two issues before the Court:

"2. Is present suit for possession barred by Order 2, Rule 2 of Civil P. C. in view of C. S. No. 36-B/55

3. Did plaintiff's right to possession become extinguished On 19-12-1955 due to C. S. 36-B/55?"

The portions which we have omitted from these issues relate to similar other objections taken on the basis that Civil Suit No. 26-A of 1955 had been earlier filed and Civil Appeal No. 17-B of 1958 had been filed, and yet no relief for possession had been asked for and the present suit was barred on that account. These latter pleas, though raised, do not form the subject-matter of the reference before us though they may still be live issues between the parties. Against the judgment of the Civil Judge, Senior Division, the defendants were aggrieved by the substantial part of the decree awarding possession and the decree for Rs. 25,815/- as damages, with interest. The defendants have therefore filed First Appeal No. 12 of 1970 in this Court. The plaintiff on his part was aggrieved by the trial Court's decree in so far as the full amount of damages claimed was not awarded but a lesser amount. He filed First Appeal No. 19 of 1970 and claimed the difference. In both these appeals, therefore, the issue does arise: Is the plaintiff's suit maintainable having regard to the provisions of Order 2, Rule 2, and Order 2, Rule 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure? and that is the question upon which the reference has been made.

7. In order to determine this issue, it is necessary first of all to see what were the provisions of the rent note dated 6-1-1946 which was originally the contract between the plaintiff and the first defendant and was subsequently adopted also as the contract between the plaintiff and the second defendant, with a modification in the amount of the rent. The lease deed provides that Gangabisen has given on lease his theatre known as Kamal Theatre with furniture, electric fixtures etc. that is to say duly furnished, to Shankarlal from 20-1-1945 for a period of ten years, with an option to Shankarlal to renew the lease for a further period of five years on the same terms and conditions provided a three months' notice was given by Shankarlal to Gangabisen before ten years expired, i.e. before 19-1-1955.

8. The conditions of the lease which are material for our consideration were that the amount of rent payable was Rs. 525/- per month (subsequently Rs. 741/-) and it was to be paid in the first week of each next month. Then there was the following provision as to default:

"The party No. 2 (Shankarlal) will be paying the rent regularly to party No. 1 (Gangabisen). In case the party No. 2 fails to pay the rent for three months, then the party No. 1 may get party No. 2 ejected; in spite of any law." Clause 7 provided for ejection and penalty as follows:

"Party No. 2 will vacate the theatre as soon as the lease period is over. In case party No. 2 continues in occupation of the Theatre after the lease period is over he will be bound to pay Rs. 20/- per day as penalty to party No. 1 in addition to the amount of rent."

9. Now, the present contention is based only on the fact of filing of Civil Suit No. 36-B of 1955. The plea raised in paragraph 6 of the written statement was as follows:—

"It is respectfully further submitted that it was imperative that in C. S. No. 36-B of 1955 the plaintiff had to include the whole claim which he was entitled to make on 19-12-1955 in respect of the cause of action which was the determination of lease on 19-1-1955 by efflux of the time limited thereby and the consequent wrongful possession of the defendants thereafter. However the plaintiff omitted to sue in respect of a portion of his claim i.e., his claim for possession of the demised property. He is, therefore, precluded under Order 2, Rule 2, C. P. Code, from instituting this suit for possession of the said property. It is further submitted that this suit for possession having become barred on 19-12-1955, this suit for mesne profits for the period subsequent on 19-12-1955 is also barred having regard to Order 2, Rule 3, C. P. Code."

10. The plea is clear enough but it is based upon one assumption that the cause of action for the filing of Civil Suit No. 36-B of 1955 for mesne profits or damages as the case may be (there is a dispute as to that) is the same as the cause of action for the subsequent suit for possession, namely, Civil Suit No. 3-B of 1960. If it is the same, then it will be barred under Order 2, Rule 2. The further point raised by the plea is that if on 21-1-1960, the date of Civil Suit No. 3-B of 1960, the right to claim possession itself was barred, then the claim for damages of mesne profits for that period would also be barred because no one can claim mesne profits or damages who is not entitled to possession in the first place. The contention of counsel on behalf of the lessees has been precisely the same, also namely, that though the relief claimed in the earlier suit was only for mesne profits or damages, the cause of action for that suit and the cause of action for the present suit for ejectment and possession is the same. The cause of action is the determination of the lease. It was submitted that in case of both the reliefs, namely, for mesne profits or damages and for ejectment, the cause of action arose on 20-1-1955 when the ten years' period of lease expired. In both the cases, therefore, the cause of action was the same and arose on the same day. Secondly, the cause of action arose out of one and the same contract. Clauses 1 and 7 of the contract which we have referred to above were relied upon. It was further submitted that under the law also the cause of action for mesne profits and for possession of one and the same property are not different cause of action but one and the same cause of action, and if so, the whole of the claim, namely, for mesne profits and/or damages as well as for possession ought to have been made in Civil Suit No. 36-B of 1955, and if it was not so made, Order 2, Rule 2 is decisive of the point and bars the claim in the present suit. In this connection, counsel also pointed to the history of legislation and how Order 2, Rule 2 and Order 2, Rule 4 came to be enacted. He relied upon the provision of the earlier Acts, the Code of Civil Procedure of 1859 (Act No. 8 of 1859) and the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 (Act No. 14 of 1882), and pointed out that in the Act of 1859, by fiction, a suit for recovery of land and a claim for mesne profits of such land were deemed to be distinct causes of action. That was by Section 10 of that Act, but that section has been dropped and there is no equivalent section in the present Code and therefore it must be held that what was there deemed distinct by the fiction of the law is no longer distinct and therefore a claim for recovery of land and a claim for mesne profits are one and the same cause of action.

11. On behalf of Gangabisen, the owner of the property, the answer to these contentions was that Order 2, Rule 2 only applies where the cause of action is one and the same and that it cannot apply where the causes of action are different, and the cause of action in Civil Suit No. 36-B of 1955 was separate and distinct from the cause of action in Civil Suit No. 3-B of 1960. Therefore, there is no scope for the application of O. 2, R. 2. It was pointed out that in Civil Suit No. 36-B of 1955 the claim was a claim upon the personal covenant to pay damages by way of penalty contained in clause 7 of the lease deed. It was a claim which had nothing to do with the claim for the possession of the property. The claim for the possession of the property, even assuming that it was under the same contract, was a claim on a separate cause of action which is radically different from the cause of action for mesne profits or damages. Reliance was placed upon the provision of O. 2, R. 4, and it was urged that clauses (a) and (b) of that provision of the Code shows that a claim for mesne profits or for damages is found upon a different cause of action from the cause of action for recovery of immoveable property. To the latter argument the reply of Mr. Deo on behalf of the lessees was that Order 2, Rule 4, is merely an exception to O. 2, R. 3, which prescribes when several causes of action may be joined and that an exception couched as an exception cannot be construed to alter the nature of the cause of action. It was also urged that Order 2, Rule 4, only applies where the cause of action is one and the same and it cannot apply where the cause of action is different.

12. Order 2, Rules 1, 2 and 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure run as follows:—

"Frame of Suit.— Every suit shall as far as practicable be framed so as to afford ground for final decision upon the subjects in dispute and to prevent further litigation concerning them.

2. (1) Suit to include the whole claim.— Every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action but a plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court.

(2) Relinquishment of part of claim.— Where a plaintiff omits to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquishes any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished.

(3) Omission to sue for one of several reliefs.— A person entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action may sue for all or any of such reliefs, but if he omits, except with the leave of the Court, to sue for all such reliefs, he shall not afterwards sue for any relief so omitted, or relinquished.

Explanation:— For the purposes of this rule an obligation and a collateral security for its performance and successive claims arising under the same obligation shall be deemed respectively to constitute but one cause of action.

Illustration.— A lets a house to B at a yearly rent of Rs. 1,200/-. The rent for the whole of the years 1905, 1906 and 1907 is due and unpaid. A sues B in 1908 only for the rent due for 1906. A shall not afterwards sue B for the rent due for 1905 or 1907.

4. Only certain claims to be joined for recovery of immovable property.— No cause of action shall, unless with the leave of the Court, be joined with a suit for the recovery of immovable property, except—

(a) claims for mesne profits or arrears of rent in respect of the property claimed or any part thereof;

(c) claims in which the relief sought is based on the same cause of action; provided that nothing in this rule shall be deemed to prevent any party in a suit for foreclosure or redemption from asking to be put into possession of the mortgaged property."

13. All these rules are to be found in Order 2 which is entitled "Frame of suit," and that is precisely also the subject of Order 2, Rule 1. Order 2, Rule 1 merely prescribes a general rule that as far as practicable every suit shall be framed so as to afford ground for final decision upon the subjects in dispute and to prevent further litigation concerning them. This is more in the nature of a general policy statement than a mandatory provision. It lays down the principle which underlies the subsequent Rules 2, 3 and 4. The words "as far as practicable" indicate that in each case the Court will have to see whether it was practicable for the plaintiff, so to frame his suit as to include a cause of action which he had omitted or intentionally relinquished. The words "subjects in dispute" may also be noted. In the subsequent three rules there are several different expressions used such as "cause of action," "claim", and "relief", and "obligation" and it seems to us that only in Order 2, Rule 1, was the generic expression "subjects in dispute" deliberately used because Rule 1 was intended to lay down only a general statement as to the policy of the law. Though some of the causes have in considering this expression equated it with "cause of action," it seems to us that this generic expression

"subjects in dispute" would equally comprise within it "cause of action" or "relief" or "claim," as the context may require.

14. The case we have in mind where the expression "subjects in dispute" was equated with "cause of action" is to be found in Ramaswami Ayyar v. Vythinatha Ayyar, (1903) ILR 26 Mad 760, where the learned Judges put it thus:

"In our opinion the expression 'the subject in dispute' signifies the jural relation between the parties to the suit, for the determination of which the suit is brought. In other words, the object of Section 42 (They were dealing with the Act of 1882. Section 42 is the same as Order 2, Rule 1) is to require the plaintiff to bring forward his whole case as to the matter of litigation on the question of right involved in the suit and not to require him to unite all the causes of action which he may have against the defendant in respect of the corpus or object-matter of the suit."

15. Turning to Order 2, Rule 2, sub-rule (2) gives an option to a plaintiff to relinquish any portion of his claim, but if he so relinquishes, then he incurs a penalty. The provisions of Order 2, Rule 2, sub-rule (2), would come into play and the penalty prescribed therein is that "he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished." Apart from this option, Order 2, Rule 2, sub-rule (1), lays down the mandatory principle that every suit must include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action. Sub-rule (3) of Order 2, Rule 2, speaks of more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action in contrast with sub-rule (1) which speaks of the whole of the claim in respect of a cause of action. It is clear that the combined effect of these sub-rules is (a) that where there is one and the same cause of action, the plaintiff must sue in one suit for the enforcement of the whole of that cause of action, and if he relinquishes or omits to sue in respect of any part of that cause of action, then he cannot subsequently sue for the part so relinquished or omitted in any other suit, and (b) that although there may be one and the same cause of action, there may in respect of that cause of action be several reliefs claimable. If there are several reliefs then they must all be sued for in one and the same suit, unless leave of the court is obtained. If there is an omission to sue for any relief arising out of the same cause of action, then the plaintiff "shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished."

16. The fundamental postulate for the application of Order 2, Rule 2, therefore, is that there must be one and only one cause of action in fact before its several provisions can apply. Of course, the Explanation creates by fiction one and the same cause of action in the case of successive claims arising under the same obligation. Obviously these successive claims, although arising under the same obligation, will normally give rise to different cause of action but the explanation says that they are to be deemed to constitute but one cause of action. The illustration itself to Order 2, Rule 2, also makes this clear. The rents for the three years 1905, 1906 and 1907 which are due and unpaid would obviously and normally be regarded as different cause of action having arisen at the end of each of those respective years, but because of the Explanation they being successive claims arising under the same obligation, they would be regarded as one and the same cause of action.

17. Order 2, Rule 2, does not require that when a transaction gives rise to several causes of action they should all be combined in one suit, or that the plaintiff must, if necessary, lay his claim alternatively in the same suit for these different causes of action. All that O. 2, R. 2, provides is that where there is one and the same cause of action, the plaintiff cannot split up his cause of action and sue for one part in one suit and for another part in another suit. As the Privy Council put it in Naba Kumar v. Radhashyam, AIR 1931 PC 229, "the rule in question is intended to deal with the vice of splitting a cause of action". Thus, the applicability of O. 2, R. 2, depends upon there being established one and the same cause of action in the two suits. The defendant who raises the plea must establish that the second suit was in respect of the same cause of action as the previous suit. Therefore, in the present suit, all we have to determine in order to settle the disputes referred is whether the cause of action for the subsequent suit for possession was the same as the cause of action for mesne profits or damages in the first suit (Civil Suit No. 36-B of 1955).

18. What is a cause of action is now settled beyond any doubt. The classic definition of that expression is that of Lord Justice Brett in Cook v. Gill, (1873) 8 CP 107.

"Cause of action" has been held from the earliest time to mean every fact which is material to be proved to entitle the plaintiff to succeed, — every fact which the defendant would have a right to traverse."

Lord Justice Fry put it in the negative by saying, "Everything which, if not proved, gives the defendant an immediate right to judgment, must be part of the cause of action." This definition is the basis of all subsequent decisions containing an interpretation of the expression "cause of action." It was accepted in Deep Narain Singh v. Dietert, ILR 31 Cal 274 at p. 282 and by the Privy Council in Mohammad Khalil Khan v. Mohibub Ali Mian, AIR 1949 PC 78 at p. 86, para 61 point No. 2. This has been referred to in several cases as the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at the conclusion in his favour: see the Privy Council case Chand Kour v. Partab Singh, (1889) ILR 16 Cal 98 at p. 102 (PC) and in Hiromal v. Faridkhan, AIR 1915 Sind 35 at p. 36, a case upon which Mr. Deo, strongly relied and in Sheokumar Singh v. Bechan Singh, AIR 1940 Pat 76, by Rowland, J. at p. 79.

19. These cases also make it clear that the cause of action in a suit has no reference to the defence taken in the suit, nor is it related to the evidence by which that cause of action is established. In Mohammad Khalil Khan's case, AIR 1949 PC 78 to which we have referred above, this point is made in the Judgment of the Privy Council in para. 61, point No. (5), as follows:—

"The cause of action has no relation whatever to the defence that may be set up by the defendant nor does it depend upon the character of the relief prayed for by the plaintiff. It refers to the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour." The Privy Council followed their earlier decision in (1889) ILR 16 Cal 98 (PC). This decision has been relied upon also in AIR 1940 Pat 76 at p. 79. Secondly the cause of action must be distinguished from the evidence upon which that cause of action is proved and though the one has no relation to the other, still the nature of the cause of action may be indicated by the nature of the evidence by which it is supported. This again is made clear in Mohammad Khalil Khan's case para. 61 at p. 86 in points Nos. 3 and 4 which are put as follows:—

"(3) If the evidence to support the two claims is different, then the causes of action are also different

(4) The cause of action in the two suits may be considered to be the same if in substance they are identical....."

20. Now Order 2, Rule 4 was strongly relied upon on behalf of the plaintiff in order to show that the cause of action upon a suit for the recovery of immovable property is different from the cause of action for either mesne profits or damages. Undoubtedly, O. 2, R. 4, opens with a clause which lays down a general principle that no cause of action shall, unless with the leave of the Court, be joined with a suit for the recovery of immovable property. It has been explained in the authorities that that was a rule which was a rule of Common Law in England, the rule being a salutary rule that a claim to property should not be complicated by joinder of other causes of action except by leave of the Court. But that rule is subject to the three exceptions mentioned in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of O. 2, R. 4. Those authorities explain what was the result of the engraftment of equitable principles upon the Common Law doctrine. Equity went thus far and no further, in that, it recognised that a claim for mesne profits or arrears of rent could be joined with the claim for recovery of the immovable property from which it arises or that a claim for damages for breach of any contract could be joined with a suit for recovery of that immovable property or any part of it which is held under a contract from which the claim for damages for its breach arises.

21. Rule 4 uses the expression "cause of action" in the opening part, and the word 'claims' in clauses (a), (b) and (c) which form the exceptions, and this difference in the two expressions appears to have been made only for the purpose of avoiding confusion and for the sake of clarity of language. It is not possible to hold that an exception refers to a different subject from the general rule to which it is an exception. It cannot be that the exceptions refer to claims while the general rule to which they are exceptions refers to cause of action. Necessarily, it seems to us that we must construe "claims" in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of Rule 4 to be equivalent to "cause of action" in that rule. The different words are used only in order to avoid repetition and for convenience of expression, specially having regard to the language of clause (c).

22. Now, it is clear upon a plain reading of Order 2, Rule 4, that it regards the cause of action or claim for mesne profits or for damages as different from the cause of action for the recovery of immovable property. If it was the same, then there was no need to state the exceptions in clauses (a), (b) and (c), because Order 2, Rules 1 and 2, make ample provision for the same cause of action. It seems to us therefore that there is the amplest indication in O. 2, R. 4, that the cause of action for a suit for recovery of immovable property is not the same as the cause of action for damages for breach of any contract under which the property or any part thereof is held. We will hereafter confine ourselves only to a case for damages for breach of contract because, as we shall presently show, the plaintiff's suit, Civil Suit No. 36-B of 1955, was a suit for damages only and not a suit for mesne profits, and the same was the case with the claim in the subsequent suit, Civil Suit No. 3-B of 1960.

23. Mr. Deo on behalf of the lessees has urged that first of all Order 2, Rule 4, cannot be read along with O. 2, R. 2. He says that Order 2, Rule 4 applies only where there is one cause of action and so read it is nothing more and nothing less than a mere exception to Order 2, Rule 3. Order 2, Rule 2, sub-rules (1) and (2) deal with cases where there are several causes of action or several reliefs but Order 2, Rule 4 deals with only one and the same cause of action. Therefore they cannot be read together. Order 2, Rule 3, provides for the joinder of several causes of action and says that a plaintiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendant, or the same defendants jointly or several plaintiffs having causes of action in which they are jointly interested against the same defendant or defendants jointly may unite them in one suit (we need not refer to the second part). This Rule is prefixed by the words "Save as otherwise provided," and it is clear that it is inter alia 'otherwise provided' in Order 2, Rule 4. Therefore, counsel urged that Order 2, Rule 4, must only be read with Order 2, Rule 3 and cannot be read as qualifying any part of Order 2, Rule 2 which deals with more than one cause of action or more than one relief.

24. We cannot read O. 2, R. 4 as entirely divorced from Order 2, Rule 2. No doubt Order 2, Rule 4 is an exception to Order 2, Rule 3 but it does not therefore follow that it has nothing to do with Order 2, Rule 2. On the other hand, it seems to us that Order 2, Rule 4, forms an important qualification to both Order 2, Rule 2, and Order 2, Rule 3. Order 2, Rule 2 (1) as we have already said, lays down the general principle that a suit must include the whole claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of a cause of action, and if he does not, then he is visited with the penalty in Order 2, Rule 2 (2). Similarly, Order 2, Rule 2 (3) provides that all reliefs arising out of the same cause of action shall be sued for in one and the same suit and again attaches a penalty if the plaintiff omits to do so. Thus Order 2, Rule 2, deals with one and the same cause of action. Order 2, Rule 3, on the other hand, deals with several causes of action and makes the contrary provision. It permits the plaintiff to unite several causes of action in one suit under certain circumstances. Where Order 2, Rule 2, deals with the same cause of action and prohibits its splitting, O. 2, R. 3, provides for the joinder of several causes of action. Therefore, inter alia they deal with two different aspects of the same subject viz. joinder of causes of action. Now, no doubt an exception to Order 2, Rules 2 and 3 is created by Order 2, Rule 4. Its opening part says that no cause of action shall be joined with a suit for the recovery of immovable property. To that extent this provision is an exception to Rule 2 (1) and Rule 2 (3) which respectively enjoin that a plaintiff must include his whole claim in respect of a cause of action and claim all the reliefs he is entitled to in respect of the same cause of action. It is also an exception to Order 2, Rule 3 (1) which permits several causes of action to be joined by the plaintiff against the same defendant or the same defendants jointly. Clauses (a), (b) and (c) of Order 2, Rule 4 create further exceptions to the general principle laid down in the opening part of Order 2, Rule 4; Order 2, Rule 4, therefore, deals with a specific subject, namely, claims which could be joined in a suit for the recovery of immovable property, and to the extent that special provision is so made on a special topic, its provisions qualify the general provision of both Order 2, Rule 2 and Order 2, Rule 3. In fact, Order 2, Rule 3, is expressly made subject to the O. 2, R. 4 by the use of the words "save as otherwise provided". Thus, though Order 2, Rule 4, is in part an exception to the general principle laid down in Order 2, Rule 3, it is also an exception to O. 2, Rr. 2 (1) and 2 (3). We cannot regard it as only an exception to Order 2, Rule 3, and completely divorced from Order 2, Rule 2.

25. Order 2, Rule 2 must therefore be read along with Order 2, Rule 4. We have already shown how in Order 2, Rule 4 claims for mesne profits and claims for damages are contrasted and contradistinguished from the cause of action for the recovery of immoveable property, and in so far as they are contradistinguished, it is clear that the law regards the two as different claims or causes of action. We have already shown that there is no difference between the words "cause of action" and "claims".

26. This brings us to the historical argument urged by Mr. Deo. It is based upon the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1859 (Act No. 8 of 1859). The provisions of Sections 7, 8, 9 and 10 of that Act were subsequently re-enacted with considerable modification in Ss. 42, 43, 44 and 45 of the Civil P. Codes of 1877 and 1882 (Acts No. 10 of 1877 and No. 14 of 1882 respectively). These provisions were in their turn recast and re-enacted in Order 2, Rules 1 to 6 of the present Code. Sections 8 to 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1859 were as follows:—

8. Joinder of causes of action in the same suit.— "Causes of action by and against the same parties, and cognizable by the same Court, may be joined in the same suit," provided the entire claim in respect of the amount or value of the property in suit do not exceed the jurisdiction of such Court.

9. Court may in certain cases order separate trials of such causes of action.— If two or more causes of action be joined in one suit and the Court shall be of opinion that they cannot conveniently be tried together, the Court may order separate trials of such causes of action to be held.

10. Claim for recovery of land for mesne profits to be deemed distinct causes of action.— A claim for recovery of land and claim for mesne profits of such land shall be deemed to be distinct causes of action within the meaning of the last two preceding sections".

Section 10 made provisions analogous to Order 2, Rule 4, of the present Code. It says that a claim for recovery of land and a claim for mesne profits of such land "shall be deemed to be distinct causes of action". This is the provision which was stressed before us. It was urged that by the word "deemed" there was created a fiction by which the cause of action for recovery of land and the cause of action for mesne profits were deemed to be distinct causes of action. The creation of such a fiction necessarily implies that that state of affairs which is postulated in the fiction is not so in facts. Therefore, it was urged that but for that fiction a claim for recovery of land and a claim for mesne profits was in fact one and the same cause of action but were only deemed to be distinct causes of action by virtue of the fiction. The next stage of this argument is that this fiction was omitted when the Code of 1877 was enacted. It was also omitted in the Code of 1882 and in the present Code. The historical background thus shows that from the very inception the law regarded a suit for recovery of land and a claim for mesne profits as founded upon one and the same cause of action. It was only a distinct and separate cause of action by the creation of a fiction, and if that fiction is not re-enacted into the present Code, then its original nature as one and the same cause of action revives.

27. We are quite unable to accept this argument. We have already referred to the provisions of Order 2, Rule 4, and we have shown that it clearly mentions 'a suit for recovery of immovable property' contrapuntally with "claims for mesne profits" or "claim for damages". That necessarily implies that they are separate and distinct causes of action. Thus, what was enacted in the Code of 1859 is in the present Code assumed by the law itself. It was not considered necessary to say so explicitly. The whole basis of assumption of Order 2, Rule 4, is that they are two separate and distinct causes of action. If it were necessary to go as far as that, we would say that the law has read that fiction of Section 10 of the Code of 1859 into Order 2, Rule 4. At any rate, a historical argument like this cannot prevail against the plain reading of the words of Order 2, Rule 4. We think that it is clear beyond any doubt that claims for damages and claim for mesne profits are regarded as distinct and separate causes of action from the cause of action for recovery of immovable property, and Order 2, Rule 4, says that they may be joined together, whereas otherwise they could not be joined together because of the general principle contained in the opening words of O. 2, R. 4.

28. So much for the law on the subject. We now turn to apply these provisions of the law to the present case. The test for the application of Order 2, Rule 2, was laid down by the Privy Council in AIR 1949 PC 78 at p. 86, point No. 1 as follows:

"(1) The correct test in cases falling under Order 2, Rule 2, is 'whether the claim in the new suit is in fact founded upon a cause of action distinct from that which was the foundation for the former suit'. Moonshee Buzloor Raheem v. Shumsunnissa Begum, 1867-11 Moo Ind App 551....."

It was also pointed out there that if the evidence to support the two claims is different, then the cause of action is different. But the cause of action in the two suits may be considered the same if in substance they are identical. In the light of these tests, we turn to examine the plaints in the two suits in question.

29. The plaint in Civil Suit No. 36-B of 1955 is at Ex. D-32 and it claimed only an amount of Rs. 7,129/4/9 as damages. It seems that there was a dispute between the plaintiff and the defendants as to whether the defendants had validly exercised the option of renewal of the lease for a further period of five years and therefore the plaintiff made an alternative claim in the relief clause of the plaint by adding the words "or even rent as put forth by the defendant holding that there is no exercise of the option about renewal for the further 5 years from 20-1-1955". Include in this claim was either the rent as rent or as damages at the rate of Rs. 741/- per month plus the penalty of Rs. 20/- per day as stipulated in clause 7 of the lease deed. In paragraph 7 of the plaint, the plaintiff stated:

"That consequently the defendants have no right to occupy the theatre from 20-1-1955 onwards. They ought to have vacated the theatre by the end of 19th January 1955 as the lease expired on that day and that there is no renewal. They failed to vacate the theatre, but have continued in occupation of the same. Hence the condition No. 7 has come into operation and the defendants are bound to pay Rs. 20/- per day in addition to rent of Rs. 741/- per month agreed to and substituted for Rs. 525/-."

Thus, the cause of action in the first suit (Civil Suit No. 36-B of 1955) is one purely for damages on the ground that the defendants are continuing in possession of the plaintiff's property without right. In Civil Suit No. 3-B of 1960 the plaintiff also prayed for damages but for a future period from the date of Civil Suit No. 36-B of 1955 namely, the period from 19-11-1955 to 20-1-1960 at the same rate of Rs. 741/- per month but also Rs. 20/- per day, being the penalty under Cl. 7. But it is not this part of the claim on which the bar of Order 2, Rule 2, is pleaded. It is on the claim for possession of the theatre contained in clause (i) of the relief clause of the plaint. This claim was stated in the body of the plaint in paragraph 6 as follows:—

"So from 20-1-1955 the defendants are trespassers and the plaintiff is entitled to get possession and the further damages on the basis of his title, particularly as the defendants have not got any registered lease deed of the so-called renewal. The defendants are all the more trespassers inasmuch as even the period of the 5 years for which the defendants could have claimed a renewal, if at all, has, by now expired and that too without any registered lease deed and in any case the plaintiff is entitled to get the possession and damages".

Now, it is patent upon these pleadings contained in the two plaints that the causes of action in the two suits were radically distinct and separate. In the first suit, the plaintiff alleged that the term of the lease having determined, clause 7 came into operation because the defendants continued in possession although they were bound to give back possession to the plaintiff. Whatever was the claim, whether for damages or for rent, it was a claim under the contract between the parties dated 20-1-1945 and embodied in the registered rent note dated 6-1-1946. But the claim for possession in the subsequent suit was not a claim under the terms of the contract at all. It was a claim made by the plaintiff on the basis of his own title as the owner of the property. The plaintiff could claim possession under two titles, (1) as a lessor under the contract of lease and (2) as the owner of the property claiming title to it as such. He could claim possession under his right to get back possession on the terms of the contract of lease. The defendants had clearly stipulated that "party No. 2 (defendants) will vacate the theatre as soon as the lease period is over". The plaintiff could have sued upon this document and the claim in that case would have been under the contract. But the plaintiff in the subsequent suit did not sue upon the contract but he sued upon his general title as the owner of the property. He alleged that the defendants were trespassers and that the plaintiff was entitled to get possession and further damages on the basis of his title as stated in the passage we have quoted above. Therefore, the plaintiff was claiming in the second suit on the basis not of a title arising under the contract but de hors the contract. In other words, the plaintiff was seeking to enforce in the subsequent suit his general title as owner and not his title to get back the property under the contract of lease. It is clear therefore that this title was superior to the contract between the parties and it was by virtue of this superior title that the plaintiff claimed in the second suit. The respective causes of action in the earlier suit and in the subsequent suit were therefore entirely distinct and separate.

30. Mr. Deo however urged that nonetheless the plaintiff's cause of action in the second suit was the same as in the first suit because, as he put it, the foundation of the claim in both the suits was the termination or determination of the lease and the determination took place on 20-1-1955, from which date he could claim possession as well as mesne profits or damages. He claimed damages in the first suit and therefore he could not claim possession in the second suit. He also pointed out that both the amounts claimed in the second suit of Rs. 741/- per month and Rs. 20/- per day as penalty are amounts stipulated under the contract.

31. The error in the argument lies in regarding the second suit as a suit filed on the basis of the lease deed. We have already shown how the plaintiff pleaded his cause of action in paragraph 6 of the plaint, and in the passage which we have quoted he clearly and unequivocally said that the defendants were trespassers and that he was claiming damages on the basis of his title. He also added "particularly as the defendants have not got any registered lease-deed of the so-called renewal". In other words, the plaintiff, for the purposes of his second suit, decided simply to ignore the cause of action upon the lease, and its determination. He merely said that he was the owner and under his title as owner he was entitled to possession. No doubt, there had been a lease but that lease had determined and the plaintiff merely ignored it for the purposes of his suit. If that was the shape of the suit, then the cause of action pleaded was not the cause of action arising under the contract.

32. The mere fact that the plaintiff chose to adopt the same measure of damages as he might have got under the contract will make no difference, because even in a title suit the plaintiff can always assess his own damages and in this case he chose to assess them at the same rate as agreed upon between the parties. That does not mean that the suit was on the basis of that agreement.

33. Even assuming however that it was a suit arising upon the same contract as the claim for damages, we do not think that the two causes of action would be the same. The claim in the first suit was for damages and it was therefore a recurring cause of action arising from month to month unlike the second suit where it arose once and for all on 20-1-1955. No doubt, the commencement of both the causes of action under the contract would be on the same date and would depend upon the determination of the lease and that has enabled counsel on behalf of the lessees to show some similarity in the causes of action. But the basic nature of the claim for damages and/or mesne profits and the claim for possession as a landlord is different.

34. To take this very case, on 20-1-1955 the lease was determined. The plaintiff could on the morning of that very day have filed a suit for possession under the contract, but he could not at the commencement of that day have filed any suit for damages because no damages had accrued. It was only after either the first day or the first month, as the case may be, had elapsed under the wrongful occupation by the defendant-lessees that the claim for damages would accrue. Thus, the claim for damages depended upon proof of some other facts in addition to the mere determination of the lease on a particular day. The plaintiff would have to allege that the defendants wrongfully continued in occupation after 20-1-1955 and only then would he be entitled to claim the relief of damages. That shows that the cause of action for possession and the cause of action for claiming damages were not the same. The terms of the document itself indicate this. The right to damages would rest upon the provisions of Cl. 7 and but for that clause the right to the additional Rs. 20/- per day as penalty would not arise in favour of the plaintiff, although the right to take possession would still arise. It was a completely different stipulation which was the foundation of the claim for damages in the first suit and a different stipulation in the contract on which the claim for possession could be founded. This is clear from the penultimate part of clause 1 of the document which says:

"In case the party No. 2 fails to pay the rent for three months, then the Party No. 1 may get party No. 2 ejected; in spite of any law".

The distinction is well brought out (and we say so with great respect) in a passage in Loknath v. Dwarika, AIR 1931 Pat 233, col. 2:—

"Now claims for mesne profits and ejectment are distinct reliefs and may or may not arise out of the same cause of action. The right to eject the defendant arises the moment the possession of the defendant becomes unlawful. The right to mesne profits arises at different times when the profits accrue to the defendant. The date of the cause of action for ejectment is one fixed date, whereas the dates of the cause of action for mesne profits are several. Order 2, Rule 4, to my mind distinctly recognises that the cause of action for ejectment is distinct from the cause of action for mesne profits, for unless they were two distinct and separate entities there was no necessity for providing in the aforesaid rule for their uniting together in one single claim against the defendant".

35. Another decision which takes the same view and which was relied upon in the same judgment also confirm the view we have taken, and is reported in Tirupati v. Narsimha, (1888) ILR 11 Mad 210. That was a case which turned upon the provisions of Section 43 of the Code of 1877 which is substantially the same as Order 2, Rule 2, and the facts in that case were also very similar to the facts in the present case. The plaintiff in that case had sued the defendant, his lessee, for mesne profits for three years but did not claim possession of the land. The suit came to be dismissed on a preliminary point (what that preliminary point was is not clear). Then in the second suit the plaintiff sought to recover possession of the land leased and further mesne profits and the plea was taken that the second suit was barred under the provisions of Section 43 of the then Code of Civil Procedure. In that case also the Explanation to Section 43 which was in the same terms as the Explanation to Order 2, Rule 2, was invoked, but the Division Bench held at page 211:

"Though it is true that claims, such as those mentioned in the illustration to Section 43, are referable to the same cause of action on the ground that, when the rent remains unpaid for several years, the debts due, though consisting of several items, are so connected as to form one entire demand, yet it cannot be held that, when the causes of action are distinct and independent, the plaintiff is bound to unite all the claims founded upon them in one suit. We are of opinion that the suit to recover mesne profits and the suit to eject are not parts of a claim founded on the identical cause of action within the meaning of Sec. 43, and that if mesne profits are alone claimed in the first suit as damages due for adverse occupancy, a second suit can be maintained to recover possession of the land.....It would be preposterous to say, as is suggested for the appellants, that, assuming that the respondent succeeded in the former suit and obtained a decree for mesne profits, he would still be precluded from claiming possession of the land".

This decision was strongly attacked by Mr. Deo on the ground that in an earlier case reported in the same volume, the same two Judges had taken a contrary view. That case is to be found in Venkoba v. Subbanna, (1888) ILR 11 Mad 151. Some of the remarks there made undoubtedly suggest a contrary view, but the position in that suit was exactly contrary to the position in the present suit and in (1888) ILR 11 Mad 210 (cit. sup.). The question in that case was whether a plaintiff who sued for possession of land only without suing for mesne profits in respect of the same land which he could have done in the same suit is entitled to bring another suit to recover the said mesne profits and the Division Bench held that Section 43 was a bar to the subsequent suit for such mesne profits. This and several similar other cases which were cited before us are the reverse of the position in the present case. In all those cases, there was first a suit for possession simpliciter and then a suit for mesne profits in respect of that property. It may be that in determining whether in such cases the two causes of action can be combined some consideration of the Explanation to Order 2, Rule 2 would not arise in so far as it lays down that successive claims arising under the same obligation shall be deemed respectively to constitute but one cause of action. That category of cases however is distinguishable from the case as here, where first a suit for damages or mesne profits simpliciter is filed and then a suit for possession. However, we must not be understood to imply that we endorse anything decided in (1888) ILR 11 Mad 151. In our opinion, the present case is squarely governed by the decision in (1888) ILR 11 Mad 210.

36. A similar view has also been taken in Rangamma v. Venupurnachandra Rao, AIR 1966 Andh Pra 325 where the Division Bench held:

"The irresistible conclusion, therefore, which must follow from the said set of Rules, is that a cause of action for recovery of immovable property is distinct and separate from a cause of action for mesne profits of the property claimed". In that case also after earlier suits for mesne profits a suit for recovery of possession had been filed and the bar of Order 2, Rule 2, was thus negatived.

37. Thus we hold that the second suit in the case before us (Civil Suit No. 3-B of 1960) was based on a distinct and separate cause of action upon a plain reading of the plaints in the two cases. For the application of Order 2, Rule 2, the cause of action must be one and the same and since here we have found upon the facts that the two suits were founded upon two distinct and separate causes of action, the question raised in this reference must be answered in the affirmative.

38. This would be sufficient to dispose of the reference before us, but the original of the controversy, namely, the different views taken in AIR 1942 Bom 338 and AIR 1935 Bom 306 still remains. However, since both these decisions are distinguishable from the instant case, it is unnecessary, in our view, to resolve the controversy. In view of the construction which we are placing on the relevant provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, we would however like to observe that we very much doubt if the decision in Channappa's case is a correct decision. It relied on the Privy Council decision in AIR 1931 PC 229. In that case in the first suit the plaintiffs had asked only for a declaratory relief in respect of a certain mortgage decree that had belonged to them. They subsequently amended that plaint and prayed for its assignment. This prayer was granted to them by the learned trial Judge, but in the High Court at their instance the decree was varied giving them a decree for the conveyance of the properties "with a necessary accounts" and the High Court also ordered that the property should be conveyed to them. After this had happened, in the second suit the plaintiffs asked for an account of the rents and profits which the defendants had received while they were in possession of the property for some time. Thus, the second suit was not a suit for either mesne profits or damages at all, but a suit to take an account from a person who had been illegally realising rents and profits on behalf of the plaintiffs. This is clear from the following passage in the judgment at p. 230:

"The present suit of the respondents is based upon the allegation that after the execution purchase of the properties by the appellants the latter were for some time in receipt of the rents and profits for which they have not accounted, and the prayer of the plaint is for account and payment".

(the underlining is ours)

It was on this very ground also that the Privy Council held the subsequent suit barred because it held that both the first suit and the second suit were for accounts. Their Lordships held:

"The relief which the respondents claim in the present suit is an account of the rents and profits of these properties received by the appellants after their purchase and before the conveyance to the respondents. It is, their Lordships think, equally clear that this relief could have been claimed in the previous suit". It is this decision which was said to support the view taken in AIR 1942 Bom 338. We do not think that the Privy Council case could support the decision of the Divisional Bench. Order 2, Rule 4, was sought to be explained away by reference to the Rules of the Supreme Court in England. Order 14, Rule 2, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, was referred to, though we suppose that more appropriately the reference was to Order 18, Rule 2. But we are unable to see how the reference to any English Rules of the Supreme Court could make any difference, nor is it explained why they would make any difference. The other reason in that case that the cause of action under Order 2, Rule 2, has a wider meaning than the expression in Order 2, Rule 4, is not supported by any reasoning nor by any consideration of Order 2, Rule 2 read with O. 2, R. 4. The remark that the provision in O. 2, R. 4, may have been inserted ex abundanti cautela does not advance the case any further because the contention of Mr. Deo in the present case has been that clauses (a), (b) and (c) of Order 2, Rule 4 were really superfluous and not that they were inserted ex abundanti cautela. Lastly, the same learned Chief Justice took a contrary view in AIR 1935 Bom 306 wherein he followed the decisions in Ram Karan Singh v. Nakchhed Ahir, AIR 1931 All 429 (SB); Ponnammal v. Ramamirde Ayyar, AIR 1915 Mad 912 = ILR 38 Mad 829 (FB) and Kalidas Rakshit v. Keshab-lal Majumdar, AIR 1931 Cal 788 = ILR 58 Cal 1040 and there the learned Chief Justice rightly remarked that Order 2, Rule 2, "deals with claims arising under the same cause of action, and it does not require the joinder of different causes of action". As regards Order 2, Rule 4, the Division Bench in that case held:—

"The language of Order 2, Rule 4, which provides that no cause of action shall, unless with the leave of the Court, be joined with a suit for the recovery of immovable property, except '(a) claims for mesne profits or arrears of rent in respect of the property claimed or any part thereof,' certainly suggests that the legislature regarded a claim for possession of immovable property, and a claim for mesne profits in respect of that property as being separate causes of action. And the language of Order 20, Rule 12, rather suggests the same conclusion.....

In the face of these remarks which, we think, were correctly made (and we say so with great respect), we fail to see how it could be held in the subsequent case in AIR 1942 Bom 338 that the provision in Order 2, Rule 4, "may have been inserted ex abundanti cautela without intending to lay down that the causes of action for possession and for mesne profits or arrears of rent accruing were distinct". However, as we have said, both these Bombay cases do not directly apply to the present case, much less so would they apply upon the finding which we have given that in the present case the cause of action on which the second suit was founded was entirely different from the cause of action in the first suit.

39. Several other decisions were relied upon on both the sides to suggest that the cause of action in a suit for possession and the cause of action in a suit for mesne profits are entirely different or are one and the same. None of these cases is upon identical facts and is in any case distinguishable from the facts of the present case. None of these cases moreover, was a case where first a suit for damages was filed and then a suit for possession. We need not refer to each of these cases individually, because in our opinion, they do not apply to the facts of the present case. In Gurubux Singh v. Bhooralal, AIR 1964 SC 1810 the Supreme Court in fact entertained a suit for possession and mesne profits after a previous suit for recovery of mesne profits only. The bar of Order 2, Rule 2, was urged, but the Supreme Court did not consider it because the defendant "had not placed before the Court material for the purpose of founding a plea of O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. C." That in itself would show that it is not in every case as a matter of law that the claim for mesne profits and the claim for possession would be either one and the same cause of action or different causes of action. It is a matter which falls to be decided upon the claim made in each case and the nature of the cause of action therein pleaded.

Answered in the affirmative.

Special Civil Appln. No. 1494 of 1971, D/- 26-4-1972, from order passed by D. H. Deshmukh Commr., Nagpur Division, Nagpur, D/- 30-3-1971.

Index Note:— (A) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Writ petition for quashing order of Commissioner rejecting application for revision — Non-availability of alternative remedy — Petition maintainable — (X-Ref:— Maharashtra Land Revenue Code (1966), Ss. 249 (2) and 252 (b)). (Para 5)

Brief Note:— It was the ultimate order that had to be looked into. Where the impugned order was passed in a proceeding which was treated as a revision proceeding by the Commissioner. No appeal could lie against such an order in view of the provisions of Sections 249 (2) and 252 (b) of the Maharashtra Land Revenue Code. As the aggrieved person could not have availed himself of the remedy of appeal, writ petition for quashing the order was maintainable.

Index Note:— (B) Maharashtra Land Revenue Code (1966), Section 48 — Mining lease — Fixation of compensation to owner of land from which minerals are to be extracted — Delegation of powers is not a precondition. (Para 10)

Brief Note:— Reading sub-ss. (1) to (6) of S. 48 together it is clear that for an assignee of mining rights to enter the land where the minerals are situated, the only condition that is required to be fulfilled under Section 48 (5) is either determination of compensation under S. 48 (4) and tender thereof to persons whose rights are infringed or a previous sanction of the Collector. For purposes of fixing compensation itself to the owner of land where mining and quarrying operations are to be carried, any delegation as contemplated by Section 48 (3) of the Code is not necessary. If no such delegation is necessary then no question of any notice to the persons having rights in such land is necessary. The delegation of powers to assignee under S. 48 (3) relates only to lands other than the lands from which minerals are to be extracted and for this purpose the proviso to Section 48 (3) as regards notice to concerned persons had to be complied with. Various sub-sections of Section 48 analysed. (Paras 7, 8, 9 and 10)

Pleader (for Nos. 3 and 4), for Respondents.

PADHYE, J.:— The petitioner challenges the order dated 30-3-1971 passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer, with powers of the Collector and the order dated 31-7-1971 passed by the Commissioner, Nagpur Division, in an appeal which was treated as a revision by the Commissioner. The petitioner claims to be the owner of Khasras 1 and 5 of Mouza Mahadulla, tahsil Ramtek, district Nagpur on the death of the original owner Mahipat son of Madhao Mahajan and his widow Sarjabai. The State Government granted a mining lease in favour of the respondent No. 1 in respect of this piece of land and the Collector by his letter dated 24th March, 1969 asked the Sub-Divisional Officer, Ramtek to fix the compensation under Section 48 (4) of the Maharashtra Land Revenue Code, 1966 and to arrange to tender the amount to the land owner. The Sub-Divisional Officer by his order dated 30-3-1971 determined the compensation at the rate of Rs. 1,000/- per acre and fixed the price accordingly on consideration of the material before him.

2. Before the revision application was decided by the Commissioner, the Collector had granted a working permission to the respondent No. 1 by his order dated 13-5-1971, but this permission was set aside by the Commissioner by his order dated 18th August 1971 on the ground that there was no order of delegation in favour of the respondent No. 1 and no notices were given to the aggrieved persons. The orders of the Sub-Divisional Officer dated 30-3-1971 and of the Commissioner dated 31-7-1971 have been challenged by the petitioner by this writ petition.

3. During the pendency of this writ petition, the Collector again granted working permission to the respondent No. 1 on 27-10-1971 and this again was challenged before the Commissioner and the Commissioner by his order dated 14-1-1972 cancelled the working permission granted by the order dated 27-10-1971. Against this order of the Commissioner, the respondent No. 1 has filed an appeal to the State Government which is said to be pending before the State Government. In this petition we are not in fact concerned with the grant of the working permission and the appeal therefrom. The matter regarding the working permission is pending before the State Government who is the competent authority to decide the appeal and we are not called upon by this petition to decide that matter which is pending before the State Government. Nothing that may be said in this judgment will prejudice the appeal which is pending before the State Government.

4. The challenge to the orders dated 30-3-1971 of the Sub-Divisional Officer and 31-7-1971 of the Commissioner is on the ground that before the compensation could be fixed there must be a delegation of power by the State Government in favour of the assignee and such a delegation cannot be made unless notice is given to the person concerned, namely, the land owner, whose rights are affected. In fact, there has been no delegation made at all in the case and, therefore, the Sub-Divisional Officer has no authority or power to fix the compensation in the present case and the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer, is, therefore, non est.

5. A preliminary objection was raised on behalf of the respondent No. 1 that the writ petition should not be entertained as there was an alternative and adequate remedy of appeal to the State Government challenging the order of the Commissioner and since this step has not been taken by the petitioner, the writ petition is liable to be thrown out on this ground alone. The learned Counsel for the respondent No. 1 relies upon the provisions of Section 248 of the Maharashtra Land Revenue Code which provides for the appeal to the State Government. Section 248 makes the order passed by a Commissioner in an appeal against an order of the officer subordinate to him, appealable to the State Government, but Section 252 of the Code specifically prohibits an appeal from an order rejecting an application for revision. In matters of revision, the only exception is to be found in Section 249 (2), that where an order passed in revision varies or reverses any order, it shall be appealable as if it was an order passed by the revisional authority in appeal. In view of the provisions of Section 249 (2) and Section 252 (b) of the Code no appeal could lie to the State Government against the order of the Commissioner dated 31-7-1971. It is, however, contended on behalf of the respondent No. 1 that the petitioner had initially filed the appeal before the Commissioner challenging the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer dated 30-3-1971 and the conversion of that appeal into revision by the Commissioner will not deprive the petitioner of his right of appeal to the State Government. We are not able to accept this contention. It is the ultimate order that has to be looked to and the order dated 31-7-71 is passed in a proceeding which was treated as a revision proceeding by the Commissioner. We do not, therefore, think that the petitioner could have availed himself of the remedy of appeal to the State Government as contended on behalf of the respondent No. 1.

6. Considering the merits of the petition, the petitioner relies upon the provisions of Section 48 of the Maharashtra Land Revenue Code, and more particularly of sub-section (3) thereof. Section 48 (1) defines the rights of the State Government to all minerals at whatever place found, whether on surface or underground, including all derelict or working mines and quarries, old dumps, pits, fields, bandhas, nallas, creeks, river-beds and such other places and it declares that the rights to all these are expressly reserved and shall vest in the State Government. It also provides that the State Government shall have all powers necessary for the proper enjoyment of such rights. It is also further provided under sub-section (1) that nothing in this Code shall be deemed to affect any subsisting rights of any person in respect of such mines or minerals in his land. Sub-section (2) then gives further rights which are ancillary to the rights to the minerals and it provides that the right to all mines and quarries includes the right of access to land for the purpose of mining and quarrying and the right to occupy such other land as may be necessary for purposes subsidiary thereto including the erection of offices, workmen's dwellings and machinery, the stacking of minerals and deposit of refuse, the construction of roads, railways, or tram-line and any other purposes which the State Government may declare to be subsidiary to mining and quarrying. These are the rights which are declared by statute to be the rights of the Government under Section 48 (1) and (2) of the Code. The State Government has not only the right to all the minerals at whatever place found, but the right to all the mines and quarries which includes also the right of access to land for the purpose of mining and quarrying and also the right to occupy such other land as may be necessary for purposes subsidiary thereto as has been stated in sub-section (2) of S. 48. These rights can be exercised by the State Government itself or these rights can be assigned by the State Government to any other person. Whenever such rights over any minerals, mines or quarries are assigned to any person and if for the proper enjoyment of such right, it is necessary that all or any of the powers specified in sub-sections (1) and (2) should be exercised, then the Collector is authorised to delegate such powers to the person to whom the right has been assigned and while making this delegation the Collector has to serve notices on all persons having rights in the land affected, hear them and consider their objections.

7. The learned counsel for the petitioner contends that the rights given to the State Government under sub-section (2) of S. 48 covers also the right to disturb the area wherein minerals are found and for mining and quarrying that area. It is urged on behalf of the petitioner that unless the Collector delegates the powers to the person to whom the right has been assigned, which are specified in sub-sections (1) and (2), the assignee does not get any right whatsoever and such delegation cannot be made by the Collector except upon a notice to the person having rights in the land affected and without hearing and considering their objections, if any. Sub-section (2) of S. 48 in our view relates to those other lands besides the land containing the minerals over which a right of access to the land under minerals for the purposes of mining and quarrying is necessary and also relates to such other land not being the land to be mined or quarried, the occupation of which may become necessary for the purposes subsidiary to the mining and quarrying operations such as erection of offices, workmen's dwellings and machinery, roads, railways, trams etc. These rights which are conferred on the Government under sub-section (2) of S. 48 are rights over the lands other than the land in which the mining and quarrying has to be done. It is these powers over other lands that are required to be delegated by the Collector under sub-section (3) of S. 48 for which purpose the proviso to sub-section (3) has to be complied with.

8. We then come to sub-s. (4) of S. 48 which provides for fixation of compensation with respect to the land of which the surface is to be disturbed for the purposes of mining or quarrying. It provides that if, in the exercise of the right herein referred to over any land the rights of any persons are infringed by the occupation or disturbance of the surface of such land, the State Government or its assignee shall pay to such persons compensation for such infringement and the amount of such compensation shall, in the absence of agreements, be determined by the Collector or if his award is not accepted, by the Civil Court in accordance with the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act. This refers not only to the lands which contain the minerals and require mining and quarrying operations and which are required to be occupied or disturbed, but also to the lands which are required for the purposes subsidiary to the above operations. In either case the State Government or its assignee has to pay compensation to the person concerned for such infringement while exercising the rights under Section 48 (1) and (2). Before, however, the assignee of the State Government can enter or occupy the surface of the land from which minerals are to be extracted, one of the two conditions given in sub-section (5) of S. 48 of the Code has to be fulfilled. Under sub-section (5) the assignee of the State Government can enter or occupy the surface of any land from which minerals are to be extracted only on getting prior sanction of the Collector or a compensation being determined and tendered to the person whose rights are infringed. If compensation is determined and tendered, then the assignee can straightway enter or occupy the surface of the land even without the previous sanction of the Collector. No question of any delegation of powers in such cases arises. The delegation of powers arises only in a case where as in sub-section (2) lands of any other persons besides the lands where there are minerals are affected for the proper enjoyment of the rights which are assigned by the State Government in favour of the assignee. So far as the State Government is concerned, even those powers are vested in the State Government and those affected persons have only a right of compensation without there being any obstruction to the State Government to use such other lands necessary for the purposes of mining and quarrying.

9. So far as the assignee is concerned, this latter right or power of the State to enter on other lands has to be delegated by the Collector by an order in writing in favour of the assignee and before making such delegation a notice has to be duly served on all those persons whose rights in those lands stand affected, they are heard and their objections considered. But this delegation of power is only for the purposes of exercising the powers which are necessary to be exercised for the purposes subsidiary to mining and quarrying. This has nothing to do with the fixation of compensation for the land which is occupied or disturbed by the assignee in exercise of the right over any land.

10. Here, we are not concerned with the infringement of rights of any third persons whose rights in the lands are affected for the proper enjoyment of the right to the minerals. Here the petitioner claims to be the owner of the land where the mining and quarrying operations are to be carried on. So far as this land is concerned, the delegation of the powers for the proper enjoyment of that right does not come in, as such delegation of powers relates only to lands other than the lands from which the minerals are to be extracted. Sub-section (4) of Sec. 48 only places an obligation on the State Government and its assignee to pay compensation for the infringement of the rights of the owners of the land by the occupation or disturbance of the surface of such land and this compensation can be fixed up by agreement between the parties and in its absence, to be determined by the Collector. If the delegation so far as the other land is concerned is not made by the Collector, then the assignee may not have powers to occupy or disturb such land. That does not, however, apply to the lands containing the minerals themselves. In fact so far as the land from which the minerals are to be extracted is concerned, sub-section (6) of S. 48 makes it quite clear that even without the payment of compensation provided previous sanction of the Collector is obtained under sub-section (5), the assignee can enter and occupy that land and the Collector is empowered to recover the compensation from the assignee as if it were an arrears of land revenue. This would show that the fixation of the compensation or the payment thereof has nothing to do with the delegation of the powers as contemplated by sub-section (3) of Sec. 48. Such a delegation need not precede the fixation of any compensation whatsoever so far as the land from which the minerals are to be extracted. If the contention on behalf of the petitioner were to be accepted, then sub-section (5) of S. 48 will have no meaning and unless there is a delegation of powers even in respect of the land from which the minerals are to be extracted, the assignee would not be able to enter or occupy the surface of that land even on the payment of compensation or even with the previous sanction of the Collector. We must give effect to all the provisions of the Code and reading these provisions together we find that for entering the land where the minerals are situated, the only condition that is required to be fulfilled is either determination of the compensation and tender thereof to the persons whose rights are infringed or a previous sanction of the Collector. We do not, therefore, think on the reading of those provisions together that for the purposes of fixing the compensation itself in respect of the rights in the land, surface of which is to be occupied or disturbed for the purposes of extracting minerals from that land any delegation as contemplated by sub-section (3) of S. 48 of the Code is necessary. If no such delegation is necessary then no question of any notice to the persons having rights in such land, such as the petitioner is, necessary. Whether, therefore, there is any delegation or not, the fixation of the compensation by the Sub-Divisional Officer with powers of the Collector, of the land said to be belonging to the petitioner from which minerals are to be extracted, cannot be said to be without jurisdiction.

If the owner of the land is aggrieved by the fixation of the amount of compensation, then he has his remedy to approach the Civil Court which will determine the proper compensation in accordance with the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act. We are unable to agree with the learned counsel for the petitioner that the delegation of powers, as contended, is a pre-condition to the determination of the compensation of the land of the petitioner, the land from which the minerals themselves are to be extracted.

11. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the view taken by the Commissioner, Nagpur Division, Nagpur by his order dated 31-7-1971 cannot be said to be incorrect. We also do not see how the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer can be said to be without jurisdiction. We are not here concerned with the other matter regarding the working permission which is already pending before the State Government. We do not see any reason to interfere with the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer dated 30-3-1971 and by the Commissioner dated 31-7-1971. The petition accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 592 of 1970, D/- 21-9-1971.

Index Note:— (A) Maharashtra Ownership Flats (Regulation of Promotion of Construction, Sale, Management and Transfer) Act (45 of 1963), S. 2 (a) — 'Flat' — Meaning of — Conditions requisite to constitute a flat — Building divided into independent and separate units by common party wall — Each unit constitutes a flat irrespective of its ownership.

Brief Note:— (A) Where a building is divided into four equal, separate and independent units by common party walls each apartment falls within the definition of 'flat' under the Act. Whether the purchaser is an independent owner or not, is entirely irrelevant in order to determine whether premises are a flat or not. (Paras 7, 8)

The legislature having defined the expression 'flat' in Section 2 (a) of the Act it is not permissible to go beyond that definition for determining the scope of that expression. (Para 10)

S. P. Kanga for N. H. Pardashani, for Petitioner; G. N. Khare, for Respondent No. 1; S. C. Pratap, Asst. Government Pleader, for the State.

ORDER:— This revision by the original complainant is directed against the order passed by the Presidency Magistrate 27th Court, Mulund, Greater Bombay dismissing the complaint filed by the Petitioner against respondent No. 1 and one V. K. Jawar, alleging offences under the provisions of the Maharashtra Ownership Flats (Regulation of the Promotion of Construction, Sale, Management and Transfer) Act, 1963 (hereinafter referred to as "the Act"), on a preliminary ground that the premises in dispute were not covered by the Act, inasmuch as they were not a "flat" within the meaning of that term as defined in the Act.

2. Few facts which it is necessary to state for the purposes of this application, are these:

3. The accused, who are brothers and were partners of a concern styled as M/s. Korbusiers, widely advertised a housing scheme which was called "Mini Land". It appears that the accused had acquired about 45,831 Sq. yards of open plot of land from M/s. Orient Corporation on lease for a period of ninety-nine years with a renewal clause and they proposed to divide this land in different plots and offered housing accommodation in these plots. It appears the scheme was that on each plot accommodation consisting of ground-floor and two other floors was offered to each purchaser. It seems that one building was to be constructed on each plot, but that building was to be divided into four parts by putting walls length and breadth-wise exactly in such a way as to divide it into four different buildings touching each other. Several persons purchased the housing accommodation in this Scheme and it is common ground that the accused actually constructed such buildings and even delivered possession to the purchaser. One of the terms of the agreement was to form a co-operative society promoted by the accused. The accused not having done that, the present complaint out of which this revision petition arises was filed by the petitioner who is one of the purchasers of one of the portions of a building, called a bungalow type building. The number of the bungalow type accommodation given to him is 5-B. The complainant alleged various breaches of the provisions of the Act by the Accused.

4. The accused contended that the accommodation offered was an independent bungalow type accommodation and that each purchaser became absolute owner of the ground and two floors standing thereon, and that therefore, it was not a flat within the meaning of that expression as defined in the Act. This contention was upheld by the learned Magistrate and he dismissed the complaint. The learned Magistrate, however, while dismissing the complaint, observed that since the premises in question were not a "flat" under the Act, he had no jurisdiction to deal with them. It is difficult to follow this part of the reasoning of the learned Magistrate, because even assuming for a moment that the premises in dispute do not fall under the definition of a "flat" contained in the Act, that will not affect the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to deal with the complaint.

5. The only question that arises on this revision, therefore, is whether the premises, which were sold by the accused to the complainant satisfied the requirements of the definition of expression "flat" as contained in the Act. Clause (a) of Section 2 defines the expression "flat" as meaning a separate and self contained set of premises used or intended to be used for residence, or office, or show-room or shop or godown (and includes a garage) the premises forming part of a building and includes an apartment. In order that premises, therefore, should come under this definition, the following requirements must be fulfilled:—

1. the premises must be separate and self contained set of premises; and

2. must be such as can be used or intended to be used for residence, shop or godown or garage.

3. the premises must form part of a building.

6. It is not disputed in the present case that the first two requirements are satisfied. It is not denied that the premises in question are a separate and self contained set of premises and that they are intended to be used for residence. The controversy, however, centres round the last requirement, viz. whether the premises form part of a building or not? If the answer to this question is in the affirmative, then, obviously, the premises in question must be held to be a "flat" within the meaning of this definition. On the other hand, if the answer to the question is in the negative, then, obviously, the premises in question cannot be regarded as "flat" and then the provisions of the Act would not be applicable.

7. Now, in order to determine whether the premises form part of a building or not, the actual construction erected will have to be taken into account. It appears that the entire area of 45,831 sq. yards, which was taken on lease by the accused was divided into several plots, each plot admeasuring 500 square yards. On each plot a bungalow type construction having four apartments divided by common party-wall east-west and south-north was erected, so that each part became a separate unit having separate entrance and opening on two sides. Each portion has a ground-floor and two storeys. Each part has common wall on two sides — back side and one other side. To illustrate this point further on the plot in question building No. 5 was constructed and that building was divided into four parts by putting party-walls exactly in the middle length-wise and breadthwise, and each portion was given a separate No. as 5-A, 5-B and 5-C and 5-D. The complainant in this case purchased the portion bearing No. 5-B. It is, therefore obvious that although each portion is an independent unit, it forms part of larger building which has been divided into four portions.

8. It was contended on behalf of the accused-respondent that the purchaser of each of the four portions in the building became an independent owner of the building as well as of the ground below it. It was also submitted that each purchaser was an absolute owner of the portion purchased by him and was free to sell it or to dispose of it in any manner he liked, and therefore, each unit must be regarded as a separate bungalow. It is however, difficult to accept this contention for the simple reason that the element of ownership does not enter into the definition of the expression "flat". In other words whether the purchaser is an independent owner or not is entirely irrelevant in order to determine whether the premises are a flat or not. That being so, it is obvious that the premises in this case do satisfy all the three tests of 'a flat' within the meaning of the definition contained in the Act.

9. It is incidentally contended for the respondent that the Life Insurance Corporation had taken a view that each purchaser was the full and absolute owner of the portion purchased by him and he was able to mortgage the same and they have even accepted mortgages of the portion from some of the owners. But, as observed above, that is not the criterion to determine whether the premises are a flat.

10. Mr. Khare wanted to urge that in order to determine whether it is a flat it would also be necessary to take into account the dictionary meaning of that expression. But since the Legislature itself has chosen to define the word "flat" for the purposes of this Act, it would not be permissible to travel beyond the definition contained in the Act.

In order to determine the scope of that expression.

11. For these reasons discussed above, the view taken by the learned Magistrate that the premises involved in this case are not a 'flat' is obviously erroneous. The order dismissing complaint of the petitioner is, therefore, set aside and the case is sent back to the learned Magistrate to proceed with it according to law.

12. Rule absolute.

Revision allowed.

AIR 1972 BOMBAY 345 (V 59 C 62)

MODY AND KAMAT, JJ.

M/s. Arthur and Co., Appellants v. M/s. Shamji Kalidas and Co., Respondents.

Appeal No. 15 of 1968, D/- 26-4-1971.

Index Note:— Arbitration Act (1940), S. 2 (a) — East India Cotton Association Bye-laws, Bye-law 38-A — Cotton contract subject to Bye-laws of East India Cotton Association Bombay — Bye-law 38-A providing for arbitration in case of disputes applicable — Contract is an arbitration agreement in terms of S. 2 (a).

Brief Note:— Where a Cotton contract between two non-members incorporated a term that the contract would be subject to the bye-laws of the East India Cotton Association Ltd., Bombay, all the bye-laws of the Association became incorporated into the said contract and the bye-laws which were capable of applying to the contract would apply. The concluding portion of Bye-law 38-A of the said bye-laws amounted to an arbitration agreement. The cotton contract in question contains an arbitration agreement referred to in clause (b) of the bye-law. Clause (e) covers cotton contracts which contained any of the types of arbitration agreements mentioned in the previous clauses. Further clause (e) covers contracts between non-members of the Association also. The cotton contract was therefore covered by clause (e) of bye-law 38-A and there existed a valid arbitration agreement. As both the cotton contract and the Bye-law 38-A were in writing, there existed a valid arbitration agreement in terms of Section 2 (a).

(Para 13)

J. C. Bhatt with R. J. Bhatt i/b. M/s. Mulla & Mulla and Craigie Blunt and Caroe, Attorneys, for Appellants; Ashok H. Desai i/b. M/s. Amarchand & Mangaldas and Malvi Ranchhoddas and Co., Attorneys, for Respondents.

MODY, J.:— This is an appeal against the Judgment and Order of Madon, J. dated 26th February 1968 granting the respondents' application and directing that the Contract dated 9th December 1964 between the appellants and the respondents be filed in Court under Section 20 of the Arbitration Act, 1940, and that all disputes arising between the parties, including the claim of the respondents against the appellants under and in respect of the said contract be referred to arbitration according to the bye-laws of the East India Cotton Association Ltd. so that the necessary steps under the said bye-laws may be taken to have the said disputes settled by arbitration as provided by the said bye-laws. The East India Cotton Association Ltd. is hereinafter referred to as "E. I. C. A. Ltd".

2. By that Contract the respondents agreed to sell to the appellants and the appellant agreed to buy from the respondents 200 bales of Egyptian cotton to be shipped during January/February 1965 on certain terms and conditions contained in that Contract. One of the terms of the Contract provides:—

"This contract is subject to the bye-laws of the East India Cotton Association Ltd., Bombay."

3. The respondents thereafter contended that the appellants committed certain defaults and a breach of the Contract and claimed on that basis a certain amount from the appellants. Thereafter the respondents claimed that the disputes between the parties be referred to arbitration in accordance with the bye-laws of the E. I. C. A. Ltd. The appellants contended that there was no agreement between the parties providing any express term for a reference of those disputes to arbitration. They further contended that although the said term in the Contract made it subject to the bye-laws of the E. I. C. A. Ltd., there was no provision in the bye-laws providing for arbitration which was applicable to the said disputes between the parties as both the appellants and the respondents were not members of the E. I. C. A. Ltd. The respondents thereupon filed an application by way of a Petition, which was numbered as a suit, being Arbitration Suit No. 224 of 1966. In defence, the appellants raised various contentions. At the hearing before Madon, J., however, the appellants gave up all their contentions except one. The appellants conceded, firstly, that the said Contract was a valid contract; secondly, that the said Contract was a "cotton contract"; thirdly, that the said disputes between the parties arose out of and were in relation to the said Cotton Contract; fourthly, that the bye-laws of the E. I. C. A. Ltd. got incorporated into the said Contract; and fifthly, that both the appellants and the respondents were not members of the

E. I. C. A. Ltd. Therefore the only dispute which remained for determination was the appellants' contention that there was no Arbitration Agreement between the parties contained in the said Contract dated 9th December 1964. The learned Judge, therefore, raised only one issue, namely:

"Whether there is any arbitration agreement between the Petitioners and the Respondents contained in the contract between them dated 9th December 1964 as alleged by the Petitioners in para 7 of the Petition".

The learned Judge negatived the appellants' contention and answered the said issue in the affirmative. The appellants have therefore filed this appeal.

4. There is no dispute that the bye-laws of the E. I. C. A. Ltd. have become incorporated into the said Contract. The appellants' contention, however, is that only such bye-laws as are capable of applying to the said Contract and the disputes between the parties can apply. There is no dispute that there are several provisions in the bye-laws which provide for arbitration. The only dispute is whether any of such provisions about arbitration is applicable to the present case.

5. Bye-law 36 provides for Arbitrations and Appeals in disputes as to quality. Its provisions are not relevant in this case except for understanding and interpreting the provisions of bye-law 38, the provisions of which relate to Arbitration and are in dispute between the parties. Bye-law 38 contains Cls. (A) to (G). Only the provisions of clause (A) are relevant, the other Clauses being only to provide the machinery for Arbitration. Clause (A) provides:

"38. (A) All unpaid claims whether admitted or not, and all disputes and difference (other than those relating to quality) arising out of or in relation to—

(a) cotton transactions between members including any dispute as to the existence of such transaction; or

(b) cotton contracts (whether forward or ready and whether between members or between a member and a non-member) made subject to these bye-laws or subject to E. I. C. A. arbitration or containing words or abbreviations to a similar effect including any dispute as to the existence of such transaction provided in the latter case the parties had agreed in writing before entering into business relation that any dispute arising between them out of that agreement or any such transactions that may be entered into including any dispute as to existence of such transaction shall be referred to arbitration under the bye-laws of the Association; or

(c) the rights and/or responsibilities of commission agents, muccadums and brokers not parties to such transaction or contracts; or

(d) commission agency agreement entered into subject to these bye-laws or subject to E. I. C. A. arbitration or containing words or abbreviations to a similar effect; or shall be referred to the arbitration of two disinterested persons, one to be chosen by each party from amongst the members, or their authorised or nominated representatives for the purpose of determination, settlement and adjustment of disputes or differences in respect of cotton transactions referred to above. The arbitrators shall have power to appoint an umpire and shall do so if and when they differ as to their award"

(e) cotton contracts covered by any such arbitration agreement.

The portion appearing in clause (A) after what is reproduced above not being relevant to this case has not been reproduced above.

6. According to the appellants, none of the five sub-clauses (a) to (e) apply to the present case. According to the respondents, the present case falls under sub-clause (e). The composition of bye-law 38-A, to the extent reproduced above, is that in the beginning there appear certain words, hereinafter referred to as "the opening portion", then follow the five sub-clauses (a) to (e) and then follow certain other words reproduced above which are hereinafter referred to as "the concluding portion". In the opening portion occur the words "(other than those relating to quality)". These words appearing within brackets have obviously been used to make the field of operation of bye-laws 36 and 38-(A) mutually exclusive. These words make Bye-law 38-(A) not applicable to claims, disputes and differences relating to quality. These words which appear within brackets will, therefore be ignored when we proceed to consider the other provisions of Bye-law 38(A) as they are not relevant to that purpose. Each pair of sub-clauses (a) and (b), (b) and (c), (c) and (d) and (d) and (e) have between them the word "or". The result is that the opening portion and the concluding portion must be read, as it were, with each of the five sub-clauses (a) to (e) between them, or, in other words, as if bye-law 38-A, consists of five sub-clauses. A mere reading of sub-clauses (a) to (e), however, shows that their wording makes them inter-connected or inter-dependent for the purposes of their construction and that aspect cannot be lost sight of. The concluding portion contains the operative provisions of clause (A), the provision requiring a reference to arbitration. Therefore, the opening portion read with any of the five sub-clauses whenever any of the five sub-clauses applies and then read with the concluding portion amounts to an arbitration agreement. It is, therefore, clear that whenever a Contract or an Agreement states that it is subject to the bye-laws of the E. I. C. A. Ltd. or that it is subject to the E. I. C. A. arbitration or contains words or abbreviations to the similar effect, all the bye-laws of the E. I. C. A. Ltd. relating to arbitration would get incorporated in the Contract or Agreement as if they had been bodily or verbatim copied out therein. If that contract or agreement is a written contract, a written agreement of arbitration as defined in clause (a) of Section 2 of the Arbitration Act, 1940, would result, provided any of the five sub-clauses is applicable.

7. The said Contract dated 9th December 1964 contains the said clause: "This contract is subject to the bye-laws of the East India Cotton Association Ltd., Bombay". These words incorporate the bye-laws of E. I. C. A. Ltd. within it by reference, but, of course to the extent that they are applicable to the said contract. If, therefore, any of the said five sub-clauses applies, there would be a written arbitration agreement between the parties. The only point of inquiry in this case, therefore, is whether any of the said five sub-clauses applies in the present case. That, in turn, involves construing the said five sub-clauses. The real dispute between the parties centres round the construction of the said five sub-clauses in general and sub-clause (e) in particular.

8. The words "cotton transactions" and "cotton contracts" occur in some of the said five sub-clauses. The word "cotton" is common. But why "transaction" in one and "contract" in the other? Normally, it must be presumed that they vary in their connotation, or, in other words, their meaning is not identical. As we will presently show, it appears that "cotton transaction" has been used in the sense of a business transaction in relation to cotton as, for example, sale or purchase, whereas "cotton contract" means such a cotton transaction with an additional term therein containing a "contract" that is, an agreement for arbitration. The expression used in sub-clause (a) is "between members". Sub-clause (a) will, therefore, apply only when both the parties to the "cotton transaction" are members, that is, members of the E. I. C. A. Ltd. It will not apply when one party or both the parties are non-members. Sub-clause (a) has to be read in the background of the fact, firstly, that E. I. C. A. Ltd. is a company incorporated under the Indian Companies Act, 1913; secondly, that it has Articles of Association; thirdly, that such Articles of Association constitute a contract between its members inter se fourthly, that by the process by which every person become a member of the E. I. C. A. Ltd. the Articles of Association would constitute a written agreement between the members of the E. I. C. A. Ltd.; and fifthly, that there would be such a written agreement between the members in view of and to the extent mentioned in Art. 103 of the Articles of Association which provides:

"Whenever any dispute or difference arises between members inter se out of or in relation to any contract or transactions in cotton (including unpaid claims, whether admitted or not and including any dispute or difference as to the existence, validity or otherwise of such contract or transaction) the same shall be referred to arbitration in such manner as shall be prescribed by the by-laws. And it is hereby expressly declared that this shall be deemed to be an agreement of arbitration, and the holding of such an arbitration and the obtaining of an award thereunder shall be a condition precedent to the right of any member in respect of such dispute or difference as aforesaid, and no member shall have any right of action against any other member except to enforce the award in any such arbitration".

As sub-clause (a) applies only to members and as there would be an arbitration agreement as contained in Art. 103, there would be no necessity to provide for a further agreement of arbitration and it is because of this reason that sub-clause (a) uses the words "cotton transaction" and not "cotton contract". The language of Art. 103 is wide enough to include even disputes relating to the very existence of such a transaction.
